He has in his nursery now over 300,000 apple trees, standing in the open prairie, from one to seven years old; 60,000 three-year-old trees, which were only yearlings through the severe winter of 1872-3; and they are all beautiful and thrifty trees. The way in which these trees were managed in the setting was as follows: The ground was first plowed very deep. The grafts were long scions (not less than six inches) on short roots planted so deep that only the top bud appeared above the ground. None but hardy scions were grafted, the roots not being considered hardy. The object of planting so deep was to preserve the roots from winter-killing. The first season the scions stood on the roots into which they had been engrafted, planted deep in the ground; the next year they threw out roots of their own, on which they have successfully stood ever since. This process Mr. Barnard has found eminently successful. His young trees—60,000 in number—have stood all the drouth and severity of the winters which have supervened since their planting, and are now beautiful and thrifty trees, although standing without protection on the highest point of the prairie.

Mr. Barnard is also opposed to free pruning in this locality, as experience has demonstrated that many trees are struck with "black heart," and die from this cause. The spring growth and flow of sap being much more rapid here than in other localities where the seasons are longer, spring pruning is especially to be deprecated. It has been found a good method to scrape off the buds from the trunks of young trees when they first start with the hand, as it ensures a smooth and healthy trunk with sufficient branches at the top.

These facts show that adaptation of fruit trees to the soil and climate is the great desideratum to be sought in a new country, and that the experiments of intelligent and practical horticulturists will finally solve the problem of successful fruit raising in Northern Iowa. Of course, different methods must be adopted in different localities and experience alone can determine what shall be ultimately the most successful.

WATER POWER AND MILLS.

The principal streams and water courses in Allamakee County are the Upper Iowa and Yellow Rivers, and the Hickory, Williams, Paint, Village, Coon, Silver, Bear and Waterloo Creeks. They all run in narrow valleys hemmed in by abrupt bluffs, and are rapid in their course. The smaller streams, emanating from springs, are very pure and clear, and afford considerable quantities of speckled trout. Such being the character of the streams, water power is very abundant throughout the county, and much of it has been improved in the erection of mills and manufacturing establishments of various kinds.

On the Upper Iowa there are two establishments within the limits of the county, viz the mills of O. F. & M. C. Ferris and B. T. McMillen. On the Yellow River there are at least a dozen, including saw mills, viz.: Merian's mill, Myron mill, P. M. Gibson's mill, W. Werhans' mill, B. D. Clark's mill, Alexander Dawson's mill, J. Heifer's mill, Smithfield mills, Volney mills, Buckland mills and Ion mills. Some of these are among the best mills in the state. On Paint Creek there are the Waterville mills and Caspar Deal's saw mill. On Village Creek, the woolen factory and the mills of Whaley, Otis and Dohler; Hirt's mill on French Creek, and Mause's mill on Silver Creek. On Waterloo Creek there is the Dorchester mill and Swartzhoff's mill, and on Bear Creek, N. J. Quandahl's mill. W. Staudinger has a mill on Suttle Creek. There is a flouring mill at Harper's Ferry, a steam saw mill at Columbus, a very extensive steam flouring mill and also steam saw mill at South Lansing; a steam saw mill at Lansing proper, and on Coon Creek, west of Lansing, Haney's and Kappler's Flouring mills.

ORGANIZATION AND OFFICERS.

Allamakee County was organized by act of the Legislature in 1851. The county seat was first located at Columbus, where it remained till the Spring of 1853, when it was removed to Waukon. In April, 1861, it was removed by vote of the people to Lansing, the citizens of that town erecting a court-house building for county purposes and donating land to the county. It remained in Lansing till September, 1867, when it was brought back and located permanently at Waukon. The county still owns the property in Lansing donated to it by that town. The following were the first county officers: Elias Topliff, County Judge; Thomas B. Twiford, Clerk; James M. Sumner, Recorder, Treasurer and Collector; John W. Remine, Prosecuting Attorney; L. W. Hays, Sheriff; William F. Ross, School Fund Commissioner; A. W. Hoag, Supervisor of Roads. Mr. Hays served but a short time as sheriff. At the next election William C. Thompson was elected and took his place.

DISTRICT COURT.

The first term of the District Court for the county was opened at Columbus on Monday, the 12th day of July, 1852. Honorable Thomas S. Wilson, Judge; Leonard B. Hodges, Clerk; and William C. Thompson, Sheriff. The following named persons were empaneled as the first grand jury: William H. Morrison, Foreman; Edward Eells, John Clark, H. R. Ellis, R. Woodward, Jesse M. Rose, W. W. Wilson, Darius Bennett, Grove A. Warner, Henry Botsford, Tremain Stoddard, William Smith, A. I. Ellis, Jeremiah Clark, T. A. Winsted.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Settlements were made in this county at Johnsonsport and at the "Old Mission" in Fairview Township at an early time. The former was a landing place for boats and a sort of Indian trading station, and was probably the first point at which a settlement was made in the county. The place took its name from Henry Johnson, who is supposed to have been the first settler.

Thomas Liston was the first settler at the "Old Mission" in 1848. The "Old Mission House," erected there as early as 1835, is the oldest house now standing in the county. It is related that when the Government survey was made in 1848, the chimney of that old building was a prominent object from which the surveyors took their "bearings."

Patrick Keenan, now in Jefferson Township, settled in Makee Township in the Summer of 1848. Following his oxen, which had strayed away, he came unexpectedly upon the fine prairie and bottom land where he now resides; and being delighted with the prospect, was induced to move there and settle. He has never had occasion to regret his choice; he is now one of the most forehanded farmers in the county.

Archa Whaley, now proprietor of Whaley's mill, settled a few miles east of Waukon in 1848, and the following year Prosser Whaley settled in Makee Township. William C. Thompson, at present county auditor, settled in Lafayette Township, at a place now called Thompson's Corners, in 1850, having visited and selected the place the year previous. John Ryan, now treasurer of the county, settled at Harper's Ferry in the Spring of 1851. But we have space only to give a few of the first settlers.

Father Thomas Hore was the first Catholic missionary in the county. He came here in the Spring of 1851, coming as an emigrant directly from Ireland. In earlier life he had been a missionary in Virginia, and had returned to Ireland. He was independent of the bishop, and operated as a missionary priest on his own responsibility. His field of operations reached over a wide extent of country. He was a genial and influential man, and drew to this county a large immigration of his countrymen, who settled around him at Wexford, in the eastern part of the county, which he named after Wexford, Ireland. He built a church here, which is supposed to have been the first church erected in the county. It was built in the Spring of 1851, out of materials brought from Dubuque.

EDUCATION.

The county superintendent for 1874 reports the cause of education in a prosperous condition throughout the county. A sincere and ardent desire to educate their children properly has taken hold of many of the citizens who heretofore took little interest in educational affairs. The majority of the teachers are straining every nerve to become more able and efficient educators. Teachers' associations and county teachers' institutes are doing a good work, and also to some extent township associations. The whole number of school districts in the county is 140; schools taught, 124; graded schools, 3; ungraded, 121; average number of months taught during the year, 7; teachers employed, 200—males 66, females 134; average salaries per month—males $38.30, females $24.44; number of children of school age, 7,718—males 3,991, females 3,772; number of children enrolled, 5,896; average attendance, 3,474. The whole number of school houses in the county is 121—frame 74, brick 8, stone 7, log 32. Value of the school houses, $78,520.00; cost of tuition per pupil, 75 cts. per month.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

The Allamakee County Agricultural Society was organized in 1868. It has a fair ground of fifteen acres, situated about one-quarter of a mile north of Waukon, with a fine half-mile trotting course, and all the requisite arrangements for first-class fairs. The fairs every year have been successful.

There is also in the county, near Postville, the fair grounds of the District Agricultural Association, composed of four adjoining counties, viz.: Clayton, Winneshiek, Fayette and Allamakee. It has been recently changed to a joint stock company. John Plank, Sen., President; John Goodykoontz, Secretary.

The Allamakee County Farmers' Association was organized in 1873. It is a joint stock company, and has a store at Waukon for the sale of goods at reduced rates. It was incorporated in the Fall of 1874. Luther Howes, President.

The County Poor House and Farm are located on the road from Waukon to Lansing, about four miles from Waukon. The farm consists of 160 acres, with a good two-story frame building, and an additional building for the insane. The number of persons who receive the benefit of this institution is at present nineteen. O. S. Conkey, Superintendent.

SUPERVISORS.

MARTIN MOORE, Chairman. H. S. COOPER. HENRY BEUSCH.

WAUKON.

WAUKON, the seat of justice of Allamakee County, is an interior town, its location being near the center of the county. It is eighteen miles southwest of Lansing and twenty-eight northwest of McGregor, on the Mississippi, and is situated on a fine rolling prairie in the midst of one of the best farming districts of the state. The prairies adjoining are rolling, fertile and beautiful, the ravines and streams being skirted with timber, and the farms, for the most part, well improved.

The town is regularly laid out, with straight and broad streets, adorned plentifully with shade trees in the vicinity of the more retired residences and public buildings. The business part of the town presents a compact and substantial appearance. The residences are mostly painted white, and the grounds and gardens, many of them ornate and beautified with shrubbery, are enclosed with neat fences, and display an air of taste and refinement. The Court House, Public School Building, and several of the churches and stores, are of brick, and are sightly and substantial in their style of architecture. Several elevated points within the limits of the town afford fine views of the adjoining country, and around the outskirts are seen, spread out, farms, orchards and nurseries. The two leading nurseries of this section of Iowa are located in the environs of the town—those of D. W. Adams and C. & C. Barnard, the latter containing over 300,000 apple trees.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement of Waukon was made in the Fall of 1849 by G. C. Shattuck, who occupied the land now covered by the village. Mr. Shattuck came from Indiana, and is now residing in Kansas. It is said that seven unfailing springs welling up through the green turf of the prairie on the town site first brought the immigrant to this spot. At all events, the village is well supplied with pure spring water.

Mr. Shattuck deeded forty acres of land to the county on condition that the county seat should be located here. The town was platted and recorded by Allamakee County, December 1, 1853.

The first stock of goods was opened in the town in September, 1854, by A. J. Hersey, formerly of the state of Maine. He built the house which, since enlarged, is now the Mason House, in the front room of which he opened the first store. L. T. Woodcock and D. W. Adams opened a stock of goods the same year in the building now occupied as the National Hotel. Scott Shattuck kept the first hotel in a house now owned by G. N. Manch, opposite the National. The first school house was built near where the Catholic Church now stands, in 1854, and the first church in the place was the Presbyterian, now standing.

BUSINESS.

Since the location of the county seat here in 1853, the place has increased with a healthy growth. The population is about 1,000. The chief manufactures are a steam saw-mill, grist mill, agricultural implement manufactory, with wagon-makers, blacksmiths, shoemakers, harnessmakers, etc., etc., to supply the demand of the extensive farming country. There are two drug stores, ten dry goods and grocery stores, four millinery shops, two hardware stores, one jeweller's shop, one boot and shoe store, three groceries, one printing office, four lawyers' offices, six blacksmith shops, five wagon and agricultural implement shops, one agricultural warehouse, one cabinet shop, two shoemakers' shops, one butcher shop, one cigar manufactory, one brewery, one photograph gallery, two carpenter shops, one livery stable, one bank, four practicing physicians, one harness shop, and real estate and insurance business.

In 1859, the shipping of hogs and cattle commenced at this point, and has steadily increased, so that this has become an important branch of business. The county has acquired the reputation of shipping as fine a class of hogs and cattle as any part of the state.

HOTELS.

There are two hotels in the place—the Mason House and the National Hotel, both centrally and conveniently located. Visitors and travelers will find at both of them genial proprietors and the best accommodations the place affords.

CHURCHES.

The churches of the place are five in number, viz.: Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal and Roman Catholic. All have good buildings. The Methodists, Baptists and Catholics have brick churches. The new Catholic Church, not yet finished, will be, when completed, the best church edifice in the county. The Methodist and Baptist churches are also neat and elegant structures.

PUBLIC GRADED SCHOOL.

The building of this institution—a large three-story brick edifice—was formerly erected for the purpose of a college. It passed through several changes, and finally, in 1869, was bought by the district for the graded school of the town. The original cost of the building was $8,000. It was purchased by the district for $4,000. The building is well fitted up and furnished for school purposes.

The school is divided into six departments running from 1st Primary to High School. Six teachers are employed. The number of pupils is about 300—100 in the High School. Prof. J. Loughran, Principal; John P. Raymond, 1st Assistant; 4 lady teachers. The school has an apparatus for illustrating the natural sciences. Board of Education: John Goodykoontz, President; A. J. Rodgers, Secretary.

NEWSPAPER.

The Waukon Standard, an eight-page weekly, Republican in politics, was started by Charles W. M'Donald in January, 1868. In May following it was purchased by A. M. May, and conducted under the firm name of R. L. Hayward & Co., until April, 1869, when the firm was changed to James H. Brayden & Co., Mr. May remaining editor. Mr. May assumed entire control in August, 1869. In April following, the form of the paper was changed to eight pages. January 1, 1870, E. M. Hancock bought an interest in it, the firm becoming A. M. May & Co., till August, 1872. May & Hamstreet followed till June 1, 1873, when Mr. Hancock purchased a half interest, since which the proprietors have been May & Hancock. The paper is a well-edited and influential journal, with a good circulation, and has connected with it an enterprising job office.

LANSING.

LANSING, the chief commercial town of Allamakee County, is the northernmost river town of Iowa. It is situated on the Mississippi, ten miles below the State line of Minnesota, and 100 miles above Dubuque, at the mouth of a ravine about three-fourths of a mile wide. The river here has a bold shore, making a good landing for the largest class of steamboats, which during the navigable season do a considerable amount of business. The Chicago, Dubuque & Minnesota Railroad passes through the place, the track being constructed along the bank of the river from Dubuque to Winona, Minnesota. Since the completion of this important railway, the business of Lansing has considerably increased. It is the principal market for produce from an extensive agricultural district lying north and west of it, which here finds an outlet to the river and the railroad, large quantities of pork, beef, grain, and cattle being annually shipped from this point.

The town rises gradually from the river to the bluffs in the rear and on either side, and has therefore a healthy location and good natural drainage. The business portion presents a substantial appearance. On the higher grounds are several tasty and elegant residences. In 1862 a great portion of the business part of Main Street was consumed by fire, but was soon rebuilt, brick and stone taking the place of wood.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The original proprietor of the town site was H. H. Houghton, now postmaster at Galena, and formerly the founder and editor of the Galena Gazette. He located a claim here as early as 1848. Subsequently he divided his interest with John Haney, Sr., and they jointly laid out the town in 1851. Among the early settlers were John Haney, Jr., W. Ballou, James I. Gilbert, F. D. Cowles, J. W. Remine, G. W. Gray, G. W. Hays, A. L. Battles, I. B. Place, H. M. Travis, and J. I. Taylor.

The first male child born in the town was Frank Cowles. The first death was that of Fanny Haney. The first lawyer was J. W. Remine; the first physician J. I. Taylor.

John W. Merrill settled here in 1851. There was not a frame house then in the place. Mr. Haney then lived in a log cabin at the upper end of Front Street. The first frame building erected was a store, by F. D. Cowles, in August, 1851. It stood on the corner of Front and Main Streets, opposite of where the American House now stands. The first frame house erected was the Lansing, now the Bates House, by Abraham Bush, in the Fall of 1851. The American House, on the corner of Main and Front Streets, was built by James P. Hughes, in the Fall of 1852.

The first merchant in the place was F. D. Cowles, who erected his store and opened his first stock of goods in the Fall of 1851. The first hotel was kept by Dr. Houghton in a little log building on Front Street, near the present residence of W. O. Erickson. The first drug store was kept by Isaac B. Place, on Front Street, near the Lansing House. It was opened in the Fall of 1852. The first justice of the peace was an Englishman by the name of Luckins. The fourth was J. W. Merrill, who held the office consecutively for twenty years, from 1855 to 1875.

The first preaching in Lansing was by a Congregationalist minister, Rev. A. L. Lyman, who began to preach in a small school house on Main Street, where Scheik's Block now stands, in 1853. The lower part of the building was occupied for a post office. The first church—the present Congregational—was erected in 1853. In 1856 Rev. Mr. Lyman was succeeded by Rev. Mr. Adams. Under the ministry of the former the Congregational Church was organized—C. M. Cherry, Lewis Place, Miss Barrows, afterwards Mrs. Dr. Houghton, Mrs. William Haney, Mrs. John Haney, Sr., and Mrs. Lewis Hays being among the first members.

CHURCHES.

There are at present eleven churches in the town, viz.: One Episcopal; two Presbyterian—American and German; three Methodist—German, American and Norwegian; two Lutheran Norwegian churches; one Baptist, one Congregational, and one Catholic. Most of these churches have settled pastors, and several of the buildings are among the finest structures in the place.

MANUFACTURES.

The principal manufacturing of the place is carried on by the following establishments: The Iron Works and Foundry of Boeckh, Luger & Co., manufacturers of the Eureka turbine water wheels, rotary saw mills, mill gearing, and steam engines, employ about twenty men, and do an aggregate business amounting to $25,000 per annum. Connected with this foundry is the business of Mr. C. G. Mullikin, practical millwright, who furnishes plans and estimates for the erection of all kinds of flour and saw mills, and manufactures and ships turbine water wheels to all parts of the United States. Mill burrs, bolting cloth, smutters, separators, flour-packers, mill gearing, etc., are also a part of his trade.

The wagon, carriage and sleigh manufactory of Boekfinger & Boekemeyer employs about forty men, and turns out a large amount of work.

The flouring mill of Foster, Lee & Co. manufactures 125 barrels of flour per day, and the barrels are made here at the cooper shop of the Fleck Bros., who employ about seven hands.

Hennenway, Barkly & Co. have a steam saw mill and an extensive planing mill, door, sash and blind factory, which give employment to seventy-five men.

Travers & Co's steam sash, door and blind factory is another similar establishment, though not so extensive.

J. C. Mauger has a steam cabinet factory, which employs about ten men.

There are four extensive lumber yards besides the one connected with the steam mill, viz.: the yards of E. T. Albert & Sons, Smith & Merrill, S. B. Johnson, and John Paul, of La Crosse.

TRADE AND MERCHANDISE.

Few places on the river present a more active appearance than Lansing. The streets are frequently lined with teams, loaded with wood, grain, hogs and lumber, either delivering at the depot and the various warehouses the products of the surrounding country, or receiving the merchandise and manufactured products of the place. There are eighteen warehouses for the storage of produce and seven elevators.

Shipments.—The shipments from this point during the season of navigation, from March 30 to November 18, 1874, per Keokuk & Northern Packet Company: Nielander & Brockhausen, agents, were 54,941 bushels of wheat, 3,096 bushels of barley, 120 bushels of rye, 2,054 bushels of potatoes, 488 barrels of flour, 8 barrels of wine, 2 barrels of vinegar, 2 barrels of whisky, 2 barrels of pork, 107 sheep, 3 cows, 3 horses, 2,805 pounds of hides, 2,210 pounds of lard and tallow, 173 packages of household goods, 33,635 pounds of general merchandise, 6 corn planters, 5 plows, 6,199 pounds of butter, 3 reapers and mowers, 4 boxes of soap, 4 circular saws, 67 dozen brooms, 5 harrows, 1 sulkey, and 2,000 empty sacks.

The receipts of merchandise per same line, during the same period, and by the same agents, were as follows: Merchandise, per bills of lading 522,811 pounds, 420 barrels of apples, 32 barrels of cider, 102 barrels of wines and liquors, 72 barrels of oil, 2 barrels of pork, 20 barrels of sweet potatoes, 20 barrels of marble dust, 10 barrels of sugar, 70 barrels of vinegar, 69 kegs of beer, 325 barrels of cement, 64 plows, 9 wagons, 14 buggies and carriages, 4 separators, 3 sulkey rakes, 22 cultivators, 9 harvesters, 3 reapers, 5 mowers, 100 sets hubs, 90 packages of hardware, 60 packages of household goods, 135 packages of groceries, 138 bundles of sacks, 62 boxes of glass, 67 dozen brooms, 5 boxes cheese, 1 safe, 4 pumps, 2 scales, 14 dozen tubs, 2 oil cans, 50 boxes of peaches, 4 bales of oakum, 31 trunks, 1 piano, 44 kegs white lead, 20 kegs tobacco, 15 boxes paints and dyes, 3 coils rope, 79 kegs of nails. The freight charges on these goods were $4,056.63.

The above firm, Nielander, Brockhausen & Co., did a business during the year 1874 amounting to over $750,000, and this is not above the usual yearly business of that single house. The First National Bank frequently pays out from $10,000 to $15,000 per day for produce.

We have not the statistics of the Diamond Jo line of steamers, but are informed by Mr. Nielander, that more business was done by that line during the navigation of 1874 than by the Keokuk & Northern Line Packet Company, of which he and Mr. Brockhausen are the agents.

The shipments at the railroad station, from June 1 to December 31, 1874, were:

Freights forwarded	35,032,440 pounds.
Freights received	6,872,350 "

The rest of the business of Lansing may be summed up in nine dry goods stores, four grocery stores, four drug stores, four hardware houses, five clothing stores, four millinery establishments, two jewelery stores, three harness shops, two exclusively boot and shoe stores, six blacksmith shops, two livery stables, and five hotels.

INCORPORATION.

Lansing was first incorporated as a town in 1864, and George W. Gray was elected the President of the Council. In 1867 a city charter was adopted. The first Mayor was S. B. Shaw; W. H. Burford, City Clerk. The population at present is about 4,000.

There are three weekly newspapers printed in Lansing—Two English and one German.

The Lansing Intelligencer, now the Lansing Mirror, was established in the Fall of 1853, by W. H. Sumner, and through various changes has had a continued existence ever since. It has been a Republican organ since the commencement of the Republican movement. In 1861 it was published by G. W. Haislet, who sold the paper to T. C. Medary, and in 1870 it was purchased by Metcalf & Co., James T. Metcalf, the present editor and proprietor, being the principal of the firm. In July, 1874, James T. Metcalf bought the interest of his partner, John T. Metcalf, and has since conducted the establishment alone.

The Mirror is a weekly, seven-column folio, with a circulation of about 700, and has connected with it a well equipped job office.

The North Iowa Journal, Democratic, or Liberal in politics, was the first Democratic paper printed in Lansing. It was established in February, 1860, by McElroy & Parker, and called the Democrat. They were succeeded in a few months by Christian Lomann, who changed the name to the Argus, and published it about six months, which ended its career in that form. In 1862, J. G. Armstrong changed it to the North Iowa Journal, and published it about three years, when he sold it to Taylor & Haislet, who changed the name to the Chronicle, which was conducted as an independent paper till the office was burned down, in 1871. The materials, however, were saved and sold to the Metcalfs, publishers of the Mirror. The Allamakee Democrat had been started in summer of 1870, by R. V. Shurly. He conducted it about a year, and sold out to the Sherburnes, who in a few months sold the office to T. C. Medary, the present publishers, who gave it the old name of the North Iowa Journal, which it now bears.

Mr. Medary has been connected with the press of Lansing nearly sixteen years, and is the oldest publisher in the county. The Journal is the official county paper, and has a circulation of about 800. The office contains good facilities for job printing.

Die Nord Iowa Post, is a German paper, published by Peter Karberg. The first number was issued on the 6th of June, 1873. It is a seven-column folio, with a circulation of about 900, and is a good advertising medium. It circulates through Northwestern Iowa, Southern Minnesota, and Western Wisconsin, and is independent in politics, and the German official paper of Alamakee County. Its office is in the same building with the North Iowa Journal.

GRADED SCHOOL.

Lansing has one graded public school. The building is of stone, and was erected in 1864, at a cost, exclusive of furniture, of $7,000. The school is well supplied with globes, charts and maps, and conducted according to the best modern methods of instruction. The grades are primary, intermediate, grammar, and high school. Nine teachers are employed—two male and seven female—at salaries varying from $100 to $30 per month. The whole annual expenditure for school purposes is about $5,000 per year. The school is under the supervision of Professor C. White, Principal, with a Board of Education, of which John D. Cole is President, and G. A. Rockwell, Secretary.

The number of persons of school age in the district is 767—males, 387; females, 380. The number of pupils enrolled is 493; average daily attendance, 326. One teacher is employed who hears classes exclusively in German. His salary is $50 per month, the same as two of the lady teachers. The principal receives $100 per month, and the balance of the lady teachers, $30.

POSTVILLE.

POSTVILLE, a flourishing business town, is situated in the southeast corner of Alamakee County, in Post Township. It is on the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, twenty-six miles west of McGregor. The counties of Clayton, Allamakee, Winneshiek and Fayette corner at this point, so that Postville is almost equidistant from the county seats of these counties.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settler of Postville was Mr. J. Post, who settled on the town site in 1841, and from whom the town and township take their names. The surrounding country was then a wilderness, uninhabited except by Indians, and only occasionally visited by soldiers from Fort Crawford, by whom the mail was delivered to the few settlers till 1848. In the Summer of that year a post office was established here under the name of Postville, and in 1850 Mr. Z. Perkins laid out the first four blocks of the town, since which four additions have been made, namely, in the years 1864, 1869, 1871 and 1874, respectively.

The first store was opened in the year 1855, by J. D. Reed, J. Stevenson, and Z. Post. The second store soon followed, and was kept by Samuel Russell. A. Hart, T. Stiles, and Calvin Dresser are among the substantial and established old settlers who commenced here with the infancy of the place.

GROWTH AND PROGRESS.

For many years Postville had a slow growth; but with the completion of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad to this point, in 1871, it took a new start, and by virtue of its superior railroad facilities, a very productive tributary country, and the unity and ambition of its business men, it has developed so rapidly in material prosperity as to make it one of the most prosperous towns in the north of Iowa.

INCORPORATION.

Postville was incorporated as a town in April, 1873. Steps were immediately taken by the principal land and property owners for the improvement of the streets, and for the adoption of such measures as would invite trade and capital. By the wise management of the Council, a large amount has been expended in improvements. Upwards of three miles of sidewalk were laid during the year, besides the grading of streets, the building of cross-walks, planting of shade trees, and drainage of adjoining property. Every thing betokened new life and activity.

BUILDING IMPROVEMENTS.

About $70,000 worth of buildings were erected during 1874. Among the most beautiful and costly of these is the fine brick block on the corner of Green and Lawler Streets, owned by Bayless, Douglass & Co., Leithold Brothers and John Thoma. All the new business houses are of a substantial character; they are ornaments which do credit to the place and the enterprise of the owners, and in time, under the new policy, the old wooden structures will give place to buildings after the pattern of the imposing block that now commands general admiration. The residences are generally of a plain neatness that looks like, cheerful and pleasant, while many of the grounds are handsomely adorned with trees and shrubbery.

BUSINESS.

Postville has a large mercantile trade, and enjoys an unusual traffic in grain, produce and live stock. The shipments of grain from this point in 1874 was 171,696 bushels. In three months of the same year were shipped 283,300 dressed hogs. We have not the statistics of the shipment of cattle, but it is claimed to be greater than at any other station between McGregor and St. Paul, on the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. Of course such a traffic as these figures indicate must stimulate corresponding thrift in all other branches of trade. The entire mercantile interests of Postville have been building up with remarkable rapidity, and while we have not the space for a complete trade review, we take pleasure in naming several of the leading branches.

Leithold Bros. are a leading house in the general merchandise trade, and carry heavy stocks of dry goods, gents' furnishing, hats, caps, etc. They are also enterprising dealers in grain, which they handle from their own warehouse. Roberts Bros. have a fine trade in dry goods, groceries, hats caps, clothing, and like their neighbors, are running an elevator, have a large grain trade, and handle live stock and dressed pork in large quantities. Rolf & Wilson, dealers in ready-made clothing and gents' furnishing goods, have recently opened trade here. They have a fine merchant tailoring department, and are acquiring an excellent patronage in custom work. Prominent in the general merchandise trade is the house of L. Poesch, one of the representative merchants of the town. He is a "man of all work," and combines the mercantile trade with the dispensation of justice to his fellow townsmen. Bayless, Douglass & Co., drug merchants, have an elegant drug store, and one of the finest business blocks in this part of Iowa. They are fully stocked with everything in the drug line, and groceries, books, stationery, and fancy goods. In all these lines they have a large trade here, as well as in their branch store at Elkador. Anthony Staadt is also a successful dealer in drugs, medicines and kindred goods, and has a substantial patronage which only careful business habits could have built up. In the hardware trade, J. Ellis & Son are well stocked with heavy and shelf hardware, stoves and tinware, and are doing an excellent trade. Beucher & Spoo are also in the general hardware trade, have very full stocks, and combine with this a strong traffic in farm machinery. They are thorough and energetic men. The boot and shoe trade is well represented by J. B. Schmidt, who deals in merchant and custom work, and is making a reputation as an honest and faithful man. The building up of town and country has created a prime demand for lumber, and the two firms engaged in this trade are doing a heavy business. J. S. Mott has an immense stock of lumber and building materials (second to none in the interior), and Stauer & Daubenberger, formerly of McGregor, are also well stocked with everything in this line. The condition of the lumber trade better indicates the growth or decadance of a western town than any other branch of business. The Howe sewing machine has an extended and successful agency here, under management of N. W. Stiles, who has nearly a score of sub-agents, and as many teams, constantly on the road. Mr. Stiles is a wonderful organizer—is just the man for this position. Burling & Stowe are in the midst of a lucrative and successful practice of law, and in general insurance and collecting. S. S. Fowers is succeeding admirably in law, collections and insurance, and is doing a good real estate business. John Thoma has an elegant restaurant and saloon, and dispenses good cheer alike to body and spirit. F. J. Beedy has a good and growing trade in groceries and provisions.

WAREHOUSES.

There are several warehouses, mostly owned by the merchants who are engaged in buying grain and produce. Bassett, Hunting & Co., of McGregor, have a large elevator here, with a capacity of 50,000 bushels. In appearance it equals any of the imposing structures of the kind owned by this company on the line of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad and its branches.

HOTELS.

There are two hotels in the place—the Merchants and the National. The town could support another good hotel. Indeed, a first-class hotel is one of the present imperative wants of the place. Since the burning of the Merchants in December, 1874, the proprietor has opened a hotel of the same name in a building erected for another purpose, and although doing the best that circumstances will allow, yet the accommodations are hardly adequate to meet the demands of the traveling public, nor can they be, till a new building especially designed for hotel purposes shall have been erected and fitted up.

PUBLIC SCHOOL.

This is a credit to the town. The building is a large, two-story brick, with ample grounds well set out to trees and shrubbery. The school is graded in three departments—primary, intermediate and grammar school. Three teachers are employed, and the whole is under the supervision of Prof. A. F. Johnson, Principal. S. S. Powers, Esq., president of the Board of Education. The district contains 245 persons of school age; attendance, 160. There is an apparatus for illustrating the natural sciences, and the school is well supplied with globes, charts and maps.

BANK.

Postville has one banking house, that of Roberts Bros. It is a bank of deposit and exchange.

PROFESSIONS.

The professions are well represented by three attorneys, three physicians and four clergymen.

CHURCHES.

In religious instruction Postville is well supplied. The Methodists have a very handsome brick structure, Rev. J. L. Paine officiating as pastor.

Baptist—Rev. S. F. Smith; a handsome frame building.

Congregational—Rev. C. A. Marshal. A handsome brick.

The Lutheran Church, Rev. J. Hoyer, pastor. A fine building.

These four churches are centrally located, surrounding the public school building—perhaps on the idea that from the school to the church is but a step to name and fame with principles inculcated that shall be lasting for all time.

Near by the depot is located the Catholic Church, a new building, plain and modest becoming. The name of the priest in charge we did not learn.

NEWSPAPER.

The Postville Review is an eight-column weekly newspaper, which is receiving encouraging support from the people. It is edited and published by F. A. McCormick whose energy and enterprise are sure to make it a success. The local news is made a specialty, and is served up weekly in a spicy and readable manner. The office is well furnished for job printing.

WINNESHEIK COUNTY.

Winneshiek County is bounded on the north by Minnesota, on the east by Allamakee County, on the south by Fayette County, and on the west by Howard and Chickasaw Counties. It embraces an area of 468,000 acres, mostly arable land, and well adapted to agricultural purposes. The general surface of the county is diversified, alternating between prairie and timber, with bluffs of considerable height along the streams. It affords abundance of clay, sand, brick and stone for building purposes, while its outcrop of Trenton limestone is burned into an excellent article of quicklime.

STREAMS.

The county is well watered, having several important streams and creeks with all its borders. These afford excellent water-power, much of which has been utilized at the various mill-sites throughout the county. The Upper Iowa River runs through the northern portion of the county in a general southeast direction to about the centre, whence it flows northeasterly in a zig-zag course to where it leaves the county on the eastern border. North of the Iowa, flowing through the townships of Canoe and Pleasant, is the Canoe River, a considerable mill stream. The Turkey River runs across the southwest corner of the county, and is second only in size to the Upper Iowa.

RAILROADS AND STATIONS.

The Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway enters the county at the southeast corner, and runs diagonally across it in a north-west direction. Its principal stations in the county are Castalia, Ossian, Calmar, Conover, and Ridgeway, mostly thriving little business centers and shipping points for the farm produce of the surrounding country. The branch road of the Milwaukee and St. Paul from Conover to Decorah has proven a valuable adjunct to the growth and prosperity of the latter place.

EARLY HISTORY.

Up to 1848 this county was occupied by the Winnebago Indians. In 1840 Fort Atkinson was erected by the United States Government for the protection of these Indians from the depredations of predatory bands from other tribes. Simultaneously with the building of the fort, a mission was established about three miles distant for the purpose of educating and christianizing the savages and of inducing them to accept the customs of civilized life. To this end several hundred acres of land were broken and placed under a high state of cultivation. A sufficient portion was allotted to each new of a family, and all the inducements at the command of the Government were held out to them to make them abandon their native manners and customs and apply themselves to agriculture; but it was of no avail. They chose to lead their primitive, untrammeled life, to supply their wants from Nature's storehouse, and to fish and hunt and "chase the bounding deer." A few of the younger ones learned to read and write, but their education extended no further. They desired no teachers save the "Great Spirit," at whose shrine they worshiped, and no books except the book of nature, which was spread out before them. It became necessary to remove them in order to give place for a more permanent settlement of the country; and with their removal the necessity which led to the establishment of the fort and mission was obviated. They were both abandoned by the Government many years ago, and have been sold to private individuals. The Indians were removed and the fort and mission vacated in 1848.

PERMANENT SETTLEMENT.

The permanent settlement of the county commenced in 1848. Among the first settlers were Francis Rogers, George Bachel, F. J. Huber, David Reed, George Rean, William Day, Phillip Morse and William Painter.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

The County of Winneshiek was organized by act of the Legislature March 1, 1851, and at an election on the 7th of April ensuing Decorah was duly chosen to be the county seat. David Reed was elected County Judge; Joseph Brown, County Clerk; George Bachel, Sheriff; Daniel Kuykendall, Recorder; John Klein, Surveyor; Francis Rogers, Supervisor; and E. W. Aldrich, Coroner. Isaac Underhill and F. J. Huber were the first justices of the peace.

COUNTY COURT.

The first term of County Court for Winneshiek County was opened at the house of William Day, in Decorah, on the first Monday in September, 1851. There being no business, it was adjourned to the first Monday in October, and convened accordingly. On the 5th of October, 1851, the first marriage license was issued by Judge Reed, authorizing Johannes Evenson and Catherine Helen Anderson to become "man and wife according to law." A marriage license was also granted by the same authority to Ole Oleson and Mary Johnson on the 3d of November, 1851, and "they twain were made one flesh."

Marriage licenses crowded in those days, as if many "anxious lovers" had been waiting for the earliest opportunity to secure the right of matrimony on the first opening of the court. Hence follows these records: "Marriage license granted to Ole Gunderson and Rachel Jamison"—"Marriage license to C. Cutter and Nancy Beard." "Marriage license to Oliver Oiverson and Mary Marcuson"—"Marriage license to Hiram Oleson and Maria Hansdater." During several sessions of the court the children business seems to have been the granting of marriage licenses, locating roads and establishing and changing election precincts.

THE COUNTY SEAT QUESTION.

In all newly organized counties the county seat question has been a problem more or less perplexing. The manner in which this problem was solved in Winneshiek County is thus described by Reverend E. Adams, for many years pastor of the Congregational Church at Decorah. We quote from a Thanksgiving sermon preached in 186

"In the Winter of 1850-51 the Legislature at Iowa City appointed John L. Carse organizing officer of the county. It was his duty to furnish poll books and assist the people in appointed districts within the county in a lawful way to determine by vote where the county seat should be. Three places were appointed for the casting of votes—Decorah, Lewiston (at or near Fort Atkinson), and Moneek. The majority of the settlers were then in and about Moneek, while the interests of Lewiston and Decorah were united upon Decorah. The day of election came. For some reason or other the people of Moneek failed of receiving, as they should, the requisite poll book. A man was appointed, indeed, by the organizing officer to receive it, and it was understood that he was to give it to a certain other person, and that other person was to carry it to Moneek; but somehow there was a failure to connect. That person never received it, and it was never carried. The people of Moneek, being left to their own resources to get up a poll book and conduct their election, it is not strange that they made some leg de; a few illegal votes, too, were doubtless, in their eagerness, cast, and yet they among them, it is supposed, enough legal votes, if lawfully cast, to have secured ject. Their vote, however, was declared illegal and thrown out, which of course corah duly elected. The whole number of votes cast was sixty-three.

to that missing poll-book—how it failed to connect—this I believe is a mystery the public, which has never been satisfactorily explained. There were those who ed, and doubtless believed, that it was all a trick by designing ones that the of Moneek might fall into mistakes and get their vote thrown out. As to the whether this were so or not, the historian of course has no power to put any one stand, nor in some cases has he thought it modest to question too closely. ese being the facts in the case, it is not to be wondered at that some were dissatis- th the result of the election; and so afterwards there was an effort to move the seat thus located. This was in 1856. A law had just been passed by which the judge of any county was to submit the question of the county seat to the votes of ople, on a petition signed therefor by a certain proportion of voters in the county. ruary, 1856, a petition signed by 400, was presented to the judge, praying an n to be ordered; at the same time a remonstrance was presented signed by 800. rose a question: Was it the duty of the county judge to order an election in of the petitioners regardless of the remonstrance? or, in case of a remonstrance, at by the majority, was he to disregard the petition? Sides were taken, of course, wyers employed. For a day and a half, as the case was argued before him, did ge carefully gather all the night possible from the best legal talent of the day, deciding against the petitioners. No election was ordered. At the April elec- n unofficial vote was taken, simply to show the sentiments of the people, which as er of fact were in favor of removal, Freeport being the place named.

June another petition for an election to be ordered by the judge was presented, nother remonstrance, as before, two to one, followed by a like decision of the y judge against the petitioners. The case was then referred to the district court y, where by the district judge the action of the county judge was sustained. In 1856, a proposition was submitted to the county for a county loan of $6,000 to a court house, which at this time carried, and so fixed the location of the county t Decorah.

he affairs of the county were managed by the county court till January 1, 1861. , in pursuance of the new law, a board of supervisors was formed, to which the y court relinquished all the business, except the judicial and probate part of its ions, and was finally superseded by the circuit court in January, 1869.

e first meeting of the board of supervisors of Winneshiek County was held Jan- 7, 1861. George N. Holway was elected Chairman. After the usual preliminaries oard proceeded to appoint Mr. G. Graves a Commissioner to "examine and make rect report on the school lands and school fund of the county." Mr. Graves re- d three interests in healthy condition. On the 10th of January, 1861, the board ed a permanent seal for the county. At the next session the following patriotic utions with reference to the Rebellion were unanimously passed:

Resolved, That under the present aspect of national affairs it is the duty of every unity to do its share towards the defense of our common country.

Resolved, That it is the duty of this county to equip and cause to be drilled at least ompany of men; that, in order to do so, an appropriation by the county, enabling person to aid in his due proportion in the common defense, is most just and equit- that the men who risk their lives and spend their time should be provided with means to be of service as soldiers, and that an appropriation made in pursuance of should have precedence of all other claims: therefore,

Resolved, That the county funds now in the hands of the treasurer of Winneshiek ty be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, not exceeding the sum of $2,000, for urpose of equipping the military company known as the 'Decorah Guard,' and that lerk of the district court be, and he is, hereby authorized to issue county warrants rvi Bullis, D. H. Hughes, and C. C. Tupper, who shall constitute a committee for the uation of said county warrants and the purchase of said equipments, the said com- e first giving bonds to said county, conditioned that the said appropriation be used he purpose designed, faithfully and truly.

Resolved, That the families of the members of the 'Decorah Guard' receive the wing weekly allowance during their term of service, viz.: Three dollars per week e wife, and one dollar per week for each child, to the extent of three."

These resolutions were fully carried out, and the appropriations for the ers made continuously throughout the war.

DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT COURTS.

Winneshiek County is a part of the tenth judicial district, the balance of the district g comprised of Howard, Chickasaw, Fayette, Allamakee, and Clayton Counties. territories of the district and circuit courts coincide, or in other words, they have ourvent jurisdiction in all the judicial districts throughout the state.

The district court exercises general and original jurisdiction, both civil and crimi- where not otherwise provided, and appellate jurisdiction in all criminal matters; it has a general supervision over all inferior courts and officers in all criminal es, to prevent and correct abuses where no other remedy is provided. One district ge elected by the people, holds court alternately at each county seat at times specified he district and circuit judges, and a clerk of the district court, who is ex officio clerk of the circuit, is elected once in two years in each county.

The circuit court exercises original jurisdiction concurrent with the district court in civil actions and special proceedings, and exclusive jurisdiction in all appeals and ts of error from inferior courts, tribunals or officers, and has a general supervision eof in all civil matters. All probate business is also done by the circuit court.

DISTRICT COURT.

The first term of the District Court for this county, was held in Decorah on Friday, 9th of July, 1852. Present—Honorable Thos. S. Wilson, Judge; George Bachel, riff; and William F. Kimball, Clerk. Reuben Noble, B. W. Poor, John McKay, and n W. Remine were admitted to practice as attorneys. They had previously been itted to the bar in other States. John D. McKay, on application and examination, admitted for the first time to practice as an attorney and counsellor at law. The grand jury empaneled consisted of the following named persons:

Nathan S. Gilbert, Foreman; Isaac Callender, J. H. Gillihand, Omri Emery, Rupel, an, D. W. Curier, Henry McSwain, William Campbell, Levi Moore, Adam Heckart, liam Clarke, Lewis Eddy, Dwight Rathburn, David Frazier, Philip Howe.

The first indictment found by the grand jury was against Francis Teabout, for bling. The next was against Philander S. Baker, for selling intoxicating liquors. third was against James T. Moore, for gambling. The parties indicted were held ail for their appearance at the next term of court in the sum of $100 each.

MURDER CASES.

Two noted murder cases occurred in this county—one in 1861, and the other in 2. The first was the case of John Livengood and Delilah A. Telyea, for the murder Charles Telyea, the husband of Delilah A., in the September and October terms of rt in 1861, before Judge Williams. The first grand jury in the case failed to indict parties, on the ground that the body of the murdered man had not been found, but case was brought before the next grand jury, who brought in a bill. A change of ue was taken to Clayton County, where the parties were tried, and Livengood was sen- ced to the penitentiary for life, while Mrs. Telyea was acquitted, although public nion generally considered her guilty. Livengood was pardoned out at the end of ten rs, and is supposed to be now living somewhere in Northern Wisconsin.

The other case was that of Charles D. Seeley, for the murder of William McClintock, d before Judge McGlathery February 11, 1872. Seeley was convicted of man- ghter, and sentenced to the penitentiary, at hard labor, for fifteen months.

COURT OFFICERS.

The present officers of the Tenth Judicial District are:

District Judge—Honorable Reuben Noble, McGregor.

Circuit Judge—Honorable C. T. Granger, Waukon.

District Attorney—Honorable O. J. Clark, Decorah.

Clerk—Honorable A. W. Brownell, Decorah.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

Up to 1858, the county had no buildings of its own, but rented such places as were st convenient for county purposes. For some time courts were held in the log house William Day, and afterwards in Newell's Hall. The present court house was begun 1857, and finished in 1858. The cost of the building, including fall in the basement, s about $18,000. The land for county purposes was donated by Day and Painter, the ginal proprietors of the town.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

The poor house and farm of Winneshiek County are located on the southeast quar- section 14, township 98, range 8 west, in Decorah Township. The property was rchased in 1866, and contained at that time a large frame house. Subsequently, a ck house, barn and other buildings were erected, the whole costing about $7,000. e farm contains sixty acres, and recently seventy acres of timber land have been ded. The accommodations are sufficient for 100 persons, though the average num- ber of inmates has not been over twenty-two. Moses Gove, of the Society of Friends, is Superintendent, under whose excellent management the poor of the county are well taken care of.

The county has an Agricultural Society, whose fair grounds are located east of the city. They contain about twenty acres, with a fine half-mile trotting course, and are well fitted up for purposes of exhibition. Alva Tracy, President; H. H. Eaton, Secretary; Jacob Jewell, Treasurer.

A. W. BROWNELL, Clerk of Courts.	C. H. HITCHCOCK, Sheriff.
E. KLOVE, Treasurer.	G. L. HOLWAY, Supt. of Schools.
CHARLES STEEN, Recorder.	WILLIAM C. ADSIT, Surveyor.
H. A. BIGELOW, Auditor.	A. S. FERRIN, Coroner.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

GEORGE C. WINSHIP, Chairman.

M. S. DRURY, T. G. HALE, F. BRITTAIN, CHARLES MEYERS.

CITY OF DECORAH.

DECORAH is situated on the Upper Iowa River in the county of Winneshiek, of which it is the seat of justice. It derives its name from a once-famous chief of the Winnebagos, who, it is supposed, occupied this valley, if not the very spot on which the city now stands, prior to the advent of the first white settlers. Be that as it may, it is at least certain that many Indians of the Winnebago tribe were the immediate predecessors of the white man on this soil, and that their wigwams had scarcely disappeared when the cabins of the pioneers of the white man began to be erected.

What reminiscences of these aborigines are awakened by the name of their chief, DECORAH—a name happily perpetuated in a city which has taken the place of an ancient village of his people! Here, less than thirty years ago, these people lived in their rude and savage state—children of the forest and prairie; their trails centering here from all the adjoining country, and through the trees which then covered the river banks arose the smoke of their wigwams. If natural beauty of scenery had its charms for these simple children of Nature, it is no wonder that they were attracted to this spot. But it is probable that they were drawn here from other motives They sought the timber along the streams as a shelter from the summer heat and winter winds of the prairies. Where fuel was convenient and springs gushed from the hill-sides, they built their lodges. They gathered here to fish and hunt, to hold their councils of peace and war, to bury their dead, and perform their simple rites of worship. Here were the games and sports of the young, the solemn meetings of the elders of the tribe, the lamentations of burial scenes, as some old warrior-chief, maiden or child was called to depart; and feasts of rejoicing over successes in hunting or victories achieved in the bloody strife. All this primitive life of our predecessors was lived on this spot a few years ago—within the memory of some who have lived to see their rude village superseded by a flourishing city, crowded with a life and a civilization in strange contrast with their savage manners and customs.

EARLY HISTORY.

We can not better introduce our historical sketch of Decorah than by quoting quite liberally from a Thanksgiving discourse delivered in this city, by Rev. E. Adams, in 1867. After describing the primitive condition of this valley, Mr. Adams says:

"In the month of June, 1849, could have been seen an ordinary emigrant wagon, with horses detached, and arrangements being made, not for a night's camping merely, but for a permanent stay. This, as every body is aware, was what is known the country around as the "Day Family," consisting then of nine persons; starting first from Tazewell County, Virginia, the year previous, touching at Cassville, Wisconsin, then for a short time on a claim in the east part of the county, near John McKay's, thence to this place. McGregor was but a landing, but seldom lauded at. What some of us have traveled as the old stage road was but an Indian trail, with only two settlers on it between here and Monona, at what is now Frankville.

"Beyond this, westward, were but two white families, by the names of Reams and Button. The head of this Button family was suspected of horse-thieving, and was at an early day visited on this business by a deputation of nine men from Linn County, anxious that justice should be extended even to the farthest limits of the country then known. No evidence was really found against him; but upon the hint that his absence would be as good as his presence, he soon left, selling his claim to a man by the name of Johnson, of whom the farm was purchased by Mr. Jacob Jewell.

"But to return to the inmates of our emigrant wagon. The first thing, of course, was a covering for the head, and then more permanent arrangements for the winter. A temporary cabin, 16x16, to serve ultimately as a stable, had already by way of anticipation been partially erected by some members of the family who selected the site, and this was soon so far completed as to admit of moving in; and the same night was a tavern opened on the same premises, where from that day to this the hospitalities of the 'Winneshiek House' have ever been extended. In that first season, when, by the presence of surveying parties, horse-thief hunters, or the rush of travel on Indian trails, the accommodations within were somewhat straightened, the guests in the mild evenings of our Autumnal climate could find a welcome bed on the green grass just outside, and ample space for horses as they stood tied to Indian saplings. No need then for the old sign 'Room for Man and Beast.' It was all room, and all the room there was was apparent to every one. Before winter, however, a more commodious building was erected, the main part 20x25, with a wing attached. This was made of logs, shingled, lathed and plastered—really for the time quite an imposing structure. This is the building known as 'the old log house,' and which made its disappearance but a few years since.—[It was bought by a Norwegian, and removed several miles out into the country, where it is a comfortable house yet. —EDITOR.]

"In this connection it may be proper to say that the present Winneshiek House was built in the years 1854 and '55. The frame was hewed from the native timber, the lath and shingles obtained at Lansing, while the siding is of the pine that once skirted the banks of our river, got out at what was known as Carter's Mill, at Plymouth Rock. Considering its size, and the difficulty, at the time, of obtaining and collecting materials, no wonder that it was two years in building, completed December 24, 1855. The Decorah House, as it was originally built, was finished prior to this in 1854, and since enlarged at different times to its present dimensions. An allusion to the Tremont House, finished in 1857 and burned in 1867, gives us a glance at the hotel business among us, commenced in that first log house, though perhaps there is another that some one will say ought to be named—'The Central House.'

"Almost coeval with this branch of business commenced another, which now appears in the history we have commenced. I allude to the improvement of our water powers. In the same season of 1849, that man with his family, who, the year previous, on an exploring expedition through this region, had seen such visions of mill wheels, mill stones, saw mills, turning lathes, possibly of woolen mills also, in connection with the curves of our river and the adjacent springs, that he had already made his claim and put up his cabin at the square; a man who, endowed by nature with more than ordinary mechanical skill, has been following up his visions ever since—one who is frequently upon our streets, the fruits of whose labors all of us are reaping more or less, one of those by whom the world is more benefited than is by the world acknowledged. This man, as of course many of you know, was William Painter, a native of Green County, Ohio. "His cabin was built upon the property known as the Butler property, nearly opposite the machine shop, where, as the fruits of his labor, may now be seen the first well dug in the town. In his family was the first birth, that of his son, George Patten, born in the Fall of 1849, in honor of which, and also because he took the names of two sons of the Day family—George and Patten—he afterwards had the present of a town lot.

"In his milling propensities, Mr. Painter commenced immediately in 1849 what is known as the Spring or Dunning's Mill, soon taking in company with him one Aldridge. He brought a small pair of burrs with him from Cincinnati, and set them running by the simplest machinery possible, in a log mill about sixteen feet square, some of the remains of which are still to be seen. The Heivly power was on his claim, but he did not think it best to commence the improvement of this till his means should be more ample and the country better settled. This power, however, was not long to remain waiting, for soon there came to town another, the third family, February, 1851, in which there was some propensity for milling, to which we have alluded as a kind of family trait, true to which the descendants of this family may still be seen threading our water courses in search of more powers yet to be improved; I allude now, as many of you well know, to the 'Morse family'—the respected father of which, familiarly known as 'Uncle Philip,' is still among us."—[Since removed to California—ED.]

"He, with his wife and two children, moved in for a time with Mr. Painter, but soon built him a cabin on the back part of the lot on which the Tremont House stood. He built a year or two afterwards, in August and September, 1852, the first frame dwelling in town, which is still standing and occupied by Mr. Driggs—just west of the Tremont stand.

In his family was the first marriage in town, as the records have it:

MARRIED.—August 22, 1852, Henry F. Morse to Hannah C. Chase. John S. Morse, minister.

"But we must not by these pleasing items be drawn down our thread of history too rapidly. In the same season that he came, the Summer of 1851, Mr. Morse bought of Mr. Painter a portion of the Heivly water-power, and commenced the saw mill now upon it, he and Mr. Painter building the dam and race together. Mr. Painter built about the same time a grist mill, the frame of which still stands within the walls enclosing the present building. About this time the Spring Mill was sold to its present owner, Mr. Dunning, whose family was the fourth in town.

Thus commenced and to the joint labors of these men—Wm. Painter, Philip Morse and E. Dunning—are we indebted for the first beginning by way of improving the abundant water-power with which we are favored, the value of which we do not yet begin to realize, but which is being developed from day to day. No doubt their labors at this early day had much to do in making this a point, as well as drawing hither other branches of manufacture to which reference may be made in due time.

"In this same year, July 3, 1851, the first lawyer made his appearance. Undertaking to walk out from Lansing, he got lost by the way and stopped the first night at a Norwegian's house, six or eight miles east of this. Starting on the next morning, he came along about noon to the log tavern, and inquired the way to Decorah, rejoicing no doubt to be at his journey's end ere he had found it. His name was John B. Onstine. The second of this profession who came was Dryden Smith; the third, A. B. Webber; the fourth, John L. Burton; the fifth, L. Bullis; the sixth, E. E. Cooley, who came in October, 1854.

"Mention has been made of houses being built. Of course there were carpenters here at this early date. The first in town was a man by the name of Stevens, who soon left for California, where he has since died. The second was our fellow-citizen, Mr. Wm. E. Taylor, who came in November, 1851. He bought the chest and tools of Mr. Stevens—the first brought to town—which chest and many of said tools are doing good service at the present day (1867).

"The mercantile has ever been a prominent interest among us. This, too, was started at an early date, in the Summer of 1851, by Aaron Newell, with a partner by the name of Derrick. They opened their stock of goods—not a very large one; some say about a wheel-barrow full—in the small smoke house on the Winneshiek premises. They soon moved for better accommodations to a kind of slab shanty, until they could build a real frame building—the first store and the first frame building erected in town, advertised and known as the "Pioneer Store," at present (1867) owned and occupied by the firm of Goddard & Henry, and by them enlarged to its present dimensions. This was completed in the Summer of 1852, and was for the time quite a building, furnishing in the second story a public hall, called Newell's Hall. Could we but have a view of all the transactions within that hall—courts, caucuses, and I am afraid dances too, and all sorts of things—it would give us a pretty good clue to the early history of the times.

"In connection with law and commerce, the Gospel soon came, in September, 1851, in the person of a Methodist preacher, who presented himself at the cabin of Uncle Morse, on the errand, as he said, of looking up the "lost sheep of the house of Israel." Being assured that he had found them, he walked in. That night there was preaching in town, and a class was soon organized. This preacher was Elder Bishop, and made arrangements to preach monthly, taking in Lansing and the country about in his circuit.

"A few weeks after a Congregational minister, Rev. A. E. Eastman, made his appearance, and established monthly meetings at the log tavern. Hence sprang the two first churches organized in town. Their subsequent history, the dates of organization, the time of building their houses of worship, with a notice of the churches more recently formed, would take us farther down the line of history we are pursuing, and require more minuteness than time will permit at present.

"While these things are going on, assuming shape evidently to make this quite a point, another event occurred which can not be overlooked. It was in this season of 1851 that Decorah was established as the county seat. [We have transferred this part of the early reminiscences to the history of the county (see article County Seat Question), and therefore omit further mention of it here, except to say that it was an important acquisition for Decorah. The county town is supposed to promise greater growth and prosperity than any other place within its borders, by centering there the talent, wealth and enterprise of the county. This is especially the case with an inland county, where no rival commercial center is likely to spring up on account of advantages of situation. And so it was in Decorah. The establishment of the county seat here, even its anticipation, brought to the place much of that talent and enterprise which have kept Decorah in the foreground from its very commencement.]

"But how easy it is to slide down the lapse of time. We were in the year 1851—quite an eventful year. Let us see what we have: Three log cabins, one a hotel, a lawyer and two merchants, partners in trade, with other families and persons that might be mentioned, though the census would not be large; the water-power beginning to be improved, regular preaching once a month by the two denominations, and a county seat, with of course regular sessions of the county court—(an august body!) This year of 1851 is really the most interesting by way of the beginning of things among us, and we might dwell here entirely; but we will come down a few years later, by a brief glance here and there at what is transpiring.

"In 1852 some new comers are added and new trades introduced. It was in this year that the first blacksmith shop was started, by an old Californian, who burned his own coal in what is known as 'Cruson's Hollow.' He blew his bellows in a building now occupied by Mr. Golz as a cabinet shop; and as he pounded his iron was somewhat of a dealer in real estate also. By him the whole block on which the Howell House stands, now the residence of Mr. Goddard, was purchased for $20. The block opposite, where is now the residence of Mr. Horace Weiser, for $40. A few additional frame dwellings there must have been at that time, though probably not many, as this blacksmith's wife was designated as 'the woman that lives in the frame house.' His name, as near as can be ascertained, was A. Bradish. He also carried on the tin trade, and had as a hired journeyman one George C. Winship.

"It was in this year, I think, that another very lucrative business was started, though it gives no pleasure to mention it. About this time, down under the hill, near Day's spring, was a man (we will not call his name at this time) boasting that he had 'the pure article' for sale; but it was afterwards ascertained that it had been well watered on its way to this place at Trout Run—a whisky fraud, no doubt. This traffic soon crept into daylight on Water Street, and was subsequently in the hands of one Goodkins, whose establishment not long afterwards was destroyed, and the place for once cleared of liquors. This, however, was the result more of a quarrel among his patrons than a movement of reform among the people. The absence of the spirits was but temporary. To the place, though swept and garnished, they soon returned with at least seven others added, which have gone on increasing ever since." [True at that time, 1867, but a better class of things have since obtained. This is now a quiet and temperate town.—ED.] "In justice to this Goodkins it ought to be said that there is reason to believe that he became a better man, as some of us used to meet him in prayer meetings and as one interested in Sabbath schools. So in the history of this town have some from time to time exchanged the business referred to for a better, and to as many as will do likewise will we most heartily give the right hand of welcome.

"In 1853 the population increases. In this year Ammon & Co. came in—the first to add steam to our water power, the beginning of what has culminated at last in the present foundry and machine shop—an establishment no less useful than ornamental to the place. It was in this year that the town was first laid out, and the original plat made ready for record August 7, 1853. The man is still living—Judge Pierce, of Clayton County—who claims the honor of suggesting to members of the Day family the idea, while yet in their log house. The idea, however, was not entirely new to them, though by his encouragement, doubtless, their purpose was strengthened. He claims, too, the credit of suggesting the name Decorah, and tells how, after supper, he took a piece of chalk and marked out on the table how the town should be laid off.

"In 1853 the first school house was built. School was taught in it that year by a young man who came with his father's family from Crawford County, Pennsylvania, and settled at Freeport. After teaching school that Winter, he was for four years the acting treasurer of Winneshiek County until of age, when he was elected for three successive terms to fill the office, until in the war he served as captain of Company D, Sixth Iowa Cavalry, after which he became cashier of the First National Bank of Decorah, where he may still be found. His name is T. W. Burdick. To him much credit is due that, since the organization of the county, its treasury has never suffered from a single embezzlement or fraud. Mr. Burdick shows his certificate, signed by Mr. H. K. Averill, and a list of his scholars, about forty-six in number, with the names of the parents. He says he 'boarded 'round,' taking in his range the families in Cruson's Hollow on the east, and the Moore and Child places on the west; and that such was the growth of trees and underbrush about the school house that one could hardly see it at four rods distant.

"In 1854 the school was taught by a young man who came in the greenness of his youth fresh from Vermont, seeking a location for the practice of medicine. He had come in through Monona, and was greatly discouraged by the residents here, so far as the prospects of medical practice were concerned, but had the offer of the school, with thirty dollars per month, if he could pass an examination. An examining committee was appointed, and a day set for the ordeal. The day came, and with it one of the committee, who examined him, found him qualified, and gave him a certificate. He commenced school, taught a month, flogged a child of one of the directors, and raised quite an excitement in the district thereby. By this time his practice had commenced; he did not care whether he taught or not. The result was, another man took his place, and he devoted himself to his profession, which he has modestly followed ever since. His name was H. C. Bullis. The committeeman who gave him a certificate was Levi

Bullis. The new teacher was Charley Allen. That old certificate is still kept as a relic of the past; whether brought out in later times as evidence to the people of qualifications for senatorial honors is not ascertained. He was afterwards State Senator, and then two years Lieut-Governor.

"It would be interesting here, from these beginnings, to trace the history of our educational institutions—the select or high schools we have had (good ones, too), not overlooking, of course, our Norwegian College, but more especially to trace the course of our public school: how it was driven by Winter's cold and straitness of space to sojourn for a while in basement rooms; sheltered beneath church eaves, as schools often are; how taxes were first voted by the people for a $20,000 school house, generally about three attending the elections, till money accumulating excited an interest among the lovers of education! It would be interesting to follow the progress of these things, till at last we have such a building and such a school as we have, of which we have reason to be proud; but of this time will not admit.

"At the close of this year, 1854, let us see, if we can, how the town looks. Our three cabins of '51 have increased to quite a little village of fifteen or twenty buildings, counting hotels, stables, shops, stores and houses of all kinds. On the other side of Dry Run, so-called, to the south and east stands one now occupied by Dr. Bolles; on Broadway two—the old school house and the one occupied by myself, though less in size then than now. The rest, a dozen or fifteen in number, were scattered along Water Street, commencing with the old building, or a part of it, now occupied by Mr. Keyes for a carpenter shop, including some of the old buildings on the opposite side a little farther up; then up to the hotels, the Pioneer Store, and so with a building here and there on one side of the street or the other up to the cabins of Mr. Painter and Mr. Morse aforesaid. The population probably was about 100.

"At this time traces of Indian graves were not all obliterated; half a dozen or so had indeed been leveled to prepare the site for the erection of the Winneshiek House, then in building. However, a spot was marked, and still had traces by which it could be recognized—right at the intersection of Main and Winnebago Streets, between the old Norwegian College building and lawyer Bulis' office—of a recent grave, said to be the resting place of the remains of the chief Decorah, from whom our town was named. Some present may remember how, a few years afterward, our bosoms swelled with respect for the old chief; with what reverence we examined his remains; how in imagination we beheld his noble form as his skull, with its straight black hair, was turned by a spade; with what pomp and ceremony it was planned to remove his remains to some suitable place, possibly a monument erected; till, in gathering necessary facts for the occasion, word came back to us that Decorah was a chief greatly respected by his tribe, an old man, considerably bent over, with one eye put out and his hair very gray. His hair very gray! All but this could have been got along with; but somehow the poetry was all gone! Enthusiasm had subsided! However, if in future years, by the lapse of time, this difficulty should be obliterated, and any desire remain in any to erect a monument to the old chief, they can find his bones, or those of some other poor Indian, safely deposited in a rough box a few inches below the surface of the ground, close to the northeast corner of the Court House yard.

"In 1855 Decorah made marked progress. Many new-comers were added, and many new kinds of business introduced, among them the Pioneer harness shop was opened by J. C. Spencer. The first livery stable started was by Clark Kenyon and C. E. Dickerman. Said Dickerman also sold the first drugs, with an assortment of other things, such as could be turned to advantage, though the first regular drug store was opened the year after by E. I. Weiser & Brother.

"What gave the place a special impetus in this year (1855) was the establishment here of the land office for the Turkey River land District. The bill constituting this land district passed Congress in March, 1855, mainly by the efforts of General Jones, of Dubuque. What consideration any persons in Washington were to receive for getting the office here; how they somehow failed of getting what they expected, and, displeased thereby, aided in removing the office in 1856, need not be told; nor, need a minute detail of land-office times here be entered upon. They must have been wild and curious times. The office was finally opened the day before Christmas, 1855; office hours from 9 to 12 only each day. The town was crowded with adventurers from all parts of the country, with a rage for land almost barbarous. For two weeks, until some system was established, entrance was gained to the office by brute force. He who could get his hand upon the handle of the door and maintain his position till office hours, was first best. The entrance was by an outside stairway leading to the second story. The building used for the office still stands, occupied as a boarding house, one door east of the harness shop of Mr. Noble. The white paint but partially hides the old sign, 'U. S. Land Office.'

"One night, with the thermometer 35° below zero, a man stationed himself at midnight at the head of the stairs, and endured the bitter cold bravely for his chance. By morning both his feet were frosted, but still he held his ground. A while after daylight, the crowd gathered behind him down the stairs and out into the street, passed up to him a warm breakfast and hot coffee in honor of his persistence, and good-naturedly cheered him to hold on, which he did. Sometimes the throngs would begin to gather by 1 o'clock P. M., and stand all night for the next day. At the same time, in the rear of the building was another pair of stairs, and those within the ring could somehow get entrance to the office and enter all the land they chose, by paying a fee to the officials. Head clerks in this way received their hundreds of dollars for a single night's work. This, too, was known. How this company of men ever got through the winter without continued contentions and outbreaks, to say nothing of tearing the office to the ground, as they threatened to do, is indeed a wonder, especially when we are told, and we would not say it if we had not been told so, that the quantity of liquor used that winter was by no means limited. It is also remarkable that during this time not a theft or a robbery was known. This is the more so, as the amount of gold, or its equivalent, then in town was almost incredible—some say not less than half a million. In proof of this, the man can be produced, and he then but a youth, who affirms that, on peculiar circumstances, he was constituted, by acclamation, chief treasurer, to hold in safe keeping, for the time being, such effects as might be upon the persons present. Belts filled with gold, packages of warrants, etc., were thrown together in a dry goods box, over which he was to stand guard until the equilibrium of the assembly should be restored, the contents of which box counted out over $320,000. The circumstances alluded to I need not hint, farther than to say, that it was about Christmas, just as the news came that the office was to be really opened. Such a young man, so standing in the esteem of his fellows for sobriety and honesty, deserves to prosper as a retired banker in the honest calling of a farmer. We wish him a railroad close to his house.

"In this Winter and Spring nine banking houses were in full operation, two of which remain, viz: that of Weiser & Gilbert, now the Winneshiek County Bank, and Easton, Cooley & Co.'s, now the First National Bank. Heavy stocks of goods were opened. The population and business had taken such a start that Decorah was the chief center of trade for the whole region round about, even for hundreds of miles or more, north and east.

"When the land office was removed in 1856, some people and some things left with it, but many staid. The town got a start and kept on growing; no railroads, indeed yet, but still we live. I will follow down the history no farther; but you will allow me here to note a few first things which I have not that have failed to find a place in the history given.

"The first court was in the log tavern, on the first Monday in September, 1851. There being no business, adjourned to October following. The county revenues at this time were seventy cents. Warrants issued, $8.

"The first mail entered town in June, 1851—in it one letter and two newspapers; Lewis Hawkins, mail carrier; C. Day, postmaster. It is said that in those days he carried the post office in his pocket."

INCORPORATION AND OFFICERS.

Decorah was incorporated as a village on the first Monday in April, 1857. The first election of officers was on the 30th of June following, when Honorable E. E. Cooley, was elected President.

The act of incorporation as a city was secured on the 6th of March, 1871, and at the ensuing election the following officers were chosen:

CHARLES F. ALLEN, Mayor. E. J. WEISER, Treasurer.
G. W. PATTERSON, Clerk. E. E. COOLEY, City Attorney.
JOHN T. BAKER, Marshal.

ALDERMEN.

G. C. RUSTAD,	J. L. PENNINGTON,	JOHN GREER.
G. W. ADAMS.	A. D. THOMAS,	O. J. CLARK.
N. BURDICK,	J. H. MONTGOMERY,

PRESENT ASPECT OF THE CITY.

Decorah is a surprise to all visitors. Situated inland among the bluffs of the Upper Iowa, away from all thoroughfares or through lines of railway, and without any outside aid, it has grown to be the business center of a large circle of surrounding country. As the country has developed the city has grown in wealth, business, population and adornments. It numbers at present between 3,000 and 4,000 inhabitants, and is doing a business amounting to several million dollars annually. It is a picturesque little town, being diversified in its surface and adorned with buildings of fine architectural design and appearance. They are mostly of red brick on the principal business streets, presenting a clean, substantial and business-like aspect. The court house and churches occupy a handsome rise of ground back of the principal business streets, overlooking both sides of the city. On an elevation to the west is the fine building of the Norwegian Luther-College, looming in the distance, with its spacious and well-arranged grounds.

The country about Decorah is settled mostly with Norwegians, who comprise about one-third of the population of Winneshiek County. Most of them came to the country from 1852 to 1857. They are an intelligent, industrious and enterprising class of people, and many of them among the best and wealthiest farmers in Iowa.

Decorah has much more of a city appearance than most places of its size. Its large and elegant brick stores, its stone walks, its well-graded and solid streets, its mills, foundries, public buildings and tastely and costly residences, all contribute to give it an air of beauty and substantial prosperity. A dozen or more brick stores over 100 feet deep and fourteen feet high to the ceiling, with full-light plate glass windows and fine stocks of goods, are among the adornments and financial utilities of the place, while we must not omit mention of one of the finest millinery stores in the Northwest, that of Mr. B. O. Dahly on Water street. It is a wonder to many uninitiated into the mysteries of this fine art, which has for its object the catering to the tastes of the belles and matrons of a town which, though inland, is by no means behind the times either in fashions or good society.

The professions are well represented in Decorah by able members of the bar, the pulpit and the press.

MANUFACTURES.

There are ten good water-powers in and about Decorah, and eight of them are in active operation in different kinds of manufactures. There is now (1875) at least $500,000 invested in these interests at Decorah, among which are:

Five flouring mills, two woolen mills, one paper mill, two machine shops, one paper barrel factory, two manufactories of agricultural implements, two breweries, one soap factory, one cracker factory, and one stone and marble shop.

Ammon, Scott & Co., manufacturers of agricultural implements, founders and machinists, also proprietors of the Decorah Flouring Mills and general merchants, have the largest establishment and combine the greatest variety of business. The agricultural works were founded in 1853 by John Ammon, who came here with his family from Quincy, Illinois, among the first settlers. The milling business was established in 1870, the company purchasing the mill of Henry Heivly, formerly known as the Painter Mill.

In 1870, George W. Scott, originally from Pittsburgh, became a member of the firm, the interest then being incorporated in a joint stock company, which it continues still to be. John Ammon, President; George W. Scott, Secretary.

The agricultural works of this company manufactured in the year 1874, 500 wagons, 800 plows, 500 bob-sleighs, and a large amount of machine work and Turbine water-wheels, aggregating $275,000 worth of manufactured goods, including flour. The capacity of their mills for manufacturing flour is 40,000 barrels per annum. About sixty hands are employed. The paid up capital in the whole business is $115,000. All the improvements in mill machinery have been adopted. This company is shipping flour to all parts of the United States, their brands being well and favorably known in Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Troy, Albany, Washington and Charleston, South Carolina, in all of which cities they can refer to first-class dealers.

The Decorah Woolen Mill Company have a large brick factory four stories high and furnished with the best machinery. It was erected in 1867 at a cost inclusive of machinery of $35,000. It manufactures about 800 yards of cloth per month and a large amount of flannel goods, shipping them to commercial centers in competition with the best goods in the market.

A. A. Akins has a woolen factory devoted to the manufacture of rolls and cloth, about 100 yards of the latter and 125 pounds of the former being turned out daily.

Jeunish & Wendling have two brick factories, where they manufacture carriages, buggies and cutters on a large scale, and give employment to about twenty hands. Their business was started in 1861, since which time it has steadily increased, and at the present time they are turning out in the neighborhood of $15,000 worth of work annually, and shipping their carriages to all parts of this State and to Minnesota and Dakota.

The Eagle Foundry, belonging to Horn, Portman, Clive & Co., is a large establishment and does quite an extensive business in the manufacture of castings and machine job work.

Dorr Addiken, miller and brewer, has a large brewery just above town, and supplies beer to dealers in all the neighboring towns for fifty miles around. He has also in connection with his brewery a flouring mill, chiefly doing custom work for the home trade.

G. W. Sawyer, proprietor of the Trout Run Flouring Mill, manufactures chiefly for the home market, but occasionally sends off a car load of flour. His brand is favorably known wherever received.

John I. Tavener has a mill in West Decorah which is doing a successful business in supplying the home trade.

Geer & Hunter, proprietors of the Ice Cave Mill, have just erected a new mill with six run of stones at a cost of $40,000, and are about to commence manufacturing flour for the Eastern markets.

Besides the above manufacturing interests, there are the paper barrel factory and paper mill, owned by Horn & Callwell, which is quite an important branch of the manufactures of the city.

The Decorah Marble Works, owned by W. L. Warren & Co., was established in 1866 by Bailey & Fuller. It was bought by the present proprietors in 1870. The business of this firm amounts to about $20,000 per annum.

SHIPMENTS.

The report of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce for 1873 shows the following shipments of various articles of commerce to and from Decorah during that year: Wheat, 464,470 bushels; rye, 25,624 bushels; grass seed, 585 bushels; flour, 27,265 barrels; pork and beef, 4,062 barrels; dressed hogs, 590,880 pounds; eggs, 86,250 pounds; butter, 69,110 pounds; lard, 227,110 pounds; tallow, 8,050 pounds; wool, 15,500 pounds; hides, 137,180 pounds; mill feed, 20,630 pounds; agricultural implements, 52,090 pounds; horned cattle, 219; live hogs, 620; brick, 17,500; machinery, 15,700 pounds; miscellaneous, 102,090 pounds; merchandise received, 566,640 pounds.

RAILROAD.

The branch road connecting Decorah with the Milwaukee and St. Paul main line, at Conover, was completed to this city September 1, 1869. It was a day of rejoicing to the citizens. This road, though a short one, is more important to the local interests of Decorah than any through line running immediately through the place could be. It makes Decorah the terminus, and gives it the trade of the whole surrounding country, instead of one of a number of competing stations along a through line of railway.

BANKING.

There are four banking houses in Decorah, viz.:

1. The First National Bank, J. H. Easton, President; T. W. Burdick, Cashier. The predecessor of this bank was the banking house of Easton, Cooley & Co., established in connection with real estate business in 1854, and was one of the few banks that survived the financial crash of 1857. In 1860 it was changed to the firm of William L. Easton & Son, the latter being J. H. Easton, who is now president, and under the national banking act, in 1864, became the First National Bank of Decorah. The resources of the bank, as reported in 1874, were $271,357.87; capital stock $75,000.00; circulation $66,500.00.

2. The Savings Bank of Decorah (in the same building as the above) was established in 1873, and has met with very flattering success. J. H. Easton, President.

3. The Winneshiek County Bank, H. S. Weiser & Co., is the oldest bank in the state that has had a continuous existence under the same name. It is doing a large amount of exchange, and has been of great service in aiding the development of this northern section of Iowa.

4. The Banking House of S. W. Matteson, successor to C. E. Dickerman, was established in 1867. It is a bank of discount and deposit, receiving time-deposits, issuing certificates of deposit bearing interest, making collections, exchanging gold, and purchasing notes, mortgages and general commercial paper. Collateral loans and commercial paper form the leading feature of the business of this bank.

HOTELS.

Travelers and wayfarers at Decorah may consider themselves fortunate in the hotel accommodations of the place, which are unsurpassed in any town of its size, and, indeed, in many larger ones. The Winneshiek House is kept by William Barrett; the Farmers Exchange, by John W. Stiles; the St. Cloud House, by B. B. Green, and the Union House, by Frank Curren. These are all good hotels, and to this list may be added the Skandenaven House, by H. H. Herod.

EDUCATIONAL.

First among the educational institutions of Decorah is its Graded Public School. The importance attached to this institution, in the estimation of the citizens, is shown by the liberal manner in which it is supported and the provisions which have been made to render its advantages as complete as possible. There is one public school building, which has been erected at a cost, exclusive of furniture, of $20,000, and is fitted up with the best modern improvements, in the way of heating, ventilation and furniture.

The school is divided into nine grades, or rooms, and all the branches, from the primary to the high school course, are thoroughly taught. The school possesses a philosophical apparatus and the beginning of a good library. There are ten teachers and 600 pupils enrolled. S. S. Henderson, Superintendent.

An Academic Institute has recently been started, having, in addition to the usual classical and English courses, a commercial and musical department. Commercial law, bookkeeping, penmanship, and everything pertaining to a complete business education, are included in the course of study, while vocal and instrumental music form an important branch. This institute is under the management of Prof. J. Breckenridge, who has an able corps of assistants, and is in a prosperous condition.

The Catholics also have a select or parochial school in the city, which is well attended.

NORWEGIAN LUTHER-COLLEGE.

This is the college of the Norwegian Lutheran Synod. It is supported by the contributions of Norwegian congregations throughout the country, chiefly those of the Northwestern States. The building stands on an elevated site, a little west of the City of Decorah, and has connected with it an area of thirty-two acres of beautiful rolling ground. It is an imposing structure, in the Norman-Gothic style of architecture, and was erected at a cost of $100,000. The main building and one wing were erected in 1865; the other wing, completing the original design, was added in 1874.

The course of study embraces a preparatory department and a full college course, and it is the intention to add at some future day a theological school.

This institution has had its infancy as well as its days of prosperity. Its growth, however, has been steady and permanent. It was first opened at La Crosse, Wisconsin, in 1861; was transferred here in 1862, and moved into the present building in 1865. In La Crosse it began with eleven students; it had thirty-two on its commencement at Decorah, and eighty on its entrance into the present building; now it has over 200. A class has been graduated every year since 1866, and most of the graduates have been trained for the ministry in the theological school at St Louis.

There are eight Professors and two assistant professors. L. Larsen, President; J. D. Jacobsen, secretary. The college has a library of 2,500 volumes, and some collections have been made toward forming a cabinet.

Few institutions are more creditable to the young and growing northwest than this, which has been erected by the intelligent zeal and generosity of one class of our foreign population, who evince by this enterprise that they are awake to the spirit of our civilization and mean to keep abreast of the times.

CHURCHES.

There are six churches in Decorah, the directory of which we give, as follows:

Methodist—On the northwest corner of Court and Broadway; Rev. E. L. Miller, Pastor; services at 10.30 and 7 each Sabbath; Sunday school after morning service; prayer meeting on Thursday evening.

Congregational—Southeast corner of Broadway and Court; Rev. H. B. Woodworth, pastor; services at 10.30 and 7; Sabbath school at 12, each Sunday; prayer meetings Thursday evenings.

Catholic—On Broadway, east and; Rev. James G. McNulty, Pastor; services at 8½ A.M. and 10½ A.M.; Sunday school at 2½ P.M.; vespers, 3½ P.M.

Episcopal—Service every Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, in Congregational church; Rev. Hale Townsend, Minister; seats free.

Lutheran—Services in the college chapel, in West Decorah, every Sabbath, at 10 o'clock; Rev. N. Brandt, Pastor

Christian—Services at 10.30 and 7 o'clock; no settled pastor.

Most of the above societies have good, some of them even elegant, church buildings. The finest is the Methodist Episcopal Church, recently completed at a cost of $13,000. It was dedicated December 20, 1874. The Congregational Church was finished and dedicated in November, 1860; cost, about $6,000. The Catholic Church, a large stone building, was erected at a cost of about $7,000, in 1865. The Christian has a frame edifice—cost about $3,000.

Some of the finest Norwegian Churches in the country are in this vicinity, one in sight from the college tower which cost $16,000. The Norwegian Lutheran congregation of Decorah, in connection with its pre college, have bought a fine lot adjoining the elegant residence of H. S. Weiser, for $2,400, and have commenced the erection on it of a church that will cost not less than $20,000.

THE PRESS OF DECORAH.

There are three American and three Norwegian papers published in this town, a sketch of which we proceed to give, as follows:

The Decorah Republican is published by A. K. Bailey & Brother, who issued the first number under that name in 1860. It is the legitimate successor of The Decorah Chronicle, the first paper ever started in the town, in 1855. It is Republican in politics, as it always has been, and is a large-sized weekly, and ably conducted. Its editor is Mr. A. K. Bailey, who is also postmaster of Decorah. Connected with it is the best equipped job office in this part of the state. Office, Dickerman's Block, Winnebago Street.

The Winneshiek Register was commenced by the Haislet Brothers in 1866, as a Republican weekly. It run a few years, and was sold at sheriff's sale. Mr. Haislet, the senior partner, bought other type and started a new paper—The Ventilator—which continued a few years, when W. N. Burdick bought an interest in it, and soon became sole proprietor. He changed the name to The Winneshiek Register. In November, 1874, he sold to the present proprietors—The Register Printing Company, Henry Woodruff, editor. The paper is still Republican, and enjoys a good patronage. A job office is connected with it. Office, on Winnebago Street, over post office.

The Decorah Daily Rec started early in the year 1875, is issued from the office of the Weekly Register. It being the only daily in this part of the state, north of Dubuque, it has secured a larger circulation and patronage than was hoped for, and is in a prosperous condition. Henry Woodruff, editor; A. A. Aiken, business manager.

The Independent was started by Wood & Haislet, in August, 1874. It is independent in politics, advocating the interests of the people irrespective of party ties; is a fine eight-page paper, and has a large and increasing circulation.

Mr. Haislet, the junior partner, is a native Iowan, the third born child in the state, and the oldest native printer and editor, having been twenty-four years in the business.

Job work in all its branches done at the office of The Independent. Water Street, near Winnebago.

Numismatic Journal.—Decorah has a peculiar enterprise in the way of a publication—The Decorah Numismatic Journal, devoted to the science of gold coins. It has the following motto, from one of Pope's epigrams:

> Ambition sighed; she found it vain to trust
> The faithless column and the crumbling bust,
> Hugo moles, whose shadow stretched from shore to shore.
> Their ruins perished, and their place no more!
> Convinced, she now contracts her vast design,
> And all her triumphs shrink into a coin.

This publication is a quarterly. It has peculiar significance from the fact that its editor, Mr. E. W. Holway, is a young man scarcely yet arrived at his majority, yet still possessing remarkable knowledge of the literature of old coins. He is collecting rare works on the subject, as well as rare specimens. He is able to read and translate from the German. Correspondence with distinguished antiquarians in Europe shows that Mr. Holway—young as he is—is not without recognition as an authority in the science of numismatics in the West. Its publication is an intelligent organ of the science, and is rapidly growing into public favor. Terms, fifty cents per annum. Cooley & Holway, Decorah, Iowa.

Decorah Posten (Norwegian), a local newspaper, started in September, 1874, by B. Amundsen, present editor and proprietor. Circulation about 1,000.

A weekly for the church, the Evangelsk Lutherske Kirkctidende, was started in 1855, and has a circulation of 4,400.

For Hjemmet, a semi-monthly literary paper, which was started in 1870, is also published in the same office, on Water Street. It is edited by Professor L. Seivers. Circulation, 2,500. Job printing in the Norwegian language is done at this office.

THE WINNESHEIK CLUB.

This Club was started about a year ago, with some sixty members; and its tables are supplied with daily and weekly newspapers from London, New York, Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, and elsewhere, and with monthly magazines and reviews, to suit the tastes of different readers.

The object in establishing the club was to afford a place of agreeable resort and rational recreation, especially to those who have no home of their own, and this includes a large number of young men in offices, stores and workshops, who often feel at a loss after the day's work is done where to spend an hour or two undisturbed, or in congenial society.

The expense is so trifling, after the payment of the entrance fee of $5, that few—ry few—are unable to meet it. Fifty cents per month is but little for any man to ford for the use of a room and access to from $70 to $80 worth of current literature.

The conditions of membership merely require that a candidate be proposed and conded by two members, prior to his being balloted for, and there is no restriction as nationality, occupation, or condition in life.

After the next annual meeting in January, changes may be made to admit of some the privileges of the club being extended to honorary members, who shall be exempt om the payment of the entrance fee of $5; and also to sanction the circulation among embers at their homes of certain papers, magazines, etc., which, if effected, will be ly published. If the membership of the club were doubled, a second room would be gaged and more reading matter furnished, and it is hoped that eventually a good brary may be collected.

A goodly portion of the members are men who, having homes of their own, don't quire a place of resort of this kind for themselves, but have contributed some $11 ch during the past year, and if all our leading men were imbued with the same degree liberality and public spirit, the club would have accomplished even more good than has yet done.

The directors of the club are: W. T. Baker, President; George W. Scott, Vice Presnt; H. H. Eaton, Secretary; A. Gullikson, Treasurer; A. K. Bailey, W. Clifford, F. Noben.

Managing Committee—H. H. Eaton, A. Gullikson.

MASONIC.

There are three lodges of Masons in the city, viz:

Great Light Lodge, No. 181. King Solomon's Chapter, No. 35.
Beausant Commandery, No. 12.

ODD FELLOWS.

Winneshiek Lodge, No. 85. Decorah Encampment, No. 39.

CLAYTON COUNTY.

The County of Clayton is situated in the river tier of counties, the second from the rthern boundary of the state, and is bounded north by Allamakee County, east by e fifth principal meridian and the Mississippi River, south by Dubuque and Delaware ounties, and West by Fayette County. It contains twenty-four townships, seven of hich, along the Mississippi, are fractional, and embraces an area of 792 square miles.

SURFACE.

The surface of the county is generally rolling, but along the streams it presents a ugh and broken appearance. The streams run in deep channels, between bold and recipitous bluffs, which often rise on either hand to the height of several hundred feet. ccasionally, however, they widen their beds into fertile stretches of bottom land, the ost valuable in some respects in the county. The elevation of the upland is about 00 feet above the level of the Mississippi, and here the surface expands into a beautilly undulating farming country, as rich, productive, beautiful and healthy as any be found in Northern Iowa. About one-third of the area of the county is prie, the balance being timber, bottom land, rocky bluffs, and oak openings.

PRAIRIES.

Besides the small prairies, which dot the county here and there at intervals, there re three of sufficient importance to deserve a separate mention. The largest of these High Prairie, which varies in width from one to six miles. Beginning in township 3, range 3, about three miles west of the Mississippi, it runs in a northwesterly direcon, gradually receding from the river, till it reaches the northern line of the county, here it is ten miles distant from the river.

A similar prairie lies between the Turkey and Volga Rivers, commencing near the nction and extending northwesterly till it is intersected by a belt of openings in the xth range. The rolls of this prairie are higher and more abrupt than those of High rairie.

Garden Prairie extends from the northwest of Delaware County across the southest of Clayton County into the southeast of Fayette. It is from one to three miles in idth, well watered, thickly settled, and considerably less rolling than either of those entioned above.

SOIL.

The soil of the county is diversified, differing according to the geological formation, om the thin and comparatively barren soil of the "driftless" area to the rich alluvial eposits of the bottom lands, and the deep, black loam of the prairies. It is therefore apted to a wider range of products, and will result in more diversified culture when science shall teach the agriculturist and horticulturist its true value and adaptation, nd skilled labor shall be employed in the development of its resources. While the rairies are adapted to corn and vegetables, the timber and openings to wheat, rye, oats nd barley, the portions among the bluffs will be found adapted to fruit, particularly rapes. We shall have some facts to present upon this point under the head of grape ulture, farther on.

TIMBER.

The timber bordering on the streams, especially on Turkey River, is of an excellent uality, and extends on either side from one to five miles. It consists of the usual varieies indigenous to Iowa, viz.: white, black, yellow, and burr oak, maple, black and white alnut, hickory, elm, ash, linn, aspen and ironwood.

STREAMS.

The largest stream passing through the interior of the county is Turkey River. It s from two to four chains in width, running rapidly through eight townships, over a ed varied by smooth limestone, pebbles and white sand. Most of its courses lies between igh, rocky bluffs, but occasionally it expands to nearly a mile in width, leaving vainble bottoms of rich, alluvial soil, some of which are prairie and others heavily timered. The tributaries of the Turkey from the north are Cedar, Dry-Mill, and Pony reeks, and from the south, Blue Belt, Little Turkey, Peek's Branch, Elk Creek, and olga River.

The Volga passes through four townships, and is a very clear, rapid stream, one hain in width, with gravelly bottom, bounded by deep slopes, mostly covered with cattering burr oaks. The bottoms, which occasionally occur, are of less extent than hose on the Turkey River; its principal tributaries enter it from the south, and are ear, Honey, and Cox Creeks.

The streams emptying into the Mississippi are Bloody Run, about a mile north of cGregor, in township 95; Saymagill, in township 94; Buck Creek, in township 93; ther's Creek, at Guttenburg, in township 92; Turkey River, opposite Cassville, Wisonsin, and Panther Creek, in township 91.

The south fork of the Maquoketa passes through the southwestern township of the ounty, and Roberts Creek, in township 94, range 3, sinks and rises again about three iles southeast, under the name of Pony Creek.

GEOLOGY.

The principal rocks which are exposed along the streams of the county are the Potsam sandstone, the lower magnesian limestone, the St. Peter sandstone, the Trenton, nd to some extent, the Galena limestone.

In a portion of the county bordering on the Mississippi River the drift does not ccur. This area belongs to what has been denominated the "driftless section of Iowa," nd is undoubtedly older than the glacial period. The most probable explanation of this absence of the drift is, that this part of the continent was an island above the sea while yet the surrounding portion lay submerged. By transporting our thoughts to hat remote period, we may conceive that, when the great glaciers, or ice-rafts, floated own from the north, laden with fragments of the primitive rock, boulders, cobbleones, gravel, etc., they found this section already above the water, and passing along s shores deposited their freight of world-making materials in the adjacent ocean, as he glaciers gradually melted by floating into more southern latitudes. The shores of his island were not bold, but gradually declined into the surrounding sea, so that only he small boulders could be floated near the shore; farther out in the deep water were he heavier ice-crafts carrying boulders as large as a small house. Hence the large oulders are scattered away over the prairies, once the deeper bed of the sea, while in he portions adjacent to the driftless section, as in this county they are small and comletely covered by the deep vegetable mould that has accumulated over them.

The Potsdam sandstone lies at the base of the exposure in this county, being nearly n a level with the Mississippi River at McGregor. It has been struck at the foot of the luffs in excavating for the foundations of buildings. Warehouse No. 3 rests on the Potsdam sandstone. Hence the lower magnesian, the St. Peter sandstone and the Trenton limestone, are all found in their order, rising successively above the Potsdam, in his vicinity. There is also a small outlying fragment of the Galena limestone crowning the very summit of the bluff south of McGregor; but the Galena does not extend above this point. The dip of the strata is such southward, that at Buena Vista, in the southeastern part of the county, the Galena has a fine exposure, and lead-mining has been successfully carried on there. Extensive lodes have been found on Panther Creek in that township, and considerable mining has been done at Guttenburg.

Lead is also found in the lower magnesian limestone of Clayton County, but not in quantities sufficient to warrant attempts at mining. The lead which has been obtained in the vicinity of McGregor, or in any portion of the county west or north of that, has been from the lower magnesian, which has never been found to yield any extensive lodes of the ore. The writer has been shown numerous specimens of lead ore obtained by J. F. Lellenhardt, of McGregor, from the rocks of the lower magnesian exposed in the bluffs of the Mississippi near the northern line of the county; but they are small, hard, mixed with flint and quartz and appear to contain traces of silver.

The St. Peter sandstone has a fine exposure in this county along the bluffs of the river. It is too soft and friable for building purposes, but is extensively used with lime for making mortar. It is white, sacharoidal, friable and non-fossiliferous, and being composed almost entirely of quartz and sand, without lime enough to act as a cement, it is easily excavated with a spade. When found in a pure state it is an excellent material for the manufacture of glass.

The area of this sandstone in the county has not been strictly defined. In the neighborhood of McGregor it dips back from the Mississippi towards Saymagill Creek, where it meets a dip in the opposite direction, forming a natural depression in which the channel of the creek runs. The same dip prevails in Allamakee County, and generally, so far as has been ascertained by examination.

The Trenton limestone, lying above the St. Peter sandstone and whose outcrop is seen in the ravines and where the rocks are split and exposed, is a prevailing rock in this county. It is used for burning into lime and for building material. When burned into quick lime it is easily slacked, with a rapid evolution of heat, and sets much more rapidly than lime made from the lower magnesian. Lime made from the Trenton is often used for hydraulic purposes.

This formation is uniformly fossilliferous. In this section it is full of marine shells, the upper portion containing the larger ones, which become smaller and more compact as you descend to where the rock becomes solid and capable of a very fine polish. We have lately seen specimens of this rock very highly polished in which the myriads of minute shells appear as if set in glass. This stone could be advantageously used for table-tops and such ornamental purposes in place of marble.

The highest rock in the county is the Niagara limestone which over-tops the Galena in a small portion of the southwestern part of the county. It is seen in the high precipitous bluffs along the river in Buena Vista Township, but soon leaves the county in a line nearly parallel with Turkey River, running diagonally across Dubuque County and curving in towards the Mississippi, which it reaches about five miles below the City of Dubuque.

Good building stone is abundant in the county, obtained both from the lower magnesian and Trenton limestone, and there is plenty of clay for making brick, and some has been found suitable for the manufacture of pottery.

GRAPE CULTURE.

The driftless section of the county is peculiarly adapted to fruit and grape culture, especially in the vicinity of the streams, where orchards and vineyards are protected from high winds by the abundant timber. This driftless section, which has been called by some horticulturists the "fruit belt of Iowa," lies lower than the prairies; the soil is thinner and promotes a less vigorous and rapid growth; therefore the trees and vines are more hardy and less liable to winter-kill.

Various experiments have been tried in grape culture, and wherever a proper degree of intelligence has been exercised, the results have exceeded the expectations of the most sanguine. The Delaware variety raised by Mr. Kenyon within a mile of McGregor may serve as an example. It is said by good judges that these equal, if they do not surpass, the best grapes seen on the Rhine, or in France, while it must be remembered that this is a new country, and that one which has been cultivated for centuries. The country along the Mississippi for a thousand miles will probably surpass the Rhine in the growth of the grape when it shall have had time and the experience which the latter country has developed.

Mr. J. F. Liebhardt has a vineyard of three thousand bearing roots of many varieties on Yellow River, just across the county line in Allamakee County, and his experiments in wine from this vineyard have been pronounced a success.

EARLY HISTORY.

For the following early history of Clayton County, as well as for some of the material which we have made use of in the foregoing, we are indebted to Honorable James C. Crosby, of Garnaville, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of the county, and no man more competent than he to sketch its early record:

This county was established within its present limits under the name of Clayton County, previous to the organization of the Territory of Iowa, by the Wisconsin Legislature, by an act approved December 21, 1837, and until the next year was attached for judicial purposes to Dubuque County.

The first settlement was made in the Spring of 1832 by Robert Hatfield and William W. Wayman, on Turkey River, about four miles from its mouth, on the north side nearly opposite Millville, on the place known afterwards as the Lander farm, and on the Pierson farm by Captain William D. Grant. Previous to their settlement, however, there had been a cabin erected at the mouth of the river that was used as a ferry house.

Until this time explorations had been confined principally to Turkey River, and those had mostly been made by miners and persons in search of mineral, who were started out by the excitement consequent upon the discovery of rich lodes of lead ore at Galena and Dubuque. Some of these parties followed up the river to its head, thence striking across to Lake Pepin, returned in canoes procured of the Indians down the Mississippi. But few were on for the purpose of settlement.

In January, 1836, Dr. Frederick Andros made a claim on the edge of High Prairie, about one mile southeast of where Garnaville is now situated, built a cabin, and placed it in charge of a man whom he had employed to occupy the claim and make rails. A man by the name of Loomis made a claim about the same time adjoining that of Dr. Andros. A claim was also made by John W. Gillet, which covered a part of the ground now occupied by Garnaville. He built a cabin and moved into it. During the Spring, William W. Correll made a claim in Farmersburg, built a cabin, and spent the Summer in learning the French language and splitting rails. Allen Carpenter made a claim three miles northwest of Correll's. In June or July, Mr. Gillet brought on a breaking team, and commenced plowing on the prairie, which is believed to have been the first prairie broken in the county.

On the 15th of July, Elisha Boardman, Henry Boardman, Horace D. Bronson, and a man by the name of Hastings, started on horseback from Green Bay, followed up Fox River to the Portage, where they found a Mackinaw boat belonging to the American Fur Company, that had just discharged a cargo of furs, and was about returning. In this the Boardmans took passage down the Wisconsin to Prairie du Chien, and then hired a half-breed to take them in his canoe to Cassville, where they joined Bronson and Hastings, who had proceeded to that place on horseback, following along the course of the river. Here they crossed the Mississippi and went up to Hetfield's, where they left their horses to recruit, and with two others procured of Captain Grant and E. Price, Esq., commenced an exploration of Turkey River, accompanied by Grant.

Their stock of provisions was very small. A halt was made at the forks of the river, eight miles below Fort Atkinson, and that night the Indians stole both their horses. After a fruitless search for them in the morning, they concluded to return, for having killed no game, their provisions were about exhausted. They constructed a raft and floated down the river, making their first stop to kill a coon, which they discovered on the bank, and which they took to the Big Spring, about five miles below Elkader, and roasted for their dinner. After dinner they marked out a claim, including the spring, but fears were entertained that it might be within the limits of the "neutral ground."

Another landing was made where Elkader now stands, and Elisha Boardman marked out a claim extending on both sides of the river, and including the farm on which he has since resided. A tree upon the east bank of the river just below the dam was recently standing, bearing upon it one of the claim marks made at that time.

A few other persons settled on Turkey River and its tributaries during the Fall of 1836, and some improvements were made in the way of building saw mills. William Rowan began one on Little Turkey, and sold out to Robert Hatfield, who got it to running before Winter set in. William W. Wayman began one on Elk Creek near its mouth. Boardman and Bronson began one on Dry-Mill Branch, on section 17, township 93, range 4, in December. When they commenced work upon it, the stream was sufficiently large to carry a saw mill to do good business. One morning in February, 1837, upon going to the stream they discovered, much to their astonishment, that it had entirely disappeared, and there was no water left. Upon following the bed of the stream about half a mile above the mill, they found a sink where the water went under ground, but thinking this might be stopped, work upon the mill was continued till it was completed about the first of May, and a log put on the carriage ready for sawing. The sink was then stopped; then others opened that were also stopped, but showers came and washed them open again, and the mill was abandoned without even starting the saw, and has always been known since as the "Dry Mill."

About the first of June, Bronson commenced building a saw mill for Hetfield, on Buck Creek, about four miles from Garnaville, which was completed in December following.

In the year 1836 the public surveys were begun, and the county was run into townships. The year following most of the townships were sub-divided into sections, except that portion within the "neutral ground."

Up to the year 1830 this part of the state was occupied by hostile tribes of Indians, who were continually making war under pretext of trespasses upon their hunting grounds. The Dakotas or Sioux on one side, and the Sacs and Foxes on the other; the former occupying north, and the latter south of an imaginary boundary line, having a very indefinite location. To remedy this difficulty, on the 15th of July, 1830, the United States Government entered into a treaty with the above named tribes, by which each of the contending parties ceded to the government a strip of land twenty miles in width along their line of division, from the Mississippi in a southwesterly direction to the head waters of the Des Moines. This was called the "neutral ground," and both parties were to have the privilege in common of hunting and fishing upon this broad division line. About three townships in the northwest part of this county were included in the neutral ground. The whites were not permitted to settle or make any improvements upon this tract until after the Indians were removed in 1838.

In the Spring of 1838 the governor of Wisconsin Territory appointed John W. Griffith the first sheriff of Clayton County, who proceeded to summon the grand and petit juries for the first term of the "district court appointed to be holden at Prairie La Porte, in and for the County of Clayton, in the Territory of Wisconsin, on the fourth Monday of May." When the time arrived the court was organized by Honorable Charles Dunn, District Judge, in a log house, the residence of Herman Graybill. Dr. F. Andros was appointed Clerk; William Banks, United States Attorney, and James Churchman, Prosecuting Attorney. As grand jurors the following named persons who had been summoned, appeared and were empanneled: Elisha Boardman, foreman; David Springer, Dean Gray, Elijhalet Price, Edward Dickens, Henry Redmon, Solomon Wadsworth, George W. Jones, Daniel Rugby, Luther Mead, William Rowan, Horace D. Bronson, Allen Carpenter, William W. Wayman, E. R. Hill, Wm. D. Grant, and Ava Durrin.

After court the sheriff commenced taking the first census, preparatory to an election for the purpose of organizing the county, also including the present State of Minnesota which was attached to Clayton for judicial purposes. That part of Minnesota "north of Root River and extending west to the extreme part of the Territory of Wisconsin" contained at that time 204 white males, 144 white females, four free males of color, and two free females of color, making a total of 354. The number of persons in Clayton County proper at that time was 274.

On the 12th of June, 1838, the organic law of the Territory of Iowa received the approval of the President, and took effect on the 4th of July following.

On the 10th of September the election was held, polls being opened at two places: at Turkey River settlement, where a town had been laid out by the name of Winchester, and at Prairie La Porte. Not being organized, as well as not having population sufficient to entitle it alone to any legislative representative, this county gave its vote with Dubuque and Jackson for councilman, and with Dubuque for members of the House. The county officers elected were as follows: County Commissioners, William D. Grant, Robert Campbell and George Culver; Treasurer, Ambrose Kennedy; Recorder, Frederick Andros; Sheriff and Assessor, John W. Griffith; Probate Judge, S. H. McMasters; Supreme Court Commissioner, William W. Wayman; County Surveyor, C. S. Edson; Coroner, J. B. Quigley.

On the 6th of October the county commissioners met at Prairie La Porte, and organized by appointing Dean Gray clerk, and adjourned to the 15th, when again they held a meeting, and commenced a county organization; George W. Jones, Allen Carpenter and Baldwin Olmsted were appointed road commissioners. Four election precincts were established, and judges of elections appointed: No. 1, at Henry Holtzbecker's—judges, D. Springer, Henry F. Lander and Henry Holtzbecker; No. 2, at Herman Graybill's—judges, John W. Gillet, Patten McMellan and Baldwin Olmsted; No. 3, at Jesse Dandley's—judges, Jesse Dandley, Allen Carpenter and C. S. Edson; No. 4, at Boardman's mill—judges not appointed. Permission was given to "precincts not having a sufficient number of votes to organize, to cast their votes at the nearest precinct adjoining their place of residence."

School commissioners were appointed for the several precincts, as follows: No. 1, Ambrose Kennedy; No. 2, Herman Graybill; No. 3, John Downie; No. 4, Jesse Dandley.

The county commissioner, during the Summer, commenced the laying out of Prairie La Porte, which is part of the present town of Guttenburg, having secured the site for the benefit of the county. C. S. Edson, the county surveyor, was employed to do the surveying. The plat was filed for record on the 6th of December, by H. F. Lander, Patten McMellan and W. W. Wayman, Commissioners.

The official bond of Honorable H. M. Rice, since Governor of Minnesota, as justice of the peace at St. Peter, now Mendota, opposite Fort Snelling, Minnesota, was duly approved and filed on the 12th day of November.

At the April term of the District Court, James Crawford was admitted to the bar, and was the first attorney admitted in the county. The following is the first entry of a case determined upon the records:

"Herman Graybill vs. Edward E. Oliver—attachment. This day came the plaintiff by his attorney, and the defendant being three times solemnly called, came not—whereupon it was ordered that his default be recorded."

The first case in which a conviction was had, was United States vs. Pierre La Gris, for selling spirituous liquors to the Indians. A fine was imposed upon him of $80 and costs.

Dr. Frederick Andros was the first representative elected from this county to the Legislature.

On the 14th of January, 1840, an act received the approval of the Governor to re-locate the county seat. The commissioners appointed to select a new site were D. F. Blythe, of Dubuque; D. L. Kirkpatrick, of Jackson; and Franklin Moffit, of Delaware. The act required the commissioners to "meet at Prairie La Porte on the first Monday of May next, and proceed forthwith to locate a suitable place for the seat of justice of said county, with reference to the geographical center, convenience and welfare of the county." The site selected by them was to be the county seat from the first day of September following, provided a majority of the qualified voters of the county should decide in favor of the same at the August election.

On the 30th of March, by a resolution of the Board of Commissioners, a tax was levied of one-half of one per cent, on all taxable property and $1 on each poll. On the 11th of May, Robert Heifield was appointed agent for the county, to sell the village lots at Prairie La Porte, for the purpose of raising funds to erect county buildings, and a contract was entered into by the commissioners with Horace D. Bronson and Jesse Jones to build a court house for the sum of $2,450.

The settlements in Minnesota were not so remote but that they felt a deep interest in the unusually exciting political campaign of 1840, and upon that occasion they wished to exercise that privilege so highly prized by American citizens—the right of suffrage—and to give them an opportunity, the commissioners established election precinct No. 6 at the settlement at the foot of Lake Pepin, and appointed Charles Sweet, Oliver Crain and James Wells judges of election. Precinct No. 7 was established at the mouth of St. Peter's River (now Minnesota River), at Mendota, and A. Q. Bruce, Franklin Steele and H. H. Sibley (since Governor of Minnesota) were appointed judges. H. C. Menke was paid from the county treasury the sum of $31.50 for bringing the election returns from those precincts to Prairie La Porte.

Having established the ballot box in Minnesota for the benefit of the settlers there, the commissioners, in the Spring of 1841, for the benefit of the county, ordered that "the assessors assess the people at the mouth of the St. Peter's River and at all intermediate points." Henry Holtzbecker was sheriff at that time, and upon him devolved the duty of assessor. But before he commenced the task a difficulty occurred between him and James A. McClellan, which terminated in McClellan's shooting him at the house of Graybill, at Prairie La Porte. Two or three days afterwards he died. An examination was held before Justice Springer, and McClellan was acquitted. The matter was never prosecuted further.

On the 15th of May, 1840, the United States Government leased of Thomas B. Burnet and Alexander McGregor the grounds, for warehouse purposes, upon which the same season was erected the old warehouse which still stands at McGregor.

The selection of the site for the new county seat was made by the commissioners on the northeast quarter of section eighteen, township ninety-three, range three, and named "Allotat," a Sac word, signifying gander. At the August election of 1840, a vote was taken pursuant to the act, and resulted in a majority of about ten in favor of retaining the county seat at Prairie La Porte, being afraid that speculators might enter their claims from under them, should the county seat be removed. On the 11th of January, 1841, the land in this township was brought into market, and in the course of two years most of the settlers had entered or secured their claims, when the passage was procured of another "act to re-locate the county seat of Clayton County," approved February 15, 1843. The commissioners appointed to select the site were Hardin Nowlin, of Dubuque; William Jones, of Jackson; and David Moreland, of Delaware County. Two of the commissioners, Nowlin and Moreland, met, pursuant to the requirements of law, and drove their site stakes on the one-eighth section south of the one selected under the act of 1840, and named it Jacksonville. Many of the inhabitants of the surrounding region were present to witness the ceremony of location. On the 24 of October, 1843, the Board of Commissioners held their first session in Jacksonville, and the county business after that was transacted in that place.

A contract was entered into by the Board of Commissioners with James King and John Banfield for the building of a court house, and with David Clark for a jail. The court house was completed and in readiness for the Spring term of the court in 1844.

By an act of January 13, 1846, the Board of Commissioners were authorized to change the name of the county seat from Jacksonville to whatever name a majority might think proper. In pursuance of which, at a meeting on the 15th of April, the name was changed to Garnaville.

On the 15th of January, 1849, another act for the re-location of the county seat received the approval of the Governor, the question to be decided at the April election. Upon canvassing the votes, it was ascertained that neither of the places voted for had received a majority of all the votes cast. Garnaville received 254, Guttenburg 177, Elkader 118. A new election was therefore ordered between Garnaville and Guttenburg, which resulted in giving the former a majority of twenty-three votes; whereupon the commissioners declared that "in pursuance of said act Garnaville be and remain the permanent seat of justice of said Clayton County."

The county seat question, however, was not finally decided by this action. In 1856 it was removed by vote of the people from Garnaville to Elkader. The vote stood as follows: Garnaville, 964; Elkader, 1,135. Garnaville got it back again, and retained it till 1860. By a vote of the people of the county in April, 1860, the county seat was again removed from Garnaville, and permanently located at Elkader, the vote being as follows: Garnaville, 1,380; Elkader, 2,019.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The County of Clayton has no court house proper, but courts are held in a hall rented for that purpose. The county offices are kept in a separate brick building constructed with fire-proof vaults for the records and moneys, and erected in 1856. The jail is a large two-story stone building erected in 1869-70. It is one of the best jails in the state for safety and solidity of construction, having a stone floor and being lined throughout with boiler-iron.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

The poorhouse and farm are located in Read Township, five miles northeast of Elkader. The farm contains sixty acres. The building is a large two-story frame. The number of inmates thirty-six. Steward, Adna Hall.

The county has an agricultural society. Its fair ground is located near the village of National in Farmersburgh Township, and contains ten acres and a trotting course of one-third of a mile. The grounds are well fitted up with buildings and appliances for exhibitions. President, James Jack; Secretary, John Everall.

MARTIN GARBER, Auditor.	MARVIN COOK, Clerk of Courts.
HENRY KLEINER, Treasurer.	J. F. THOMPSON, Supt. of Schools.
ROBERT L. FREEMAN, Recorder.	EZRA HURD, Surveyor.
W. A. BENTON, Sheriff.	P. H. MORAN, Coroner.

SUPERVISORS.

P. P. OLMSTED, Chairman.	MICHAEL URELL,	WILLIAM THOMA.

ELKADER.

ELKADER, the seat of justice, is a flourishing town of about two thousand inhabitants, situated on both banks of the Turkey River, and near the geographical center of the county. The scenery of its location is possessed of much natural beauty. The table-land on which the business part of the town is built, rises gradually for some distance, when it breaks into a steep declivity on the right bank of the river, while on the east the bank rises more rapidly and higher before the table-land is reached, which undulates upward to a summit of considerable height.

Upon these undulations many beautiful residences stand, surrounded with grounds tastefully arranged and adorned with shrubbery and trees, many of which are of native growth. The river flowing with a rapid current affords a good and reliable water-power, which is improved by a dam having been constructed across the river and a mill erected. It is a large flouring mill built of stone taken from the neighboring quarries

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In 1835 Elisha Boardman, a native of Connecticut, located the first claim, a quarter-section of land, on the site where Elkader now stands. Robert Hatfield had made a settlement on Turkey River, about four miles from its mouth, in the Spring of 1832. Mr. Boardman, Horace D. Bronson and others, after immigrating to this country by the way of Green Bay and the Wisconsin River, arrived at Mr. Hatfield's in search of a location, and went on an exploring expedition up the Turkey River to near where Fort Atkinson was afterwards built. The Indians stealing their horses, they concluded to return by a raft on the river, which they constructed, and on their voyage made a landing on the present site of Elkader, the first time it was ever visited by a white man. At this time Mr. Boardman marked out his claim. A tree was recently standing on the east bank of the river just below the dam, bearing one of the claim marks then made.

Mr. Boardman erected the first cabin, on the east side of the river at the crossing-of the old ford.

Horace D. Bronson located a claim in connection with Mr. Boardman, on the west side of the river, which is now partly included in the Village of Elkader.

On the 10th of October, 1836, Boardman and Bronson arrived here with their families by the way of Prairie du Chien, being the first immigrants west of the Mississippi who crossed at McGregor's Ferry. They were four days in making the journey from the landing to their new home.

Mr. Boardman is still living (1875) at Elkader, in the ninety-fourth year of his age. He is quite infirm and resides with his only remaining granddaughter, Mrs. C. W. Granniss.

Baldwin Olmsted was the next settler, in 1837. In 1838 Freedom Howard was added to the number. Mr. Olmsted has removed to Texas, but Mr. Howard is residing at Elkader still.

The town was laid out by Thompson, Davis & Sage, who also erected the first mill, in 1847, which stood where the large stone mill of L. V. Davis now stands.

The county seat was located here the first time in 1856, the last time in 1860.

BUSINESS.

Elkader contains eight dry goods stores, two merchant tailors' establishments, two millinery stores, one boot and shoe store, one (exclusively) grocery store, two harness shops, two jewelry shops, one cabinet shop, two carpenter shops, six blacksmith shops, one gunsmith's shop, two tin shops, three barber shops, three hotels, three livery stables, three private boarding houses, two printing offices, one bank, two agricultural stores, one flouring mill, one brewery, and one meat market and packing house.

The shipping of dressed hogs is quite an important branch of business in this town. We have obtained the figures from the principal firms, as follows:

R. C. Place & Co., during a portion of the winter of 1875 shipped thirty-seven car-loads, averaging 20,000 pounds per car—1,460,000. Live hogs, twenty-seven car-loads, averaging 14,000 pounds per car—378,000 pounds.

Kramer Bros. shipped, from December 12, 1874 to January 31, 1875, twenty car-loads of sections, aggregating 500,000 pounds, and 800 live hogs, or sixteen car-loads, weighing 240,000 pounds. They also slaughtered and packed, during the same time 240 hogs, averaging in weight 215 pounds apiece—making an aggregate of 50,800 pounds packed by this firm in about six weeks.

Powell & Co shipped about the same as the Kramer Bros.

Bassett, Hunting & Co., during twenty days in January, 1875, shipped 259,896 pounds of dressed hogs.

The shipping from this point, as well as the chief travel, is done on the narrow gauge railroad which intersects the Milwaukee & St. Paul road at Bulan Station. This branch is a great convenience, and traverses a very fine agricultural country.

The Elkader Flouring Mill, L. V. Davis, proprietor, has a capacity of about 1,000 barrels per week. It has made as high as 200 barrels per day when run to its full capacity. The barrels used at this mill are manufactured at cooper shops belonging to the same firm.

The First National Bank of Elkader is doing a large business. It was established in 1872. H. B. Carter, President; Isaac Havens, Vice-President; F. H. Carter, Cashier.

GRADED SCHOOL.

The Elkader Graded School has a fine two-story brick building which cost $15,000. It is supplied with modern furniture, maps, charts, globes, etc. Besides the four grades embracing in the High School, there is a separate department for instruction in the German language. The school is under the management of S. N. Bixley, principal, and a Board of Education, of which Honorable H. S. Granger is President. Five teachers give instruction to about 280 pupils.

There is also a private school under the auspices of the Catholic Church.

PROFESSIONS AND CHURCHES.

The professions are represented by six attorneys, three physicians and three clergymen. There are three churches—Methodist, Catholic and Universalist. All have good houses of worship. There is also a Union Sunday School in the place, and one lodge each of Masons and Odd Fellows.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Clayton County Journal was first started as the Clayton County Herald in January, 1853, by H. S. Granger, at Garnaville. It was the first paper printed between Dubuque and St. Paul, on the west side of the Mississippi. Mr. Granger conducted the paper at Garnaville about two years, when he sold to A. W. Drips, afterwards Captain of Company A, Ninth Iowa Infantry, and killed at the battle of Pea Ridge. Captain Drips changed the name of the paper to the Journal.

In the Fall of 1857, he sold to Alphonso Scott, who, in the Spring of 1859, sold to Joseph Elbeeck. Mr. Elbeeck retained ownership alone and in company with A. F. Tipton till the Summer of 1872, when it was purchased by J. W. Shannon. In September, 1874, Mr. Shannon took into partnership in its publication Mr. J. D. Hinsworth, who continued with the paper till about the first of November, when he became insane and was sent to the asylum at Independence. The firm still remains Shannon & Ainsworth.

The Journal is a weekly nine column folio, Republican in politics, well edited, and has a good circulation.

Die Nord Iowa Herald, a German weekly paper, is published at Elkader. It was established by Elbeeck & Papin in 1867. Charles Reinecke, editor.

McGREGOR.

The City of McGregor is situated on the west bank of the Mississippi River opposite Prairie du Chien, and is 583 miles above St. Louis, 67 miles above Dubuque, 229 miles from Chicago, and 199 from Milwaukee, by the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, which crosses the river at this point and is one of the great through lines of railway of the Northwest. It is also on the Chicago, Dubuque and Minnesota Railroad, a line scarcely second in importance to the above, running from Chicago to Dubuque, and thence up the river through McGregor and Lansing to Winona, Minnesota, where it connects with the Chicago and St. Paul, and the Winona and St. Peter, and all the principal roads of Minnesota. From a village of 280 inhabitants in 1857, McGregor has grown to be a city of about 4,000, with a business amounting to an aggregate of over $15,000,000 per annum.

ADVANTAGES OF LOCATION.

In a commercial point of view McGregor has great advantages of location. It is the only point between Dubuque and LaCrosse where the produce of Northern Iowa and Southern Minnesota can find a convenient outlet. Opposite is the City of Prairie du Chien, the point of shipment for all products destined for Lake Michigan either at Milwaukee or Chicago. Several daily lines of steamboats, during the navigable seasons, connect with Dunnigan and St. Louis below, and St. Paul above.

As a wholesaling point, the facilities of McGregor are unsurpassed, her trade extending hundreds of miles north, northwest and southwest, through one of the richest agricultural portions of the United States. As a lumbering point it has the advantage of being near to the great forests of pine and hard wood in Wisconsin from which to obtain materials, a daily rail to Central, Western and Northern Iowa, making a market second to none in the great West for all manufactured articles. It is also a central market for wheat, corn, oats, barley, pork, beef and all other products of the Northwest. And should the Internal Navigation scheme, now pending, be carried out, it would give to McGregor the additional advantage of being the western terminus of a ship canal, by which it is proposed, through the Wisconsin and Fox Rivers, to connect the navigation of the Mississippi with that of Lake Michigan at Green Bay. That this scheme will finally be consummated many are quite sanguine.

EARLY HISTORY.

The ravine in which McGregor is situated was named by the early French traders Coulie de Sioux. It is an opening between the grand bluffs which rise on either hand to the height of about 400 feet, presenting a beautiful prospect of the river in front and the ranges of bluffs on the opposite side, both of the Mississippi and the Wisconsin, the mouth of the latter being nearly opposite.

In 1836, Alexander McGregor, then living at Prairie du Chien, established a ferry from the latter place to this point, which in consequence, became known as McGregor's Landing. In 1840, the United States Government commenced the building of Fort Atkinson, on Turkey River, some fifty-five miles in the interior, and as the supplies had to reach that point from Prairie du Chien, or Fort Crawford, by the way of this landing, the ferry became very profitable and McGregor's Landing became an important point. Prior to this, McGregor had located his claim here and built a cabin. In May, 1840, the government leased of him and of Thomas P. Barney, of Prairie du Chien, grounds for warehouse purposes at this point, and during the same season a warehouse was erected at the foot of what is now Main Street. There was considerable opposition made to McGregor by the agent of the American Fur Company, who succeeded in getting the soldiers to make a road through the northern part of township 95, by furnishing them with whisky while at work and carriages for the officers to ride in, without any order for such work from Washington. The road was known as the Upper Ferry Road, and made a junction with the McGregor Road at Monona.

Still, the influence of this diversion was only temporary. In 1847, McGregor moved across the river with his family, and occupied his log cabin at the foot of Main Street. This house, the government warehouse above referred to, and a few shanties occupied by soldiers on the river bank, were all the buildings at that time in McGregor. The first frame house was built during the same year, and Alva Rogers kept the first hotel in it in 1848. The second house, completed in 1848, was that of Alexander McGregor, a portion of which is still seen in the rear appendage of the present McGregor residence at the foot of Main Street.

Prior to 1850 the place contained but few buildings, and the business carried on here was transacted with Indians, soldiers and the few immigrants who crossed at this point for the interior. But immigration setting in more rapidly, business and population increased, and the place which had been known to boatmen and travelers as McGregor's Landing soon began to assume the more definite proportions of a busy village.

Until 1855 the business was mostly transacted near the river. H. D. Evans and Jones & Bass sold general merchandise. Kinsley & Rhodes were steamboat agents and general forwarding and commission merchants. The hotels were the American House, kept by William Hardin, the McGregor House, by Ingersoll & VanValkenburg, and the Upper House, by J. McMullen. A. E. Wanzer kept a boarding house and saloon in an old building near Second Street. Opposite this was the drug store of T. W. Wood, the first stone built on this part of the street.

The increasing trade of the village requiring more room, George L. Bass, with some others, determined to grade the upper street. Procuring an ox team, with Hiram Fordney as driver, Mr. Bass held the plow, and thus commenced the work of bringing the street to its present grade.

In 1857 McGregor was incorporated as a village, and at the ensuing election A. T. Jones was elected Mayor, and A. E. Wanzer, G. S. C. Scott, R. McMurrine, J. G. Bass, Charles Southmayd and J. H. Merrill, Trustees.

The population had reached 2,000 in 1858, and so rapid was the increase that on the 18th of March, 1865, a city organization was effected by the following officers: Douglas Lethingwell, Mayor; J. F. Liebhardt, H. D. Sampson, Homer E. Newell, August French, H. W. Burlingame, Jacob Kramer and F. Richardson, Trustees; and D. Baugh, Clerk.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

We promise to give some facts and figures illustrating the growth of the city and its present status as a commercial and business point. Our figures cover a year's business—from November 1, 1873, to November 1, 1874. In the several departments of trade the figures are made up from the statements of business men, and the sum total may be relied upon as approximately a correct estimate of the business for one year.

CITY IMPROVEMENTS.

The city government has in the past year made substantial improvements on the sewers, sidewalks and streets; 1,000 feet of sewerage has been replaced; 900 feet constructed, of which 800 feet is built of stone, requiring a thousand perch of rock. Length of sidewalk rebuilt, 15,000 feet, besides more or less repairing. Ten of the seventeen bridges within the city limits have been recovered with new stringers and plank. McGregor Park, Monumental Park and Shell Avenue have been improved at a cost of $3,000, the outlay of Mr. Shell. The city has expended $3,000, making a total expenditure of $6,000 on improvements in the city during the past season. The city has used, in all repairs and in construction, 80,000 feet of lumber.

BUILDINGS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

The erection of new buildings during the past season does not come up with the expectations of many in the early part of the season; yet there has been much more of a general overhauling and remodeling of houses and stores than is accredited in the statistical. Two very handsome and commodious residences have been built, which will compare favorably with any in our much larger cities. The new residences built and improvements made during the season foot up on a close calculation, in round numbers, $30,000.

THE POST-OFFICE.

The following statement of the business of the McGregor post-office during the twelve months ending October 31, 1874, is an interesting table, containing the value of the money orders issued and paid:

Amount of stamps sold	$ 2,383 73
Amount of stamped envelopes	2,035 27
Amount of money orders sold	35,000 00
Money orders paid	45,000 00
Number of mails received daily	6
Mails dispatched daily	6
Average number of letters daily	500
Average number of letters sent daily	500
Number of money orders issued	2,133
Number of money orders paid	1,782
Number of registered letters sent	207
Number of registered letters received	1,125

MARKET.

The market the past year has been on a steady increase. The following shows the number of bushels and pounds of articles purchased and shipped by buyers during the past season:

	Bushels.	Amt. paid.
Wheat	4,382,289	$3,255,883 70
Oats	24,106	7,579 30
Barley	160,566	138,317 33
Grass Seed	6,250	16,186 83
Pounds of Wool	37,090	13,950 44
No. Dressed Hogs	17,814	214,702 19
Pounds of Butter	185,286	36,923 70
Fresh and Salt Meats		55,000 00
Salt		3,475 00
Hides		26,433 94
Wood, 20,000 cords		80,000 00
Eggs		1,400 00
Fruits, including 3,000 bbls. of Apples		28,000 00
Fresh Fish		3,000 00
Fresh Oysters		3,000 00
Cement, Lime, Stucco, Timothy, including 400 tons Coal		16,460 00
Furs		5,000 00
Small lots of Produce		1,067 25
Total amount of Produce		$3,905,584 63

RECEIPTS AND SHIPMENTS.

The amount of freight received and shipped during the past year may be gathered from the following statements:

By C., D. & M. Railroad.

Received	4,336,982 lbs.
Forwarded	13,954,600 "

By C., M. & St. P. Railroad.

Received	11,449,258 lbs.
Forwarded	40,506,958 "

By the Express Companies.

Aggregate number of pounds	852,365 lbs.

From this we gather that the aggregate amounts received and forwarded by rail are as follows:

Received	16,438,605 lbs.
Total receipts and shipments, by rail	70,999,160 lbs.

THE STEAMBOAT LINES.

It has been impossible to obtain the actual figures on the receipts and shipments by river, but so far as we could obtain figures, and from the estimates received from agents, we make the following which will vary but little either way:

In-coming freight	14,065 tons.
Out-going freight	8,465 "
Total receipts and shipments by river	22,530 tons.

THE LUMBER TRADE.

In this branch of our business there is an extraordinary good showing. W. & J. Flemming, the largest dealers and manufacturers, have expended the past season, from April 1 to November 18, as follows:

For logs	$117 983 74
For labor	33,000 00
For lubricating oil	713 08
For files	523 28

This is outside of all improvements made during the year at the mill, and upon the property in the city.

The total business of all the lumber dealers in the city, including the mills, foots up in the sum of $458,393 87. This we consider a very respectable showing for a season's business. Though we have not the amount sawed of lumber, lath and shingles, our returns show that it is largely in excess of last year's business.

MANUFACTURING.

This business has been considerably augmented within the last two or three years. The large carriage manufactory of G. Hawley & Co., turning out some of the finest work of any establishment in the West, is steadily growing in favor throughout the Northwest. Their work is seen in St. Paul, Minneapolis, LaCrosse, Winona, Decorah, West Union, Elkader, and other places east, west, north and south; conceded to be the finest carriage manufactory in the Northwest. As a matter of course the business of this establishment leads in the column, though from those engaged in the manufacture of wagons, sleighs and bob-sleds, there are respectable returns, showing that their work is fully appreciated. About all the lumber wagons and sleighs manufactured are shipped westward, and at no time during the past year have our manufacturers been able to keep up with the demand. It is gratifying to know that the work in this line has gained such a reputation, and with little or no exertion, competes with eastern and western work without a reduction in price or loss of time. The work tells for itself. We append the following table showing the value in carriages, wagons and sleighs manufactured the last year:

Carriages and Cutters	$60,511 52
Wagons	28,400 00
Sleighs	3,400 00
Total	$92,311 52

To which we add the following branches of the manufacturing interest:

Fanning Mills	$ 7,425 00
Pumps, Bed-springs and Wind Mills	13,000 00
Brewers, beer, ale, etc	28,962 50
Flour (one mill)	18,750 00
Cigars (exclusively)	75,000 00
Wines (exclusively)	5,000 00
Crackers (exclusively)	6,000 00
Tanning and manufacturing of Gloves and Mitts	1,800 00
Total manufacturing	$248,249 02

To this is to be added about 250,000 pounds of candy, manufactured and wholesaled during the year.

THE WHOLESALE TRADE.

McGregor has, since the days when the first cabin was built, occupied a central position for Northeastern Iowa, and as the place has grown the trade has expanded, until now it extends over Northern Iowa, Southern Minnesota and Southwestern Wisconsin. There are twenty firms in the city who do a wholesale business. We figure this business, in round numbers, from the facts in our possession, as follows:

Groceries	397,000 00
Drugs and Medicines	190,000 00
Hardware, Leather, Saddlery, Boots and Shoes	260,000 00
Crockery and Glassware	75,000 00
Liquors, Ale and Beer	153,000 00
Fruits	35,000 00

THE BUSINESS OF LAST YEAR.

The following schedule gives the several branches of trade, with the amount of business transacted, for the year ending November 1, 1874:

Boots and Shoes	120,000 00
Hardware	120,677 92
Leather, Saddlery and Findings	142,000 00
Clothing	95,000 00
Jewelry, Clocks and Watches	56,000 00
Meat Markets	53,000 00
Stoves, Tinware, etc	31,000 00
Furniture	20,788 00
Farm Machinery, etc	190,000 00
Liquors, Ale and Beer	210,000 00
Books, Stationery, etc	96,000 00
Harness, etc	50,000 00
Bakeries	11 000 00
Millinery, etc	25,000 00
Marble Works	6,000 00
Sewing Machines	15,425 00
Billiard Tables	10,000 00
Hides and Furs	15,000 00
Photographing	3,000 00
Lemon Beer	2,165 00
Produce	27,500 00
Machine shops	6,000 00
20,000 cords of Wood	80,000 00
Hoop-poles	50,500 00
Cooperage	5,000 00
Miscellaneous	10,000 00

THE BANKING BUSINESS.

First National Bank of McGregor, Frank Larrabee, President; W. R. Kinnaird, Cashier.

Average amount of deposits	64,842 22
Interest paid depositors	4,128 78
Number of depositors	211

Bank pays 6 per cent interest on deposits.

THE TROUT POND.

McGregor has one of the finest trout ponds in the West. Of he finny tribe we acknowledge a partiality to trout and salmon. We append the following statistics received from Mr. Ruble:

Received last Winter from the pioneer hatching house of Seth Green, of Rochester, N. Y., 500 salmon-trout spawn, from which 300 to 350 young salmon were raised, which will average from three and a half to five inches in length. Also, at the same time, laid down about 100,000 brook trout spawn, from which have been raised about 50,000 young trout, averaging two to four inches in length. Mr. Ruble is satisfied that salmon and trout raising is a success, and may be raised in any quantity in good, clear spring water, when properly handled, with good care.

THE GRAND TOTAL.

Compiling the figures produced above we have a grand total of the business for the year in the following branches:

Grain, produce, etc	$ 3,905,584 53
Banking, exchange, etc	8,218,314 44
Wholesale trade	1,471.000 00
Retail trade	1,272,596 84
Lumber trade	458.393 87
Manufacturing	248,249 02
New buildings and improvements	35,000 00
Grand total	$15,631,988 80

SCHOOLS.

The Independent District of McGregor contains the largest graded school in Clayton County. Eight hundred and twenty-six persons of school age are reported by the secretary, 400 of whom were enrolled in the public schools during the past year, and an average attendance of 293 pupils during the past year of ten school months as reported by the principal. Like most of our larger villages and towns, McGregor has a large parochial school, conducted by the Sisters of Charity, which materially diminishes the enrollment and attendance at the public school.

At present the school is under the supervision of Theo. H. Johnston, a graduate of the University of Michigan. It is divided into three departments, known as the high school, grammar school, and primary school.

The high school is really in charge of Miss E. F. Ingram, although the superintendent teaches in that department each afternoon.

Miss Ingram is assisted by Miss Maggie Stoneman, who occupies a recitation room.

The grammar school is divided into three grades, Miss Jessie Brown being the principal, and teaching in what is known as the A grammar. Miss Nellie Phelps has charge of the B grade, and Miss Jennie Calkins teaches the C grade in the same department.

The primary school is divided into four grades. Miss Mary Barnes, being the principal, teaches the A grade; Miss Jennie Forsyth, the B grade; Miss Mary Watson, the C grade, and Miss Melda Aber teaches the infant class, known as the D grade.

In addition to departments above mentioned, they have a German department, to which classes are sent from all departments of the school. This department is at present in charge of Reverend Mr. Moery, a thorough German scholar.

CHURCHES.

There are five churches in McGregor, viz.: Methodist Episcopal, Catholic, German Presbyterian, Congregational and Baptist. They have each good church edifices, and one or two are in fine architectural taste, and ornaments to the city.

MASONS AND ODD-FELLOWS.

These orders have fine halls, and are reported in a prosperous condition.

NEWSPAPERS.

The North Iowa Times, published at McGregor, was established by Colonel A. P. Richardson, October 10, 1856. Mr. Richardson conducted it alone till April 14, 1858, when C. C. Fuller, now of Michigan, became his associate, continuing till October 20, of that year. It was then conducted solely by Mr. Richardson till April 1861, when George W. Tenney purchasing a half-interest, the firm became Richardson & Tenney till July 24, 1861, when John A. Andrick bought Mr. Richardson's half, and it was conducted by Andrick & Tenney till July 24, 1863, at which time Mr. Richardson repurchased Mr. Tenney's half-interest. From that on it has been published by Andrick & Richardson, the firm name being continued, although Mr. Richardson died on the 5th of December, 1870.

Mr. Andrick is at present chief editor and manager. The paper is a Democratic eight-column folio weekly, ably edited and having a good circulation. The office on Main Street, including job department, is one of the best equipped in this part of the state.

The McGregor News began its existence December 9, 1861, under the auspices of Willis Drummond, editor and proprietor. Mr. Drummond, on joining the army in the Winter of 1862, sold to Gilmore and Williams, who published it till some time in 1863, when it was bought by George W. Tenney, and again disposed of in October, 1874, to T. G. Gilmore. R. Tompkins became editor and continued as such till April 6, 1866, when Willis Drummond & Co. became proprietors, conducting it till some time in 1867, when it was purchased and run for a short time by Tompkins & Hamilton, and was afterwards conducted by a joint stock company till the time of its expiration in 1872.

The present McGregor News, which can hardly be regarded as a successor of the above, was started by Willis L. Osborne, January 1, 1873. It is an eight-column folio and has a good circulation.

GUTTENBURG.

The Town of Guttenburg is pleasantly situated on the west bank of the Mississippi River, about forty miles above Dubuque and about six miles above the mouth of Turkey River. The location of the town is on a handsome prairie, extending from the base of the bluffs half a mile eastward to the river and about three miles in length. The prairie received from one of the early French missionaries the name of Prairie La Porte—the Door Prairie. The Chicago, Dubuque & Minnesota Railroad passes through Guttenburg, and the town has also the advantages of river navigation.

EARLY HISTORY.

The Village of Prairie La Porte (now Guttenburg) was laid out in about 1837. The county seat of Clayton County was first located here. At that time Clayton County was part of the Territory of Wisconsin. The first term of the District Court for Clayton County was held by Hon. Charles Dunn, at Prairie La Porte, on the 4th Monday of May, 1838, in a log house, the residence of Herman Graybill. In 1843 the county seat was removed to Jacksonville, now Garnavillo. After the removal, all the land and village lots belonging to the county in Prairie La Porte was sold and conveyed by the county commissioners to the Western Settlement Society of Cincinnati, Ohio, and the society entered several hundred acres of land contiguous to the town, and employed John M. Gray, County Surveyor, to lay off a much larger town, including Prairie La Porte within its limits. In January, 1847, the Legislature passed an act changing the name of the old town to Guttenburg, and this name was given to the new town in honor of the inventor of the art of printing. The survey of the new town was completed in June, 1847, and about that time considerable improvement was made; but for several years subsequent, owing to the pressure of the times and the paucity of the population of the surrounding country (then an almost unbroken wilderness) the growth of the place was not very rapid.

The town was incorporated by act of the Legislature in 1851. At that time the population did not exceed 300. The first municipal election was held in April, 1851. Since that time the growth of the town has steadily advanced, and every year has witnessed new and substantial improvements and a large increase of trade and business.

Since the incorporation of the town large sums have been annually expended in public improvements. Good roads have been made leading to all parts of the surrounding country. The town has an excellent steam ferry boat, which during the season of navigation plies regularly between this place and Glen Haven, three miles up the river on the Wisconsin side. The buildings are mostly of stone, of which material an excellent quality is obtained from the bluffs back of the town.

The population of the place is about four thousand, of whom the majority are Germans. The principal business is general merchandise, clothing, grocery business, drugs, hardware, millinery and fancy goods, several wagon, carriage and furniture shops, hotels, breweries, blacksmiths and saddlers shops. There are several warehouses for the storage and shipment of grain and produce, flouring and saw mills, doing a large business, and the usual general arts and industries which characterize such a town. The commercial advantages of the place are unsurpassed by any river town of the same size. It annually ships and receives large quantities of produce and merchandise. The principal articles of export are wheat, flour, oats, barley, corn, potatoes, beef, pork, and dressed hogs.

The Lutheran and Catholic are the leading church denominations. The town is provided with good schools.

GARNAVILLO.

Garnavillo is situated in the eastern interior of the county, twelve miles southwest from McGregor and six miles from the Mississippi River at Clayton.

In April, 1845, two of the commissioners, Harden Nowlin, of Dubuque County, and David Morehead, of Delaware County, met pursuant to an "act to re-locate the county seat of Clayton County," and selected the north half of southeast quarter, section 18, township 93, north of range 3, west of 5th principal meridian, and named it Jacksonville. James Watson donated the land (eighty acres) so selected, and the county commissioners laid out the town and commenced the erection of county buildings. On the 15th of April, 1846, the name of the village was changed to Garnavillo.

James Watson, Doctor Frederick Andros, Captain Robert R. Read, John W. Gillet, Richard Olney, George A. Whitman, Judge Samuel Murdock, Judge Reuben Noble, and Judge Elias H. Williams, were among the first settlers.

The village is located on a beautiful and very productive prairie, and there is an abundant supply of timber in the vicinity.

Garnavillo contains several stores, post-office, and hotel; has good schools; several gentlemen of culture and travel reside there; the society is good, and the moral and religious tone of the place healthy. There are four churches, Methodist, Congregational, German Lutheran, and Catholic; one lodge of Masons, one of Odd-Fellows, and one of Good Templars. The population is about six hundred.

Garnavillo was twice the county seat prior to 1860, but at that date it was removed to Elkader, where it has since permanently remained.

CLAYTON.

This town is in Clayton County, on the Mississippi, about ten miles above Guttenburg, and the same distance below McGregor. It has an excellent steamboat landing and railroad facilities by the Chicago, Dubuque & Minnesota Road. The town is easy of access from the interior, by a road which is an extension of its main street up the ravine in which the principal part of the town is built to the rich farming country lying back of it.

Clayton is the natural market for this rich section of country, and the farmers who haul in their grain and hogs usually supply themselves with lumber, flour, groceries, and articles of merchandise generally at this point. The business of the place is active and considerable in amount, the streets being often lined with teams, or standing in crowds about the principal stores, mills, lumber yards, and warehouses.

The place was first settled in 1850 by Frank Smith and Timothy Davis, who laid out the town. Frank Smith built the first store; the first hotel was erected by J. A. Brown. Mr. Brown now lives at Atlanta, Iowa; Mr. Smith resides in California.

The population of Clayton is about one thousand. Its business is done chiefly in the following establishments: Two large flouring mills, one hoop factory, one planing mill, one cabinet factory, three carpenter shops, two blacksmith shops, two lumber yards, four general stores, one clothing store, two drug stores, one hardware and tin shop, four saloons, two harness shops, one millinery store, one boot and shoe store, one shoe shop, one livery stable, two meat markets, two warehouses, and post, telegraph and insurance offices. The place contains two hotels, a graded school, and a Catholic Church.

LINN COUNTY.

The surface of the country in Linn County is undulating, and, like Jones County, is broken into low, conical hills, with intersecting valleys running in every direction, while the general inclination is to the southeast and south, the water-shed being near the south bank of the Wapsipinicon River, and extending nearly parallel with it. The soil is good, the whole county well watered, and the climate conducive to health. Well water is peculiarly pure and sparkling. The people are cheerful, busy and properous. All professions are well sustained, and industry is well rewarded.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first cabin within the limits of Linn County was built by John Mann, in Linn Grove, on what is known as Upper Big Creek, in February, 1838. It is said (though disputed by some) that he was the first white settler. He built a small flouring mill, which was carried off by a flood in the Spring of 1851, and he perished with his mill. The creek rose to the height of twenty feet in less than half an hour, and he was unable to make his escape. His body was found several days afterwards, and was interred near by. He was from Pennsylvania.

The next settler, John Crow, was from North Carolina. He made claim to a tract of land on the Wapsipinicon in April, 1838. He was a gentleman of wealth and culture, and died a few years after his settlement here, leaving a family, some of whom still live in this and Jones County.

After the above mentioned, several families came in 1838, among whom were John J. Gibson, Robert Dean, John McAferty, Peter McRoberts, William Abbe, in Franklin Township; Judge Mitchell, Jacob Leabo. Mr. Henry, in Westport, Bertram Township; Samuel C. Stewart, James and John Scott, Robert Osborn, Hiram Thomas and Isabell Safely (who died in 1875, aged 103), in Linn Township. John Stewart, Joseph Morford, J. Burge, and D. S. Hahn, and others were here early.

Claims were also made in Marion Township as early as 1838, and in 1839, John C. Berry, H. W. Gray, Rufus Lucore, James Willis, Luman M. Strong, Esquire Bassett and others erected their cabins within its limits. We transfer the following items, taken from an article recently published, at the risk of repetition:

During the Summer of 1838 the settlements gradually extended in the east part of the county. The only persons now recollected of that early period as remaining, are John Gibson, of Mt. Vernon, and Andrew J. McKean, and Hosea W. Gray, of Marion. The first family west of Big Creek was that of Jacob Leabe from Kentucky. The first west of Indian Creek was that of James W. Bassett, from Vermont. The first justice of the peace was John McAferty, commissioned in 1838. The first judge of probate was Israel Mitchell, a Tennessean, now residing in Oregon. The first sheriff was Hosea W. Gray. The first clerk of the district court was Socrates H. Tryon; he was also the first practicing physician. The first judge of the district court was Joseph Williams, a Pennsylvanian. The first officiating minister was the Reverend Christain Troup, a German Lutheran, who preached regularly in his own cabin near the mouth of Spring Creek, every Sunday during the latter part of the Summer of 1838. The first marriage was that of Richard Osborn and Sarah Haines, in the Spring of 1839. The first birth was that of a daughter of Mrs. Samuel McCartney, in July, 1838. The first death was that of Mrs. Haines, an invalid elderly lady, who died from the effect of an accidental fall in July, 1838. The second was that of James Logan, an Irishman, who was killed by the caving in of a well which he was excavating in Marion, July, 1840.

To be the founder of a city, and to reap the emoluments thereof, early engaged the attention of the pioneers. Israel Mitchell laid out the first town July, 1838, which was named Westport, and in September following, William Stone staked off a town on Cedar River, which he named Columbus, but soon abandoned it. His site was a good one, and is now occupied by the City of Cedar Rapids. In October of the same year, Anson Cowles laid out a town and cudgeled his brain a long time for a name, and was finally relieved by Sir Walter Scott, and called his town Ivanhoe, but it has since been vacated.

The first store opened in the County was at Westport by Albert Henry, in the Fall of 1838. The second at Ivanhoe in the Spring of 1839, by Colonel Wm. H. Merritt.

In 1839, the first 4th of July celebration took place at Westport, and Judge Mitchell was the orator of the day. The usual dinner, toasts, and ball followed, and William H. Smith, Andrew J. McKean, and H. W. Gray were the ball managers.

In 1840, the census of the county was taken by H. W. Gray, Deputy Marshal; the population amounted to 1,342, so rapid had been the immigration in little over two years. Three years afterwards it was more than doubled again. This fine farming country could not long lie idle, when every home letter was full of its praise. Some of the early settlers were from the Southern States, but Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, New York, Massachusetts, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, and other states had their representatives. Almost every settler, finding himself in a land free from the trammels of political organization, immediately became a statesman, and advocated strongly whatever he could remember of the civil polity and police regulations of his own state. There was consequently no lack of variety of opinions, but some difficulty in harmonizing them. As they could not agree in adopting the code of any particular state, they came to the sage conclusion that they knew their own wants and could provide for them, and if transgressors found that justice was meted out in a more summary manner than was incident to the "law's delay," it was no more than they deserved. They at least learned that these hardy pioneers were not to be trifled with.

"In common with all frontier settlements," says Edmunds, "the first settlers here were poor; they were obliged to transport their produce in wagons mostly, to the Mississippi River, at points sixty or seventy miles distant. When reached, at such disadvantage, the markets were very low, consequently the accretions of wealth were slow, and were mainly invested in the homestead of the farmer. The discovery of gold in California, with the resulting emigration and the building of railroads, connecting the people with Eastern markets, greatly accelerated the prosperity of this country, as well as all other parts of the West. The financial crisis of 1857 interposed a check to this onward career of prosperity. It was but temporary, however. The people had fully regained their former standing when the Rebellion commenced."

Elam Hollar settled on Prairie Creek, in College Township, about 1840, or before.

Abner, Isaac and Joseph Cox, and John and Isham Hollar settled in Hoosier Grove about the same time.

Colonel Henderson was one of the early settlers near Western. He had seven sons, all prominent men.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

Linn County received its name from the Hon. Lucius F. Linn, United States Senator from Missouri, who being a favorite with some of the early settlers, was honored by having his name attached to one of the finest sections of Iowa.

The limits of the county were defined by act of the Territorial Legislature, in 1837, while Iowa was a part of Wisconsin Territory, and consisted of twenty congressional townships—being an equivalent of 460,800 acres, or 2,880 farms of 160 acres each.

In October, 1838, the first election was held at Westport, being the only poll opened for the county. There were thirty-two votes cast for members of the assembly, and the first member to the General Assembly from Linn County was the Hon. George Greene, member of the Legislative Council in 1840.

September 9, 1839, the county commissioners, consisting of Samuel C. Stewart, Peter McRoberts and Luman M. Strong, met at the house of James W. Willis, about half a mile north of the present site of Marion, and organized the county in due form of law.

Hosea W. Gray was appointed sheriff, and John C. Berry, clerk.

The site which had been suggested was approved and named Marion by said board. They divided the county into road and election districts, and appointed for constables, William H. Smith and Andrew J. McKean.

FIRST COURTS.

The first court was held at Marion, and the following is the first record made:

"Minutes of the District Court of Iowa Territory, within and for the County of Linn:

"IOWA TERRITORY, }
LINN COUNTY. } Pursuant to an act of the Legislature of the Territory of Iowa, approved July, 1840, the District Court of the United States, and also for the Territory of Iowa, met at Marion, in said county, on Monday the 26th day of October, 1840.

CEDAR RAPIDS

Is situated on the northeast side of Cedar River, embracing sections 21, 22, 27, 28, etc., in Rapids Township. The location is one of the most delightful in the state, occupying a plain rising above the river bed and extending back nearly half a mile, with a slightly rolling surface, affording fine building sites, with but little trouble in grading, and with peculiar grace in appearance. Ten years ago this level plat was surrounded by an abrupt elevation twenty-five to fifty feet in height, covered by a luxuriant growth of native oak. On these elevations to-day are elegant residences overlooking the valley for miles in either direction. On the south side of the river is Valley City, but so closely connected as to form but a single town as you gaze upon it from some elevation in the neighborhood. There is no rival city within twenty-five miles, and the richness of the surrounding country gives assurance of rapid growth. It is 220 miles due west from Chicago, and 75 miles southwest from Dubuque, and is well supplied with railroads leading to all parts of the country, east and west, north and south.

The rapids in the Cedar River are the first as you ascend from its mouth at the Mississippi, and the water-power is one of the finest in the country. A dam and race have been constructed at a cost of about $30,000, and the water-power is being utilized by energetic capitalists. The timber in the vicinity is sufficient for ages to come.

EARLY SETTLERS.

Among the first settlers at Cedar Rapids were D. W. King and T. Gaines, who came in 1839 and effected a permanent settlement on the west side of the river. There was a man, however, by the name of Shepard, a noted horse-thief and counterfeiter, who erected a cabin near what is now Commercial Street, near the old mills, in 1838. His house was the rendezvous of a lawless band engaged in horse-stealing and plundering the early settlers, and their booty was secreted on the islands of the river. This gang of desperadoes and freebooters was not driven out of the country till about 1851.

Mr. William Stone, in 1838, staked off a town where Valley City is now located, which he called Columbus; but it was never surveyed, and was finally abandoned.

The following events mark the progress of Cedar Rapids during its early years:

In 1842 the first dam was constructed across the Cedar River. In March, 1843, the lands came into market and first sales made. The same year the first saw-mill was erected. The first death was that of William Brookey. The first frame building was built by John Vardey.

In 1844 the first flouring mill was erected, by N. B. Brown, at a cost of $3,000.

The same year the second saw mill was built, by A. Ely; the first brick building, by P. W. Earle; the first hotel—the "Union House"—on corner of Adams and Market Streets.

In 1846 the second flour mill was erected, at a cost of $9,000.

In 1847 a post-office was established; J. Greene, postmaster. The first store was opened by Mr. Green, the second by Mr. Cleveland, the third by Mr. Mulford. The first school house was built this year; Nelson Felch, teacher. The first white child born was a daughter of John Vardey. The first church—at the corner of Eagle and Adams Streets—was a "grout" building, and was called "The Muddy."

In 1848-9 the first woolen factory was erected, costing $10,000.

About 1850 the first newspaper—the Progressive Era—was started, by D. O. Fitch.

In 1855 the first steam engine was set in operation, in the machine shop of A. Hager. The same year the free bridge was built; it was carried away by the ice, and two young ladies drowned.

In 1856 Cedar Rapids was incorporated as a city; Isaac N. Whittam, Esq., Mayor.

In 1864 a paper mill was put up by Messrs. Couch, Reed & Fish, and a pork packing house established by Mr. Chase et al.

In 1865 first printing paper made; and a second woolen factory erected, by the Cedar Rapids Manufacturing Company.

The city at this date (1875) contains—

MARION.

MARION, the county seat of Linn County, was laid out by the commissioners in 1839. It is beautifully located, in the midst of an exceedingly fertile country, with timber in quantity and quality sufficient for all purposes for ages to come. Early in 1840 quite a large number of settlers came into the prospective town, and opened different kinds of business. Woodbridge & Thompson opened the first store, in 1839. Addison Daniels, in 1840, erected a cabin and commenced selling dry goods and groceries, and has kept at it ever since. Lumon M. Strong kept a hotel in 1839, and a Mr. Hall opened another in 1840. Thomas Hare put up a blacksmith shop, and H. Woodbridge a shoe shop. A mill was erected by Hiram Bates and Richard Thomas. The American House was one of the first frame buildings, and a court was built, all in 1839 and 1840.

The following, with others, built dwelling houses: Lumon M. Strong, D. A. Woodbridge, Joseph Bigger, James E. Brummell, O. S. Hall, George Greene, etc.

A school house was built in 1841, and was used for religious meetings. Rev. Mr. Emmons was one of the first preachers. Rev. Mr. Rankin was the first Presbyterian minister. The Methodist Episcopal Church organized a society in 1840; Reverend Hodges, preacher. The first newspaper was the Prairie Star, started in 1852 by A. Hoyt—now called the Marion Register. The present Central High School building was erected in 1869; cost, about $25,000.

Marion is one of the oldest towns in the state away from the river, and is beautifully located in what appears to be an archipelago of groves, or forest-bound prairie, interspersed with fine residences, stores, hotels, churches, etc., with a fine park, filled with trees, flower vases, and a fountain, rustic seats and walks. The town affords delightful homes for active business men, retired gentlemen, merchants and farmers, and the industrious mechanic. Its educational and church advantages are superior, and every branch of traffic and industry is well rewarded.

Six dry goods stores; eight grocery; three drug; eight boot and shoe; six clothing; one book; three hardware; two toy and fancy; one furniture; six millinery; two butter, eggs and poultry; three cattle, grain and produce; two agricultural establishments; eight blacksmith shops; three wagon; two jewelers; one machine; one foundry; seven shoemakers; one gunsmith; three harness; three barber; eight paint; three merchant tailors; one dairy milk factory; one gang plow; one spring bed; one planing mill; one lint; two flouring; two brick yards; three lumber; six stone masons; three elevators; four hotels; four saloons; one fair ground; one trotting park; two livery stables; three ice houses; two laundries; two meat markets; three photograph galleries; three sewing machine offices; twelve law; twelve doctors'; two dentists'; three printing; one express; ten notary public; one internal revenue; two banks; two railroads; one masonic lodge; one chapter; one odd-fellows; one good templars; seven churches; one high school; two schools; one literary club; one dramatic club; one court house; one jail; one chemical laboratory, and four restaurants.

The property valuation, 1875, being one-third of the real and one-half of the personal, is: Real, $337,101.00; personal, $133,072.00.

Population: Dwellings, 405; families, 408; males, 955; females, 1,071; colored males, 11; colored females, 10; total, 2,047. Voters, 463; militia, 247. Marion was incorporated a city in 1874.

CITY OFFICIALS.

D. I. MCAFEE, Mayor.

CITY COUNCIL.

First Ward—D. Carskaddon, Mr. Hoagland.
Second Ward—H. P. Elliott, B. F. Seaton.
Third Ward David Wallace, A. B. Dumont.
Fourth Ward—J. D. Giffin, Earl Granger.

ROBERT YOUNG, Clerk.

BANKS.

There are seven banks in Linn County, as follows:

At Cedar Rapids.—"The First National Bank," "The City National Bank," "The Savings Bank."

At Marion.—"Twogood and Elliott's Bank," established in 1855, does strictly a legitimate banking business at legitimate rates, and from its first establishment has maintained a high standing in financial matters.

"The First National Bank" was the fourth chartered in the state, October, 1863. R. D. Stephens, President, having held the position from the beginning. Capital, $67,000; surplus, $11,600. Its credit among the financial institutions of the state is prime. J. W. Bowdish, Cashier. Directors—Alexander H. Stephens, John Davis, Henry A. Collen, Daniel Lothian, R. D. Stephens. Mr. Stephens is one of the best financiers in the state.

At Lisbon.—"First National Bank," organized September, 1874. Capital $50,000. Harrison Stutchshyn, President; G. Auracher, Cashier.

At Center Point.—There is a bank at this place, but we believe it is not a bank of issue.

RAILROADS.

This county is well supplied with railroads, and the following is the number of miles and cost per mile, etc., in the county:

1. Chicago & Northwestern, miles.....	29
Cost, $10,300 per mile—total.....		$301,790
2. Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota, miles.....	43
Cost, $3,800 per mile—total.....		163,716
3. Dubuque Southwestern, miles.....	19
Cost, $3,000 per mile—total.....		58,020
4. Sabula, Ackley & Dacotah, miles.....	13
Cost, $3,000 per mile—total.....		37,740
Total miles.....	104
Total cost.....		$560,266

The first includes the old Iowa & Nebraska and the Cedar Rapids & Missouri Railroad. The second includes the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota, and the Postville Branch.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The Court House at Marion is a good substantial brick structure, two stories high, furnished with the ordinary rooms and a spacious court room. It was built about the year 1842, and has been improved from time to time. Cost, about $40,000. A view of the building may be seen in another part of this volume.

The Jail also, at Marion, is a two-story brick building on Broad Street, near the court house; was erected in 1858. Cost, $15,000. G. Dean Gilfillan, Jailor.

The Alms House is situated about six miles north of Marion on the county farm of 320 acres of excellent land. The house is a brick building, two stories above the basement rooms. It is about 24x36, with wings, and will accommodate all the poor there are likely to be in the county for ages to come. The barn is an excellent one, 86x48, with 24 feet posts, and cost about $7,000. The farm is valued at $12,000. The present overseer is Samuel W. Parker.

Western College, under the direction of the United Brethren in Christ, was located in 1856, on lands donated by Jacob Shuey, Adam Perry, and W. A. Wherry, in Western, Linn County, Iowa. The incorporators and first trustees were Reverend S. Weaver, of Vinton, Reverend D. Rankel, of Lisbon, Reverend M. G. Miller, of Tipton, J. Neidig, Esquire, of Muscatine, and Colonel W. B. Levy, of Shrewsville.

The college is about eight miles southeast of Cedar Rapids, in a beautiful section of country, and is well supplied with convenient brick buildings for educational purposes, with a shady campus of about sixteen acres of land in the center of the town. Besides the college building proper, there is Lane Hall, a large three story building, which is used as a boarding hall for ladies. Neidig Hall is a two story brick building fitted up for students who may wish to board themselves in clubs.

The first building was completed in the Fall of 1858, and the school formally opened the following January, Reverend S. Weaver, president, with three professors, constituting the faculty. Total number of pupils, fifty-eight.

Reverend William Davis succeeded Mr. Weaver, and held the president's chair one year. Reverend E. B. Kephart succeeded Mr. Davis, and is still the president.

The number of students connected with the college the past year, as per catalogue of 1875, is 310, as follows: College department—Classical course, seven; scientific course, seven; ladies' course, thirteen. Preparatory department—Classical, eleven; scientific, two; ladies, three; general, one hundred and forty-nine. Commercial department, eighty-one; music and drawing, thirty-five; German, two.

The professors and instructors are nine in number. The usual college degrees are conferred by this institution. The library and cabinet of specimens are increasing. There are three literary societies. Tuition ranges from $7 to $25 per term, and board from $2.75 to $3.00 per week. The institution is in a flourishing condition.

Cornell College is located at Mt. Vernon, Linn County, Iowa, sixteen miles east of Cedar Rapids, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, thus rendering it easy of access from all directions. The city is one of the most beautiful, healthy, and moral in the state. Having no billiard or drinking saloons, it is free from those influences that attract the attention and corrupt the morals of students. The grounds, embracing about twenty acres, are beautifully designed by nature, and command one of the finest prospects in the country. The extent, beauty, and variety of the scenery is such as to inspire and refine the youthful mind. The view from the top of the main college building is unsurpassed by any in Europe or America.

The existence and growth of the college are largely due to the faith and energy of the Reverend G. B. Bowman, through whose influence the "Iowa Conference Seminary" was first projected in 1854. The board of trustees were organized in 1852, but the school was not opened till November 14, 1853. It continued as a successful seminary until 1857, when a college organization was consummated, and it received the name of Cornell College in honor of its generous benefactor, the late W. W. Cornell, Esquire, of New York City.

The ladies' boarding hall was erected in 1853, and was used for general school purposes till 1856, when the main college building was completed. The gentlemen's boarding hall was erected in 1872. The board of trustees have authorized the erection of a new and commodious chapel the present year. As it is probable that every ten dollars hitherto expended for this institution has given to the world a whole year's labor of an educated mind, surely the necessary buildings and endowments will here after be liberally provided for.

Both sexes have enjoyed equal advantages, and received the same degrees. In 1860, in addition to the old classical course, the scientific course was organized, and in 1873 the civil engineering course. The military drill is an attractive feature in this institution. Professor Webster, an army officer, and a graduate of West Point and the artillery school at Fortress Monroe, has been detailed by the Secretary of War to act as instructor of the young men in military science and tactics, both infantry and artillery. Muskets, equipage, and two six pounders are furnished by the government for their use. Physical training is required of the ladies. A gymnasium has been opened, and light gymnastics are daily practiced. The museum contains a large and valuable collection to illustrate the various departments of natural history. "The Woodman Cabinet" embraces one of the rarest and most valuable collections of corals, sponges, starfishes, crustacea, etc., in the country.

The general library contains over 4,000 volumes, and is constantly increasing. The expenses for tuition range from $7 to $13 per term, and board from $3.25 to $3.50 per week.

The Presidents have been: 1. Reverend R. W. Keeler, M.A., 1857. 2. Reverend Samuel L. Fellows, M.A., 1860. 3. Reverend Wm. F. King, D.D., 1865.

The institution has eighteen professors and instructors, and 500 students (from nineteen different States), as follows: Ten seniors, 9 juniors, 8 sophomores, 37 freshmen, 49 senior preparatory, and 387 junior preparatory. The graduating class of 1875 numbered ten, and the exercises were of a high order.

There are five literary societies connected with Cornell College.

RESOURCES.

There is but very little waste land in Linn County. The soil is exceedingly fertile being of a rich, dark sandy loam, and of great depth. Corn, oats, wheat and potatoes are good crops—some of them superior.—while no country is better for grazing. Tobacco, sweet potatoes, grapes and sorghum are cultivated to a considerable extent.

Fruits are good, especially the small fruits and berries. Apple trees do not do so well, but we believe the difficulty is not in the soil, nor in the climate, but in making a wrong selection of the kind of fruit trees, and with not raising them from the seed without transplanting, and then grafting upon the undisturbed stalk.

Linn County annually exports a large quantity of wheat, corn, flax seed, oats, barley pork, wool, hides, beef, etc.

The timber is more abundant than in most prairie counties, and it is of a superior quality. Nearly one-third of the county is covered with beautiful groves of hickory, oak, walnut, sugar maple, linn, elm, ash and other kinds of salable timber for manufacturing purposes and for fuel.

Clay exists in various parts sufficient to furnish all the brick necessary for building purposes, and inexhaustible quarries of the magnesian lime stone along the Cedar and Wapsipinicon Rivers are found. At Cedar Rapids a fine quality of clay is found which is used for the manufacture of pottery.

The county is well watered. Scarcely a farm but has some sort of a stream. The Cedar and Wapsipinicon with their numerous tributaries interlace almost every section. The Cedar, running in a southeasterly direction across the western part of the county, furnishes an immense water-power, and whenever the time arrives for its improvement not even the Merrimack of Massachusetts will excel it.

The Wapsipinicon follows the same general direction, crossing the northern part of the county diagonally and furnishes extensive water privilege. Mills at Waubeek Central City, Paris, etc., are never still for want of water. The streams of the county are fed by living springs, and consequently do not fail in time of drought.

Fine stock, blooded horses, short horns, sheep and hogs have been imported, and the stock of the county would not suffer by comparison with the best of Illinois and Missouri.

BLACK HAWK COUNTY.

This, one of the most populous and wealthy counties in the northern part of the state, is situated in the third tier south from the Minnesota line, and in the fourth west from the Mississippi River, is nearly in latitude 40° 30', and longitude 15° 12', embracing in its extent sixteen congressional townships, each six miles square, and containing in all 566 square miles. The county is subdivided into eighteen townships, which are named as follows: Benington, Barclay, Black Hawk, Big Creek, Cedar Falls, Cedar, East Waterloo, Eagle, Fox, Lester, Lincoln, Mt. Vernon, Orange, Poyner, Spring Creek, Union, Waterloo and Washington.

This county lies chiefly in the lovely valley of the Cedar, which is to Iowa what the once famous Genesee Valley was to New York—the garden and granary of the state—and is recognized by all who are familiar with it as being unsurpassed in the West for beauty, fertility of soil, and natural advantages. The general surface presents to the eye a gentle undulation of rolling prairie, which appears in the distance like the great waves of an emerald sea, interspersed here and there with beautifully shaded islands. The general elevation is a little less than that of the counties adjoining it on the east or west; while the soil consists of a deep, black vegetable mould, containing a considerable mixture of sand, which makes it well adapted to the changing seasons common to this latitude, and less effected by drouth and flood than any other portion of Northern Iowa. It is very forcing in its character, of an argilla and calcareous nature, rich and retentive, storing up the successive acquisitions and infiltrations from organic decompositions, until it has become almost exhaustless in its producing capacities. Wheat and corn are the chief productions, yet all the cereals, fruits, grasses, vegetables and esculent roots raised anywhere in this latitude can be successfully grown and perfected.

STREAMS.

As can be seen by a glance at the map of the county, it is exceedingly well watered by the Cedar River, the Wapsipinicon and their numerous branches. The Cedar, which runs diagonally through the center of the county from northwest to southeast, has a general width of some two hundred yards, with an average depth of about two feet. It is the second river in size in the State, being some 250 miles in length, and draining in the neighborhood of 8,000 square miles, emptying into the Iowa River in Louisa County, the larger stream being lost in the smaller. Its waters are clear and transparent, and in this county flow mostly over a limestone rock and gravel bed, having an average fall of over two feet six inches to the mile, affording a number of very fine mill powers, which as yet have been only partially utilized. It was originally called the Red Cedar, from the quantities of that valuable timber found growing on its banks, but of later years it has been known only as the Cedar. In the northwest townships of the county it is divided into what is called the east and west branches, and its volume is increased by the Shellrock River.

Black Hawk Creek drains the southwest, running through some of the most beautiful and valuable farming land in the state, while Beaver, Miller, Big, Rock and Prairie Creeks, with several smaller spring branches, empty into it from the west. On the east the volume of its waters are increased by Elk Run Spring, Poyner's and Silver Creeks, with their tributaries, which admirably drain and thoroughly water the eastern and middle portion of the county.

The Wapsipinicon passes through the northeastern township, and receives in this county the waters of the Crane, Camp, and Brush Creeks.

It will readily be seen that with the streams enumerated, and other smaller ones, which are fed by numerous springs, the county is unusually well supplied with living water, which is so evenly distributed that no considerable portion is destitute or unsupplied with good natural draining facilities. There are several fine water powers on the Cedar, probably the best in the state, which are as yet but partially improved, while the other numerous streams afford many good mill-seats which will ultimately add greatly to the wealth and prosperity of the county. By digging to an average depth of from twenty to twenty-five feet, wells of good living water are usually obtained.

TIMBER.

The proportion of timber and prairie was originally found to be about one to fourteen, that is, one acre of timber to fourteen of prairie. Though this is not a very large supply, yet it is estimated by those best informed that there are as many acres and as much value of timber in the county now as at any time since its first settlement. Although nearly all of the first growth has been cut and used, yet most of the land has come up with an excellent quality of young timber, and numerous groves of silver maple, poplar, cottonwood, and other fast growing trees have been set out all over the county, dotting the broad prairies with numerous groves, so that the supply is ever sufficient for the constantly increasing demands, which have been reduced by the excellent facilities now enjoyed for bringing in lumber from the pine forests of Minnesota, and fuel from the vast coal fields of Illinois. The largest body of timber in the county is called "Big Wood," it contains some 20,000 acres, and lies between Cedar Falls and Bremer County. Prior to the settlement by whites, and while it was still a portion of the red man's favorite hunting ground, the banks of the Cedar River were covered in many places with fine groves of red cedar, most of which was cut and rafted down the river to St. Louis and other places by adventurers and free-booters, who infested this section a little in advance of civilization. There was a leader of one of these bands by the name of Charles Dyer, who, possessing but little literary information, had a peculiar humpback, looking, as some expressed it, as though he had shouldered himself. This man continued his depredations to such an extent after the white settlers began to come in, that they finally determined to take some means to drive him from the state. They accordingly assembled and visited his shanty for the purpose of dealing with him, but failing to find him at home they were in a quandary how to proceed, as it would do no good to leave a note, he not being able to read. After studying the matter for some time, they finally hit upon a plan which, though novel, was effectual. They stripped the bark from a large tree in front of his shanty, and with a charred brand for a pencil, drew upon it his picture hump-back and all, and riddled it with rifle balls. Though they did not have a Thos. Nast in their company, the likeness is said to have been recognizable, and had the desired effect, as Dyer was never seen in the county afterwards. The native timbers consist chiefly of oak, elm, hard and soft maple, black and white walnut, hickory, hack berry, honey locust, ash, lin, red cedar, cottonwood and poplar.

GEOLOGY.

Rocks of the Devonian formation underlie most of the county mostly belonging to the Hamilton group, although in the western part the Chemung makes its appearance. It is mostly magnesian limestone suitable for building purposes, and often susceptible of a beautiful polish which appears suitable for lithographic purposes, while there are some of such a concretionary nature as to be unfit for building. Many ancient organic remains are found in the limestone rock, which are of peculiar interest to the paleontologist, consisting of corals, shells, seaweeds, and the spines, teeth, plates, etc., of ganoid fishes, also reptile teeth, and jaws of those saroid fishes so prevalent throughout the world during the era of the old red sandstone formation. In digging wells on the high rolling prairie masses of ancient soil and timber are found twenty-five or thirty feet beneath the surface. From the partially carbonized appearance of the timber, it is hard to determine its varieties, but willow, cedar and oak seem to have grown here prior to the diluvian formation of the prairies. Some beautiful specimens of calc spar are found among the concretionary limestone, while cornelians and agates are often picked up along the river banks. This county is also in the drift region, and boulders of all sizes are found in the prairie which are composed of granite gneiss, micas chist, quartz and greenstone, and must have been brought to their present position from the northwestern mountain ranges by means of ice. Most of the rock in the county will when burned make excellent lime, which in many cases possesses strong hydraulic properties. Brick, clay and sand exist in abundance, and are well distributed throughout the county.

FRUIT.

Considerable attention has been paid to fruit raising, which has not been attended with uniform success as regards apples and pears, although all who have paid sufficient regard to securing the hardier varieties suited to this climate, and who have given them good care, have met with that degree of success which renders it a settled question that good fruit can be grown in the Cedar Valley. All the small fruits, such as currants, gooseberries, strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, grapes and cherries, are raised with as little care as in almost any portion of the country, produce freely, and are of excellent quality. Wild plums, grapes, and various kinds of berries, are found in abundance in some places, and are of excellent flavor, the wild grapes making very fine wine.

CLIMATE.

This county, like other portions of the Cedar Valley, is conceded to be a remarkably salubrious and healthful region, being almost entirely free from any local disturbing cause. The absence of miasmatic poison in the atmosphere leaves it free, with very limited exceptions, from malarious diseases and their consequent debilitating results. The cold during Winter is often severe but steady, the air being bracing and invigorating, producing an exuberance of muscular energy and activity seldom found in low latitudes. The atmosphere is pure, fogs and excessive humidity are rare, while the regularity of the surface secures gentle and almost constant breezes in summer, with an equal distribution of rain. Severe and long continued droughts or damaging floods are seldom known.

STOCK.

The very excellent distribution of the streams, creeks and spring branches, that gently meander through the rich and undulating prairie, which by soil and climate is so well adapted for the growth of all kinds of wild and tame grasses, renders the county peculiarly well adapted for stock grazing. The only draw-back that prevents it from becoming one of the best stock-breeding and raising counties in the state, is the long and severe winters which necessitate good stabling and a large outlay to prepare for winter feeding. The character of all kinds of stock in this county is probably superior to that of almost any other portion of Northern Iowa, due largely to the introduction at an early day of some fine blooded thoroughbred stock by Hon. Peter Melendy, and other enterprising men from Ohio. The Cedar Valley District Fair, held for years at Cedar Falls, as well as the Annual County Fair held at Waterloo, have done much to stimulate the interest felt in progressive farming, and show the advantages and profit of raising only good stock.

HISTORY.

In regard to the early history and first settlement of Black Hawk County there seems to be considerable doubt and uncertainty. From the best information that can now be obtained it appears that in the Spring of 1844, William Chambers ventured to the site now occupied by the beautiful city of Cedar Falls, then a wilderness, and so far as known untrod by white men, and there upon the banks of the untamed Cedar made a claim and built a rude cabin. He remained during the Summer and Fall, engaged mostly in hunting and trapping, as he was a true type of those frontiersmen who enjoy the wild loneliness of the frontier forest with its solitude and gloom, more than the refined luxuries of civilized life. It is, however, generally understood by the pioneers of those early days who are still living, that a French trapper by the name of Sominan, who from his habits of living and long association with the Indians, was almost as much Indian as white man, lived for some time previous to this near the present site of Cedar City.

In March, 1845, William Sturgis and E. D. Adams, leaving their families in Johnson County, made a prospecting tour up the Valley of the Cedar in search of a desirable water power. Arriving at the same point where Chambers had stopped the previous Spring, and being well pleased with the general appearance of the country, built cabins and laid a claim to the land embracing the rapids and the present City of Cedar Falls, which they afterwards entered in the United States land office at Dubuque. Sturgis claimed the north half of the town and the water power, while Adams' claim was further south, near what is called Dry Run.

In the following May or June, John Hamilton and sons left their homes in Johnson County, made claims in the same neighborhood and built a cabin. They brought a team and breaking plow with them, and did the first breaking ever done in the county. They however became dissatisfied in a short time, and abandoning their claim returned to Johnson County, leaving Sturgis and Adams the only white men in the county, with no neighbors nearer than Quasqueton, in Buchanan County, or Vinton, in Benton County. In July of the same year George W. Hanna came, with his family—his wife being the first white woman who ever crossed the Cedar—and located on the west side of the river about half way between the present cities of Cedar Falls and Waterloo, where he still resides. Two years later he entered the land, it being the first entry made from this county. John Melrose followed soon after, and settled near him, while William Virden located on Black Hawk Creek, some three miles west of Waterloo, thus increasing the inhabitants of the county to five families, containing in all about twenty persons. During the next year others came in, so that in the Fall of 1846 there were the following permanent settlers in different parts of the county: William Sturgis, E. D. Adams and J. Taylor at Cedar Falls; Charles Mullan at Waterloo; George W. Hanna, the oldest living settler now in the county, and John Melrose, between Cedar Falls and Waterloo; William Virden on Black Hawk Creek; and E. G. Young and James Newell in the northwest part of the county, at the forks of the Cedar where Newell still lives, on the land he then pre-empted.

As the Indian titles to the lands had been but recently relinquished, there still remained many wandering remnants of tribes that had long occupied the soil which they loved so well, who often proved troublesome to the early settlers by stealing and carrying away their stock and committing other depredations. During these early years the progress of civilization, driving the red man onward the sunset, was very slow. The United States census for 1850 give some interesting facts in regard to the condition of things at that time. The entire population then, more than five years after the first settlement, was one hundred and thirty-five—seventy-five males and sixty females—who were divided into twenty-six families, each living in separate dwellings. There were two births and two deaths during that year, while the whole number of children attending school was four. There were three hundred and eighty-nine acres of land reported as improved, and farming implements to the value of $655, with fifteen horses, thirty-nine cows, twenty-eight oxen, forty-one head of other cattle, forty sheep, and one hundred and eighty-three hogs. The entire productions of the county for that year were, one hundred and sixty bushels of wheat, two thousand one hundred and fifty of corn, one hundred of oats, seventy-five of buckwheat, one hundred and twenty pounds of wool, thirty-three hundred and sixty-four pounds of maple sugar, and six hundred and forty pounds of honey. In 1852 the population had increased to three hundred and fifteen, from which time the progress became much more steady and rapid, more than doubling each year for a number of years.

Soon after removing his family here in the Summer of 1845, Sturgis commenced making preparations to improve the water power; commenced the construction of a brush dam across the river a short distance above the present dam, and also got out some lumber and other material for the construction of a saw mill. Owing to the scarcity of capital and the difficulty in procuring labor, he progressed with the work very slowly, and in December, 1847, sold out his claim and improvements to John W. and D. C. Overman and John T. Barruck, who, pushing the work more rapidly, soon had a saw mill—the first in the county in operation. This mill stood at the end of the race, a little below the present site of the Cedar Falls woolen mills. In 1850 the same company erected an addition and set up one run of stones, cut from a granite boulder, which was the first grist mill in the county, and was patronized by the early settlers for many miles to the north and west.

ORGANIZATION.

The boundaries of Black Hawk County were established by an act of the Territorial Legislature of Iowa, approved February 17, 1843, and, by the same act, was attached to Delaware County for judicial and revenue purposes. By an act of January 17, 1845, it was attached to Benton County, and subsequently to Buchanan, for the same purposes. By a special enactment of the General Assembly, approved January 22, 1853, A. J. Low, of Delaware County, S. S. McClure and Dr. Edward Brewer, of Buchanan, were appointed commissioners to locate and establish the county seat; and by the same act the counties of Bremer, Butler and Grundy were attached to Black Hawk for judicial, revenue and election purposes. On the 9th day of the following June, these gentlemen met at the house of E. D. Adams, in Cedar Falls, and after thoroughly canvassing the matter, selected that village as the future seat of county government, the town proprietors donating to the county fifty-six lots, which were to be sold for the purpose of raising funds to erect county buildings. By order of the County Court, seventeen of these lots were sold December 24, 1853, ranging in price from ten to twenty dollars each, the whole number bringing $343.25.

FIRST ELECTIONS.

The first general election for the purpose of completing the organization of the county was held on the first Monday of August, 1853, at which time the following gentlemen were elected the first officers of Black Hawk County:

Aaron Dow, Treasurer and Recorder; William L. Christy, Pros. Attorney; H. H. Fowler, School Fund Commissioner; John H. Brooks, Clerk of District Court; John Virden, Sheriff; Norman Jackson, Drainage Commissioner; Edmund Butterfield, Coroner; Charles Mullan, Surveyor; Jackson Taylor, Assessor, and J. R. Pratt, County Court Judge. As there was no person in the county authorized to administer the oath of office, Judge Pratt went to Independence, and was qualified on the 9th day of August by Hon. O. H. P. Roszell, County Court Judge of Buchanan County, and on returning, qualified the other officers elected, who immediately entered upon their respective duties. There was an election held at Cedar Falls in August, 1847, at which time township officers were elected, and votes cast for officers of Buchanan County, to which Black Hawk was then attached for revenue and judicial purposes. The judges of that election were George W. Hanna, E. D. Adams, and John Melrose, while Wm. Sturgis, and a man from Butler County whose name has been forgotten, acted as clerks.

FIRST COURT.

The first term of the County Court was held by Judge Pratt at Cedar Falls, on the 17th day of August, 1853, at which session the said County Court levied the following tax: for county purposes, six mills; for schools, one and a-half mills; for roads, one mill; for state purposes, one and one-quarter mills, making a total levy of nine and three-quarters mills. The assessed value of the personal and real property in the county at that time, including Butler County, that was joined with it for revenue purposes, was $91,608 58, while the tax amounted to $873.

Hon. Thos. S. Wilson, of Dubuque, Judge of the Second Judicial District, held the first court, which convened in the old school house at Cedar Falls on the 27th day of June, 1854, with John Virden as sheriff, and L. L. Pease, clerk. The first business transacted was the introduction and admission to the bar of William H. McClure, still a practicing attorney of Cedar Falls. There was no grand jury called, and the petit jury were discharged without trying a single cause. The following gentlemen composed the petit jury: Jesse Skinner, James Hampton, Thos. H. Points, Joseph Brown, Zimri Streater, J. D. Dewey, Wm. H. Virden, J. C. Hubbard, and Miro Smith. The court was in session but one day, and made final disposition of all cases on the docket but one, which was continued. The second term was held at Cedar Falls, March 26, 1855, by Judge Wilson, with Martin Bailey, clerk, John Randall, Pros. Att'y, and John Virden, sheriff. The following grand jury were returned by the sheriff, and sworn and charged by the court: Henry Sherman, foreman; Benj. Knapp, Pleasant Morris, E. G. Young, John Wilson, Stephen Evans, Henry Gipe, M. S. Oxley, Jesse Shimer, Michel Bunting, William Fisher, C. H. Wilson, R. P. Speer, L. L. Pease, B. F. White. S. H. Packard and Sanford W. Ransom were admitted to practice in the court. The first case which came up for trial was that of J. R. Pratt, County Judge, vs. A. F. Brown, in which judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, deciding that in declaring the office of Prosecuting Attorney vacant, and in appointing John Randall, he had not exceeded his authority as County Judge, and ordering the defendant to pay costs. The first criminal case was the State of Iowa vs. John M. Cowen, who was arrested for larceny committed in Waterloo. He stole a shot-bag partially filled with silver, and a bead purse containing a number of bills of various denominations, from B. J. Capwell & Co. He was arrested and held to bail, when, depositing the amount, he left for parts unknown. The first term of District Court held in Waterloo commenced on the 25th day of September, 1855, in Capwell's hall, at which time the following gentlemen were admitted as attorneys of the court: W. W. Newton, J. O. Williams, W. L. Christy and R. E. Baker. The first Circuit Court convened in the Court House in Waterloo on the 1st day of February, 1869, Judge S. Bagg presiding; W. F. Brown, sheriff, and Col. G. A. Evarhart, clerk. The first declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States was made by Walter McNally; while the first citizen naturalized in the county was Andrew H. Kennedy, a native of Scotland.

SOME FIRST THINGS.

The first white child born in the county was Jennette, daughter of William Sturgis, who was born on the 1st day of October, 1846. She is now married, and lives at Sturgis, Michigan, a town named after her grandfather. Three days later a son was born to E. D. Adams. He was named Henry F.; he was the second child and the first boy born in the county. He now resides in Missouri. The third birth was Emily Hanna, born March 7, 1847. James Monroe, infant son of George W. and Mary Hanna, died October 18, 1845, and was the first white person who died in the county.

It would appear that Cupid did not have much influence with the early settlers of this county, as six years passed before he was able to entangle any of them in the meshes of matrimony. The first wedding of which any thing can be learned took place at the residence of Judge J. R. Pratt, at Cedar Falls, on the 27th day of February, 1851. The contracting parties were James Virden and Miss Charlotte Pratt. The ceremony was performed by George W. Hanna, a justice of the peace of Buchanan County, the license having been procured at Independence. They are still living, and residents of Waterloo.

The first post-office in the county was established at Cedar Falls during the Summer or Fall of 1848, with D. C. Overman as postmaster. The receipts of the office for the first quarter are reported to have been $2.50. The first knowledge that the citizens of the county or of Cedar Falls had of the establishment of this office is related to have been the appearance of an Englishman, by the name of Thomas W. Close, now a resident of Independence, on the opposite side of the river, who hailed, as it happened, the future postmaster, D. C. Overman, who immediately took a skiff and ferried him over. He then informed Mr. Overman that he had some mail matter for Cedar Falls, and was directed to deliver it with the key to D. C. Overman. The future government official then opened the sack and found several letters addressed to different citizens, and a commission for himself appointing him postmaster of Cedar Falls. The arrival of this first mail was an occasion of no small consequence to the citizens of that small burg, as it brought them news from their eastern friends, and seemed to link them once more with civilization, from which they had so long been cut off. For some time the mail was quite small, and Mr. Overman used to carry it around in his hat, delivering it as he might meet those to whom it was addressed, thus establishing the first mail carrier delivery of which there is any record in the state.

THE INDIAN WAR.

The pioneer settlers of this county, like most others who endured the hardships, toils and privations of frontier life, relate many anecdotes and incidents of those early days which were fraught with so much interest at the time of their occurrence that they are worthy of a place in the history of the state. Among the most remarkable, and the most frequently spoken of when the historian was attempting to glean information of the past, is the "Indian War," which occurred in the Summer of 1854. For a year or two previous the settlers in this vicinity had been frequently annoyed and alarmed by thrilling reports of Indian depredations and massacres which were said to have occurred somewhere in the northwest. Every few days settlers would come in and relate most wonderful stories of pillage and murder, which upon investigation generally proved to have no foundation in fact. For some time the relations existing between the Sioux and Winnebagoes, living in the neighborhood, had not been friendly, and finally resulted in an outbreak in which a Winnebago boy was killed. The news of this affair rapidly spread, gaining strength as it was told by one excited and thoroughly scared settler to another, until by the time it had reached Black Hawk County it was reported that hundreds of painted warriors were marching down the valley murdering and burning everything before them. The people became fearfully excited, and many fled with their families and what little household stuff they could carry, finding safety in the more thickly settled counties, or in the adjoining states. A company was raised in Cedar Falls, and under command of Captain E. Brown and Lieutenants A. F. Brown and W. A. McClure, went out to reconnoiter the enemy, going as far as Floyd County, where they learned, to their great joy and greater chagrin, that it was all a hoax, and no hostile Indians were within hundreds of miles. Others went from Waterloo and Independence, while at Jonesville and some other places they hastily constructed rude forts or stockades, and put themselves in the best possible shape to make a strong defense against the bloodthirsty savages.

Some very ludicrous incidents are told in connection with this bloodless war. On the return of the company to Cedar Falls one of their number, to signalize the victory, rode his horse into the office of the Carter House, around the stove and out again, whereupon his comrades fired a salute in honor of his bravery, rousing the whole town. A settler by the name of Rucker, with his wife, were so badly frightened by the firing of this salute, supposing it to be the realization of what they had so long intensely feared, that they left every thing and rushing out ran sixteen miles that night. At Waterloo several of the timid left, and after spending a few weeks in Illinois or some other supposed safe locality returned. Among this number was a man by the name of Glidden, who was aroused on the first night after his return by a party of boys engaged in the pleasant pastime of charivaring a newly married couple with cow-bells, tin-pans and various other instruments, more noisy than musical. Supposing by the noise and clatter that the Indians had come and were murdering the inhabitants, he hastily hitched up his team, loaded in his family and pushed out down the river as fast as he could induce his horses to travel. After going a few miles he made a momentary halt to notify a sleeping family of the impending danger, when glancing back, expecting probably to see the flames of burning Waterloo, he discovered several dark objects rapidly approaching.

With a frantic cry, shouted "They are coming! They are here!" and putting whip to his horses, rushed away, leaving the family to meet their fate alone. The people whom he had roused were so frightened that, seizing their sleeping children, they rushed out in their night clothes and wandered around in the sloughs and wet grass until nearly morning, when they arrived at a neighbors some three miles away, and found that there had been no cause for their alarm, the dark objects seen by Glidden proving to be a number of colts that had followed his team.

COUNTY SEAT CONTEST.

Shortly after the organization of the county and the election of officers, the citizens of Waterloo and the southern portion of the county began to express considerable dissatisfaction with the action of the commissioners in locating the county seat at Cedar Falls, and began to inaugurate steps looking towards its removal to Waterloo, which was a rival town and situated nearer the center of the county. Some time during the Summer of 1854 the citizens of Waterloo went to Cedar Falls with the intention of making some demonstrations for that purpose, when a general row ensued, resulting in the Waterloo force being driven from the field by arguments more persuasive than words. This, however, did not cool their desires for county seat honors, and the following Winter they presented the matter to the Legislature and procured the passage of a special act ordering an election to be held on the first Monday in April, submitting the question to the voters of the county whether it should remain at Cedar Falls or be removed to Waterloo. The act provided that, should Waterloo receive a majority of the votes cast, the county seat should remain at Cedar Falls until the 4th day of July following, when it should be removed to Waterloo, and that the County Court should refund the money received for the sale of lots in Cedar Falls. On the 5th day of March, 1855, H. H. Meredith and others presented a petition to the County Court asking that a vote be taken at the ensuing election, on the re-location of the county seat at Florence City. Action was deferred until the 19th, when the prayer of this petition was denied for the reasons that it could not be done under the law ordering the election, and that there was no such place known to the court as Florence City.

The election was accordingly held on the 2d day of April, 1855, at which time there were 648 votes cast on the question of removal, of which Waterloo received 388, and Cedar Falls 260. On the 11th day of the same month the County Court entered of record the fact that the election had been held and resulted in a majority of 128 votes in favor of Waterloo, and it was "Ordered by the Court" "That proclamation be this day made that on the 4th day of July, 1855, the county seat of Black Hawk County shall cease at Cedar Falls, and that the several offices required to be kept at the county seat shall hereafter be held at Waterloo." During the last illness of County Judge J. R. Pratt, in the following May, and a few days before his death, he issued an order locating the county buildings on the public square in East Waterloo, and without aid affixed the seal, although it required his whole strength to do so. He died on the first day of the following June, and John Randall, then Prosecuting Attorney, became ex-officio County Judge. The citizens of Cedar Falls determined to use every effort in their power to prevent the removal, applied to Judge Wm. G. Woodward of the Supreme Court of the State, and obtained an injunction restraining the removal, which was served very early on the morning of the 4th day of July. On the 16th day of the same month an appropriation of $50 was made by the County Court to aid in defraying the expenses of dissolving the injunction. The court made an attempt to justify its action by entering of record the reasons assigned for making the appropriation, "that the injunction was obtained in violation of law, and was injurious to the interests of the county." The injunction was dissolved by the same Judge sitting in chambers at Muscatine, on the 26th day of the same month, and the property pertaining to the county seat was removed some two or three days later, and occupied rooms in the second story of Hubbard's store, a brick building still standing on Commercial Street.

As an inducement to secure his election, Judge Randall rescinded the order of his predecessor locating the county buildings, and promised to leave the question to a vote of the whole county. This arrangement proved satisfactory, as he was elected, and immediately issued his proclamation ordering a special election on the 10th of December to decide on which side of the river the Court house should be erected. At this election there were 731 votes cast, 467 for the east side, and 264 for the side that would give the most money for the location and erection of county buildings. This decided the matter as to which side of the river, but the location was yet under the control of Judge Randall, who, in violation of the confidence that the people had imposed in him, located it so far from business, and in such an inconvenient place, that he aroused the indignation and ill will of the entire county. It is generally believed that the interest he had in certain town lots influenced him in making choice of this site.

During a few years after the first settlement of the county, the population increased very slow, so that, as it has already been shown, the United States census of 1850, taken five years after the first permanent settlement, gave the entire population as only 135, which had increased in 1852 to 315. From this period the progress was more steady and rapid, as will be shown by the following statistics of population that have been gleaned from reliable sources: The entire population in 1854 was 2,488; in 1856, 5,538; in 1859, 7,095; in 1860, 8,243; in 1863, 10,014; in 1865, 12,306; in 1867, 16,036; in 1869, 18,961; in 1870, 21,774; in 1873, 23,136.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The court house, which is the principal county building, is pleasantly though not conveniently located on the east bank of the river, quite a distance below the business part of town, and stands in a small park which is handsomely shaded, and commands a fine view of the river, the opposite bank, and West Waterloo. It is a convenient, two-story brick structure, erected in the Summer and Fall of 1856 at a cost of about $30,000. The first floor is divided into convenient and airy rooms for the use of the different county offices; the second contains a large well arranged court room with the necessary jury rooms, while the basement is fitted up and used as a jail. It was first occupied May 4, 1857. The poor house, which is a few blocks northwest of the court house, is a plain, substantial two-story brick building, occupying one block, and costing about $5,000.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

The Black Hawk County Agricultural Society was organized at a meeting held in the clerk's office in Waterloo, August 30, 1856, by the election of Geo. Ordway, President, and S. W. Rawson, Secretary. The first fair was held in the court house, October 1, 1857, the receipts from all sources amounting to $100. There was on exhibition at this fair a squash vine bearing 1,100 pounds of fruit, which shows the original adaptitude of this soil and climate to productions of this kind. The second fair was held on the west side, partly in the Congregational Church, and partly on the bluff. The present convenient and handsome fair grounds which are situated on the east bank of the river, a little below the court house, were purchased in 1865, although they had been used for several years previous.

The Cedar Valley District Agricultural Association was organized in 1856, through the influence and labors of Honorable Peter Melendy, who was chosen its first President, which office he filled for more than ten years. This society held annual exhibitions on their grounds at Cedar Falls until quite recently, doing much to advance the interests of farming and creating a laudable ambition to excel, among the agriculturalists and stock raisers of the county.

PRICE OF LAND, ETC.

But little land in the county is held by non-resident speculators, while a still smaller portion remains unimproved. What little good wild land there is commands a good price, equal to the poorer class of improved farms, which range from $18 or $20 to $50 or $60 per acre, according to the location and character of improvements. The inhabitants are mostly from Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and the New England States, and are a remarkably intelligent, enterprising and well informed people. There are some Irish and German in the county, who are mostly industrious and peaceable citizens. The character of the improvements throughout the county are generally good, and will compare favorably with any other portion of the State.

RAILROADS.

The railroad advantages of Black Hawk County, as can be seen by reference to the map, are excellent, having two competing lines to all points north, east, or south. The Illinois Central, which was built by the Dubuque & Pacific Railroad Company, runs nearly east and west through the county, crossing the Cedar River at Cedar Falls, was mostly constructed during the Summer and Fall of 1860, and commenced running regular trains to Cedar Falls April 1, 1861, having reached Waterloo a few weeks previous. The Cedar Falls & Minnesota Railroad, which was really a Cedar Falls enterprise, was commenced in 1860, and completed to Waverly the following year. It is now operated by the Illinois Central Company, and runs in a northwest direction from a point about one mile east of Cedar Falls, connecting with the Iowa Division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad at Charles City, and at Austin, Minnesota. The Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad passes through the county, running in a northwesterly direction up the Cedar Valley, on the west side of the river, crossing the Illinois Central at Cedar Falls, and was built during the Summer and Fall of 1870. Several other railroad enterprises have at different times engaged the attention of the people, and receiving large donations of money have given every promise of early completion, but from various causes have finally failed, and in all probability will never be built, at least until the present policy pursued towards railroads in the state is changed, or greatly increased business demands them. The first telegraph in the county was erected along the line of the Dubuque & Sioux City Railroad, and put in operation in the Fall of 1863.

SCHOOLS.

The schools of the county are in a flourishing condition, nearly every district having good school buildings and well conducted schools. The institutes and normal classes are well attended and have done much good, as the teachers are anxious to avail themselves of every opportunity to learn more about their profession.

The present county officers are: Auditor, D. W. Foote; Clerk, J. C. Gales; Treasurer, R. A. Whitaker; Recorder, C. B. Stilson; Sheriff, Geo. W. Hayzlett; Superintendent of Schools, A. F. Townsend; Chairman Board of Supervisors, Caleb May.

WATERLOO.

This city, the largest in the state west of Dubuque and north of the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, is located almost in the geographical center of Black Hawk County, of which it is the county seat; is beautifully situated on both banks of the Cedar River, at a point where the timber handsomely opens out into a fine rolling prairie, forming a site as perfectly adapted for the location of a large and healthful city, as if it had been designed by the Creator for that purpose. The business and residence portion of the town are about equally divided by the river, and are situated on ground which in the lowest portion is just above ordinary high water, and gradually rising as it recedes, affords some quite elevated and commanding building sites a few blocks back from the business streets, which run parallel with the river on the west side, and at right angles with it on the east, which have only a sufficient grade to afford good drainage. The town is regularly laid out with most of the streets running parallel and at right angles with the river, which here runs in nearly a southeast direction, although some portion of the east side is laid out north and south. The general appearance and character of the improvements are good, fully equal with those of eastern towns that possess no larger population. Some really handsome business blocks adorn the principal streets on either side, while the generality of the residences are neat and tasty in their appearance, with a few that are truly palatial in design, external finish and arrangements, surrounded by grounds that can not fail to attract the attention and secure the approval of the most unobserving. The river, which is here some nine hundred feet in width, has good banks and a solid lime rock bottom, over which the water, clear as crystal, flows in sufficient quantities to afford motive power sufficient to drive almost any amount of machinery. This power, which is among the best, has, though but partially improved, already done much to advance the business prosperity of the town, and is destined at no very distant day to be of still greater value in encouraging manufactures and other material interests, without which, no Western town can secure or hold a large business.

HISTORY.

The first settlement in Waterloo was made by Charles Mullan, who, moving with his family from Illinois arrived here June 24, 1846, and erected a cabin near the present site of the family residence occupied by his widow, and made pre-emption claims on land he afterwards entered, May 3, 1852. He surveyed and laid out the original town plat in the Fall of 1853, and with Gen. W. Hanna and J. H. Brooks was one of its proprietors. This embraced the westerly portion of the original plat on the west side, but for some reason was never recorded. In the Spring of 1854, these parties with Lewis Hallock, who owned the balance of the original town on the west side, and J. R. Pratt, B. M. Cooley and James Virden, who were owners of the land on the east side, joined in laying out the town as it now exists, and had the consolidated plats recorded June 24, 1854. In 1850, a petition was circulated asking for the establishment of a post-office, and naming Chas. Mullan as postmaster. There were seven names signed to the petition, probably embracing all citizens of petitioning age. As to who named the town, and why it was called Waterloo, seems to be a somewhat mooted question, though there is no doubt that previous to the establishment of a post-office, it was called Prairie Rapids, or Prairie Rapids Crossing. The oldest living settler now residing in the county, and one not living in Waterloo or any rival town and therefore unprejudiced, informed the historian that the early settlers of Cedar Falls gave it the name of Water-loo, on account of the flat appearance of the original village, which by a slight change makes the name first given to the post-office and afterwards to the town. The citizens of Waterloo however claim that the name was selected by Charles Mullan, in the following manner: This question having been discussed for some time without arriving at any conclusion, Mr. Mullan was authorized to select a name when he went to Cedar Falls for the purpose of securing the endorsement of the postmaster there. In looking through the list of offices in the United States, he hit upon the name of Waterloo, and being well pleased with it, and finding no other of the same name in the state, filled that blank with that name and sent off the petition. In due time he received his commission as postmaster of Waterloo, and first kept the office in a small basket or box at his residence in the west part of town.

The early growth of Waterloo was not rapid, but steady and substantial, being settled by enterprising, industrious men, principally from the Eastern and Middle States, who were not wealthy except in those sterling qualities of character and heart which have ever distinguished those noble men, who, leaving the refined luxuries of their Eastern homes, have been instrumental in making Iowa what she is to-day, the peer of the Western States. A stock of goods was opened by Nelson Faucher in 1853, in a log building nearly opposite to where Dr. Whittenden's house now stands. Geo. Pratt and James Virden opened a small store on the east side the same year. In 1854 Samuel Aldrich opened a grocery store on Sycamore street, which was known as "Uncle Sam's Grocery." The public were attracted by a sign, which although not very artistic, was certainly novel, and read as follows: "Uncle Sam's Grocery; Rough & Reddy. Walk In. Don't be Alarmed!" A hotel was also built in 1853 which was a log structure 16x24, one and a half stories high, stood on the bank of the river, and was kept by Seth Lake. The Sherman House, on the present sight of the Central House, was built in 1854 and kept by Henry Sherman. Wm. Mullan, son of Chas. Mullan, was born May 2, 1849, and was the first white child born in Waterloo. The first wedding was celebrated July 11, 1854, the contracting parties being James Virden and Eliza May who the previous summer taught the first school in Waterloo, in a small log school house which was used for some time by the different religious denominations for church purposes.

The first movement made towards improving the water power, was made by James Eggers, who having received permission from the County Court June 2, 1854, immediately commenced constructing a log and brush dam a little above the present one, and in three weeks after obtaining the permit, had a dam sufficiently high to raise the water two feet and started a small saw mill, the first one in the place except a rude kind of a portable one run by horse power set up a few weeks previous. The first flouring mill was erected in 1856, by G. W. Couch & Co., who commenced grinding early the following spring. C. A. Farwell launched the water-wheel for the mill from Rock Island, Ill., and the burrs from Iowa City. October 12, 1853, a ferry license was granted to Samuel L. May, who immediately established a line above the present dam. He was compelled to carry free all persons going to or returning from church on Sunday, and all voters going to or returning from elections in Waterloo. A bridge was constructed across the river here in September, 1859, built by subscription. It was supported by wooden piers, and in 1865 two spans broke down, which being replaced, were carried away the next year by high water with the entire structure, and a new bridge was built in 1867, which was removed in 1871 to give place to the present handsome iron structure, which is built on substantial stone piers and abutments.

STEAMER BLACK HAWK.

During the Spring and Summer of 1858, a steamboat of about one hundred tons capacity was built by the citizens of Cedar Rapids for the upper Cedar trade, and named the "Black Hawk." That year was noted for extreme high water, and almost all the season the Cedar was high enough for steamboat purposes. On the 6th day of October the Black Hawk made its appearance at Waterloo, amid the wildest excitement of the citizens, who fired salutes, ran up a flag, and made other demonstrations of joy. The boat was a stern-wheeler, commanded by A. J. Snouffar, of Cedar Rapids. On the following day, the Captain gave the citizens a free excursion down the river, and returning in the evening, was complimented with a grand banquet. The news of the arrival of the steamboat excited the citizens of Cedar Falls almost as much as those of Waterloo. The dam across the river formed an obstruction which the people of the former place made strong threats of removing by force. A delegation was sent to interview Captain Snouffar, who made a trial trip for them; but after spending several hours it was demonstrated that the boat could not even reach the dam. Several trips were made before the close of navigation, which reduced the price of heavy merchandise nearly one half. A few trips were made the following spring, until the water got so low it was impossible to make the ascent, when it was abandoned, never to be resumed.

INCORPORATION.

An attempt was made to organize the city in the Fall or Winter of 1854. An election was ordered by the County Court, at which it was certified a majority of votes were cast in favor of incorporating. Some irregularities in the proceedings being subsequently found, the matter was dropped. On the 26th day of May, 1868, the County Court appointed S. D. Shaw, P. J. Silsterling, W. G. Burbee, A. Thompson and Robert Robinson to take the necessary steps towards incorporating as a city of the second class. They ordered an election on the 22d day of June, at which there were 679 votes cast—372 in favor of Incorporation and 307 against. On Monday, July 20, the organization was completed by the election of the following officers: Mayor, R. A. Whitaker; Marshall, S. M. Hoff; Treasurer, C. A. Farwell; Solicitor, Lewis Lichty; Councilmen, H. B. Allen, G. Conger, W. A. Crowther, John Hilferty, Sullivan Day, F. E. Cutler, R. D. Titcomb, and Allen Spencer.

The present city officials are: Mayor, Lewis Lichty; Solicitor, J. L. Husted; Treasurer, C. A. Farwell; Marshal, J. P. Evans; Councilmen, G. W. Barnes, R. Russell, J. Taylor, Frank Neeley, John McCabe, M. Richer, A. Thompson, and A. Reagan.

CHURCHES.

The Methodist-Episcopal Church had regular appointments for preaching at James Virden's house, on the east side, in 1852. Rev. S. W. Ingham was the first pastor, and Rev. A. Colman, presiding elder, in 1855, during which year an extensive revival occurred, and over one hundred persons were added to the society. They now have a comfortable church and parsonage free from debt. The present membership is one hundred and eighty. Rev. J. T. Cripps, pastor. The east side M. E. Church was organized, and articles of incorporation adopted, March 22, 1861. A church was built in 1865. First membership, one hundred; present membership, one hundred and ninety-five. Church and parsonage cost $8,000. Pastor, G. W. Brindol.

The first Baptist Church was organized in 1853, without a regular pastor. The first service was held in the log school house. Rev. Bicknell and Elder Knapp held occasional service. The first pastor was Rev. J. C. Miller. They now have a good church edifice, are in a prosperous condition, with two hundred and fifty members, and one of the largest Sunday Schools in the city. Rev. Richard Graton is present pastor.

The first Presbyterian Church was organized September 17, 1857, by Rev. N. C. Robinson, with six members. The society built the first church in Waterloo in 1856-7, but owing to the crash in the Fall of 1857, were unable to pay the outstanding debts and sold it to the Baptist Society. The present commodious church was built in 1867, and dedicated free of debt. The pastor is Rev. I. E. Carey, while the church now has a membership of one hundred and fifty.

The Congregational Church was organized in 1856, with six members. A portion of the present church was built and occupied in 1857. Several additions and changes have since been made, rendering it one of the largest houses of worship in the city. In 1869 the society built a good parsonage. The present pastor is the eloquent and popular Reverend A. A. Ellsworth; membership two hundred and ten.

The first Episcopal service in Waterloo was held August 3, 1856, by the late Right Reverend H. W. Lee, Bishop of Iowa, at which time the St. Thomas parish was organized, with a membership of six. The first rector was Reverend Gifford. The present church was built in 1868; present membership, ninety-five; present pastor, Reverend J. E. Ryau.

The German Evangelical Association commenced missionary work here as early as 1857. A house of worship was built in 1870. They now have a membership of fifty, with Reverend Joseph Harlacher pastor.

The German Latheran Church held services in 1866, and were incorporated in 1869. The first regular pastor was Reverend Joseph Westenberger, under whose pastorage a church edifice was built. The present membership is twenty; Reverend William Burkrung, pastor.

The Free Will Baptist Church was organized in January, 1867, with twelve members. A church edifice was built in 1868. In 1874 a call was made and accepted by the present pastor, Reverend J. J. Hall, of Loudon, England.

Besides the Catholic, which has a good church and parsonage and a large membership, there are several other church organizations that have no house of worship. The Universalists organized in 1868, and now have some fifty members. The Church of Christ was organized with a small membership in 1855. The Church of the Brethren was organized the same year, and now has some three hundred and fifty members, in charge of Elders E. K. and Benjamin Benchley. The Free Methodists organized in 1874, with thirty-two members, and Reverend J. W. Drake, pastor.

The public schools of Waterloo are of a high grade, well attended, and thoroughly conducted by a large corps of able and experienced teachers. Three large brick structures, costing from twenty-five to forty thousand dollars each, furnish ample accommodations. The high school building on the West Side was burned in 1870, involving a loss of twenty-five thousand dollars. It was re-built the next season, in improved style. Besides the public schools there are two well conducted select or private schools, one for both sexes, and one for young ladies only.

Waterloo Lodge, No. 105, A. F. & A. M., was instituted in April, 1857. About thirty members demitted from this lodge and instituted Victory Lodge, No. 296, in the Fall of 1870. Tabernacle Chapter, No. 52, R. A. M., was chartered October 17, 1870, and the East Star Lodge was organized in 1873, and has a large membership.

Black Hawk Lodge, No. 72, I. O. O. F., was instituted June 5, 1855. It continued for some two or three years, when, on account of hard times and other unfavorable circumstances, it was compelled to surrender its charter. It was however re-instituted June 2, 1867. It is now in a flourishing condition, increasing in members and quietly performing its mission of friendship, love and truth. Waterloo Camp, No. 51, was instituted in February, 1871. It is also in a flourishing condition.

BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The shops of the Illinois Central Railroad Company were located here in 1870, the citizens of Waterloo donating, for the purpose of securing them, twenty-three thousand dollars and seventy acres of valuable land, on which the shops, depots, etc., are situated. The round house has a capacity for fourteen locomotives, with large machine, blacksmith and carpenter shops, costing, with the machinery, upwards of seventy-five thousand dollars. There is an average of one hundred and forty men employed in these shops, who receive monthly from eight to nine thousand dollars. Some twenty men are employed in the offices and around the yard, who receive upwards of twelve hundred dollars per month, while there are over one hundred train men who run from this point, and whose monthly salaries amount to between eight and nine thousand dollars.

The flouring mills of the Union Mill Company have eleven run of burr stone, which are propelled by fourteen Turbine wheels. These mills give employment to upwards of thirty men, grinding during 1874 over 305,000 bushels of wheat, 125,000 bushels of corn, oats and buckwheat, and shipped over forty thousand barrels of flour. The woolen mills have a capacity of about two thousand pounds of wool per week, employ some twenty hands, consuming upwards of twelve hundred pounds of wool weekly, and doing an annual business amounting to upwards of one hundred thousand dollars. Besides these there are two foundries and one machine shop, one cheese factory, one large agricultural implement manufactory, and seven carriage and wagon shops, which are doing a good business. An inventory of business houses shows the following number: Ten dry goods, thirty groceries, three dealers in farming implements, seven book and drug stores, seven clothing houses, two crockery houses, nine grain dealers, five dealers in hardware and stoves, six lumber dealers, eleven millinery establishments, three photograph galleries, three jewelry stores, three weekly newspapers, two English and one German, with one bindery, three banks, eight hotels, one furniture manufactory, ten boot and shoe stores, three butter and egg packing establishments, five liveries, one marble works, six restaurants, and three cigar manufactories, while the professions are represented by twenty-one lawyers and eighteen physicians.

The amount of shipments during 1874 are as follows: Illinois Central Railroad — Grain and flour, 952 cars; stock, 40 cars; butter and eggs, 10 cars; green hides 20 cars; general merchandise, 3,327,630 pounds. By B., C. R. & M. R.R. — Barrels of flour, 1,865; bushels of wheat, 135,425; corn, 11,202; oats, 9,096; rye and barley, 80,404; pounds of dressed hogs, 8,999; lard and pork, 16,400; wool, 9,510; number of horses, 101; cattle, 753; hogs, 7,600; pounds of merchandise and heavy freight, 3,938,305. Freight received by the Illinois Central Railroad: 18 cars oil, 277 cars lumber, 248 cars wood, 1,035 cars coal, 8,908,900 pounds general merchandise; by the B., C. R. & M. R.R.: 23,388,436 pounds of general merchandise and heavy freight.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper which appeared in Waterloo was the Iowa State Register and Waterloo Herald, published December 15, 1855, William Haddock, editor and proprietor. It was an eight column folio, and for the time a very creditable sheet. In October, 1859, it was discontinued, and the material sold to parties in Waverly. The first number of the Waterloo Courier appeared January 18, 1859, with W. H. Hartman and George D. Ingersoll, as editors and publishers. It was really a continuation of the Cedar Falls Banner, which these parties had bought, and after running for some time suspended, and removed the office to Waterloo. It is then the oldest paper in that part of the state west of Dubuque. It was first issued as a seven column folio, and was enlarged January 1, 1860, to eight columns. In September, of the same year, Hartman bought out Ingersoll, and continued the sole proprietor until November 14, 1864, when J. W. Logan became half owner. In 1865 the paper was again enlarged by adding an extra column to each page, and other improvements made. In April, 1871, Hartman & Logan sold the entire establishment to Aldrich & Woodruff, but in October, of the same year, Hartman again became part owner by the purchase of Aldrich's interest. In February, 1874, Woodruff sold to Andrew J. Felt, and the firm was changed to Felt & Hartman, who on the 16th of April following, again enlarged and changed it to a seven column quarto, in which form it has since been published. The Courier is one of the best and most readable papers in Northern Iowa, and has a large and increasing patronage.

The Iowa State Reporter was started as a democratic paper by H. Q. Nicholson, May 13, 1868, and was run as such until its suspension some time late in the same Fall. February 11, 1869, the material and subscription list were purchased by Smart & Parrott, who recommenced its publication April 14, 1869, as a republican paper, which it has since remained. On the 31st of May, 1871, it was enlarged to six column quarto, new type added, and other improvements made. June 18, 1873, James L. Gerton became a partner, and the firm was changed to Smartt, Parrott & Co. March 16, 1875, J. J. Smart sold his interest to J. P. Sherman, and the firm name was changed to Parrott, Gerton & Sherman, who are the present proprietors. May 26, 1875, they added an entire new dress, and some improvements were made in the arrangements, which make it, without an exception, the best printed, and neatest looking paper in the state.

The only German paper ever published here is the Der Deutsch Amerikaner, which appeared August 29, 1872, then one side English and the other German. It was published by a company and edited by A. Schill. January 1, 1873, Martin Bilm became editor and proprietor. In the following February he discontinued the English part of the paper, making it all German, and has since continued to conduct it in such a manner as to secure a liberal patronage.

CEDAR FALLS.

This city is located a little northwest of the center of Black Hawk County, mostly on the west bank of the Cedar, at the falls of this beautiful river from which it takes its name, having, however, been previously called Sturges Rapids. It is on the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad at its intersection with the main line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota, one hundred miles west of Dubuque and one hundred and sixty-two miles northwest of Burlington.

The town is built on an undulating tract of land, formerly covered with good native timber, that has long since disappeared, except in the city park and in some of the private grounds surrounding its many elegant residences. The slight elevations, depressions, and gentle slopes are exceedingly favorable for the location of healthful and attractive homes, and the construction of handsome and well drained streets. It is surrounded by a farming country of rolling prairie, well watered and admirably drained, which are unsurpassed in the northwest for beauty, richness, and fertility, and are thickly dotted with artificial groves, orchards, and elegant farm houses, while the banks of the Cedar and tributaries, are lined with the best timber found in the county. The city is regularly laid out at right angles, the principal business streets running west from the bridge and connecting the two depots, is well graded and macadamized, with stone curbing, and wide side walks, some of which are paved with handsome flagging quarried from the bed of the river. The dwellings are mostly neat, tasty cottages, presenting an inviting appearance, while there are a number of costly residences, surrounded by well kept grounds, which display good taste and a generous expenditure of money. The business portion, as a whole, will compare favorably with any town in the state, while it contains some really elegant buildings two and three stories high, which would be a credit to any town west of the Mississippi. Taken as a whole the town presents in the elegant taste and neatness of its display very much the appearance of the most beautiful of New England villages. The falls, which have been constructed into a magnificent water power, are the best on the Cedar, and are unsurpassed, if they are equaled in the state. The rapids are eighty rods in length, and have a fall of fourteen feet, with a sufficient volume of water, if properly improved, to run one hundred run of stone. As a manufacturing point Cedar Falls has no superior in the state, having excellent railroad facilities, a magnificent water power, is in close proximity to a good farming country and some of the best native timber in the state, and with its wide-awake, enterprising business men it certainly has a promising future.

HISTORICAL.

The early settlement of Cedar Falls is the same as that of Black Hawk County, which has previously been given, this having been the first place in the county inhabited by white men. The first cabin was erected by William Sturgis, in the early Spring of 1845, and stood where the city prison now stands, on First Street. The town was located and a few lots laid out in 1851; but little was done toward founding a city until early in the Spring of 1853, when it was again surveyed and platted by the Overman brothers and E. Brown, who recorded the plat in Buchanan County. From the most reliable information that can now be obtained—that of early settlers now living—it appears that in the Spring of 1853, at the time the town was really laid out, and from which its history must date, there were not more than forty persons and nine log cabins in the place. In 1851 Andrew Mullarky opened the first store, which was also the first one in the county, and was known far and near as the "Black Hawk store," while the first building erected expressly for a store was built in 1853, by John R. Cameron, and is still standing on the corner of Main and Second Streets. He also purchased the first lots sold after the laying out of the town, comprising the block on which this store now stands. It is claimed by some that during the latter part of 1853 there were three hundred inhabitants, though one actual population was probably considerably less. The following year was however a very prosperous one; a bank was opened, a newspaper—the first one west of Dubuque—started, and building and improvements pushed rapidly forward, so that toward the end of the year 1854 the embryo city had a population of nearly five hundred, since which time the growth has been steady and permanent. The first frame house erected, which is still standing, was built by Samuel Wicks, who was the first lawyer in the county.

These pioneers did not forget, in their isolation and solitude, the advantages of educational privileges for their children, and in the Summer of 1846 established a small school, with six regular scholars, over which Mrs. J. Taylor presided, as the first teacher in the now populous and wealthy county of Black Hawk; and from this small beginning has grown the present magnificent system of graded schools, which are equal to any in Iowa, a state justly noted for the superior excellence of its public schools. A school house was built in 1853, mostly by the subscription of two citizens, which building was used for a number of years for school, church and political purposes, and in which the two first terms of court held in the county were convened. In its belfry was placed the first bell that ever pealed forth sweet music to happy school children and more staid and sober church goers west of Dubuque. The first school district was organized the same year, by the election of S. A. Bishop, President; E. D. Adams, Secretary; and J. M. Overman, Treasurer; at which time there were forty-one persons of school age in the village. This school house was afterwards sold to the Baptist society, and used as a church.

PAST AND PRESENT.

Thus began the little hamlet in the wilderness that has steadily grown into a beautiful and attractive city of more than three thousand inhabitants, which is certainly one of the finest, if not the most attractive town situated in the justly famous valley of the Cedar. The primitive log cabin has given place to palatial residences and happy homes, while solid brick blocks of business houses arise in architectural beauty where a few short years ago stood the wigwam of the Indian. The one run of rude granite stones which did the grinding for the early settlers have been replaced by those magnificent flouring mills, which, operating fifteen set of burrs, have a daily capacity of nearly five hundred barrels of flour. The little log school house, of which the early settlers were so justly proud, has long since been found too small, and two large, handsome brick structures, containing all the modern improvements, costing some forty thousand dollars, and capable of accommodating nearly one thousand pupils, now stand as monuments of the character and enterprise of her citizens. Eight churches adorn the city, indicating that the religious and moral wants of the community are well supplied and keep pace with intellectual and material improvements. A large and well selected public library and reading room is generously supported, and liberally patronized by the young. Besides the three flouring mills—two of which are of stone, and cost nearly one hundred thousand dollars—there is a large three-story stone woolen mill, employing some twenty-five hands, manufacturing some forty-five thousand yards of cloth per annum, which consumes upwards of forty thousand pounds of wool. There is also a large starch factory, and a wooden pump factory which has a capacity of five thousand pumps a year. Besides these there are several other manufacturing interests carried on, among which may be mentioned the Cedar Falls stove factory, which employs some ten or twelve men, the machine shop and foundry, washing machine factory, and several wagon and carriage shops, some of which do an extensive business, a pottery and mattress manufactory. A summary of the business interests shows the following: Six dry goods stores, four drug, three hardware establishments, fourteen groceries, four banks, four agricultural implement establishments, two jewelry stores, six clothing and merchant tailoring houses, two news stands, two barber shops, two music dealers, four milliner establishments, three photograph galleries, one furniture house, two liveries, three harness, four cooper and eight blacksmith shops, four lumber yards and one planing mill. The professions are represented by ten physicians, three dentists and four attorneys.

INCORPORATION.

Cedar Falls was first organized under the Statutes as a village in 1857. J. M. Overman was elected first Mayor, and Geo. C. Dean, Clerk. During the Winter of 1857-8 the town issued fifteen thousand dollars in scrip, for the purpose of building a bridge which was constructed the following Spring, and was the first bridge ever thrown across the Cedar in this county. The issuing of this scrip, which was done against the wishes of a portion of the community, has ever since been a fruitful subject to engross the attention of local politicians. It was incorporated as a city of the second class and elected its first city officers in the Spring of 1865. T. B. Carpenter was Mayor, and A. Trowbridge Clerk.

The present officers are: Honorable F. F. Butler, Mayor; S. F. Packard, Clerk; H. C. Hamenway, City Attorney; L. Knapp, Assessor; Councilmen, L. H. Severin, F. Matthias, L. O. Howland, James Williams, S. F. Beswick, J. Coughlin, F. Cox and W. T. Williams.

The first newspaper published in Black Hawk County, or in the state west of Dubuque, was the Cedar Falls Banner, which made its first appearance July 11, 1853, with Wm. H. McClure and S. H. Packard as proprietors, and edited by A. F. Brown. It did a flourishing business for some time, but as none of the parties were newspaper men, and all engaged in other business, the affairs of the office were neglected, and its publication suspended some time in 1856 or '7. In the Fall of 1858 Wm. H. Hartman bought the office, and after running it a few months, moved it to Waterloo Jan. 1, 1859.

The second paper appearing at Cedar Falls, was the Cedar Falls Gazette, published and edited by H. A. and G. D. Perkins, who issued their first number March 16, 1860. It was a neat seven-column folio, republican in politics, and ably edited. It was increased to eight columns October 9, 1863, and conducted by the same parties until July 13, 1866, when they published their valedictory, having sold the office to S. B. Goodenow, who took charge of the paper July 20, and continued its publication until April 5, 1867, when he sold to C. W. Snyder and A. C. Holt, who enlarged it to nine columns April 3, 1868. August 7, that same year, Holt retired, having sold his interest to E. A. Snyder, and the firm became C. W. & E. A. Snyder, who have since conducted it in such a manner as to greatly increase its circulation and influence. It has a large well-selected job office, and receives a good advertising and job patronage with a large and increasing circulation.

The Cedar Falls Recorder, a six-column quarto sheet, democratic in politics, was established in October, 1872, by S. G. Sherburne as editor and proprietor, who conducted it until February 1874, when the establishment passed into the hands of H. C. Shaver, who has since conducted it in a very creditable manner. It has an increasing patronage, and bids fair to become one of the permanent institutions of the county.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME.

Iowa has the proud satisfaction of being the first State in the Union to provide special home care and educational advantages for the children of our country's dead, who fell in a glorious cause fighting for the maintenance of human liberty. An able writer has truly said, that "The greatest achievement of christian charity and benevolence of which any State can boast, is the Iowa Soldiers' Orphans' Home." The planning of this noble work, like most philanthropic and humanitarian movements, was first suggested by loving ever sympathetic woman. Mrs. Anna Whittenmyer is said to have first presented the idea to an assembly of one hundred and twenty-eight ladies who were gathered at Cedar Falls, October 13, 1863, in response to a call of the Soldiers' Aid Society. In December of that year, thirty-one persons associated themselves together in a body corporate, for the purpose of meeting the coming wants of the State. Judges Baldwin, Wright and Low, with Governor Kirkwood, headed the list, while Mrs. Judge Bagg was one of the leading ladies in the movement. The Homes were organized and sustained by volunteer subscription until some time in 1866, when the work was assumed by the State, the Legislature having made an appropriation for that purpose.

The Cedar Falls Home was organized in 1865, and an old hotel building was first fitted up for its use. In October of that year the first children, Rufus C., Mary L. and Emma L. Bauer, were received. During the month eleven entered, and by January 1, 1866, there were ninety-six. During 1866 there were one hundred and nineteen received, nine died, and twenty were otherwise discharged. In 1867, one hundred and forty-four were received, one died, and eighty-seven were discharged. In 1868, sixty-six were received, and forty-nine discharged. In 1869, sixty-six were received, one death occurred, and thirty-five were discharged. In 1870, seventy-five were received, one died, and ninety-four were discharged. In 1871, thirty-nine were received, and sixty-four discharged. In 1872-'3 one hundred and thirty-two were admitted, three died, and one hundred and sixty were discharged. The total number received since the organization, is eight hundred and one.

The Home was moved into its present quarters, which are situated some two miles west of Cedar Falls, October 13, 1869. The main building is a fine brick structure, three full stories and basement, forty-six by ninety feet, with vestibule seven by thirty feet, and center-wing forty by thirty-six feet. The new chapel building is also of brick, two stories, the upper being the chapel proper, having capacity for seating about 400 persons, while the lower floor is arranged for the grammar department of the schools. The grounds comprise forty acres, donated by the citizens of Cedar Falls. The buildings stand near the center, on a high commanding position, and occupy with the play grounds about one-third of the area. About one-third is cultivated, while the remaining third is devoted to trees, shrubbery and lawn. The grounds have been carefully and beautifully laid out, the walks and drives are mostly cut, and the trees and shrubs set, there being about one hundred now growing. The children of the Home have done nearly all this work, and take great and constant delight in it, when the season is suitable for out-door employment.

This is emphatically an educational institution in all its departments, where the culture of the intellectual and moral nature is coupled with systematic instructions in the details of the various secular employments in which the pupil will necessarily engage after leaving the institution. They may here acquire a clear, concise, and practical knowledge of all the branches usually taught in the better public schools. Several of the older ones have passed creditable examinations and received certificates to teach school in Black Hawk County, while a number who have left the Home are teaching in different parts of the state.

Iowa recognizing her high obligation to the children whose fathers' strong arm held a bayonet at the breast of treason when the muttering thunders of civil war reverberated along the horizon of the republic, has invited them to this happy and pleasant home, ministered to their comforts, and given them educational advantages with moral and intellectual culture fully equal with those enjoyed by the offspring of her toiling sons, "who now point to this triune institution" as to a monument whose living members, cemented together by the patriotic blood of hero fathers, must be more imperishable than piles of granite, and whose fame will be as wide as the influence of those who, in coming days, shall rise from field and forum to bear testimony to this sagacious philanthrophy.

LA PORTE CITY.

Which is not a large but pleasant village, is located on high ground, mostly on the south bank of Big Creek, about one mile from its conflux with the Cedar, in the southern portion of Black Hawk County, is situated in the midst of a rich farming country possessing every agricultural advantage nature could give. It is a station on the B., C. R. & M. R. R., and contains over 1,200 inhabitants, who are industrious, enterprising, and intelligent. The town was founded and laid out in June, 1855, by Honorable Jesse Wasson, on land he had entered the previous year, who also erected the first dwelling, which is still standing and forms a part of his handsome residence. He also built the first store, both of which were put up in the Spring of 1855. Among the early settlers were G. Buship, who was the first attorney, W. Fox, Riley Montray, R. A. Brooks, W. C. Kennedy, and George Cook. The first physician was Doctor Jesse Wasson, who was also the first justice of the peace, and the first postmaster, individually paying for the delivery of the mail for the first year, as it was a short distance off the regular route. The United Brethren were the first society to organize a church, which was soon after followed by the Methodists. The first established road was laid out through this town in May, 1855, from Vinton to Cedar Falls, really under the direction of Doctor Wasson, through whose influence it had been ordered surveyed, and who named the town after La Porte, Indiana, where he had previously lived for a number of years. The first iron bridge in the county was built across Big Creek in 1867, at a cost of $4,500. A good substantial Howe truss bridge was erected across Cedar River nearly opposite the town in 1874, costing over $7,000.

The town was organized in 1871, with R. J. McQuilkuin, mayor, and W. H. Brenkerhoff, as clerk. The present officers are Honorable Jesse Wasson, mayor, and E. K. McGogy, clerk. Good graded schools have been established which are held in two substantial and convenient school buildings, and employ five experienced teachers. There are four church edifices, belonging to the Presbyterians, Methodists, English and German Evangelical—the two first are very fine, not being equaled in the county. The Baptist and Advent societies both have church organizations. The Masonic and Odd Fellows organizations both have strong lodges in flourishing condition. The business interests of the town are represented by five dry goods stores, four groceries, two drug and book stores, one hardware store, three agricultural implement establishments, five large grain elevators, one large flouring mill, with three run of stone, two liveries, five millinery establishments, four restaurants and bakeries, two meat markets, two wagon and four blacksmith shops, two lumber yards, five doctors, three lawyers, one newspaper and printing office, the La Porte City Progress, established November 30, 1870. It was a seven column folio, independent in politics, and ably edited and managed by Doctor Jesse Wasson, who, in February, 1872, enlarged it to eight columns, and has since continued under the same management. The La Porte City Republican appeared in July, 1872, with W. H. Brinkerhoff, as editor and publisher, and was continued eleven months, when it was discontinued for want of support.

BREMER COUNTY.

Bremer County is situated in the northwestern part of Iowa, distant in a due west direction about fifty miles from the nearest bend of the Mississippi River northwest of Dubuque, and about forty miles in a due south direction from the Minnesota line. It is bounded on the north by Chickasaw County, on the south by Black Hawk County, on the east by Fayette County, and on the west by Butler County. In territorial area, Bremer County is one of the smallest counties in the state. Twelve congressional townships only, including therein fourteen civil townships, to wit: Dayton, Douglas, Franklin, Frederika, Fremont, Jackson, Jefferson, La Fayette, Leroy, Maxfield, Polk, Sumner, Warren and Washington, are contained within its limits. The former townships extend in number three north and south and four east and west. The surface of the county is principally open, rolling prairie, with a general southern declivity.

GEOLOGY, SOIL, ETC.

An alluvial deposit averaging about three feet deep, resting upon a bed of blue clay varying in depth from ten to one hundred feet, below which limestone rock is invariably found, forms the general geological structure of the county. The soil is for the most part a rich, dark, adhesive loam, underlaid by a mixed clay and gravel subsoil. Limestone of excellent quality, easily quarried and wrought, abounds. It admits of a fine polish, and endures the action of the weather without deterioration in color or texture. It also makes good lime, possessing strong hydraulic properties. Choice corals of manifold formations are found in great number near Cedar River, in the vicinity of Waverly. Very fine crystallizations and petrefactions are likewise obtained, from twelve to seventy feet below the surface, all over the county. Brick-clay and sand exist in abundance.

WATER.

Bremer County is well watered. Several streams, large and small, each pursuing a more or less southeasterly course, intersect every township, without exception. Cedar River, the principal of these, rising in Minnesota, enters the county from the north, about two miles east of the northwest corner. Traversing the western tier of townships—Polk, La Fayette, Washington and Jackson—it crosses into Black Hawk County at about midway of the southern line of the township last named. The transparently clear waters of the Cedar have a rapid fall over a limestone bed, between banks that although high are seldom precipitous. Its bottom lands have a general elevation above the highest rise of freshets. Water sufficient to propel any desirable amount of machinery is contained in this river, at its lowest stages. Next in importance to the Cedar is the main Wapsipinicon. Rising also in Minnesota, it likewise enters the county from the north, at nearly the center of the northern boundary. Running thence through the townships of Douglas, Frederika, Fremont, Dayton and Franklin, it too crosses into Black Hawk County at a distance west from the southeast corner of Bremer County of about three miles. It has sufficient fall to render it available for mills, with a constant and steady flow over a sandy and pebbled bottom. Unlike the bottom lands of the Cedar, those of the main Wapsipinicon are subject to overflow. Next to the main Wapsipinicon ranks the Little Wapsipinicon. Rising in Chickasaw County it crosses the northeastern corner of Bremer County into Fayette County. Soon afterward, recrossing into Bremer County, it runs thence semicircularly across the southeast part of Sumner Township and the northeast part of Dayton Township again into Fayette County. Finally, it empties into the main Wapsipinicon in Buchanan County, pursuing after its second entry into Fayette County a southerly course near the Bremer County line. Buck Creek rises in the northeastern extremity of the county, and runs through the townships of Sumner, Dayton and Franklin, which form the eastern tier. It crosses the southern boundary of Bremer County into the northeast corner of Black Hawk County, at about a mile west of the southeast corner of the former county, and a few miles farther on (in Buchanan County) is lost in the Little Wapsipinicon, into which it falls. Crane Creek rises in Douglas Township, in the central northern part of the county, a short distance west of the main Wapsipinicon. Running nearly parallel therewith, through the townships of Warren, Fremont and Maxfield, it empties into the latter stream in the northeastern part of Black Hawk County. Two or three other and minor streams, fed by springs, drain the country between Crane Creek and the Cedar. During the greater part of the year they run freely; in seasons of drought, however, portions of their beds are occasionally dry. Shell Rock River, a beautiful mill stream scarcely inferior in size to the Cedar, rising like the Cedar and the main Wapsipinicon in Minnesota, enters the county from the west. Running southeasterly through the townships of Washington and Jackson, across the southwest corner of the county, it falls into the Cedar in the northwest part of Black Hawk County. Well-water of good quality is obtained every where in the county, at various depths ranging from eighteen to one hundred feet.

TIMBER.

When Bremer County was first settled, about one-sixth of its entire surface was covered with variously large and small bodies of excellent timber, well distributed. Twenty-six thousand acres of heavy oak, ash, maple, elm, locust, black walnut and other varieties, each variety of the largest growth and of the best quality, were comprised in the lower Big Woods, lying wholly within the county, on the east side of Cedar River, near the southern boundary. North of this body large groves skirted the Cedar, on either side, nearly to the north line of the county. The main Wapsipinicon was also skirted with timber extending in places to several miles in width. On Crane Creek and elsewhere in many different parts of the county, were other large and fine groves, at distances convenient to every settler. But, while greater or smaller portions of these once larger bodies of timber yet remain, spared only to be hereafter felled by the ever ruthless woodman, less than one half the amount existing at the time first mentioned now flourishes within the same territorial limits.

PRODUCTS.

Wheat, corn and oats are the staples of the county, varying relatively in amount from year to year. Barley, hay and potatoes rank next as important productions. Rye, sorghum and grass seed are also largely cultivated. Vegetables and fruit of the kinds common in this latitude grow here to the greatest perfection. Much attention is devoted to the raising of stock, particularly of horses and cattle. Swine and sheep are also raised in considerable numbers. Of 275,229 acres of land assessed in the county in 1873, 100,071 only were reported improved.

POPULATION.

The population of Bremer County, numbering at the present time about 15,000, consists very nearly equally of Americans and Germans. Various other nationalities, however, have resident representatives. The inhabitants of American birth immigrated mostly from New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana. They are mainly enterprising people, nowise inferior to the average of the inhabitants of the states named in morals and general intelligence. The German inhabitants immigrated almost exclusively from the northern part of the German Empire. As a class, they came poor, bought land at low rates on long time, making small cash payments, and by industry and frugality have since become thrifty and substantial farmers. Comparatively very few of the Germans in the county are engaged in trade or mechanical pursuits, the various departments of which are conducted principally by Americans.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first white settlement within the borders of Bremer County, then a part of the Winnebago Indian Reservation, was made by Charles McCaffrey, who located in in the Big Woods, near the site of the present Village of Jefferson, in the beginning of May, 1845. He did the first "breaking" in the county, on sections 34 and 35, in the Township of Jefferson, during the Summer of the same year. Soon afterward he removed his mother and brother Isaac from Scott County to his new home On the 22d of March, 1871, this much respected pioneer was himself removed from his earthly residence near Janesville, to an eternal home in another world. The next settlers in the county were Jacob Beeler and his son-in-law, Andrew Sample, who, with their families, located on section 35 in Jefferson Township, in September, 1845. In the Spring of 1845, John H. Messinger, accompanied by his son Elias J. Messinger, both from Marion County, Indiana, George Tibbetts and his sons Wesley and Henry, Tolivar Fisher and P. Miller moved in. The last two, however, departed the following Fall. In 1847 Calvin Frady, Joseph and James Fee, and Ezra G. Allen joined the previous settlers, and were followed by others at various times during the succeeding four years. Some of the earlier comers, notwithstanding they made claims and erected cabins, and became thus actual settlers, did not remain very long in the county. In 1851, and thereafter for many years, settlements were made at a rapid rate. The first settlers of the county dwelt together on terms of perfect amity and concord. They had no laws, officers, lawyers, doctors, or preachers. No wonder, therefore, that, to some of them at least, this was the happiest period of their lives, as one of their number testifies. In the language of the same witness, "every man was treated as a brother, whether a stranger or a friend." Prior to the year 1850, Cedar Falls, in Black Hawk County, fifteen to twenty miles distant, was their nearest post-office, and Quasqueton, in Buchanan County, forty or more miles distant, their nearest mill. Churches and school houses were equally distant, until even a later period.

ORGANIZATION.

In 1847 the county was surveyed into townships; subsequently it was surveyed into sections. The government lands in the county came into market in 1851. About the beginning of the latter year the county was attached to Buchanan County for civil and judicial purposes. Also about the same time the Winnebago Indians, then yet inhabiting the county, to the number of about three hundred, with their chiefs, Big Wave, Winneshiek, and Wananoker, were removed to Crow River, Minnesota. On the 29th of April, 1851, the first election in the county was held at the house of John H. Messinger, in Jefferson Township. John Miles, George Tibbetts, and Elias J. Messinger were the judges, and Heman A. Miles and Aaron Dorr the clerks of the election. The officers elected were Israel Trumbo and Charles N. Martin, Justices of the Peace; Heman A. Miles and John H. Martin, Constables; George Tibbetts, John Clark, and John H. Messinger, Trustees; Elias J. Messinger, Treasurer; and Aaron Dorr, Town Clerk. The electors in the county at the time were Israel Trumbo, William Payne, Joseph Kerr, John H. Messinger, Peter Hohyner, Wesley Tibbetts, John Clark, Jacob Beeler, William Hinton, John Miles, Samuel Beeler, Jacob Hess, William Thorp, Ezra G. Allen, Samuel Armstrong, John H. Martin, William Baskins, George Tibbetts, James H. McRoberts, John T. Barrick, Heman A. Miles, Elias J. Messinger, Henry Tibbetts, Charles N. Martin, and Aaron Dorr. Of the twenty-five persons mentioned two or three only, of any who are still living now, reside in the county. James W. Wood and O. H. P. Rozell, commissioners, located the county seat at Waverly in May, 1855. In August of the same year the county was organized. There were then but eighty voters within its limits, and property to the amount of only $43,437 was listed for taxation. The first election in the county, after its organization, was held in the same month last named. The county officers then elected were: County Judge, Jeremiah Farris; Sheriff, Austin Farris, son of the former; Treasurer and Recorder, John Hunter; Clerk, Heman A. Miles; School Fund Commissioner, John H. Martin; and Surveyor, Israel Trumbo.

PROMINENT EVENTS.

Events prominent in the history of the county are the following: The first house, built of logs, was erected in the Fall of 1845, by Jacob Beeler, on section 35 in Jefferson Township. Janesville was the first town laid out into town lots—in the Spring of 1853—and the plat thereof was the first town plat filed for record—July 22, 1854. The first post-office was established at Nautril, in Jefferson Township, in 1850, John H. Messinger was appointed postmaster. The mail route extended from Cedar Falls. Post-offices were next established at Waverly and Janesville. The first store in the county, owned by John Hunter and Asbury Leverich, was opened at Janesville. The second store, owned by William B. Hamilton, was opened at Waverly. Zachary T. Messinger, son of Elias J. and Catherine Messinger, was the first white child born in the county, on the 15th of January, 1848. Isaac McCaffrey and Rebecca Bealer contracted the first marriage. They journeyed to Linn County to have the ceremony performed. On the way they encamped at Spring Creek, in Black Hawk County, and were there snow-bound five days and nights. Like the journey afar of Rebekah of old, to wed her Isaac, so that of the fair betrothed in the present instance, was finally attended by the happiest results. Charles McCaffrey and Cynthia Messinger, who next entered into matrimonial copartnership, went to Independence, Buchanan County, to secure a formal ratification of the contract. The first death in the county was that of Mrs. Fee, mother of Joseph and James Fee. Her remains were conveyed to Linn County for interment. The second death, and first burial in the county, was that of an infant son of Isaac and Rebecca McCaffrey. The Reverend Collins, of the Methodist Episcopal denomination, preached the first sermon delivered in the county. The service was held at the house of Elias T. Messinger, in the Winter of 1850. A frame house erected near Janesville, in 1852, for a Methodist parsonage, is said to have been the first frame house erected in the county. The first school in the county was taught by Richard Miles, brother of Heman A. Miles, in 1853, in a log school house, in Jefferson Township.

FIRST COURTS.

The first term of the District Court for Bremer County, was held by appointment of the Honorable Thomas S. Wilson, Judge of the Second Judicial District of Iowa, at Waverly, June 29, 1854. Austin Farris was Sheriff and Herman A. Miles was Clerk. The first Grand Jury, then summoned, consisted of Thomas J. Sewell, James Queen, James Michael, Culver Tuttle, Chandler Eveland, Jacob Bevard, William Powell, Clandius Albee, Lafayette Sturdevant, Ira Earl, Alexis Jackson, John S. Jenkins, George K. Baskins, James Nuil, and William Baskins. The last four named were summoned as talismen. Johnson Eveland, Andrew Gilliton, and Henry Moore, who were named with the others in the precept returned by the Sheriff, failed to make their appearance. John S. Jenkins was appointed foreman. The second day of the term they presented to the Court a single bill of indictment, against one Calvin Tuttle, for "selling spiritous liquors." They were thereupon discharged. Tuttle was bonded for trial at the next succeeding term, in the sum of $200. The first Petit Jury summoned in the County at the term first mentioned, consisted of Stephen D. Jackson, George Kegley, William Midgington, Nathan Payton, Enos Lewis, George W. Baskins, George Carr, Wesley Tibbetts, William Westervelt, John Pattee, Samuel Jennings, Elijah Kendall, Washington Tharp, and Loren Rima. William P. Harmon, who was also summoned, failed to appear. No cases were tried in the court during the second day of the term. The first case docketed on the court calendar was entitled "William Baskins vs. Mary Baskins. Petition for Divorce." It was disuissed at the plaintiff's cost. The first term of the Circuit Court for Bremer County began February 15, 1869. The Honorable George W. Ruddick presided as Judge, Charles M. Kingsley was Sheriff, and Marquis F. Gillett, Clerk. Edwin Hubbell, Daniel Chambers, James Sturdevant, Hartwell C. Hamblin, Adin Terry, Warren Kellogg, Stephen D. Comins, David Clark, William F. Barker, James McCormick, and Cyrus Clark, were the Petit Jurors summoned, all of whom appeared. The first case tried at this term was entitled "William Young vs. J. H. Eldridge. Appeal from Justice's Court." The same day the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and assessed the damages at one dollar and sixty-eight cents. The defendant thereupon filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled by the Court. To this ruling the defendant excepted. The first probate proceedings of record in the County relate to the appointment of Simeon F. Sheppard as administrator of the estate of James H. McRoberts, November 19, 1852. The Honorable O. H. P. Rozell, the County Judge, required the administrator named to give a bond in the sum of $2,000.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

William Gough, a subject of the Queen of England, was the first foreigner in the County, who declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, May 1, 1854. Charles Bruns, a native of Germany, was the first foreigner who took out full citizenship, June 4, 1856. The first marriage license was issued to Jonas Mishler and Sarah Michael, August 20, 1853. The parties were married by County Judge Farris on the same day. Phineas V. Swan, a practicing attorney from the State of Vermont, was the first attorney admitted, on motion, at the first term of court. In 1856 he was elected Prosecuting Attorney, but soon afterward died. The first instrument recorded was a bond for the execution of a warranty deed, made by William Tharp to Richard Holton, Henry Stears and John Stears, the latter three of St. Joseph County, Michigan. It was recorded September 20, 1853. The first chattel mortgage, given by John Miles to Joel Sumner, was recorded December 3, 1853. The first tax list was for the year 1853, and $653.52 was the total amount of the tax.

On the night of the 2d of January, 1862, an iron safe in a vault in the office of the County Treasurer, in the Court House at Waverly, was feloniously opened by (it is supposed) one Knowles, a professional cracksman, who first burglariously entered the house of the officer mentioned, and procured the necessary keys for the purpose. About $4,000 in money, about $2,000 of which were funds belonging to the State, besides many valuable papers, were abstracted. R. J. Stephenson, a former Supervisor of the County, and a third person named Beuins, were (then supposed to be) confederates in the robbery. After long protracted and persistent pursuit the parties implicated in the affair were arrested, each in a different and remote part of the country. For want of sufficient testimony, however, to secure their conviction, they were finally acquitted. About $1,100 of the money was recovered.

On the 13th of May, 1868, a young man named John McRoberts, at the time in custody of officers who were conveying him to jail, to await criminal prosecution upon the charge of horse-stealing, summarily suffered the penalty of lynch law, in the vicinity of Waverly.

Bremer County was so named, at the time of its organization, at the suggestion of the Hon. Stephen Hempstead, afterwards Governor of the State, who was a great admirer of the writings of Frederika Bremer, the noted Swedish authoress. Frederika Township, first called Bremer Township, received its present name March 6, 1854, from County Judge Farris, at the instance of Mr. John T. Barrick.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

To a Board of Supervisors, consisting of one supervisor from each civil township, first elected in 1860, was committed the general supervision of the internal affairs of the county, previously vested in the County Judge. The Supervisors elected in the respective townships, at this date, were as follows: Dayton, Lyman J. Curtis; Douglas, John Acken; Franklin, Ichabod Richmond; Frederika, E. J. Walling; Fremont, Otis Clark; Jackson, T. V. Axtell; Jefferson, David Marquis; Lafayette, R. J. Stephenson; Leroy, P. H. Wilson; Maxfield, William Matthias; Polk, Barnes Thompson; Sumner, L. M. Sholes; Warren, N. M. Smith; and Washington, B. M. Reeves. Lyman J. Curtis, of Dayton Township, was chosen Chairman of the Board; and Louis Case, Clerk of the District Court, appeared and qualified as Clerk ex-officio. The terms of office of the members of the Board were respectively classified by lot, as follows: B. M. Reeves, David Marquis, John Acken, P. H. Wilson, Otis Clark, Ichabod Richmond, and Lyman J. Curtis, two years each; Barnes Thompson, T. V. Axtell, N. M. Smith, E. J. Walling, William Matthias, L. M. Sholes, and R. J. Stephenson, one year each. The Board remained in session six days, and transacted a large amount of business. In January, 1871, the system of a Township Board of Supervisors was superseded by that of a County Board consisting of three members, elected by the county at large. John Chapin, of Fremont Township; M. Farrington, of Jefferson Township; and S. H. Curtis, of Washington Township, first composed the latter body. The term of office of each, decided by lot, was: Farrington, three years; Curtis, two years; and Chapin, one year. On the expiration of the respective terms of the members named, the terms of their successors became uniform by three years each. Chapin was re-elected in 1872; Curtis likewise in 1873; and Marvin Potter, of Polk Township, succeeded Farrington, in 1874. In June of the latter year, the county was divided into three Supervisor districts, when a new system of election of Supervisors by districts, was inaugurated; in conformity with which A. L. Stevenson, of Sumner Township, in District No. 3, was elected in 1875. The Townships of Washington and Jackson, in District No. 1; Polk, Douglas, Warren, Lafayette, and Jefferson, in District No. 2; and Frederika, Leroy, Sumner, Dayton, Fremont, Maxfield, and Franklin, in District No. 3, composed the respective districts mentioned.

OTHER OFFICERS.

In 1864 the offices of Treasurer and Recorder, previously united, became separate and distinct offices, pursuant to law. In the same year, Louis Case was elected Recorder. William V. Lucas was elected Treasurer, in 1865. The first Coroner elected was A. A. Case; the first Drainage Commissioner, Edward Tyrrell; both in 1854. The first and only County Assessor ever elected in the County, was Simeon F. Sheppard, in 1857. A. K. Moulton was elected the first County Superintendent of Schools, in 1858. Louis Case was elected first County Auditor, in 1869. The greatest number of votes cast at any election in the county, was 2,005, for District Judge, in 1868. The next greatest number was 2,001, for Representative in Congress, in the same year. The third greatest number, 1,983, was cast for District Judge, in 1872. The fourteen civil townships in the county were incorporated at the following dates: Jackson, March 9, 1857; Dayton, February 10, 1858; Jefferson, February 17, 1858; Douglas, and Frederika, May 22, 1858; Sumner, and Leroy, July 27, 1858; Maxfield, and Franklin, September 6, 1858; Lafayette, and Polk, December 6, 1858; Warren, Washington, and Fremont, February 21, 1859. Plats of the several towns in the county were filed for record as follows: Janesville, first plat, July 22, 1854; second plat, January 20, 1857; Waverly, original plat, April 14, 1855; the last of several subsequent "additions," February 29, 1860; Horton, December 6, 1856; Jefferson City, March 20, 1856; Tripoli, December 27, 1865; Deanville, June 16, 1868; Plainfield, June 18, 1868; Sumner, July 1, 1873; Frederika, July 29, 1873.

BREMER COUNTY PATRIOTISM.

In the War of the Great Rebellion, inaugurated in 1861, the citizens of Bremer County early took an active and a very patriotic part. At a meeting held at Waverly, on the 22d of April in that year, strong resolutions were passed sustaining the Government. On the same occasion a military company was formed, numbering about forty men. The company completed its organization by electing George W. Ruddick, Captain; H. F. Beebe, 1st Lieutenant; C. C. Allen, 2d Lieutenant, and a full complement of non-commissioned officers. Much enthusiasm pervaded the entire community. About the same time, the citizens of Horton, Bremer, and of other localities in the county, held like meetings with like results. On the 21st of May following, at a meeting held at Waverly for the purpose of raising money and other means to supply the needs of volunteers of Waverly, and for the relief of their families during their absence, over $600 in cash was contributed. In addition thereto, the Honorable William P. Harmon, founder of Waverly, gave one town lot to each volunteer, and one also to each of the wives of volunteers married. Scarcely less active and zealous on behalf of the cause were the women of Waverly and other parts of the county. Forming societies to provide for the wants of destitute families of soldiers, they held meetings weekly; and as home and volunteer labor continually ministering to the sick and wounded in Iowa hospitals. At the June meeting of the Board of Supervisors, in 1861, a Volunteer Family Relief Fund was established, when the sum of $500 was appropriated for the benefit of soldiers' families. Subsequently, at different times during the succeeding three years, additional appropriations were made by the Board, to the same fund, amounting in all, in the year 1864, to the sum of $2,150. In September of the last mentioned year, the Board levied a tax of three mills on the dollar; and again in September, 1865, of two mills on a dollar, for the same object. Also during 1864, appropriations were likewise made of $100 and $50 respectively, in aid of the Soldiers' Home located at Dubuque. About $1,300 in money and miscellaneous contributions of provisions, clothing, and so forth, were donated by the people of Bremer County, to the Northern Iowa Sanitary Fair, in aid of volunteers, held at Dubuque, in June, 1864. About $675 of this amount was contributed in cash. County bounties to volunteers from the county were twice voted by the Board of Supervisors, at different times during the years named, to promote enlistments. The first bounty of this character, the sum of $50, was voted in August, 1862; the second, consisting of the sum of $100, in January, 1864. The latter bounty was voted especially to volunteers from the county enlisting in compliance with the then pending call of the President for "300,000 more." In June of the same year, however, the same bounty was extended to all volunteers enlisting for the term of three years. The total military force of the county, as reported by the several Township Assessors to the Clerk of the District Court, in May, 1863, was 924. About 500 was the total number of soldiers who enlisted from the county, from the beginning to the end of "the War."

RAILROADS.

The western tier of townships in Bremer County are traversed by the Cedar Valley Branch of the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, extending from Waterloo, Black Hawk County, northwardly to the Minnesota line. The road named, formerly known as the Cedar Falls and Minnesota railroad, was completed to Janesville, on the southern boundary of the county, in the beginning of November, 1864. It was completed to Waverly during the latter part of the succeeding month, when it was not further completed for about three years. The Iowa Pacific Railroad, extending westwardly from Dubuque through Clayton and Fayette Counties, also traverses Bremer County, in a southwesterly direction, intersecting the Cedar Valley Road at Waverly. It is at present in an advanced state of construction. A bridge and trestle-work, in all nearly 2,800 feet in length, carries this road over Cedar River, at Waverly.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The county buildings, consisting of a court house and of a separate fire-proof building containing the principal county offices, are located at Waverly, the capital of the county. The court house, which is situated on a beautiful elevation overlooking the town, was erected during the Summer and Fall of 1857, at a cost of about $23,000. It is constructed of brick, is 43 feet in width by 63 feet in depth, and is two stories in height above a stone basement. It is surmounted by a handsome dome, which adds much to its outward appearance. In the basement is contained the sheriff's apartments, and necessary cells for the confinement of prisoners. The court room, in the second story, is 41 feet in width by 51 in depth; 15 feet is the height of the story. The height of the first story is 12 feet. It contains a number of minor county offices. On January 1, 1858, the erection of the building was celebrated within its walls by a "Bremer County Ball," at which about 150 persons of both sexes attended. The basement was appropriated to the purposes of a supper, the hall and offices on the second floor to the reception and seating of guests, the court room to dancing, and the offices attached thereto to dressing-rooms. During several years after its erection, the court house was the scene of many gatherings variously social, religious, political, literary and otherwise, in their character. In September, 1869, however, the Board of Supervisors directed the sheriff to exclude from the building "all parties except political and county societies." The fire-proof building, constructed of brick and iron, 48 feet in width by 32 feet in depth, and one story in height, is located on the south side of a large square enclosing the court house, to which it is conveniently adjacent. It was erected in the year 1870, at a cost of about $5,000, for the better accommodation of county offices, and to ensure the safe preservation of the public records. Though unpretentious in style, it is a neat and commodious structure, and contains the offices of the county auditor, recorder, clerk of courts and treasurer.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

In June, 1866, the Board of Supervisors resolved to cause a vote of the electors of the county to be taken at the ensuing October election, to ascertain if they would not authorize the establishment of a Poor Farm in the county. During the last preceding seventeen months, $1,698.77 had been expended for the support of the poor in the primitive manner of boarding them out with persons willing to take them. Nothing of a practical nature resulted, however, from this action. At the June meeting of the Board, in 1867, a committee was appointed "to purchase a Poor Farm for the county." Like the former action, this action also came to naught, in its unanimous reconsideration at the same session. A resolution to submit the question to the voters of the county, previously rejected at this session, was thereupon reconsidered and adopted. At the same time, a committee was appointed to procure information respecting the price of farms suitable for a Poor Farm, the cost of maintaining the poor of the county, and any other information important in the premises. At the September session of the Board, in the same year, the committee orally reported, recommitting the general subject to the Board, but reporting the cost of maintaining the poor, for the years named, to have been as follows: In 1860, $780.75; 1861, $1,256.38; 1862, $967.48; 1863, $810.87; 1864, $944.96; 1865, $891.66; 1866, $1,347.67; 1867, up to the 19th of June in that year, $1,841.95. Grand total, $8,841.72. At the latter session also, a committee was appointed to draft and submit in its proper form, to the legal voters of the county, a proposition to purchase a Poor Farm, at a cost not exceeding $5,000. The proposition was so submitted at the next ensuing election, and was carried by a vote of 944 in the affirmative to 261 in the negative, thereby receiving a majority of 683 votes in its favor. Accordingly, at the meeting of the Board in October, 1867, immediately succeeding the election, still another committee was appointed to seek farms suitable for a Poor Farm, and ascertain the prices thereof, with instructions to report at the following January meeting. The committee reported, at the time directed, that they were unable to agree, and asked to be discharged, adding the recommendation that the Board appoint a sixth committee, to examine improved and unimproved lands within five miles of the geographical center of the county, and report at the next June meeting. The report and recommendation of the retiring committee were adopted. Nothing further was done in the matter until the meeting of the Board in January, 1869, when, the committee last appointed having failed to report, the seventh committee was appointed, for the like purpose of examining lands in the county within the limits mentioned, with instructions to report at the following meeting. The last committee, consisting of N. J. Moore, A. L. Stevenson and J. D. Woodruff, faithfully and promptly discharged the duties assigned them. In June, 1869, therefore, they reported in favor of purchasing the southeast quarter and south half of the northeast quarter of section 24, township 92, range 13, comprising 240 acres of land, at the price of $10 an acre The report was adopted, and there the matter again rested for a season—a somewhat long one. The next action on the subject, by the Board of Supervisors, was taken in 1872. In June of that year a committee was appointed to have the Poor Farm surveyed, stones set at corners, forty acres on the south side broken, and a strip eight feet wide, around the farm, on the fence line, also broken for the purpose of planting trees thereon. At the January meeting of the Board, in 1873, 1,400 seasoned fence posts, and 15,000 feet of fourteen-foot lumber, were ordered for fencing the farm. At the same session another committee was appointed to let the farm for that year; also to procure plans and receive proposals, and to contract for building a house on the farm, for which latter purpose the sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as should be necessary, was appropriated. Pursuant to this action, a tenement house was erected; but to this day the chilled subjects of penury in the county endure the repression of their "noble rage" in the original manner. The Poor Farm is a poor "institution;" but what there is of it is the only public institution in the county.

Of county organizations, not distinctively public in their character, there are several in the county. First among these ranks, or rather should rank, the Bremer County Agricultural Society. A number of unsuccessful attempts were made in the Fall of 1856 to form a society bearing this title, and for the purposes therein indicated. These attempts were renewed in the Spring of 1857, and on May 5, of that year, the society was organized. The officers then elected were as follows: William P. Harmon, of Waverly, President; William Pattee, of Janesville, and Marquis F. Gillett, of Frederika, Vice Presidents; George C. Wright, of Waverly, Recording Secretary; D. P. Walling, of Frederika, Corresponding Secretary; and B. F. Goes, of Waverly, Treasurer. N. M. Smith, Giles Mable, J. H. Eldridge, Matthew Rowen, and C. C. Allen were elected a board of managers. The first county agricultural fair was held at Waverly, October 7 and 8, 1857. The premiums consisted mostly of diplomas, several copies of the Northwestern Farmer, and of cash of different amounts, ranging from three dollars to fifty cents. Chinese sugar-cane, and superior blooded stock were especially noticeable entries. The Bremer County Farmers Club was organized March 16, 1870, at Waverly, by the election of W. H. Jay, President, and Jonathan Freeman, Secretary. The Bremer County Sunday School Association was organized at the same place in September, 1868. W. H. Jordan, of Waverly, was chosen President, and E. C. Dougherty, also of Waverly, Secretary. The Bremer County Old Settlers Society was organized at Waverly, 1873. The officers then elected were

The society is composed of persons who resided in the county on or before July 4, 1856. The Bremer County Union Patrons of Husbandry, and the Bremer County Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, are additional county organizations, formed at comparatively recent dates. Various militia companies were formed in different parts of the county about the year 1864.

NEWSPAPERS.

The first newspaper published in the county was entitled the Bremer County Herald. It was established upon an insecure foundation, at Janesville, by Phineas V. Swan, in 1855. Its existence was brief. In November, 1856, it was revived by D. W. Daniels, but went down for the second time. The Waverly Republican, the oldest existing newspaper in the county, was next established at Waverly, by Herman A. Miles. The first number was issued March 5, 1856. November 27, of the same year, the editorship and joint proprietorship became vested in C. Tarbox Smeed. Smeed & Miles conducted the paper until April 17, 1857, when Miles was succeeded by James O. Stewart. From that date until April 10, 1858, Smeed & Stewart, and thereafter until June 25, 1861, Smeed individually, were the proprietors; Smeed continuously remaining editor. John K. L. Maynard and Louis Case—Maynard & Case—succeeded Smeed, June 25, 1861. November 9, of the latter year, Case retired, his retirement being necessitated by his election to the office of clerk of the district court. Maynard thereupon became sole editor and proprietor, continuing as such until Sunday, December 29, 1861, when the Republican office was totally destroyed by fire. Four months later, April 26, 1862, the paper was revived by the last proprietor, under the name of the Bremer County Phœnix. In October, 1864, H. L. Halbert became joint partner with Maynard, but subsequently withdrew, leaving Maynard again alone. Sometime in the Summer of 1866 Maynard sold to James O. Stewart, a former proprietor of the paper, and Ezra C. Moulton, who assumed the editorship. At this time the name, Bremer County Phœnix, was changed, and that of The Waverly Republican restored. V. E. Butler and C. F. Mallahan, under the firm name of Butler & Mallahan, succeeded Stewart & Moulton in the Spring of 1868. November 25, 1869, they were in turn succeeded by J. B. Scott and Daniel Fichthorn—Scott & Fichthorn—the latter now editor and proprietor of The Bremer County Independent. November 24, 1870, Scott retired. May 8, 1873, Fichthorn sold half the office to C. F. Case, who also purchased the remaining half in April, 1874. September 24, 1874, Case parted with the entire office to William H. Tyrrell, with whom William V. Lucas associated himself as editor and joint proprietor, under the firm name of Lucas & Tyrrell, October 22, 1874. The files of the Republican—complete, except for the period intervening from November 1864, to November 1869, accidently destroyed—constitute a very interesting compendium of the history of the county during the last twenty years. The Republican, while it has during the same period undergone various transformations, from a six column folio to a seven column quarto in size, has remained politically constant and true to its original name from the start.

The Waverly Democratic News was established at Waverly, by Geo. C. Wright and Wm. A. Stowe, in 1867. The first number was issued June 27, in that year. Wright & Stowe were succeeded by Geo. Lindley, January 2, 1868. November 17, 1870, Lindley was succeeded by John K. L. Maynard and Charles E. Lord. The latter proprietors changed the name of the paper to that of The Bremer County Independent, which name it still bears. At the same time the previously democratic politics of the paper were also changed to conform liberally to the change of name. January 13, 1872, Wm. V. Lucas, now editor and joint proprietor of The Waverly Republican, became editor and sole proprietor of the Independent, remaining as such until the 5th of the following April, when William H. Tyrrell, also now of the Republican, purchased a joint interest therein. Lucas & Tyrrell again changed the politics of the paper to those of the straight republican order, an exponent of which the Independent now remains. In In April, 1874, Daniel Fichthorn, present Postmaster of Waverly, purchased the interest of Lucas, and in the following September that of Tyrrell, and is sole editor and proprietor at the present time. The Independent, like the Republican, the two only existing American newspapers in the county, has experienced changes of form, as well as of name, from also a six column folio to a seven column quarto in size.

The Bremer County Argus was the title of a newspaper of democratic politics, established at Waverly, in January, 1860, by Col. William Pattee, a former State Auditor, and a gentleman of considerable note in those days. Prior to that period the politics of the county were strongly democratic; about the time of the starting of the Argus, however, they radically changed. After a gradual decline for the space of a year the paper permanently stopped. The Janesville Clipper was a journalistic venture attempted at Janesville, by O. J. Smith, in January, 1874. It had no politics, nor sufficient vitality to prolong its existence beyond two months.

The Deutsche Volks-Zeitung, a German newspaper, published weekly, was established at Waverly, by Tyrrell & Fichthorn, May 20, 1874. On the 31st of July following, it was purchased by John Weldmann, present proprietor. It is of seven column folio form, and is printed at the Republican office, to which that of the Deutsche Volks-Zeitung is attached. The Souvenir, an illustrated magazine, was published at Waverly, by L. J. Keys and E. J. Harvell. In May, June, July, and August, 1874. In the latter month its publication ceased.

CITIES AND TOWNS.

WAVERLY, the capital of Bremer County, is situated on the east and west sides of Cedar River, in the southwest part of the county. It occupies a favorable site, well skirted on the north and east by timber. The Cedar Valley branch of the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, extending from Waterioo, Black Hawk County, to the Minnesota state line, passes northwardly through the west part of the city. The Iowa Pacific Railroad, in course of construction from Dubuque westerly through the county, intersects the northern suburbs.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement within the present limits of Waverly was made on the west side of the river, by Jacob Hess, in 1850. Soon afterward, in the same year, Frederick Cretzmeyer settled on the east side. Wendelind Cretzmeyer and John Goforth were the next settlers; the former on the east side and the latter on the west. In January, 1853, William P. Harmon, from Independence, Buchanan County, arrived in the settlement and became the fifth settler, preceded only by the first named four. The site proper of Waverly—on the east side of the river—was at this time a dense forest. The habitations of the nearest other settlers were remote. Mr. Harmon, with characteristic intelligence and quick perception, at once saw that the natural advantages of the site—good solid-rock bottom, good banks, and ample fall in the river—constituted a particularly eligible locality for the building of a town. Accordingly, in June, 1853, that part of Waverly embraced in the original town plat, previously purchased and first settled by Mr. Harmon, was by his direction surveyed by O. H. P. Rozell, County Surveyor of Buchanan County, and laid out into town lots. A log mill-dam was constructed across the river during the Summer and the succeeding Fall of the same year. A saw mill was erected during the following Winter. Also during the Fall of 1853, William B. Hamilton erected the first frame building in Waverly, and stocked it with goods. About the same time James Null erected a log cabin hotel. Among other prominent events occurring in the same year was the first appearance of the first physician, Doctor Fisher; the opening of the first merchant, Porter W. Earl, who was also the first postmaster; the preaching of the first sermon, by the Reverend Mr. Ingham; and the location of the county seat at Waverly, in May. In 1854 a grist mill was erected on the east side of the river; Charles Ensign taught the first school; and William Waverly Null, the first child among Waverly for its place of nativity, was born. The town now began to grow rapidly, the population numbering about seven hundred at the close of the year. In 1855 the first school building was begun, on the east side of the river. It was built of stone, two stories in height. March 5, 1856, was published the first number of the first newspaper—The Waverly Republican. The same year a free bridge across Cedar River was built by subscription, at a cost of $3,000. It consisted of four spans, each fifty feet in length, with substantial stone abutments and piers. It was begun in the Summer and completed in March of the following year. At the time it was the only bridge over the Cedar above Cedar Rapids. September 15th, in this year, the first Presbyterian church, the first religious society formed, was organized. The Reverend J. D. Caldwell was the first pastor. The Baptist society, the second religious society formed, was organized on the 13th of December following. The Reverend David Perry was the first Baptist pastor. On the 29th of December in this year the first district school began in the new stone school house then recently completed. In the Summer and Fall of 1857 the court house was erected and mainly completed. At the same time the first church was built, by the Baptist society, on the east side of the river. It was opened for public worship in the latter part of December. The building was two stories high, the upper story being used as a parsonage. It is now occupied as a dwelling by J. B. Barber. In January of this year about forty pupils attended the district and two private schools in the town, and eight mercantile establishments were actively doing business. In this year, also, Waverly had one thousand inhabitants, and the sixty-two various erections made during the year were valued at very nearly $50,000. January 26, 1858, the free bridge over the Cedar was swept away by ice moved by a freshet. April 18 following, the Cedar Rangers, the first full uniformed military company, was organized, by the election of C. T. Smeed, Captain; G. W. Ruddick, First Lieutenant; H. F. Beebe, Second Lieutenant; and a full complement of non-commissioned officers. A violent and disastrous thunder storm, accompanied by hail, on the night of July 30 succeeding, prostrated grain, broke much glass in buildings, and flooded the town, as well as the country, adjacent to the river. In October following a foot bridge was constructed across the Cedar. On the 30th of the same month the first teachers' institute held in the county convened at the court house, and remained a week in session. Reverend A. K. Moulton, County Superintendent, presided, assisted by Isaac Higbi, of Janesville, and Ezra C. Moulton, of Waverly. About fifty teachers attended.

INCORPORATION.

The first meeting of the citizens of Waverly, preliminary to the incorporation of the town, for the purpose of procuring which incorporation the meeting assembled, was held at the law office of G. C. Wright, November 28, this year, in the evening. Mr. Wright was chosen chairman of the meeting, and W. B. Hamilton was appointed secretary. W. P. Harmon, G. C. Wright and Thomas Downing were appointed a committee to circulate for signatures and present to the county judge the petition prescribed by law, for the incorporation desired. G. W. Ruddick was appointed an agent to act for the petitioners. The corporation limits were defined by certain boundaries enclosing a territorial area two miles square. In June, 1859, the town of Waverly was incorporated, and on the 29th of that month the following town officers were elected: Mayor, George S. Matthews; Recorder, C. C. Allen; Trustees, Thomas Downing, I. A. Goodenow, John Brownell and E. C. Moulton.

ITEMS OF PROGRESS.

Sunday morning, March 10, in this year, the first Sunday School was opened, at the stone school house. In the year 1860 the second bridge was built across the Cedar, by taxation. December 29, 1861, the post-office and Waverly Republican office were totally destroyed by fire. In the Summer and Fall of 1862 was erected the first school house on the west side of the river. It is built of brick, is twenty-eight by forty-two feet in size, two stories high, and is surmounted by a cupola and belfry. The cost of the building was $3,000. It was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies, Sunday, December 7, 1862, the Reverend John Smalley, pastor of the Presbyterian church, preaching the sermon. In August, 1864, the depot of the Cedar Falls & Minnesota Railroad was located at Waverly. In November following the depot building was completed. The cars first ran into Waverly in December. Also in November of this year the first banking house was opened, by Johnson & Leavitt. About the same time a woolen factory was erected on the east side of the river, by William P. Harmon. Two wool-carding machines had previously been put in operation. During this year, also, Episcopal, Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian churches, and a new and more commodious Baptist church, were erected. As late as the year 1865 the need of additional churches in Waverly was greatly appreciated. In October, 1867, the board of supervisors ordered buildings and lots belonging to the several ministers of Waverly "to be assessed the same as other property of like valuation in the same city."

WAVERLY A CITY.

March, 1868, Waverly became a city of the second class, having then fully two thousand population. In that month the first city officers were elected, as follows: Mayor, A. Lamberson; Clerk, A. T. Pomeroy; Trustees, John Goes, William V. Lucas, Emmons Johnson, Abraham Wade, Cornelius Connell, William Mattison, N. P. Ellis and H. C. Moore; Treasurer, G. W. Gillett; Marshal, H. S. Halbert.

PROGRESS SINCE 1870.

In April, 1870, the Bremer County Bank, with a capital of $100,000, was organized. D. P. Holt was President; A. Skinner, Vice President; and Joseph Rosenbaum, Cashier. William Trowbridge, N. P. Ellis, Smith R. Hunt and Clark Fairfield were additional Directors. In the Summer and Fall of 1870 the county fire-proof building and a Universalist church were erected. August 25, 1871, the third banking institution in the town, that of Bowman & Burr—now Bowman Brothers & Burr—was opened. February 26, this year, the second bridge across the Cedar was swept away by ice and a freshet. A month later a foot bridge was built to replace it temporarily. Sunday, November 19, 1871, a German Evangelical church, newly erected, was dedicated. A wrought iron bridge across the Cedar, begun in May, 1871, was completed in the following December. It consists of three spans, each one hundred and twenty-five feet in length, or three hundred and seventy-five feet in all, with a roadway eighteen feet in width, and two sidewalks each six feet in width. It rests upon substantial stone abutments and two stone piers, the cost of which was $8,774.80. $11,000 additional was the cost of the bridge. Since 1871 the city of Waverly has not progressed as rapidly as previously, but rather more gradually, in wealth and population. At the present time the city numbers about three thousand inhabitants; contains the usual variety of mercantile, mechanical and professional establishments, and is the center of an extensive district of country from which it derives a large trade. Besides the county buildings, it contains church edifices erected by the Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Roman Catholic, Universalist and German Evangelical denominations respectively. There are also three brick and two frame school houses, of the total value of $27,000. About five hundred pupils usually in attendance at the several schools are taught by two male and nine female teachers. Masonic, Odd Fellow, and other various orders, are here represented by local organizations. The present city officers of Waverly are as follows: Mayor, Caleb Morse; Treasurer, L. L. Lush; Clerk, E. W. Risdon; Assessor, Louis Case; Solicitor, Ephraim Kinne; Street Commissioner, Henry Tallett; Marshal, vacant. The Trustees are: First Ward, I. P. Olds, W. R. Knight; Second Ward, D. A. Morey, H. A. Fahnstock; Third Ward, R. S. Bentley, W. C. Holt; Fourth Ward, J. B. Barber, Adam Broadie; Fifth Ward, William Bodle, M. L. Stebbins.

JANESVILLE.

JANESVILLE is the second town in importance in Bremer County. It is situated on a beautiful rise of land on the east bank of Cedar River, in the south edge of a fine grove, six miles south of Waverly. It is the most southern station within the limits of the county on the Cedar Valley Branch Railroad. It was laid out early in the Spring of 1853, by the original proprietor and settler of the town site, John T. Barrick, who named the town in honor of his wife Jane; and was the first town laid out in the county. Rev. James Keeler, Dr. Joel Loveland, Matthew Rowen and Rev. H. Morehouse were among the first settlers. After a rapid growth of a few years, its further progress comparatively ceased. It contains three churches—Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian; two dry goods and two grocery stores; one drug store; one grist-mill and one saw-mill; a carriage manufactory; and cooper, blacksmith and other shops. Population, 400.

PLAINFIELD, the third town in rank in the county, is located about ten miles north of Waverly, on the west side of Cedar River, and is the most northern station on the Cedar Valley Branch Railroad in the county. It was laid out in 1855 by Silas Farr, who erected a steam saw-mill and a grist-mill. It contains two churches—Baptist and Methodist; three general stores, one hardware and stove store, a lumber yard, two wagon manufactories, and blacksmith, harness and other shops. Population, 300.

SUMNER is located on the line of the Iowa Pacific Railroad in Sumner Township, in the northeastern extremity of the county, half a mile west of the Little Wapsipinicon. Chauncey Carpenter was the first settler on the town site in the Spring of 1872. Two years later, on the survey of the railroad across his farm, Mr. Carpenter and the railroad company, considering it a favorable locality for the purpose, laid out a town thereon, and named it Sumner. The Free Will Baptist and Methodist religious societies have organizations in the town, but no church buildings. There is one furniture store, one dry goods and grocery store, one drug store, one drug and grocery store, one millinery store, and several miscellaneous shops. Population, 200.

TRIPOLI is located in the south part of Frederika Township, on the west side of the main Wapsipinicon, twelve miles from Waverly. It was laid out in 1856 by A. T. Martin, who located on the site of the town in the Fall of 1855, and erected a steam saw-mill. He first named the town Martinsburg, but subsequently on the establishment of a post office in the place, he changed the name to Tripoli. It contains two general stores, one drug store, one steam manufactory of agricultural implements, wagons, sashes and blinds, etc., and the usual assortment of shops. The Methodists have a church organization in the town, but no church building. Population, 100.

HORTON is located on the east side of Cedar River, ten miles north of Waverly. It contains a Free Will Baptist Church, two general stores, and several shops. Population, 50.

JEFFERSON CITY, eight miles southeast of Waverley, was laid out by Judge Jeremiah Farris, in 1855. Deville Holmes erected a steam saw-mill the same year. There is now in the place one general store and one or two shops. Population, 50.

FREDERIKA, fifteen miles northeast of Waverley, on the east side of the main Wapsipinicon, was laid out by N. J. Henry in May, 1868. It contains a steam saw-mill, a grist-mill, two general stores, and various shops. Population, 50.

The remaining post-offices in the county are, Buck Creek, Dayton, Grove Hill, Leroy, Maxfield and Mentor.

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

In 1874 there were in the county 86 frame, 9 brick, and 7 stone (in all 102) school houses, of the total value of $80,065. Of persons of school ages (between five and twenty-one years), there were in all 2,505 males, and 2,212 females; total, 4,717. Of pupils, the whole number enrolled was 4,039; average attendance, 2,120; average cost of tuition per month, for each pupil, $1.08. The whole number of teachers employed was 212, of whom 52 were males and 160 females. The average compensation per month paid male teachers was $32.51; paid female teachers, $25.84. The total value of school apparatus in the county was $583. There were 16 volumes in all in school libraries. Of two graded schools in the county, one is located at Waverly and the other at Janesville. Of three private schools in the county in 1874, one was located at Waverly, one at Horton, and one in Fremont Township.

BREMER COUNTY TAX LIST FOR 1875.

The total amount of taxes levied in the county of Bremer, for 1875, was $84,546.29, itemized as follows: State tax, $5,072.85; county tax, $15,218.59; school tax, $2,536.39; road tax, $2,677.18; school houses, $15,582.21; teachers, $20,319.17; bridges, $7,609.28; special bridge, $5,072.85; bond, $5,072.85; insane, $2,536.40; county poll, $1,312.00; incorporation, $1,536.52. The total amounts levied in the respective townships in the county, in the year named, and for the purposes above enumerated, were as follows: Dayton, $3,964.36; Douglas, $3,318.20; Franklin, $4,355.17; Frederika, $2,048.15; Fremont, $4,075.52; Jackson, $4,914.25; Jefferson, $4,403.26; La Fayette, $5,908.83; Leroy, $2,569.48; Maxfield, $5,968.62; Polk, $7,270.71; Sumner, $4,210.87; Warren, $6,646.9 2; Washington, $7,755.82; city of Waverly, $17,136.13; total, $84,546.29. January 1, 1875, the total liabilities of the county, consisting of outstanding county warrants, estimated county expenses for the ensuing year, bridge appropriations, and interest on county bonds, were $60,921.52. The total resources of the county, at the same time, consisting of 3 098 acres of wild lands, valued at $15,490; uncollected taxes, and balances in county funds, were $58,281.11. Amount of liabilities in excess of resources, $2,640.41.

The present county officers are: Auditor, Stephen H. Morse; Treasurer, George Morehouse; Clerk of Courts, Aaron H. McCracken; Recorder, Harmon S. Munger; Sheriff, James S. Connor; Superintendent of Schools, Henry H. Burrington; Surveyor, Henry S. Hoover; Coroner, Horace Nichols; Bremer County representative in the State Legislature, Hon. Louis Case. The following persons compose the Grand Jury of the county for the year 1875: William V. Lucas, Henry Heine, W. S. Grover, I. H. Elliott, S. F. Sheppard, Thomas Fountain, S. F. Cass, Peter De Granger, Allen Showalter, Peter Williams, William Robinson, Frederick Neidert, L. M. Stephenson, Robert Cunningham, and O. A. Strong.

JACKSON COUNTY.

Jackson County lies on the Mississippi River between Dubuque and Clinton Counties. It was organized in 1838. The surface of the county is rolling and perhaps more broken than any other county in this section of the state. Still it is generally a good quality of soil for agricultural purposes, and contains several rich farming sections. The Tete des Morts Valley in the northeastern corner of the county is one of the most picturesque and attractive in this region. Along the borders of the stream there are cliffs of the Galena limestone rising in some places fifty feet perpendicular. Above this rock we come upon a gently undulating region, having a rich soil, which extends back on each side of the creek, gradually rising till it meets the bluffs at a distance which diminishes as we ascend the stream. This undulating and fertile belt is underlaid by the soft and easily decomposed shales of the Cincinnati group, which are capped by the harder beds of the Niagara limestone, a formation which underlies nearly the whole of the county. Along the Maquoketa and its branches this limestone often forms cliffs from fifty to a hundred feet in elevation. It is the only rock exposed in the interior of the county. But along the Mississippi the Galena limestone is exposed from fifty to a hundred feet in thickness. The dip of the strata seems to be quite rapid in this region, as is shown by the position of the Cincinnati shales, which are met in ascending the bluffs at Dubuque at an elevation of some 250 feet, while at Bellevue they have sunk to the water's edge, although the direction of the river in this part of its course is at a considerable angle with the line of the greatest dip of strata in this region. From Bellevue to Sabula, near which place the Cincinnati group finally disappears beneath the river, the dip is considerably less than it has been shown to be above the first-mentioned place.

The Niagara limestone in this county is a dolomite of a grayish-yellow color, and is generally somewhat crystalline in texture. Its upper portion is softer and more porous than its lower, and requires to be removed in quarrying for a good quality of building stone. On Brush Creek, where the rock is usually buff-colored and exposed in almost vertical bluffs from fifty to a hundred feet in height, it contains numerous flinty nodules, which impair its value as a building stone.

On the Maquoketa and some of its branches from the north, as Brush, Farmer's and Lytle's Creeks, there have been found traces of iron ore (brown hematite), but not in sufficient quantities to pay for working.

Building-stone and clay suitable for making brick are abundant in the county. The Maquoketa and its branches furnish excellent water-power. There is considerable timber in the county, and particularly the large mass in the Maquoketa Valley north of the City of Maquoketa.

Burt's Cave, about eight miles northwest of Maquoketa, is one of the most remarkable natural curiosities in the county.

Jackson County was established by act of the Territorial Legislature of Wisconsin, in connection with Jones and Linn Counties, in 1837. The first county officers were the following: W. A. Warren, Sheriff; John Howe, Recorder; J. K. Moss, County Judge; William Morden, William Jonas and James Leonard, County Commissioners.

The first Territorial Court was held at Bellevue in June, 1837, by Judge Dunn, of Wisconsin; Hon. J. V. Berry, Prosecuting Attorney. Among the distinguished attorneys present on that occasion were, Hon. E. B. Washburne, of Galena; Hon. James Grant, of Davenport; Hon. James Churchman, now an eminent criminal lawyer in California; Hon. Peter Hill Engle, afterwards Judge of the Criminal Court of St. Louis; and Hon. Thomas S. Wilson, who was appointed first Judge under Iowa Territory.

The first County Court of Jackson County under Wisconsin Territory was held by J. K. Moss, County Judge, at Bellevue on the 12th of March, 1838. On the fourth of July following, Iowa became a territory, and Judge Moss held the first County Court of Jackson County under Iowa proper, October 27, 1838.

COUNTY SEAT.

When Jackson, Jones and Linn Counties were first established, in 1837, the seat of justice for all three was located at Bellevue. It remained at the latter place till 1848, when it was removed to Andrew. It was again removed from Andrew to Bellevue in 1851, and from Bellevue back to Andrew in 1861. In 1873 it was removed from Andrew to Maquoketa, where it still remains. The Court House at Maquoketa was built by the city in 1873, at a cost of $15,000, and is leased to the county for a period of ninety-nine years. The jail still remains at Andrew. It is a substantial stone structure, and cost $8,000.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlers of Jackson County were William Jonas, James Armstrong, David Dyas and sons, Thomas Nicholson and Alexander Read, who settled near Bellevue. The Dyases and Reads who are still living reside on finely-cultivated farms where they first located. James McCabe, Nicholas Carroll, Arthur Mullen and Anson Newberry settled in the vicinity of Sabula. David and Fletcher Swaney, Wm. Vandeventer and John Jonas were first settlers in Van Buren Township. Thomas Cox, George Watkins, N. Butterworth, Carmel Chaney and George Wiley were among the first settlers in the neighborhood of Andrew. In Butler Township, Henry and David Burk, Thomas McLaughlin and Mr. Mahony were the first settlers; Lewis Efferding, Barney Sanders, David Zigler and Daniel Brown in Tete des Morts Township; in Richland Township, Samuel Knapp, O. Sautell, Samuel Cotton and Luther Parmerly; Prairie Spring Township, Jerry Eagan, O. Sullivan and Mr. Shobe; Farmer's Creek, William Morgan, Thomas Davis, Charles Bilto, Jonas Edwards and Daniel Shinkle; Maquoketa Township, J. E. Goodenow, Z. Livermore and A. Spalding.

The first white child born in the county was L. H. Steen, now residing in Sabula.

STATISTICS.

Population.—The first census of the county was taken by Capt. Warren in 1837, and the total population at that time was 244. According to the state census of 1874, the population was 22,284; number of dwellings in the county, 4,144; families, 4,183; white males, 11,513; white females, 10,763; colored, 6 males, 2 females; persons entitled to vote, 4,852; foreigners not naturalized, 591; number of militia, 2,871.

Products.—The number of acres of land improved in the county in 1874 was 181,519; wheat raised, 446,489 bushels; corn, 2,087,794 bushels; oats, 808,808 bushels; barley, 41,184 bushels; wool shorn, 28,977 pounds.

Schools.—The whole number of school districts in the county in 1873 was 179, township districts, 17; independent districts, 19; subdistricts, 143; number of children of school age, 8,893—males, 4,665; females, 4,228; number of schools, 144—graded, 4; ungraded, 140; number of pupils, 6,355; average attendance, 3,686; number of teachers, 316—males, 131; females, 185; number of school houses, 147—frame, 102; brick 13; stone, 31; log, 11; total value of school houses, $109,785.00; volumes in libraries, 56; value of apparatus, $3,344.35.

POOR ASYLUM.

The county has a Poor Asylum and Farm located three miles north of Andrew in Perry Township. The farm contains 300 acres, and the building is a substantial stone structure.

JOHN C. BARD, Sheriff.	JOHN S. RAY, Clerk of Courts.
JOHN R. GRIFFIN, Recorder.	JOHN DONNELLY, Treasurer.
ALLEN J. HOUSE, Auditor.	N. C. WRITE, Superintendent of Schools.
A. C. SIMPSON, County Surveyor.	A. S. CARNAHAN, Coroner.

MAQUOKETA.

Maquoketa, the county seat of Jackson County, is situated on the Maquoketa River, in the southern part of the county. The river at this point is not considered of any value to the city for purposes of navigation, although small steamers might easily ascend it from the Mississippi at high stages of water. Its chief advantage to the young and growing city, is the extensive water-power which it furnishes, affording facilities for the development of manufactures equal to Lowell, or any of the Eastern manufacturing cities. Within a compass of ten miles from the city, there are at least fifty large water-powers, a considerable number of which have already been improved. Besides the water-power furnished by the Maquoketa, the extensive belts of timber along its banks to the north of the city, and within a short distance, is another important advantage, as timber is needed, and has already been obtained to a large extent from these forests, for railroad ties, barrels, and cabinet materials.

The farming country about Maquoketa gives it the advantage of agricultural resources unsurpassed in any section of the county. It is also a comparatively old settled section for a young state like Iowa. Thirty years ago the best class of New York and Pennsylvania farmers were attracted to this spot by the material evidences of wealth in the natural resources of the country—the soil, the timber, and the water-power; and later a large German population has come in and added materially to the wealth and farming production of this section.

EARLY HISTORY.

Prior to 1850 a small village with a few inhabitants existed where Maquoketa now stands, and was called Springfield—a name given to it by Mr. Goodenow, the first settler, in honor of his native place in Vermont. In the Winter of 1850, the present town site was platted and recorded under the name which it now bears, by the original proprietors of the land—J. E. Goodenow, Z. Livermore and A. Spalding.

Mr. Goodenow was the first settler. He came here in the Spring of 1838, conveying his movables from Essex County, N. Y., with a four-horse team, and being nine weeks and two days in performing the journey. Mr. Livermore came the year following, and the first frame house, which is still standing, was erected by him. The first permanent brick building was erected by Mr. Goodenow, and kept by him as a hotel. S. M. Marr opened the first stock of goods, in 1844. Among the early merchants were: Murphy & Burke, Sears & Mitchell, and Jonas Clark. Mr. Mitchell is still a merchant in the place, after the lapse of twenty-eight years of steady and successful business, and is occupying a fine brick store with a large and varied stock of goods.

John Shaw purchased a claim to the eighty acres cornering where the stone building now stands, on the corner of Main and Platt streets, in 1837, and settled upon it in 1841. He was one of the prominent and active men of the place, and died in 1853. His family still resides in Maquoketa.

Wesly Nims was the first child born within the corporate limits of the town, his birth occurring in 1840.

The first sermon was preached by Reverend Mr. Pope, a Methodist missionary clergyman, in 1839. The first Baptist preaching was by Reverend Charles Brown, in 1840.

INCORPORATION.

Maquoketa was incorporated as a city by special act of the legislature, approved January 27, 1857. The charter was published March 31, 1857, and adopted April 28, 1857. The officers were elected on the 4th of May following, and on the 7th the city government was inaugurated. The following officers were elected: J. E. Goodenow, Mayor; John Pope, Recorder; Z. Livermore, Daniel Rhodes, A. Hall, J. N. Vial, and P. Mitchell, Aldermen. City officers for 1875: D. M. Hubbell, Mayor; F. D. Lyman, Recorder; M. Dalzell, Treasurer; C. M. Dunbar, City Attorney; James Halley, Marshal. James T. Sargeant, Wm. T. Sutton, John Dostal, Thomas Trout, Thomas Hench, C. M. Sanborn, H. Farr, and J. P. Eaton, Aldermen.

PRESENT ASPECT OF THE CITY.

The City of Maquoketa, situated on a beautiful rolling prairie ascending in a gentle but high slope from the river, and affording a magnificent site for a large inland town, was originally laid out with great taste and liberality, as regards wide and spacious avenues and streets, and resembles in its features such towns as Dayton, Ohio, and Mt. Pleasant, in Henry County, laid out in a similar style, and occupying a similar situation as to site and surroundings. The merchantile houses, as a general class, are handsome and substantial, exhibiting full stocks of well-selected goods, and a very healthy trade. The trade is steady and never-failing, derived as it is from one of the wealthiest farming districts in the state. It is a noted fact, that in the farming districts of the Maquoketa region, there is scarcely a freeholder or farmer who has been ten or a dozen years cultivating the soil, who does not stand high as a man of accumulated means, whose word is as good as his bond, and whose labor and enterprise is yearly adding to the wealth of the country.

The same may be said of the merchants of the city. Probably for a city or town of its size, supported chiefly by the agricultural products and trade of the county, it may be safe to say that merchants, dealers, and tradesmen of all classes have as good a reputation for probity in business, and do as much of it, as in any proportionate area in the state. Another important feature in the business of the place is, that it is done to a large extent on the cash basis, and hence wholesale dealers hold the merchants here in high esteem for prompt payments and liberal purchases.

POPULATION AND GENERAL FEATURES.

The population of Maquoketa may be safely set down at 2,500. The city as at present covers a large space of ground. As a general feature the residences are handsome frame buildings, built in the best modern style, here and there interspersed with brick and stone. The lots on which the dwelling houses are built, are as a general thing, large and roomy, affording ample space for the gardens and beautiful shade trees. One good and pleasing feature in Maquoketa is the taste exhibited by the citizens in the embellishment of their grounds, such as handsome and wide sidewalks, shade trees set out, and fine taste in the adornment of their front gardens with the shrubbery and flowers which grow in such profusion in the uniformly rich soil of the place.

RAILROADS.

Maquoketa has two railroads, the Davenport & St. Paul (branch road) and the Midland. Both were completed to this point in the Fall of 1870.

BUSINESS HOUSES AND FIRMS.

We have passed along Main Street and taken the following notes of some of the principal business houses and firms:

Exchange Block, corner of Main and Pleasant Streets, brick, two stories besides basement; erected in 1872 by Bushell & Dunham, bankers, C. M. Sanborn, Covell, Smith & Co., and A. S. Hodge at a cost of $17,000; size of the block, 75x110 feet; occupied by three business houses—two grocery stores and one dry goods store, Exchange Bank in the corner room, with barber shop in the basement, and boot and shoe shop adjoining; millinery establishment up stairs, fine dental rooms, lawyers offices, etc.

Squires Block, on the opposite corner, 25x100 feet, two stories and basement, cost $10,000; erected by J. E. Squires & Co., and occupied by the elegant grocery and general merchandise establishment of that enterprising firm; up stairs, the large carpet room of J. E. Squires & Co., a tailor's shop, and dressmaker's shop, and basement used for butter cellar.

Union Block, erected in 1856 at a cost of $30,000; occupied by Carter Bros., hardware; S. Williams (vacant at present); G. Wise, groceries and provisions; Tinker Bros., notions and music store. Upper stories occupied by Masonic hall, hall of Ancient Order of United Workmen, offices and dwellings. Good basement rooms below.

T. E. Cannell's Building, erected in 1872; cost $3,500; occupied by T. E. Cannell, boots, shoes and leather business; established in 1850; wholesale and retail. The building is brick, 22x60, two stories and basement, with an iron front to the ground story.

Mitchell's Block, corner of Main and Platt Streets, brick, two stories high, 25x120 feet, erected by P. Mitchell in 1874. Cost $10,000. Occupied by the elegant general merchandise and dry goods establishment of P. Mitchell, as the "Pioneer Store." Mr. Mitchell having dealt in merchandise here for twenty-eight years. Up stairs, dentists, doctors, and lawyers offices.

John C. Harris' Building, on the opposite corner from Mitchell's, nearly of the same dimensions, erected in 1870, at a cost of about $8,000; occupied by Baugh & Co., city drug store, and by U. Stalder, clocks, watches and jewelry. Up stairs, occupied by Harris' Hall.

Excelsior Block, Main Street three stories high, 50x154 feet, erected partly in 1859 partly in 1861 and 1864; cost $30,000. Occupied by William Stephens, dry goods and general merchandise; Doctor Truax, drug store; Walter & Real, groceries; Henry Taubmann, merchant tailor and clothing; John Orcutt, drug store; S. Reynolds, Central Bank; and William Sears, groceries. Up stairs, barber shop, Sentinel office, printing office, lawyers offices, photograph gallery, Good Templar's hall, and private dwellings.

Merchants Block, two stories, 24x90 feet, with twenty foot ell, and basement, erected in 1874, at a cost of $9,000. Occupied by Kahn Bros., clothing store, Trout & Munger, stoves, hardware and tin; Jacobs & Rice, dry goods and general merchandise; Mrs. M. J. Stephens, millinery goods. Basement corner, barber shop. Up stairs, Excelsior office, lawyers' and doctors' offices, and dwellings.

The above are a few of the principal business establishments. Besides these are many smaller stores and groceries, several cigar manufactories, insurance, express and telegraph offices, jewelry stores, harness, carpenter and blacksmith shops in sufficient numbers to supply the trade. There are five or six millinery establishments in the city, and several hotels, among which the Decker House is chiefly patronized by the traveling public.

The city authorities are now engaged in paving the principal streets.

PRICE OF LOTS.

Best business lots in the city range from $1,000 to $1,500, and building lots generally average about $200 each.

MANUFACTORIES.

Among the manufacturing interests of Maquoketa are the agricultural machine shops and foundry, the woolen mills, and the saw and flouring mills. Connected with the latter are cooper shops for the manufacture of barrels. There is also a cabinet and scroll factory located in the city, and wagon and carriage making establishments which turn out excellent work. There is also a considerable business done in the manufacture of deep-well pumps and windmills.

BANKS.

There are three banks in the city, viz.: The First National, the Exchange Bank, and the Central Bank, all doing a prosperous business.

SCHOOLS.

The school system of Maquoketa is graded in four departments, culminating in a high school, of which A. E. Carhart is principal. The pupils are taught in four ward school houses by eight teachers. The number of children of school age in the district is 735—367 males and 368 females. The expenditure for school purposes in 1875 was $4,889.13: $3,252.50 for teachers' salaries, and $1,634.63 for contingent expenses. Board of Education: Dr. G. Truax, President; F. M. Fort, Esq., Secretary; D. A. Fletcher, John Whitfield, John Orcutt, and D. C. Clary.

SOCIETIES.

The Young Men's Literary Association has connected with it a library and public reading room. It is an institution creditable to the young men of the town, and with the encouragement it deserves, would be of great influence and usefulness to the community. There is one lodge of Free Masons, one of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and one of Odd Fellows, with hall in Merchants' Block.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Jackson Sentinel, was established in 1854 by W. C. Swigart, who continued to conduct it consecutively till the Fall of 1862. At that time, Mr. Henderson, who was the printer in the office, went into the army, leaving an edition partly set up, which remained in that condition for about two years. Several attempts were made about that time to revive the Sentinel, but they were unsuccessful, and it was finally sold to G. W. Hunt, who removed it to LeClaire, Scott County, in 1866.

Through the encouragement and patronage of the Democratic party, Mr. Swigart re-established the Jackson Sentinel, in the Spring of 1868, under the designation of a "new series," and has since conducted it successfully as a democratic organ of the county. In October, 1872, Mr. James T. Sargeant became associated with the Sentinel, and the firm has since been Swigart & Sargeant, present editors and proprietors.

The Sentinel is a well-conducted and ably-edited weekly in quarto-form, and has a good circulation.

The Maquoketa Excelsior, Republican in politics, was established in March, 1856, by Peter Moriarty. In 1859, it passed into the hands of A. W. Dripps and W. S. Eddy. In 1861, Mr. Dripps went into the army, leaving Mr. Eddy sole proprietor.

In 1864, Colonel J. J. Woods and W. F. McCarron purchased the paper, and conducted it till 1866, when Colonel Woods sold his interest to B. F. Reeve, and Reeve & McCarron published it till 1867, in the Spring of which year Reeve sold his interest to McCarron, and the latter conducted the paper till he sold to Colonel J. J. Woods, in the Spring of 1868. In the Spring of 1869, Colonel Woods sold to W. S. Beldon, the present editor and proprietor.

The Excelsior has always been a republican paper. It is ably conducted, and enjoys a good patronage. Mr. Beldon was formerly Sheriff of Jackson County.

CHURCHES.

There are four churches at present in Maquoketa—Congregational, Baptist, Methodist and Catholic. All have church buildings, and regular preaching by resident pastors. The first church erected in the town was the Congregational, in 1850. The Methodists are at present (1875) engaged in the erection of a fine brick church edifice, which will cost when completed $10,000.

A movement has been recently made towards the establishment of an Episcopal church in Maquoketa. There are quite a number of influential people of that faith among the citizens, and services are occasionally held.

BELLEVUE.

Bellevue is situated on the Mississippi River, twenty-two miles below the City of Dubuque, and twelve miles from Galena, Illinois. The town site is upon a beautiful plateau of land whose general height is about fifteen feet above high water mark, and is surrounded by an amphitheater of hills which break off the severe cold of winter. Few places on the river present more picturesque or beautiful scenery than that witnessed from the top of the high bluffs, either on the north or south of the town, including the river with its islands, the shores of Illinois beyond, the farms and farm houses up the valley, which runs to a point westward at the distance of about six miles, and the village nestling in the ample area at the foot of the bluffs, with its business streets, its levee and its tasty dwellings. A steam ferry boat makes constant trips between Bellevue and the opposite shore, whence a considerable portion of the country trade is received, and steamboats are almost constantly in sight, either at the landing, in the regular up or down river trips, or going to, or coming from Galena. The railroad trains of the Chicago, Dubuque and Minnesota road pass directly through the village to the station, which is just north of the corporate limits.

HISTORICAL.

Bellevue has in some respects quite a romantic history. It belongs to a section of country which, prior to 1840, or during the time of the early settlement, was infested by an organized gang of horse-thieves and out-laws. These thieves stole horses and committed depredations and sometimes murders in the frontier settlements, extending from Missouri to Rock River, Illinois. Jackson, and the adjoining counties on the west, were the theater of the operation of a portion of this gang, as the settlements were scattering and the extensive timber on the Maquoketa afforded them facilities for concealment and escape from justice. They would steal horses in Missouri and bring them across the country to Bellevue, transferring them across the Mississippi at night, and exchanging them for horses stolen on the east side of the river. This made Bellevue a sort of headquarters or rendezvous for the desperadoes, many of whom were known and identified by the citizens as belonging to the gang; but it was dangerous to point them out publicly, or attempt to have them arrested, for they outnumbered the honest settlers, and were in secret alliance with members of their gang who lived in many of the neighborhoods under the guise of respectable citizens. For a long time it was difficult to determine who were honest men and who were thieves and outlaws. When a few of the honest settlers suspected their neighbors, they discussed the matter privately, but were afraid to take any public action, for they did not know who to trust, and in case of being betrayed into the hands of the thieves, they would either be murdered or compelled to leave the country. Many murders were actually committed of citizens who informed of them; others were missing from their cabins and it was never known what became of them. The courts, then in the country, could do nothing to suppress them, as they could bring more witnesses than could be brought against them, to prove an alibi, and by false swearing escape the clutches of the law.

THE CITIZENS ASSOCIATION.

Things went on in this way till it became necessary for the settlers to organize for their own self-protection. An association was formed at Linn Grove, in Linn County, in 1839, of which Captain A. M. Warren, then Sheriff of Jackson County, and an active participant in the stirring events of those pioneer times, gives the following account:

"Colonel Cox, Mr. Moss and I took our departure, promising Bear we would return the next day. Passing up the Wapsie, we came to Russell's, where the Town of Fairview is now located. Russell and Mr. Snow accompanied us to Linn Grove to the house of Mr. ——, which had been selected as our place of meeting. Arriving there about twelve o'clock we found the house crowded. Cedar County was represented by Messrs. Whitley, Culberson, Roberts, and others. Mr. Roberts will be remembered by members of the Territorial Legislature as the gentlemen from Cedar, who, upon the introduction of any bill, would invariably address the chair with—" Mr. Speaker, ar Ceder in that ar bill, if not, I can't vote for it." Notwithstanding his little eccentricities of speech, he was a faithful representative, and true to his constituents. Jones County was represented at the meeting by Messrs. Bowen, Beardsley, and perhaps others. The object for which we met was to devise concerted action for the more effectual protection of the settlers from the thieves and desperadoes who were daily preying upon the honest portion of the community. Colonel Cox explained the steps that had already been taken in Jackson County, and said he was glad to see the leading men of her sister counties present. He was an early settler in Illinois, and knew that all new countries were infested with banditti, who fled from justice in the older states, and hold full sway for a time on the frontiers. But the hardy and honest pioneers are just the men to finally weed out such a class. He was of the opinion that moral suasion was wasted upon thieves and murderers. You can not even reach them with the law, for when one of the band is arrested, no matter how strong may be the evidence of his guilt, his confederates will prove an alibi for him. In Illinois we rid the country of them, and found the most effectual means to be hemp, and my idea now is to thoroughly organize and protect every citizen, not only in his property, but in free speech. Let the officers be vigilant, and arrest all trespassers of the law, and see that it is vigorously enforced. Whenever the law can not be enforced, treat the desperadoes as we did in Illinois. After the Colonel's address the association was formed, and picked men selected in every county to give information and carry out the plans of the society. Many incidents of horse stealing and passing counterfeit money were related by those present."

THE BELLEVUE WAR.

Among the apparently respectable citizens connected with the banditti, and discovered to be a leading man of the gang, was one Brown, proprietor of the Bellevue House, the only hotel then kept in the place. This house was the rendezvous of the thieves in transferring their stolen property across the Mississippi, and at it occurred the fight with the desperadoes known as the "Bellevue War," in the Spring of 1840. The fight was brought on in the following manner:

One James C. Mitchell, a prominent citizen, had become obnoxious to Brown's gang on account of his exposure of their attempts to induce him to join them, and they determined to assassinate him. Accordingly a party entered his house in the evening for that purpose; but Mitchell being absent at a party in the village, they robbed the house and attempted an outrage upon the person of his hired girl. The girl made her escape, and information was conveyed to Mitchell. The leader of the murderous gang was one James Thompson, who appears to have had respectable relations in the State of New York. When Mitchell heard of what had been done he armed himself and started for his house. On a corner of the street he met Thompson and Ab Montgomery—the latter afterwards noted for the murder of Brown, of Maquoketa. Thompson attempted to shoot Mitchell, but his pistol missed fire, and the shooting was on the other side. Thompson fell mortally wounded, and expired in a few moments. The Brown thieves made an attempt to lynch Mitchell, but he escaped and fortified himself up stairs in his house, till he could send for the sheriff, into whose custody he surrendered himself.

This act of daring outrage created a great excitement in the village and throughout the frontier settlements. The honest citizens, fully aroused, demanded lynch law. Captain Warren consulted Judge T. S. Wilson, who advised that the whole party should be arrested and brought before the District Court for trial. Warrants were accordingly issued by Justices Watkins and Harris, and Sheriff Warren was charged with the duty of arresting the parties. Meanwhile, Brown and his confederates had fortified themselves in the Bellevue House, some twenty-three in number, occupying principally the upper story, and, armed with guns and pitchforks, were prepared for a desperate resistance. Captain Warren visited Brown in person, who agreed to surrender if the Captain would guarantee that he would not be at once seized and lynched by the excited people. To this the Captain, after consulting with his friends, agreed; but as he was approaching the house in company with three men, to make the arrests, Brown appeared on the outside and ordered him to halt, saying that he had changed his mind; that he had determined to resist to the last extremity; that Warren might come alone and consult, but if the others advanced another step they would be shot down.

Warren finding all efforts to induce a peaceable surrender fruitless, returned and informed the settlers, who, together with the citizens of the village, had assembled to the number of eighty men of the association. Out of these, forty were selected and made ready for the scene of action. Captain Warren ordered them to march so as not to expose themselves to the fire of the enemy stationed up-stairs, and when near the house gave orders for them to charge into the building. In this action one of the citizens was shot. Brown met the charging force at the door, and when ordered to surrender dropped his gun, which was discharged in falling. This was the signal for firing from the outside. One of the citizens taking good aim through a window, shot Brown in the neck, killing him instantly.

The thieves in the upper story were armed with guns and pitchforks, so that it was impossible for the besieging party to get up-stairs. Warren then called for a brand to set the house on fire, in order to burn them out, and while stooping to kindle the fire at the end of the building on the outside, two shots were fired at him from an adjoining shanty, in which several of the thieves had secreted themselves, which lodged in the clapboards a few inches above his head. The thieves seeing the house about to be consumed began to jump out of the back windows and run for the brush in the rear of the building. Some of them were followed and shot; twelve were captured, mostly in running from the house; among the number were the notorious Young and Fox, the murderers of Colonel Davenport at Rock Island.

BALLOTTING WITH BEANS.

The method of deciding the fate of these desperadoes was rather novel. It was no less than balloting with beans—white beans for hanging, red beans for some other punishment. Carried against hanging by two beans. The punishment inflicted was from ten to fifty lashes on the bare back, and after this salutary scourging the victims were "rivered," that is, put aboard of canoes and sent adrift down the river, with the solemn injunction never to show their heads again in these parts on pain of having their necks stretched.

This vigorous treatment of the horse-thieves of Jackson and Linn Counties was the beginning of the effectual breaking up of their operations throughout the country.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settler in Bellevue was John D. Bell, who erected the first cabin, in the Fall of 1835.

The first hotel was built by Peter Dutell, in 1836, and was called the Bellevue House.

The town of Bellevue was first laid out by John D. Bell, in 1835, the surveying being done by Phillip McLean. It was again laid out by Commissioners appointed by the United States, among whom were General George Cubbage and Wm. W. Cahill. At that time lots were valued at $7.50 for front lots and $5.00 for back lots, the proceeds after paying the commissioners and the cost of surveying, being appropriated to the town. The surveyor on the part of the United States was George W. Harrison.

PRESENT BUSINESS.

The principal business of Bellevue is done in eleven dry goods and general mercantile houses, three hardware stores, two grocery stores, two drug stores, four millinery establishments, two harness shops, five blacksmith shops, five shoemaker shops, one large boot and shoe store and manufactory, one carpenter shop and planing mill, three furniture and cabinet shops, three grain and produce warehouses—two on the river and one on the railroad, two private banks, two large flouring mills, one saw mill, one foundry, two agricultural warehouses, one cigar manufactory, and two hotels.

Bellevue has at present a population of about 2,000, and is a large shipping point, both by river and railroad. The business of the present year (1875) will not fall short of $500,000.

There are six churches in the place, viz.—Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist, Lutheran, Episcopalian, and Catholic; and one graded public school.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Bellevue Leader was started in 1870 by Alexander Fanning, under the name of the Iowa Republican. In 1871, George C. Deming purchased it and changed its name to the Jackson Leader. The present proprietor, W. O. Evans, purchased it in 1874 and changed its name to the Bellevue Leader, which it still retains. It is republican in politics, and has been quite successful under the management of Mr. Evans.

SABULA.

Sabula is situated on the Mississippi River, in the southeast corner of Jackson County. It is a place of considerable trade, having the river navigation, a steam ferry running between it and Savannah, on the opposite side in Illinois, and two railroads—the Chicago, Clinton and Dubuque, and the Sabula, Ackley and Dakota road. The citizens have shown a good deal of enterprise in constructing two excellent Macadamized roads, each of about a mile in length, at either end of the city, from the plateau on which the town stands, across the intervening low land to the railroad and roads leading into the country at the foot of the bluffs in the rear of the city. The town exhibits a good deal of thrift and prosperity, there being at the present time (May 1875) twelve new buildings in process of construction, some of them at a cost of from $5,000 to $7,000.

HISTORICAL.

The original site of Sabula was called Carlport, afterwards Charleston, and when laid out and recorded was called Sabula, which in the Indian dialect signifies sand. It was laid out as a town in 1840. The original proprietors were E. A. Wood, James Leonard, Charles Swan and O. A. Crary.

The first settlers were H. Hinkley and Mr. Dorman, who settled in the place in 1837. E. A. Wood, Ulysses Steen and Thomas Roof came in during the same year. R. C. Westbrook came in the Fall of 1839, and Dr. J. G. Sugg in 1843.

L. H. Steen, now residing in the place, was the first white child born in Sabula.

The first horse ferry was established in 1850, by Wade H. Eldridge.

William Hubbell, deceased in 1847, was the first postmaster in the place.

Morris S. Allen was the first justice of the peace.

Brown & Swan were the first merchants.

The house of Mr. Cameron, erected in 1842, was the first brick building, and was constructed of brick made in Sabula.

INCORPORATION AND OFFICERS.

Sabula was incorporated as a city under the general incorporation law of the state, in 1864. The following were the first officers elected under the charter:

H. G. CRARY, Mayor. J. F. FAIRBANK, Recorder.

COUNCILMEN.

M. C. LAWRENCE, M. HEIN, D. K. LINCOLN, J. SOARBOROUGH, V. LUND.

BUSINESS OF THE CITY.

Sabula has three extensive lumber yards, two planing mills, one sash, door and blind factory, one first-class saw mill, one extensive pork-packing establishment which slaughtered about 40,000 hogs in 1875, ranking fifth in the state and seventeenth in the United States; one flouring mill doing an extensive business, one cooper shop, two wagon and carriage factories, one cabinet shop, two jewelry stores, one clothing store, six dry goods and general mercantile houses, five groceries, three carpenter shops, three blacksmith shops, one excusively boot and shoe store, two banks, two barber shops, two millinery stores, two tailor shops, one sewing machine agency, one photograph gallery, one harness shop, three meat markets and two restaurants.

Besides the above there is a very extensive hardware, tin and agricultural establishment, that of J. C. Day, who has organized and is conducting with great success, one of the finest houses of the kind to be found in the country, and such as would be creditable to any city.

There are three lawyers' offices and three doctors' offices in the place, four hotels, two livery stables, one lodge respectively of Masons, Odd Fellows, and Sons of Temperance. Sabula has one public hall—Bleuner Hall—erected in 1871, at a cost of $7,000.

There are three churches—Congregationalist, Methodist and Catholic. All have church buildings and regular pastors.

The public school of the city is graded in three departments, and occupies one central school building and two ward school houses. There is also a private school kept, which is well patronized.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Sabula Gazette was started by a joint-stock company, in December, 1865. The officers of the company at that time were: J. G. Sugg, President; O. G. Risley, Vice-President; J. F. Fairbank, Secretary; and Israel Day, Treasurer; The office was let to Mr. Rice, for the purpose of publishing a newspaper. In October, 1868, the press and materials were rented to Herbert Sugg, and the name of the paper changed to the Eastern Iowan.

In February, 1870, Alexander B. Fanning took charge of the office. Mr. Fanning went out in 1871, and George Elliott took charge and changed the name of the paper to the Sabula Index, and published it till July, 1873, when Dr. J. F. Fairbank took charge as owner of the principal part of the stock, which gave him control of the office, and he has managed it till the present. On taking possession of the office, he changed the name of the paper to the Sabula Gazette, as it was originally called.

The Gazette is a weekly quarto paper, independent in politics, and has a liberal patronage.

ANDREW.

Andrew is situated in a fine farming section, on the old stage route from Dubuque to Davenport. It is the home of ex-Governor Ansel Briggs, and was for a time the county seat of Jackson County. (See County History.) The town was laid out for the county seat by commissioners, in 1841, in pursuance of an act of the territorial legislature, and received the surname of Andrew Jackson, in whose honor the county was named.

The first cabin was erected on the site by John Hindley, in 1837. Samuel Jennings and Baker Bradley were the first merchants in the place. The first resident lawyer was Henry Hopkins, Esq.

Honorable P. B. Bradley, still residing at Andrew, is one of the early settlers. Judge J. S. Wilson appointed him Clerk of the District Court in 1843. In 1845 he was elected to the Territorial Council. In 1846 he was elected to the State Senate for four years, and in 1850 was clerk of that body.

Honorable Ansel Briggs was elected the first Governor of the State of Iowa, in 1846, and served four years.

In 1847, a paper was printed at Andrew, called the ————————, by Andrew Keesecker, M. H. Clark, editor. In 1849, Governor Briggs took charge of it, and conducted it eighteen months, when J. B. Dorr, afterwards connected with the Dubuque Herald, removed it to Bellevue, where he published it about three years.

The Lutheran denomination have an orphan asylum at Andrew with about forty inmates.

The Congregationalists, Methodists, Lutherans, Old School and United Presbyterians, have churches in the place.

Besides the public school, the Lutherans have a school at the Asylum which is well patronized, many sending their children there to learn German.

Andrew has three general merchandise and dry goods stores, two drug stores, two hardware stores, two harness shops, one boot and shoe shop, one livery stable, one hotel, three wagon shops, four blacksmith shops, and one flouring mill in the vicinity. It has a lodge of Masons, Good Templars, and a Literary Society.

Andrew is a considerable live-stock market. It has a population of about 400.

The remaining towns or villages in the county, are: WATERFORD, in South Fork Township, containing five or six churches, several stores, and flouring and saw mills; CANTON, on the Maquoketa, twenty-eight miles southwest of Dubuque, with a fine water-power; FULTON, also on the Maquoketa, about thirty miles south of Dubuque; OTTER CREEK, in township of the same name; LAMOTTE, sixteen miles south of Dubuque; STERLING, a post village, thirty miles southeast of Andrew; MONMOUTH, in the western part of the county, on the Iowa Midland railroad; the rest are VAN BUREN, MILL ROCK, WYCKLIFFE, SPRING BROOK, MOUNT ALGOR, COTTONVILLE, GARRY OWEN, SAINT DONATUS, ZWINGLE, MILES, UNION CENTRE, and PRESTON.

"PRESTON CLIPPER."

The Preston Clipper was established March 13, 1873, by P. R. Bailey, at Preston, Jackson County. March 13, 1874, the controlling interest was purchased by General Dan. McCoy, of the Delmar Journal, at which time the Clipper and Journal were consolidated as the Delmar Clipper-Journal, and under this management reached a circulation of 1,300 subscribers, being removed to Delmar, Clinton County.

BENTON COUNTY.

This is one of the largest counties in the central portion of the state, lying in the fifth tier from the south, and is the fourth west from the Mississippi River. It is thirty miles in length from north to south, and twenty-four in width, embracing an area of twenty congressional townships, or 720 square miles—470,800 acres—each township being six miles square, and are designated in the government survey as townships 82, 83, 84, 85, and 86, in ranges 9, 10, 11, and 12. The boundaries of the civil townships correspond with those of the congressional, and are named as follows, beginning at the northeast corner and numbering west and east alternately: Polk, Harrison, Cedar, Bruce, Monroe, Jackson, Taylor, Benton, Canton, Eden, Big Grove, Homer, Hane, Union, Eldorado, Fremont, Florence, St. Clair, Leroy, and Iowa.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

The general surface and topographical appearance of Benton County presents to the eye a very pleasing and attractive landscape, of undulating rolling prairie, intersected here and there with numerous streams and their connecting belts of timber. Some portions of the prairies are quite elevated, though never broken or rough enough to in the least interfere with agriculture, but gradually descending they slope into spacious and fertile bottom lands, which are susceptible of the highest cultivation. A large number of detached or isolated grove of native and planted timber, many of which occupy elevated positions, greatly relieves the monotony usually observed in a prairie landscape. The soil consists of a deep black vegetable mold of an argilla silicious nature, which in the low lands partakes more of a sandy character. The general rolling character of the surface, with the remarkable fertility of the soil, render it a superior agricultural county, and peculiarly adapted for stock raising and for the cultivation of all kinds of grains, grasses, and vegetables common to this latitude.*

STREAMS.

The northern portion of the county is abundantly watered by the Cedar and its numerous tributaries. This river, which has its source in the southern part of Minnesota, enters the county about the middle of the northern line, and runs south to Vinton, where it takes an easterly course, and passing through Taylor and Benton Townships, enters Linn County. It is a clear, beautiful stream, with a good current, and runs in its winding meandering course some forty miles in the county. Its principal tributaries on the north, or left bank, are Bear and Johnson Creeks, while those which flow into it from the west and south are Big, Rock, Pratt, Crooked, Mud, Wild Cat, and South Bear Creeks. Prairie Creek, a tributary of the Cedar, rises in the southwestern part of the county and flows in an easterly direction, receives in its course many accessions, and is of great value by affording stock water in that portion of the county.

The Iowa River, the stream next in size to the Cedar, runs across the extreme southwest corner, several of its tributaries rising in this county, among the most important of which are Salt and Buckeye Creeks. There are but few water powers in the county, and those that are improved are of little value. A fine power, capable of driving a large amount of machinery, exists in the Cedar River at Vinton, but it has never been improved, owing to the large amount of expense required in building the requisite dams and races. The flow of the Iowa is much slower than the Cedar, and its scenery is less attractive, yet it is, nevertess, a fine river, and passes through some of the best portions of the state.

TIMBER.

The prevailing timbers of this county are the various kinds of oak, hickory, maple, walnut, ash, linn, hackberry, elm, willow, and cottonwood. The Townships of Polk, Harrison, Taylor, and Benton, in the northeast part of the county, are abundantly supplied with timber from the Cedar, while there are several small bodies of timber and groves in different parts of the county. Big Grove, near the center of the county in the township of the same name, contains about twelve thousand acres. The southwest has but little timber, except in Iowa Township, and along Prairie Creek, where there are some small groves. Added to this amount nearly every farmer in the county has planted a grove of cottonwood, silver leaf maple, or other fast growing wood, which have now reached a sufficient size to be extensively used for the ordinary purposes of fencing and fuel. The broad prairies of the county are thus dotted over with cultivated groves, which not only beautify and adorn the face of the county, but form an attractive feature to travelers and emigrants seeking a home in the state, and add very materially to the real wealth of the county.

BUILDING STONE.

A fine quality of building stone is found in several portions of the county, but the best quarries are at Vinton, and along the Cedar River. These quarries are inexhaustible in extent, and the quality of the stone is equal to any found in the West. When first taken out the stones are of a brown color, and so soft that they are easily moulded into any desired shape, but by exposure to the atmosphere, the color is changed to a white, closely resembling marble, and becomes perfectly hard and lasting, as its durability has been fully tested. The main buildings of the Iowa State College for the Blind, at Vinton, are built of this stone, taken from quarries situated some two and a half miles northwest of its location. Excellent quick lime is made from these stone, while an abundance of good sand and brick clay is found in all parts of the county, and at Shellsburg an extensive business in the manufacture of earthenware has formerly been carried on. Coal has been found at Blairstown, Belle Plaine, and some other places, but not in quantity or quality to justify working. This county is also in the section known as the "drift region," as granite boulders of all sizes are found scattered over its surface, although not quite as plentifully as in some of the counties farther north.

STOCK.

Probably no county in Iowa is better adapted for stock raising than Benton, which, on account of its rich rolling prairie land, numerous groves and abundant supply of never failing water, is peculiarly well fitted for the successful conducting of this branch of industry. For several years past the attention of the better class of farmers has been turned to the breeding of thoroughbred and blooded stock of all kinds, so that at the present time no county in the state can exhibit more or better fine stock. This result is largely due to Prof. S. A. Knapp, and a few other wide awake, practically educated men, who have kept agitating the subject until they have accomplished results which will be of lasting benefit, not only to the country but to agricultural interests of the entire state. The Benton County Fine Stock Association was the first association of the kind organized west of the Mississippi, and from it has already sprung up several others that are doing much, and are destined at no distant day to revolutionize the stock interests of the entire state. As an outgrowth of the work first inaugurated in this county, a State Fine Stock Association was organized at Cedar Rapids in June, 1875, which association chose for its first president Hon. S. A. Knapp.

THOROUGHBRED STOCK.

For several years past, the Iowa farmers who have devoted themselves exclusively to raising grain have found it a losing operation. To the question, "What shall we do?" the broad grass lands and fertile corn fields made answer, "Raise live stock, and thus condense your products for shipment." "But shall I continue to raise the common, native stock; will it pay?" "No," answers the intelligent stock-raiser, "raise thoroughbreds. Let the Short-horn, the Jersey, the Ayrshire, in cattle; the Norman, the Clydesdale, the thoroughbred, in horses; the Berkshire, Poland-China, Yorkshire, Chester White, in hogs, take the place of your 'scrub stock.'" Having resolved on this new departure, the next step of the Iowa farmer was to demand a journal devoted to stock-raising. This demand has been met and filled by Messrs. Wilkinson & Marine, two enterprising publishers of Vinton, who in July, 1874, started the Iowa Fine-Stock Gazette, a handsome, illustrated sixteen-page monthly, devoted exclusively to live-stock interests. It is the only journal of its class west of the Mississippi; and since—as L. F. Allen, editor of the American Herd Book, says—"Iowa is developing and improving its herds more rapidly than any other state in the Union," this magazine is receiving a warm support. As the stock interest must be soon of vital interest to every Iowa farmer, all will desire it, as the subscription price is only $1.10 per year, or ten copies for $8.50, and it can be had by addressing the publishers, C. R. Wilkinson & Co., Vinton, Iowa.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The principal county building is the court house, which is a substantial two-story brick structure, some forty by sixty feet square, and situated in the public square near the business portion of the town. The grounds are handsomely laid out, studded with shrubs, evergreens, and the different varieties of ornamental trees, forming a very attractive place of resort during the heat of Summer. The second story is devoted to court and jury rooms, which are conveniently arranged and airy, while the first story is occupied by the different county officers, fire-proof vaults for the records, etc., etc. It was built during the administration of Honorable Samuel Douglas, County Judge, in 1856, and cost $16,000.

RAILROADS.

Although a little slow in securing railroads, Benton County has now facilities for communicating with the outer world equal to most western counties. The Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad, which had long been asking for assistance, passed through the southern portion of the county in 1861-2, and after its completion to Council Bluffs, gave it superior advantages for shipment either east or west. This road was afterwards leased by the Chicago and Northwestern Company, who have controlled and operated it for several years. In 1865, a company was organized called the Cedar Rapids and Minnesota, to which Benton County voted $75,000, and donated her swamp lands valued at $15,000 more. In 1867 this company was consolidated with the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota company, and the road was completed through the county in 1868, running up the Cedar Valley. The Pacific branch of this road diverges from the main line at Vinton, and running a little north of west, terminates at Traer, in Tama County. It will thus be seen that Benton County enjoys very excellent railroad facilities, being connected by a north and south line with two of the main thoroughfares of the state, which unite the undeveloped resources of the West with the civilization of the East.

IMPROVEMENTS.

This county, according to the census of 1873, contains a population of twenty-two thousand and sixty-eight, which, considering that there are no large towns, shows that the entire county has become well settled up. There is but very little wild land, and what there is commands a price nearly equal to that of the poorer improved farms, which range from $15 to $25 per acre. The inhabitants are largely from Indiana, Ohio and the Eastern and Middle States, and have generally erected good, and in some cases even elegant, farm improvements. Neat and convenient school houses are found in all parts of the county, showing that the intellectual culture of the young is not neglected.

HISTORY.

The early history of Benton County is somewhat curious and peculiar, containing, as it does, more than the ordinary amount of ludicrous, exciting and amusing incidents. The first permanent settlement was made in the Spring of 1839, by Samuel Lockheart, in the northeastern part of the county, at or near the little village called Marysville, where he still resides. This village was the nucleus of the first settlement, and was better known to the early pioneers as "Hoosier Point," owing to the fact that a large proportion of the first settlers were from Indiana. Samuel Parker came in the same season, and settled at Parker's Grove, while Gilmore Clark located about one mile southeast of the present village of Shellsburg. They all built cabins, made claims, and did a little breaking that season, raising a few garden vegetables. The following Spring, Stedman Pemrose came with his wife and children, and located about one and a half miles east of Shellsburg. L. F. North came at the same time, and located with him, while soon after two Englishmen, by the names of George Wright and John Smith, made a claim a mile or two southeast of Pemrose's. Reuben Buskirk also came the same Spring, and settled near the east line of the county, directly east of Vinton, where he built a cabin and made some improvements. He died October 10, 1842, which was the first death that occurred in the county. As there was no lumber to be had, it was impossible to make a coffin, and his few neighbors, cutting a linn tree, rift it into puncheons, and arranged his grave as well as they could under the circumstances. The funeral was attended by five men and three women, only a portion of whom lived in Benton County. In April, 1842, Jacob Cantonwine made a claim at Shellsburg, while L. D. Bordwell—or "Black King," as he was generally called—bought out the claim of Wright & Smith, who had built a good log cabin, fenced, broke and had under cultivation some forty acres.

For some ten or twelve years after the first settlement was made in this county, the increase in population was very slow, yet it is a notable fact that nearly all who once located became permanent settlers. As there is no record of these events, except in the memory of a very few early settlers, it is impossible to be positively certain as to the dates of occurrences which took place thirty and thirty-five years ago. The historian will not, therefore, attempt to give the exact dates, or the names of all who settled here at an early day, but will content himself by mentioning the names of a few more pioneers, who materially aided in transforming the wild prairies and woodlands, which for centuries had been the home and favorite hunting grounds of the wild savage, into the rich farms, populous villages, and the impressively beautiful scenes of life, animation and advanced civilization which now form the wealthy county of Benton. James Downs, Thos. Way, Thomas and Price Kendrick, settled at and with some others founded the little village of Marysville, while the following are a few of those who settled prior to 1850: Isaac Onstott, Henry Dillen, Wm. Davis, Daniel Harris, George Sanders, John Royal, John Mason, Beal Dorsey, Dr. C. W. Buffum, J. W. Filkins, A. D. Stephens, who was Indian Agent, J. R. Pratt, L. W. Hays, Francis Saunders and his six sons, James, Joseph, William, Flem, George and Francis Jr., Fielding Bryson, James Harmely, Martin Webb, Stephen Brody, Chancy Leaverich, Anderson Amos, Joseph Bryson, Joseph Remington, William Mitchell, James Polly, Jesse Brody, Josiah Helm, Thos. Mahan, G. Billy White, James Leaverich, John Alexander, I. D. Simison, J. F. Young. In 1850 and 1851, A. H. Johnson, David Jewell, Samuel Roseberry, Alex. Moody, John S. Epperson, Chas. N. Moberly, Elias Done, John Leard, L. W. Bryson, Wm. Cline and Abel Cox, while in 1852 there were John S. Tilford, J. S. Forsythe, Aaron Webb, John Parks, John Renfrew, C. C. Charles, James F. Beckett, D. S. Brubeker, W. O. Saunders, M. D. L. Webb, Caleb Stephen, James Chapin, James Rice, W. C. Stanberry, Wm. Bells, J. C. Traer, R. Jones, E. Evans, John R. Speak, Chas. Stewart, James Wood, John Shank, Wm. Riley, Geo. McCoy, John C. Rouse and Davis Fouts.

DARK AGES.

A strip of land on the east side, comprising about one tier of townships, was within the Black Hawk Purchase of September 21, 1832, and was therefore open for settlement several years prior to the time when the remaining portion of the county was ceded to the whites by the Sac and Fox Indians. A few years after the first settlement, as the county began to be more populous, a class of desperadoes, taking advantage of the fact that it was located on the very outskirts of civilization, organized themselves into bands that were the terror of the peaceable, honest and law-abiding citizens. These outlaws, systematically engaging in horse stealing and other amusements generally indulged in by frontier banditti, acquired such power and influence in the county, as, for a time, to force a suspension of all law and judicial proceedings. The three or four years prior to 1851 is generally referred to by old settlers as the "dark ages," for between the horse thieves and robbers on the one side, and the self-styled "Regulators," or "Vigilance Committees," on the other, no peaceable, law-abiding citizen was safe from molestation. For three years courts were not held in the county, and some of the officials were suspicioned of being in sympathy with the thieves and robbers, while others were known to be active members of the "Regulators." For a time it was uncertain which party was the most damaging to the county, as both of them often prevented the peaceable administration of the law, and under one pretext or another postponed the holding of courts, and the performance of other official duties by the regularly elected officers of the county. While many of the best men were connected with, and active members of the "Regulators," yet a number of the thieving gang joined them, the better to conceal their operations, and to obtain an opportunity of wreaking vengeance upon the heads of some innocent party who had thwarted them in their plans. It therefore became necessary to re-organize for better self-protection, and the character of the society was much improved, although they afterwards committed depredations, individually, and as a body, which would not stand the light of legal investigation. As the constitution of this organization is a somewhat curious and important document pertaining to the early history of Benton County, the historian has thought best to reproduce it with the names of the originators and members in this county.

The document reads as follows:

"This Society shall be called the Iowa Protection Company.

ART. 1. The object of this Society shall be to protect the property of the members of this company, and particularly their horses, from the depredations of robbers and thieves, and also to trace out the perpetrators of thefts, rescue and restore property stolen, and assist in a due and faithful administration of law and justice.

ART. 2. The officers of this Society shall consist of a President, Secretary, and Treasurer, to be chosen viva voce at any stated meeting, and to hold their offices during good behavior.

ART. 3. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all regular meetings of the Society, and in his absence, the Society may choose a President pro tem; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary to record all the proceedings of the Society, and preserve the same; and it shall be the duty of each member to pay to the Treasurer such sums of money from time to time as the Society shall dictate. He shall keep a correct book in which he shall enter the amount received and expended, and the purpose for which it was expended.

ART. 4. The Society shall appoint such committees as may be necessary to carry out the objects of the Society.

ART. 5. Each and every member shall sign the constitution and hold themselves subject to its provisions, and on revealing its proceedings in any respect, shall be excluded from its benefits.

ART. 6. This Society shall be convened at any time by notice from the President.

ART. 7. No person shall be entitled to vote unless a member of the Society.

ART. 8. This constitution may be altered or amended at any regular meeting by a two-thirds vote of the members present.

ART. 9. No person shall be admitted a member of this Society who is under suspicion of horse-stealing, or any other theft, or for harboring thieves or robbers.

ART. 10. The regular meeting of this Society shall be the Saturday before the full moon, at such place as may be designated."

Bells, Elijah Evans, Harrison Berry, Jacob Remington, Sanford Moberley, A. H. Johnson, Jacob Fouts, John C. McCoy, J. M. Broad, C. M. Moberley, Joel W. Miller, Thos. G. Lockhart, Groly Osborn, Elmyra Howard, John Osborn, Chas. Stewart, John Sauks, Wm. A. Bryson, Hiram Roszell, Wm. A. Griffin, Wm. Riley, Spencer Johnson, James Downs, Chas. Epperson, Alex. Johnson, David Jewell, Geo. McCoy, John R. Speak, Lewis W. Bryson, Stephen D. Jewell, Davis Fouts, John C. Rouse, Martin Johnson, Lauslot Johnson, Edwin C. Hall, James Johnson, Hiram T. Epperson, and A. Taylor. The organization was perfected by the election of Judge J. S. Forsythe as President, Elijah Evans, Secretary, and GeorgeMcCoy, Treasurer.

LOCATION OF COUNTY SEAT.

Benton County was surveyed in 1845, '46, '47, by A. L. Brown, I. N. Higbee and Jas. Fanning, Deputy Surveyors of the United States. It was organized early in the Spring of 1846, in accordance with an act of the Territorial Legislature passed the previous winter, and the county seat located on section 21 by commissioners, who named it Vinton in honor of Hon. Plynn Vinton, a former member of Congress from Ohio, who sent a considerable amount of money to be donated to the county if the commissioners would name the county town Vinton. A year or two later, C. Leverich and J. Alexander, who were interested in property lying nearer the river where the present business portion of Vinton now stands, determined to make an attempt to move the county seat, and accordingly got up a petition asking the legislature to grant a re-location by a vote of the people. To prevent all opposition, and make the thing doubly sure, at the same time when they circulated the petition, they carried a remonstrance which they asked all to sign who would not put their names to the petition. In that way they secured the signatures of nearly all the citizens of the county, and by attaching them all to the petition they made a very strong showing, and without opposition secured the passage of a special act ordering an election in April, 1849. It was accordingly held, when votes were cast for the present site, and for a point on the opposite side of the river three miles northeast and near or at the residence of Thomas Ways, which resulted in the same number of votes being cast for both places. Another election was held in the following August, and the location was fixed at its present site by a majority of twelve Previous to this election a hewed log court house, twenty-four feet square, had been erected on the site first selected by the commissioners. It cost the county fifty dollars, but was never completed or occupied. After the change of the location a cheap two-story frame court house, costing some six or seven hundred dollars, was built in one corner of the present court house square, a portion of which was first occupied as a store, and afterwards for school, church and political purposes until the Winter of 1852, when it was burned.

FIRST ELECTION.

The first election in which any of the citizens of this county participated was held on the first Monday in August, 1843, at which time they voted for officers of Lynn County, to which Benton was then attached. The first election after the organization of the county took place in April, 1846, at which time there was but one voting precinct, Parker's Grove, some two and a half miles southeast of Shellsburg. Beal Dorsey, Stedman Pemrose and L. D. Bordwell were judges, and Daniel Pratt and John Royal, clerks. The total number of votes cast was twenty-nine, which resulted in the election of John Royal for Sheriff, David Pratt, District Court Clerk; L. D. Bordwell, Justice of the Peace, and —— Hamline, Constable. These officers were only chosen to hold until the general election, which occured in the following August, at which time there were two voting precincts—Canton on the west and Polk on the east side of the river. There were between forty and fifty votes cast at this election, and J. R. Pratt was elected Clerk of District Court, I. D. Summerson, School Commissioner; James Downs, Sheriff; L. W. Hayes, Treasurer and Recorder; James Mitchell, Judge of Probate; L. F. North, Samuel Lockhart, and Samuel Parker, County Commissioners.

FIRST COURT.

The first term of the District Court was appointed to be held in this county in August, 1846, but for some reason the judge did not appear, and the clerk, J. R. Pratt, adjourned it for one day, when the judge still remaining absent, he adjourned it without date. The court was to have been held at the house of Thomas Ways, which was then the best house in the county, and was situated some three or four miles northeast of the present site of Vinton. There were eighteen grand and seventeen petit jurors present. On the 31st day of May, 1847, the first term of District Court was convened at the house of Thomas Ways, by Honorable James P. Carleton, Judge of the Fourth Judicial District; I. D. Summerson, Clerk; James Downs, Sheriff, and James Mitchell, Prosecuting Attorney. The household furniture and cooking utensils were removed by the good house wife to the shelter of a neighboring tree, and his Honor, James P. Carleton, took his seat on a three-legged stool, with a rough table before him, on which were the books and papers of the clerk, I. D. Simmerson, who occupied a low bench at the left of the Court. The attorneys present were N. W. Isabell, afterwards one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, J. M. Preston, John David and D. P. Palmer—all since distinguished lawyers. About the first business transacted was the examination of William Smythe, since District Judge, and his admission to the bar. James Mitchell was also examined and refused admission, and afterwards ousted from the office of Prosecuting Attorney by an information in the nature of quo warranto, filed by Stephen Holcomb. I. M. Preston was appointed pro tem Prosecuting Attorney.

The following are the names of the grand jurors; Fielding Bryson, James Harmely, Joseph Remington, John Bryson, Charles Graham, Stephen Brody, Jesse Brody, Josiah Halm, David Jewel, William Mitchell, Samuel M. Lockhart, James Polly, Chancy Leverich, Anderson Amos, James M. Denison, Joseph Bryson, L. D. Bordwell, Samuel Stephenson—eighteen good and lawful men of said county. Samuel M. Lockhart was appointed foreman of this first grand jury. The first criminal case that appeared of record, was The State of Iowa vs. Joal Leverich, for passing counterfeit money and having in his possession counterfeiter's tools. The second term of District Court was convened at Thomas Ways', April 24, 1848, and the third term was opened in the court house at Vinton, September 18, 1848, after which there was no court held until June 18, 1851. The first Circuit Court was assembled in the court house at Vinton, January 4, 1869, and presided over by Honorable W. E. Miller, now Chief Justice of the State; Honorable B. R. Sherman, present State Auditor, Clerk; and Henry M. Wilson, Sheriff.

FIRST THINGS.

The first instrument recorded in the records of Benton County, was a bill of sale of one yoke of oxen, one two-horse wagon, three log chains, one brown cow, and one yearling calf, made by Charles Hinkley to S. H. Tryon. It was executed and recorded January 13, 1847, acknowledged before L. W. Hayes, a Justice of the Peace, recorded by L. W. Hayes, Recorder, and witnessed by L. W. Hayes and Joel Natin. The first paper affecting real estate recorded, was a warrantee deed, executed October 15, 1846, by Charles A. Belknap and Elizabeth L. Belknap, his wife, to Levi Lewis, conveying forty acres of land, for a consideration of one dollar per acre. The oldest town plat now on record, is that of Marysville, which was laid out May 5, 1847, by L. I. Rigsud, County Surveyor, and recorded five days later. The plat of the first town of Vinton, was recorded February 20, 1848, having been surveyed a few days prévious, by I. D. Simmerson, County Surveyor. The plat was signed by Samuel M. Lockhart, Loyal F. North, and Thomas Way, County Commissioners.

The first white child born in the county was Mary, a daughter of L. F. North. She was born January 8, 1843; while the second was Lucinda, daughter of L. D. Bordwell, born July 5, 1844. Bordwell also had a son, William, born January 21, 1847, who was the first male child born in the county. The first marriage license was issued by Dept District Clerk David R. Pratt, to Joseph Oustott and Miss Sarah Patch, who were duly joined in marriage by L. D. Bordwell, a justice of the peace, June 20, 1847. This was the first marriage celebrated in the county, and might have occurred sooner as far as the age of the parties was concerned, as they were both forty-five at the time.

A saw-mill was erected on Mud Creek, about one and a half miles southeast of Vinton, in the Summer or Fall of 1849, by John Royal and C. C. Charles, which was the first one in the county. The first school taught in the county was at or near Marysville.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

H. E. WARNER, Clerk. O. HORNE, Treasurer.
E. M. EVANS, Auditor. J. W. SMOCK, Recorder.
P. S. SMITH, Sheriff. S. T. SHORTESS, County Supt.
E. H. STEDMAN, Coroner.

SUPERVISORS.

I. N. CHENOWETH, Vinton; H. GUINN, Belle Plaine; N. HAWLEY, Garrison P. O.

VINTON.

The principal town and county seat of Benton County is a flourishing town containing some three thousand inhabitants. It is situated on the west bank of the Cedar River, some five miles north of the center of the county, and has the finest, in fact the only fine, position for a good town on the Cedar River in the county. It is immediately on the banks of the river, which are very high and never subject to overflow, and gradually rising as they recede from the river, forming some commanding building sites. The forest on the north bank is nearly two miles in width, while on the southern bank the timber breaks away, leaving a strip of beautiful prairie touching the river itself, and upon which the town is located. Dame Nature has done much to make the situation pleasant, and the taste displayed by the citizens in the construction of their homes and grounds makes it truly attractive. It is surrounded by some excellent farm lands, which for richness and general productiveness of soil, beauty and impressive loveliness of landscape, is seldom equaled and never surpassed in the state.

The town of Fremont, now Vinton, was laid out in the Fall of 1849, by James Leverich and Daniel G. Harris, I. D. Simmerson, being the surveyor. It then embraced forty acres, being the southeast quarter of section sixteen, township eighty-five, range ten. The first person who settled on the present site of Vinton was Chancy Leverich, who came in the Spring of 1846, and, building a cabin near the river, remained about one year, when he sold to G. Billy White, who, remaining about the same length of time, sold to James Leverich and Dan. Harris, who laid out the town and named it Fremont in honor of Gen. John C. Fremont, but there being another post-office of the same name in Mahaska County, it was changed to Vinton some three or four years later. The post-office of Vinton, the first in the county, was established in July, 1848, with Stephen Holcomb as first postmaster. It was first kept at his house, about three-fourths of a mile east of town, receiving a weekly mail during the Summer, and semi-occasionally during the Winter. It was first carried by G. W. Gray, from Marion, the county seat of Linn County. Holcomb held the office until April, 1849, when he left, and E. H. Keys was appointed and removed the office to his residence, about half a mile south of town. The first house built after the town was platted, was erected in 1850 by James Sanders, in the block north of the court house square; this was the first frame building in the county. It was originally designed for a store, but was used as a dwelling by the Sheriff, C. C. Charles. In October, 1850, Henas Mahan brought in a small stock of goods, consisting principally of one barrel of dried apples and one of whisky, which he opened in a small room adjoining the one first built by C. Leveridge, some three years before the locating of the town.

The first white child born in Vinton was William M. Traer, son of Dr. J. C. and Marcia W. Traer, on May 21, 1852, although James, son of Henry Sanders, was born within what is now Vinton, in March, 1851. The first marriage celebrated in the town was that of Marcus De La Fayette Webb and Mary J. Becket, which was performed by Judge John F. Forsythe. The first public school was taught in the Fall and Winter of 1852 by Geo. Parish, in the court house, which was burned, summarily closing it several weeks sooner than had been intended. The district was organized the same Fall with Wm. Saunders and L. D. Bordwell as directors. The United Brethren built the first church in the Fall of 1856, followed soon after by the Baptists and Methodists. The first Sunday school was organized in the Summer of 1852, and held in the court house, with J. S. Tilford as superintendent. The Black Bear House, built in 1850, and kept by W. C. Stanberry, was the first hotel, while the Western Stage Company commenced running a daily line of four-horse stages from Iowa City, January 1, 1856. Dr. J. C. Traer was the first physician, and J. Alexander the first attorney.

INCORPORATION.

Vinton was incorporated as a city of the second class in August, 1869, at which time the following officers were elected: Mayor, James Wood; Clerk, W. F. Kirkpatrick; Council, Paul Correll, Michel Donelan, Cornelius Ellis, John Gilmore, Nathan Hayes, J. A. McDaniel, Daniel Stick and H. H. Sterling. The present city government is composed of the following officers: Mayor, W. B. Reynolds, Sr.; Clerk, C. S. Bennett; Treasurer, R. N. Young; Council, A. H. Ellis, J. B. Locke, J. A. McDaniel, H. H. McElroy, John Ryder, F. R. Voris, M. D. L. Webb and H. D. White. The city has never licensed the sale of intoxicating liquors, there not having been a saloon within the corporate limits since 1857.

SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, ETC.

The public school of Vinton is well organized and maintained, has a good school building, standing in a well shaded park, and is convenient of access to all parts of town. The ground on which it is situated was donated by John S. Tilford.

The first church organization was the Presbyterian, under the guidance of Reverend John Sumnerson. It commenced with nine members in 1852, and held its first meeting in the house of J. S. Tilford. They now have some two hundred and fifty members, with Reverend S. Phelps as pastor. The Methodist Episcopal Church was probably organized in 1853-4, built a church building in 1856, and now has a large membership and is in a flourishing condition. The Baptists, United Brethren, Christian and Universalists all have organizations and good church edifices, and are in a growing condition and support good Sabbath Schools.

The Odd Fellows have a lodge and an encampment, while the Masons have a blue lodge and R. A. chapter. Both of these societies hold regular meetings, have a large membership, and are in a flourishing condition.

BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The business intercsts, which are in a growing, healthy and prosperous condition, may be summed up about as follows: One abstract office, one auctioneer, four agricultural implement establishments, two billiard halls, three barber shops, two bakeries, one brewery, eight blacksmith shops, three book stores, four banks, seven boarding houses, three clothing houses, one cigar store, three carriage shops, four contractors, and nine carpenter shops, one chair factory, one cracker factory, one commission house, three collection agents, two dentists, six dry goods stores, six drug stores, five dress making establishments, one excusive boot and shoe store, one feed mill, three furniture dealers, three feed stores, eleven groceries, two grist mills, four general merchandise stores, three hardware, six harness shops, four hotels, two insurance agents, three jewelers, seven law firms, four lumber yards, three livery stables, four millinery shops, one marble works, three milk dealers, one machine shop, four musical instrument establishments, two news depots, six physicians, two printing offices, six paint shops, one planing mill, one plunder store, five restaurants, four real estate agents, four stock yards, one straw hat manufactory, eight shoe shops, one saw mill, five sewing machine agencies, four tailors, three tin shops, and one washing machine factory.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper published in Benton County was the Vinton Eagle, which made its appearance January 10, 1855, as a six column folio, democratic in politics, and edited and published by Fred. Lyman and Stanly C. Foster. After running it about one year, Foster sold to Dr. J. C. Traer, while shortly after W. W. Hanford purchased Lyman's interest, when it hoisted the republican flag, and ably supported the election of J. C. Fremont for President of the United States. Hanford and Traer continued its publication for about six months, when W. W. Hanford became the sole proprietor and has since so continued, as senior publisher and editor. J. W. Rich, the present junior partner, and postmaster of Vinton, became associated with Hanford January 1, 1871.

Benton County Democrat, was established in the Summer of 1856, by J. F. Pyne as proprietor, and D. B. Pyne, manager. In the Spring of 1857 it was purchased by Fowler & Price, who ran it about one year, when Price retired, and Fowler continued its publication for a few months, when it passed into the hands of J. Alexander and Isaac Van Meter, who ran it until the Summer of 1859, when it again became the property of J. F. Pyne, and was conducted by D. B. Pyne until the first of January, 1860, when it was discontinued, and the office taken to the north part of the state.

The Benton County News was first published early in the Spring of 1865, by Frank & Weed, who conducted it for about one year, when they failed, and the office passed into the hands of Jas. Wood, Trustee. In the Spring of 1868 the material was purchased by J. F. Pyne, who established and issued for about six months a campaign paper called the Democratic Standard, and then sold the material to Alfred H. and Geo. Brown, who established The People's Journal, an eight column folio paper, republican in politics, which made its appearance December 19, 1868. In 1871 it was changed to a six column quarto, and a semi-weekly established, which was continued for about two years. April 1, 1872, it passed into the hands of C. R. Wilkinson & Co., who still continue its publication.

The Iowa Fine Stock Gazette was established in July, 1874, by C. R. Wilkinson & Co. It is a sixteen octavo page publication, devoted entirely to the stock-raising interests of Iowa.

IOWA COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.

Vinton is the seat of an educational and benevolent institution in which the whole state is deeply interested. It is the Iowa College for the Blind, which was established at Iowa City in 1853, through the unwavered efforts of Samuel Bacon. In August, 1862, it was removed to Vinton, and placed in charge of Rev. O. Clark, who resigned at the close of 1864, but was reappointed in 1875, taking charge of the institution in the Fall of that year. He is aided in his management by an efficient corps of experienced and accomplished teachers, which are much more numerous than would be required in teaching the same number of pupils who have not been deprived of their sight.

The grounds belonging to the institution comprise forty acres, donated by the citizens of Vinton, and are situated immediately west of the limits of the town. This ground is divided into ten-acre lots, three of which are cultivated, while the fourth, in which the buildings are situated, is laid out into ornamental grounds and embellished with evergreens and other handsome shade trees. The buildings are delightfully located on an eminence commanding a fine view of the town, the valley of the Cedar, and the undulating prairies extending south and west, with groves, farm houses and richly cultivated fields dotting them in varied profusion. The buildings, which are substantial and elegant in design, are three stories in height above the basement, and are built of magnesian limestone obtained from quarries situated two and a half miles west of Vinton. The main building was commenced in 1859, and completed in 1860; is 63x108 feet on the ground, since the wings have been constructed on either side to furnish increased accommodations, which have been rendered necessary by the growth of the institution, which has steadily increased since the growth of the state. The interior arrangements of the buildings are designed as far as practicable to meet the double purposes of a school and a home. The methods of instruction in the education of the blind, in this institution, are similar to those employed in schools where the pupils can see. An advance lesson is read to the class by the teacher, each day, and memorized. In short, the general arrangements of this institution do not differ materially from those found in all well-regulated boarding schools.

BELLE PLAINE.

This is an incorporated city, situated in the southwest corner of the county, a distance of twenty-five miles from Vinton, and thirty-five from Cedar Rapids, is at the end of the first division on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, and is the second place in importance in the county. It is very handsomely located mostly on high rolling prairie that gradually slopes down into the rich and beautiful bottom lands of the Iowa river. Its early history, like that of many other towns that have sprung up since the country became somewhat settled, has nothing very remarkable or exciting about it. It was located and laid out by Presley Hutton in the Fall and Winter of 1861, while the railroad was being built through the county. Its growth was slow for the first three or four years, since which time it has made steady progress until it now has a population of over 2,000, and is growing as rapidly as at any time in the past. The first storeroom was built in 1861 by Wm. White, and a stock of goods put in the same Fall by Daniel Crider. The second store was erected later the same Fall by I. M. Isham, who put in a stock of goods early the next Spring. The first house on the town site was occupied by P. Hutton. It was built previous to his purchasing the land in 1861. The first dwelling erected was hauled up from Guinstown in the Fall of 1861. The first physician was Dr. J. Worley, who was also the first citizen of the town to commit matrimony, which he did Sept. 23, 1862, to Miss Salome Sullenbarger, although Joseph Daniels and Miss Addie Cole were the first couple married in the village. The first lawyer was A. F. Bell. The first school was a private one taught by Mrs. Greene in Summer of 1863, while the first public school was taught by Dan Kenedy and Miss R. Kupid the next year. The first sermon was preached in the Spring of 1862 by Rev. Holland. The services were held in White's storeroom. The first hotel was built in 1864 by Samuel Hart, and was called the Hart House, while the first banking house was opened in 1868 by S. L. Bardwell.

BUSINESS, ETC.

An inventory of the business interests shows about the following: Two agricultural implement houses, two banks—one national, one bakery, two brick manufactories, one brewery, two barbers, six blacksmiths, three wagon shops, three boot and shoe dealers, two coal dealers, four clothiers and tailors, one dentist, three drug stores, seven dry goods, one machine shop and foundry, one stove foundry, two steam flouring mills of three run each, three fruit, confectionery and news dealers, two furniture stores, one glove manufactory employing twenty-five or thirty hands, five grain dealers and elevators three harness shops four insurance agents, three hotels and three eating houses, two jewelry stores, two livveries, three lumber dealers, two dealers in musical instruments and sewing machines, two photographers, three milliners, three meat markets, two printing offices, five physicians, five attorneys and five stock dealers. There are three good church edifices which belong to the Methodist, German Evangelical, and Congregational societies, while the Universalists have an organization but no house of worship. The public schools are well graded, have two good buildings, and employ some seven or eight thoroughly competent and experienced teachers. The Masonic organizations are in a flourishing condition, having St. Bernard Commandery, No. 14; Mt. Horeb Chapter, No. 45; Hope Lodge, No. 175; Belle Plaine Chapter, Eastern Star No. 80; while the Odd Fellows have Home Encampment, No. 48; Belle Plaine Lodge, No. 151; and Berlin Lodge, No. 259, working in German language.

THE PRESS.

The Belle Plaine Transcript, was founded December 13, 1866, by N. C. Wieting. February 21, 1867, W. W. Yarham and Wm. Nixon became proprietors and editors. August 6, 1867, Yarham sold his interest to W. P. Campbell. At the commencement of the second volume, it was enlarged from a seven-column folio to a five-column quarto, and was sold to S. S. Farrington, October 2, 1867, who changed it back to an eight-column folio, April 23, 1868, and March 4, 1869, disposed of the establishment to D. H. Foster, who has since ably conducted it.

The Belle Plaine Review was established October 9, 1874, by S. S. Farrington. It is a five column quarto sheet, independent in politics, and a sound local paper, thoroughly devoted to the interests of Belle Plaine and vicinity:

CITY OFFICERS.

GEORGE C. SCRIMGEOUR, Mayor. TOM. LAWRENCE, JR., Recorder.
W. P. TUTTLE, Treasurer. P. L. GAY, Street Commissioner.
A. H. HELDENBRAND, Assessor. O. B. COSE, Marshal.
W. A. TEWKSBURY, City Attorney.

TRUSTEES.

BLAIRSTOWN.

This pleasant, thriving village, is situated in the southern part of the county, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway. It was first laid out by the railroad company, about one mile east of the present location, but through the efforts of Messrs. Morris, Smith, Black, Hill, and other gentlemen, it was removed to the present site, and the name changed to Blairtown, in honor of Hon. John I. Blair, a New York capitalist, who was at that time largely interested in the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad. The present town was surveyed and platted by the railroad company, in the Winter of 1861-'2. It was incorporated as a town in October, 1868, and Joseph Houch was elected its first mayor. There is not much that is interesting or remarkable connected with its early history, as its growth was at first quite slow but has steadily increased until it now has a population of some eight or nine hundred. The town is well laid out with good wide streets, and built principally on a rising slope, while the mills, warehouses, elevators, railroad depot, and a portion of the business houses, are lying at the foot. The inhabitants are an enterprising and intelligent class of people, as is most clearly shown by the interest they manifest in the social and intellectual privileges of the present day. It has a good graded school, employing four teachers, and a well conducted Academy or Seminary under the management of the German Presbyterian Reform Church, seven church organizations, three of whom have good church edifices; while the Masons and Odd Fellows both have thoroughly organized and flourishing lodges. The town at present contains six dry goods and general variety stores, two hardware and agricultural implement houses, and one exclusive seed and implement store, one drug and two jewelry stores, two bakeries, two hotels, one tailor and two stove shops, three grain elevators, and one flouring mill, four blacksmith and two wagon shops, two lumber yards, one bank, one printing office, two furniture houses, one meat and one harness shop, five lawyers and three physicians.

The Blairstown Advocate, was established February 13, 1872, by S. W. Grove, who conducted it until May 15, 1874, when he sold to the present proprietor, L. H. Barnes, who is making it a lively and efficient local paper, and is securing an excellent patronage.

SHELLSBURG.

This enterprising town is pleasantly situated, mostly, on a gentle slope on the north side of Bear Creek, some ten miles southeast of Vinton, on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad. On the west, the country soon opens out into an undulating open prairie, while on the east small timber, or what is generally termed oak openings, extend for some two miles, until the body of heavy timber bordering the Cedar is reached. The town was laid out by Jacob Cantonwine, who, immigrating from Pennsylvania in 1842, settled here, and some twelve years later laid out the town, and named it after Shellsburg, Pa. The first settlers were mostly Pennsylvania Dutch, most of whom have since left. The growth of the town has always been slow, but has gradually increased until it now has a population of some six or seven hundred. The Methodists have a church building, and a large membership, as also have the Baptists, while the Presbyterians, Universalists, and several other denominations, are well represented; hold regular services and each conduct flourishing Sunday schools. The educational facilities have not been neglected, and are fully equal to most similar towns in the state. The Masons and Odd Fellows are represented by sound flourishing lodges. The town contains some six general stores, three drug stores, three or four groceries, two hardware and agricultural implement stores, one flouring mill, two hotels, and the usual number of shoemakers, millinery shops, insurance agents, physicians, etc. The town supports one printing office, where the Benton County Recorder, a neat and readable local paper is published, weekly, by W. H. Brinkerhoff.

NORWAY OR FLORENCE.—This is an enterprising town containing some four hundred and fifty or five hundred inhabitants, and is situated in the southeast part of the county, on the C. & N. W. Ry. A station was located here in 1863, and at the request of Osburn Tuttle, who donated five acres of land to the company, it was called Norway, in honor of his "fatherland." The following year he laid out the town on the north side of the railroad. Considerable feeling has existed between the people and the railroad company, as the people wish the name changed to Florence, to correspond with the township, which the railroad company can not do without forfeiting the five acres of land donated to them; hence the station is still called Norway, and the town is known as Florence. It is beautifully located, on a gradually ascending bluff, from the top of which a fine view of the surrounding country can be obtained. The first settler was O. B. Dutton, who came as railroad agent, and lived in one of the company's railroad cars until he could build himself a house. This he soon did, and occupied the same for station, residence and store, putting in a small general stock, which were the first in the place. The second settler was Joseph May, a blacksmith; the third, L. W. Harper; and the fourth, A. Atkinson, who also opened a store in the Spring, 1865, before which time several buildings had been erected. The first death was a little son of O. B. Dutton, while the first birth was Margaret Harper, and the second, Thomas Dutton. There are three churches, Baptist, Methodist and Catholic, and good public schools, which are well sustained. There is also a good masonic lodge, having a large membership. The business interests are represented by five general merchandise stores, two hardware, and one agricultural implement house, one jewelry store, one steam flouring mill, one elevator, three blacksmith and two wagon shops, one harness shop, and one livery stable, two physicians, hotel, milliner shops, etc., etc.

WAPELLO COUNTY.

This county derives its name from Wapello, a subordinate chief of the Sac and Fox Indians, who occupied this section of country immediately previous to the advent of the whites. The soil is generally a loam, somewhat firmer than is common in this part of Iowa, and rather less capable of enduring severe drought. The Des Moines River, entering at the northwest corner and passing out at the southeast, traverses the county diagonally, separating it into two nearly equal parts. In the northeast part rolling prairies predominate, and the soil and attendant conditions of culture are better adapted to the needs of the husbandman. In the southwest part much of the surface is hilly and heavily timbered, the soil a firm clay, and a smaller proportion of the entire area susceptible of satisfactory tillage.

Wheat, corn, oats, rye and the grasses are the principal crops; potatoes and other vegetables are likewise extensively cultivated. Of fruits, apples and cherries are the more abundantly raised, while peaches, pears and plums rank next in amount and importance.

COAL.

Geological explorations demonstrate the fact that at least half the county is underlaid with inexhaustible beds of bituminous coal. All along the Des Moines River it exists in vast deposits, while near Eddyville a large vein forms part of the river bed. In the hills, south of the river, it has been found in many places, and also in the vicinity generally of the smaller streams. According to the census returns for the current year, twenty-four coal banks are now open in the county, in which two hundred and thirty-six hands are employed. The number of tons mined in 1874, are reported to have been 518,644, valued at $1,041,200. Persons conversant with the facts affirm that the actual number of hands employed, and tons mined, far exceed the figures stated. Nearly all this coal is of excellent quality, and the veins, usually thick, being near the surface are easily worked. Large amounts are annually consumed by the locomotives of the adjacent railroads; other large amounts find a ready market otherwise within the county and beyond its limits.

Concretionery limestone, excellent for building purposes, and from which a superior quality of lime is manufactured, abounds along the Des Moines. Of fire clay, and clay and sand suitable for the making of brick, the supply is also ample.

RAILROADS.

The railroad facilities of the county are scarcely excelled by those of any other interior county in the State. Direct connection is had with Burlington, Chicago and the East, by means of the Burlington and Missouri River division of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad. Like connection with St. Louis and the southeast and southwest, is had by the Northern Division of the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern Railroad, terminating at Ottumwa. The Keokuk and Des Moines Railroad additionally passes through the county, following the valley of the Des Moines River. All passenger trains of the Central Railroad of Iowa, which has for its southern terminus Albia, in the adjoining county of Monroe, also run to and from Ottumwa, over the track of the Keokuk and Des Moines Railroad, which intersects that of the Central at Eddyville. The Southwestern Division of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad crosses diagonally the southeast corner of the county. The Cedar Rapids and St. Louis Railroad, now in course of construction, and nearly completed, from Ottumwa to Sigourney in Keokuk County, is intended to form a junction with the St Louis, Kansas City and Northern Railroad, at Ottumwa.

EARLY HISTORY.

On May 1, 1843, that part of Iowa west of the west line of Jefferson County, adjoining Wapello County on the east, and which was last in possession of the Sac and Fox Indians, passed pursuant to previous cession into the possession of the United States Government. Before night of this day several hundred settlers were actually inhabiting the county. The greater part of these had squatted along the line of Wapello County, in Jefferson County, preparatory to passing into Wapello County as soon as midnight of April 30th should arrive, which moment was awaited very impatiently. Prior to May 1, of the year named, whites were not permitted by the terms of the treaty, to settle within the bounds of the "New Purchase." At the exact hour guns were fired to denote the beginning of the duly appointed day. Instantly Wapello County was peopled by busy incomers, who at once made extraordinary preparations to maintain an indisputed right to variously selected parts of the newly acquired soil. New wi-camps were built to add in being accurate with a show of justice; piles of dry wood were fired to mark boundaries by, and torches glared in the midnight gloom as the work of defining and locating claims—each embracing from eighty to three hundred and twenty acres—proceeded by setting stakes in the prairie, and by blazing trees in the timber. Quite naturally much of this work was done very inartistically. Many of the boundary lines were disjointed, others were crooked, and still others encroached one upon another.

This state of affairs inevitably led to many disturbances called "claim difficulties," for the peaceable adjustment of which "claim committees" were organized. Thus a claim made and held in good faith, was as sacredly protected as are the firesides of the present inhabitants. The judgment of these crudely formed but necessary tribunals, was enforced by summary process. This process was generally a plain written statement of the opinion of the claim committee, setting forth the right of the injured party and the wrong complained of, and an order to the wrong-doer to comply with the judgment rendered. In default of such compliance the power of the county was invoked to enforce the judgment instantly. From these judgments there was no appeal nor any stay of execution. Obedience to their requirements was therefore customary. Occasionally, however, insubordination was manifested, and the judgment disregarded. When this occurred, war, without any formal declaration, resulted on the spot.

"THE DAHLONEGA WAR."

As an example of these wars, that of the "Dahlonega War," is the most conspicious. It originated with James Woody, who came from near Dahlonega, Lumpkin County, Georgia, and was one of the earliest settlers of the county. Having made a claim, now the farm of Enos King, near Dahlonega, he sold to Martin Koontz for $200 in gold and received the money. Afterwards, conceiving the price to be inadequate, he repented of the bargain, "jumped" the claim—re-occupied it—and took steps to prempt the land under the laws of Congress. Erecting a cabin thereon, he was warned off; failing to go, the action of the claim committee was invoked, when he was again ordered to surrender possession. His refusal so to do was of course a signal to arms. The friends of Koontz, about sixty in number, well provided with various weapons, repairing to the cabin erected by Woody, and finding him in it, speedily demolished it over his head. This action was quickly followed by his ejectment from the claim. Thereupon, the friends of Woody rallying in turn, between the opposing forces a most desperate fight ensued, in which one of the Woody party was killed.

This war was succeeded by an effort on the part of the civil authorities, at the instance of Woody, to inflict upon the leaders of the Koontz party the penalty of outraged law. Wapello County being then attached to Jefferson County, for judicial—but not for military—purposes, process was sued out in the latter county, and placed in the hands of Deputy Sheriff Woodard, who came from Fairfield to make arrests. On reaching the seat of war, this officer found that men banded together by the strong ties of honor and courage, to protect their rights, were not to be arrested in the ordinary way. Himself unequal to the duty, he summoned to his aid a constable of the town, but without avail. In short, Deputy Sheriff Woodard, instead of arresting the resisting offenders, was himself arrested by them. Keeping him over night, the next morning they brought him out, placed him on his horse, and escorted him to the public square in Dahlonega, where, riding around him, with their trusty rifles in hand, they gave him as they passed a most respectful military salute, which he as respectfully returned. This ceremony ended, the captain of the Koontz forces advanced and announced to the officer, that his captors having no further need of his services, he was at liberty to go. When they wanted him again, they would send for him. Should he return until thus summoned, they suggested to him the propriety of executing his last will and testament before leaving home. Whereupon the officer departed hastily, and was seen thereabouts no more.

The prosecutions instituted in Jefferson County against the Koontz men remained undisposed of until Wapello County was organized, when, from some oversight in legislation, Jefferson County lost jurisdiction of the cases, and they were dismissed. Thus ended the "Dahlonega War," and its consequences, Woody of course losing the claim.

ORGANIZATION.

Pursuant to an act of the Territorial Legislature, approved February 13, 1844, "The County of Wapello" was "organized from and after the first day of March next" thereafter. This act declared that the Clerk of the District Court of the county, aided by the Sheriff of the county—the latter officer appointed by the act—should be the organizing officers. The duty of the Clerk—Henry B. Hendershott, was to appoint judges and clerks of election; fix the places of voting; receive, open, and canvass the returns, declare the result, and issue certificates of election. The duty of the Sheriff—James M. Peck, was to post notices of the time and places of holding the election, deliver to the judges and clerks the poll books, etc.

The first election was held April 1, 1844, which being "all fools' day," some joking was indulged in, at the expense of the candidates. James M. Montgomery, Lewis F. Temple, and Charles F. Harrow, were elected County Commissioners; Charles Overman was elected Commissioners' Clerk; Paul C. Jeffries, Judge of Probate; Joseph Hayne, Sheriff; James Caldwell, Assessor; Thomas Foster, Treasurer; Milton J. Spurlock, Recorder; Hugh George, Surveyor; with a number of Justices and Constables. Of the officers here named, Paul C. Jeffries, now eighty-six years of age, Joseph Hoyne, and Thomas Foster are the only survivors.

Joseph B. Davis, of Washington County, John H. Randolph, of Henry County, and Solomon Jackson, of Lee County, commissioners for the purpose, appointed by the Territorial Legislature, located the seat of justice for the county, in May, 1844, on the present site of the city of Ottumwa, a short distance south of the geographical center of the county.

On the 20th of the same month the Board of County Commissioners, who were at this period the fountain head of justice and equity in the county, convened for the first time for the transaction of business. In June another session was held, when townships were organized, points named where elections should be held, a sale of town lots ordered, and a ferry license granted to J. P. Eddy, then proprietor of Eddyville, which ferry is said to have been the first ferry established in the county. The first tax levied by the board, on the 4th of July, 1844, was as follows: Five mills on all personal property, a poll tax of fifty cents, one mill for territorial purposes, and a road tax of fifteen cents on $100.

The term of the District Court of the United States, within and for the County of Wapello, and Territory of Iowa, was appointed to be held at the court house at Ottumwa, on the 16th of September, 1844. The claim committees that had been appointed by the settlers to arbitrate claims in dispute, could not reconcile matters satisfactorily. Litigants, lawyers, jurors and dram-sellers therefore looked forward to this term of court with much interest, expecting to be benefited thereby in more ways than one. On the first day of the term, the Judge, Hon. Charles Mason, of Burlington, failed to appear. The old red coach that weekly brought the mail, brought no intelligence of him on the second day. As whisky was cheap and business stagnant with lawyers and claimants, they exhibited their muscles in a free fight. On the third day Judge Mason arrived and the court was duly organized. The officers in attendance were Henry B. Hendershott, Clerk, and Joseph Hayne, Sheriff. The persons summoned as Grand Jurors at this term were James Wier, George W. Knight, Seth Ogg, Robert H. Ivers, Thomas H. Pendleton, Henry Smith, William Brin, Lewis F. Temple, John Humphreys, Martin Fisher, Paul C. Jeffries, John Fuller, Findley Lindsey, William Pritchett, William C. McIntire, John Clark, James R. Boggs, John Kirkpatrick, John Murray, Isam Garrett, Shannon Hackney, Philaster Lee and Thomas Wright. William A. Wissell, Peter Barnett, Richard Fisher and Jacob T. Hackney, talesmen, were added to the jury to supply in part vacancies occasioned by the non-attendance of Messrs. Ivers, Fisher, Fuller, Clark and Kirkpatrick. James Wier was appointed foreman, and George R. Warden, bailiff in charge. Thus opened the first term of the first district court, both on the part of the Territory of Iowa, to administer the laws of the Territory, and on the part of the United States to administer the laws of Congress. The sessions of the court were held in a building constructed of smooth hewn logs, a story and a half high, with windows and doors, and a roof covered with shingles; situated on the lot where the First National Bank of Ottumwa now stands.

The first judicial act of the court, after its organization, was the disposal of the case of "Josiah Smart, agent," who sued "for the use of S. S. Phelps vs. Silas Orton." It was a case of assumpsit, in which the damages were laid at $500. On coming up for a hearing by consent of the parties it was dismissed, at the cost of the defendant, taxed at seven dollars and fifty-two and one-fourth cents. The first jury trial had at this term was in the case of "James Poor, for the use of James Moody, appellee, vs. Demps Grigsby, appellant." The jury consisted of Samuel Magee, John Anderson, H. G. Hendrick, Jeremiah Starr, Benjamin Jones, Benjamin H. Russell, Rizen Howard, Franklin Brown, Plemworth Mortimer, George Harmon, Daniel Denison and Benjamin Sunderland. They found a verdict for the defendant, whereupon the court gave judgment accordingly for twenty-three dollars and fifty-four cents. At the next succeeding term, in April, 1845, the case again came up to be heard on a writ of error, when by agreement of all parties it was dismissed at the cost of the plaintiff, taxed at one dollar.

So far as the record shows the grand jury returned but one indictment, which was for larceny. The defendant was arraigned, and pleading not guilty, was bound over for trial at the next term of court. At the latter term the trial was further postponed one term longer. Finally prosecution of the case was abandoned and the defendant discharged.

September 19, 1844, on the fourth day of this term, John Wall and George Wall, natives of England, and late subjects of Queen Victoria, were fully invested with the rights and privileges of American citizens. These were the first naturalizations in the county, and the only ones at this term of court. On the same day William Snodgrass was appointed Crier to the Court.

J. G. Hall, of Burlington, I. N. Lewis and James H. Cowles, of Keosauqua, and George May and W. H. Galbraith, of Ottumwa, are shown to have been in attendance as attorneys of the court. On the last day of the term Henry B. Hendershott presented to the court his resignation in writing of the office of clerk. Thereupon John W. Ross was appointed his successor.

The first record book furnished by the United States in which to enter the proceedings of the court, is still in a good state of preservation. It consists of about half a quire of very inferior foolscap paper, stitched together with white thread and covered with a very coarse kind of brown paper.

The first probate proceeding of record in the county is the bond of William Crawford, administrator of the estate of Thomas Crawford, deceased, in the penal sum of $500. John Stout united in the execution of the bond as surety. Both bond and surety were approved September 2, 1844, by Paul C. Jeffries, Probate Judge. Thomas Crawford, whose estate was administered upon, was the member of the Woody party killed in the Dahlonega War as previously stated.

During the session of the Legislature of 1851, the County Commissioners' Court was abolished, and the office of County Judge created. Silas Osborn, the first county judge of Wapello County qualified August 12, 1851. The then probate judge at first not fully comprehending the situation, refused to give up the books and papers of his office to his newly created and official successor. After two weeks of mature deliberation, however, his duty in the premises became more clearly apparent to his understanding, and he quietly delivered over the documents.

SUPERVISORS.

In 1861, also by legislative general enactment, the supervision of the financial and other business affairs of the county, previously exercised by the County Judge, became vested in a County Board of Township Supervisors, and the office of County Judge was abolished. At the first session of the board, held at the Court House in Ottumwa, January 7, of this year, the following supervisors appeared and were qualified: From Adams Township, William Cloyd; Agency, Thomas Bedwell; Center, George Gillaspy; Cass, George F. Myers; Competine, A. Major; Dahlonega, J. C. Hinsey; Green, William Knight; Highland, Silas Osborn; Keokuk, William C. McIntire; Polk, Lauren Rose; Pleasant, George Neville; Richland, Aaron Harlan; Washington, Moses C. Israel. Supervisor Gillaspy, of Center Township, was elected president of the board, and Hugh Brown, Clerk of the District Court, discharged the duties of clerk ex-officio. The terms of the members respectively, determined by lot, were Messrs. Cloyd, Bedwell, Gillaspy, Major, McIntire, Harlan, and Israel, one year each; Messrs. Myers, Hinsey, Knight, Osborn, Rose, and Neville, two years each. Peter Knox, supervisor elect of Columbia Township, being absent, the clerk drew for him a like term of two years. On the third day of the session the Honorable Edward H. Stiles, of Ottumwa, was elected attorney of the board. In 1871, by further legislative enactment, the township system of electing supervisors was succeeded by that of a board of three supervisors, to serve for the term of three years, one of the number to be elected annually by the county at large. Henry Canfield, Henry Reinhard and Thomas J. Nelson, composing the new board in this year, drew terms of service as follows: Mr. Nelson, one year; Mr. Reinhard, two years; and Mr. Canfield, three years. Mr. Canfield was chosen chairman of the board, and George D. Hackworth, County Auditor was ex-officio clerk.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The first term of the Circuit Court of Wapello County opened at the Court House in Ottumwa, March 8, 1869, at two o'clock in the afternoon. Present, Honorable Robert Sloan, of Keosauqua, Van Buren County, judge; Thomas Bedwell, sheriff; and L. M. Godley, clerk. Without transacting any business the court adjourned until the next morning. The first cause that appears to have received judicial notice at this term, was that of "Alfred H. Nice vs. D. H. Chilcote and T. B. Chilcote. Petition at law." On motion it was stricken from the docket. The first case in which a judgment was rendered, at the same term, was a suit upon an account, entitled "William W. Paul vs. T. C. Woodward." Judgment by default was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $1,017.69 and costs. Isaac Rogers, W. S. Carter, A. Emory, Henry Canfield, M. M. Lane, Jr., R. D. Williams, Joseph Luder, William Reeves, Sr., Harvey Tindall, Isaac Logan, Samuel Ryan and W. F. Lyon were the first petit jurors empaneled; in the case of "Lawrence & Chambers vs. J. H. Ward and the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company," W. S. Carter was foreman of the jury. The suit was brought to recover the value of a sack of coffee delivered by the plaintiffs, at the freight house of defendants, at Ottumwa, and lost. The jury found for the plaintiffs and assessed the damages at thirty-eight dollars and seventy-eight cents.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The county seal first used in all the courts was an American half-dollar dipped in ink.

Recurring to the early history of the county it is worthy of note that for some time succeeding the first settlements, the inhabitants in the southeast part obtained their mail matter from Keosauqua, Van Buren County; those in the central and other parts of the county, from Fairfield, Jefferson County. At this time news from Washington City was usually three weeks in reaching the settlers, and news from Europe from four to six months, while news from other foreign lands was seldom received. The first post-office in the county was established at Ottumwa in the Spring of 1844, and Judge Paul C. Jeffries was the first postmaster. The mail route extended from Keosauqua by the way of Agency City, and the mail was carried weekly, on horseback.

At this time also, mills were even more distant than post-offices. Moffit's mill, on Skunk River, at Augusta in Des Moines County, seventy-five or eighty miles northwestwardly, and Meeks' mill, in Van Buren County, forty to fifty miles southeastwardly were principally patronized by the settlers. Six and eight days were frequently spent in these milling trips.

The first birth in the county was that of Mary Ann Smith, daughter of David P. Smith, early in 1843, and the first death that of Mary Ann Hall, daughter of David and Rebecca Hall, who died in the Summer of the same year. The Reverend B. A. Spaulding, a Congregational minister, preached the funeral sermon, and the citizens very generally paid their last respects to the young maiden whose life had terminated so early.

On the 15th of March, 1844, the first marriage license was issued to Andrew Crawford and Mary Ann Montgomery, both minors, upon the joint request in writing of Thomas Crawford, father of Andrew, and of Peter Walker, guardian of Miss Montgomery. The marriage ceremony was performed the same day by R. R. Jones, a justice of the peace, at the house of Mr. Walker. The age of the bride was sixteen years, that of the groom nineteen years. All the parties were residents of Wapello County. The second marriage license was issued on the same day to Doctor C. W. Phelps and Miss Elizabeth C. Weaver, both of lawful age and both residents of the county. It does not appear on record when, or by whom, they were married.

The first legal instrument of record in the county is an assignment by Charles F. Harrow to his son-in-law, Jesse Brookshire, of a lease held by the former of "the Baker Farm, situated in Wapello County"—one mile east of Agency City, on which farm the assignor then resided; also of a lease of part of a farm known as "Widow Street's Reservation." The consideration of the assignment was the sum of $79.50 and that the family of Harrow should live with and form part of Brookshire's family, and be supported by him until December 20, 1844. The instrument was acknowledged before Green B. Savery, a justice of the peace, witnessed by George May, and is dated April 29, 1844. The date of record is not noted.

The persons who first acquired titles to land from the United States, in the county, were James Longshore and John Caldwell, both on the same day -September 16, 1844. The former purchased lots 6, 7 and 8, and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 4, 71, 13. The latter purchased the east half of the northeast quarter of section 25, 72, 13.

The first physician in the county was Doctor Charles C. Warden, from Kentucky, whose advent occurred in 1843. His practice extended to nearly all inhabited parts of the county, in consequence of which he was many times called to ride long distances to visit patients, over bridgeless streams, in pelting storms, and with no guide through the starless nights. Subsequently he became, and still remains, a dry goods merchant in Ottumwa. The first lawyer that settled in the county was William H. Galbraith, long since deceased, who also came in 1843.

To the Reverend T. M. Kirkpatrick, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, apparently belongs the honor of having preached the first sermon in the county, on Keokuk prairie, south of the Des Moines River, just below Ottumwa, in an Indian wigwam made of bark, early in the same eventful year, 1843. Under the ministry of this preacher, also, was organized the first Methodist Episcopal class in the county, in 1844. It numbered five members, and was led by H. P. Graves.

Between Ezekiel Rush, still living in the vicinity, and a Mr. Tansey, who officiated as a teacher at Dahlonega, with the presumption in favor of the former, lies the honor of having taught the first school. Sabbath Schools were organized at an early day at Agency City, Eddyville, Ottumwa, Dahlonega, and elsewhere. Of these, one organized at the house of the Reverend W. A. Nye, near the present site of Chillicothe, is thought to have been the first. It was organized mainly through the efforts of G. F. Myers, in June, 1845.

At the Presidential election in 1852, there were 1,465 votes cast in the county, and the assessed value of property in the same year was over a million of dollars.

In the war of the Rebellion Wapello County was represented by a little over sixteen hundred officially recorded volunteers, including a little over two hundred veteran re-enlistments. A very creditable exhibit of patriotism, certainly, for a county having a total population, in 1860, of 14,518 only. For the relief of such families of volunteers and a very few drafted men as were thus left destitute, a special relief fund was created in September, 1862, by the Board of Supervisors. By means of a special tax levied in that and other years, supplemented by generous private contributions, many thousands of dollars in money were raised and appropriated to the needs of the worthy beneficiaries. Contributions of sanitary and other stores made by the citizens of the county for the relief and comfort of their absent kindred and friends in the army, were equally liberal. From 1860 till the close of the war, party feeling in the county was bitter, but no overt act occurred against the Government. At a session of the Board of Supervisors held in June, 1863, a resolution was adopted pronouncing it to be the duty of the military authorities and Governor of the state to disband, without delay, a volunteer force previously raised for military border service in Wapello and other counties on the southern border of the State; also, pronouncing it to be the duty of the Legislature to repeal the law organizing such force, at the earliest opportunity. The reason assigned by the Board for this somewhat extraordinary action, was the alleged absence of any necessity for such a law, and its tendency to incite raids by Missouri bandits, upon Iowa border counties, without any compensating benefit.

COUNTY BUILDINGS AND INSTITUTIONS.

The county buildings of Wapello County consist of a court house and a jail. The former building is a large but not architecturally imposing brick structure, occupying an elevated and convenient site on the north west corner of Fourth and Court Streets in a well settled portion of the City of Ottumwa. The lower part is apportioned to the use of the principal county officers, and the upper part appropriated mainly to the court room and appurtenant offices. The building was erected in 1855, at a cost of about $13,000. The county jail, occupying an adjoining lot in the rear, on Court Street, is a small, square, two-story brick building, equally unpretentious in style. It was erected in 1857, at a cost, of about $9,000. Several attempts have been made in the county, at different times, to obtain the sanction of the tax-paying voters, for the purchase of larger and more suitable grounds, and the erection thereon of buildings of more modern construction and better adapted to the use of the county. In every instance, however, the proposition has been largely rejected.

The only public institution in the county is a Poor Farm, which has the reputation of answering literally in description to its official designation. It consists of about one hundred and fifty acres of inferior land situated on the north bank of the Des Moines River, about three miles southeast of Ottumwa. The buildings upon the Farm are likewise of a very inferior character. Various suggestions and resolutions have been offered in the Board of Supervisors of the county, from time to time, with a view to the sale, leasing, and exchange of this undesirable property. All these, nevertheless, have failed to accomplish the purpose intended.

County Agricultural Society.—The Wapello County Agricultural Society was organized January 24th, 1852. The officers chosen at this time were J. W. Hedrick, President; G. D. Hackworth, Vice-President; J. W. Norris, Secretary, and Bela White, Treasurer. At the first meeting eighty-nine members were enrolled, much interest being manifested in the society. The first Fair was held on the farm of Joseph Hayne, near Ottumwa, October 14th, 1853. The attendance was large, and the Fair very attractive to the farmers and stock-growers in the county. Many books and about seventy dollars in money were distributed as premiums. A month later five acres of land were purchased, a mile northeast of Ottumwa, for a permanent ground for exhibitions. A donation of $110, received soon afterward from the State, gave increased effect to the operations of the society in the following seasons. In 1857, the original Fair Ground having become too small for the greatly enlarged needs of the society, was sold at a fair price, and another ground, ten acres in extent, purchased, fenced, and fitted for future occupation. Annually from that time to the present Fairs have been held, which in all essential particulars have been creditable to the people of the county.

NEWSPAPERS.

The pioneer newspaper of the county was the Des Moines Courier, the first number of which was issued August 8th, 1848. J. H. D. Street and R. H. Warden, the publishers, with an ox team transported the press from Keokuk to Ottumwa. It was started as a Whig organ, with a circulation less than two hundred, and was at the time the most western paper in the United States. In January, 1851, Mr. Warden became sole proprietor, and so remained until December, 1855, when he was succeeded by James W. Norris, who in the Summer of 1866 was in turn succeeded by N. D. Musselman, W. H. Caldwell, and W. C. Holden. In August, 1869, Gen. John M. Hedrick and Maj. Augustus H. Hamilton, the former present United States Supervisor of Internal Revenue for the District of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and Dacotah, and the latter present Postmaster of Ottumwa, acquired the existing proprietorship. In January, 1857, by the substitution of the prefix Ottumwa, for that of "Des Moines," the title of the Courier was partially changed. A daily edition, started April 5th, 1865, has a large and increasing circulation. As a consistent and persistent expouent, under all proprietors, first of Whig and since of Republican politics, the Courier has ever exerted in the county and state an influence greater than is commonly exerted by local journals.

The second newspaper in the county was entitled the Des Moines Republic. It was published at Ottumwa, by James Baker & Co., and the first number was issued in July, 1850. In less than two years thereafter it had passed out of existence.

The immediate successor of the Des Moines Republic was the Ottumwa Democratic Statesman, in 1858, of which G. D. R. Boyd was the publisher. J. H. D. Street next conducted it awhile, then—in 1861—H. B. Hendershott and E. L. Burton, who changed the name to that of the Ottumwa Democratic Union. In 1862 Mr. Hendershott retired, and S. B. Evans, now of the Ottumwa Democrat, became associated with Mr. Burton in its conduct. Thereupon a further change of name occurred, that of Democratic Mercury being substituted for that of Democratic Union. In the Winter of 1863-4 Mr. Evans retired, and S. H. Burton united with his brother, E. L. Burton, in the publication of the paper. In October, 1865, the latter Mr. Burton gave place to Russell Higgins, and he to Mr. Evans again, in the following month of November. In March 1868, Mr. Evans a second time, and finally severed his connection with the Mercur leaving Mr. S. H. Burton sole editor and proprietor. A few months later the publication of the paper was permanently discontinued.

In March, 1868, an exceedingly ultra Democratic newspaper entitled The Copperhead, previously published at Pella, Marion County, was removed to Ottumwa. M. V. B. Bennett, H. M. McCully and S. B. Evans here continued its publication until December of that year, when Mr. Bennett withdrew. In December, 1870, Mr. McCully also withdrew. Mr. Evans, on thus succeeding to the sole editorship and proprietorship, immediately changed the name The Copperhead to that of the Ottumwa Democrat. Under the able and vigorous conduct of Mr. Evans the Democrat "still lives," and within the extended sphere of its political influence exerts a controlling power. A daily edition of the Democrat, which promises to become a successful and remunerative publication, was begun in the Spring of the current year.

The Ottumwa Journal, a German weekly newspaper, established by A. Danquard, in 1871, has a considerable circulation among persons of that nationality in the county and vicinity.

The Spirit of the Times, a weekly independent newspaper, was established at Ottumwa, by G. F. Foster, O. C. Graves, and N. M. Ives, constituting the Ottumwa Printing Company, in April, 1874.

The Eddyville Free Press, J. W. Norris, editor, an independent newspaper, was started by a printing company at Eddyville, in 1853. Three years later it was changed to the Commercial, B. H. Palmer, editor. Three years later still it died. Then a period of three years intervened with no paper but the Observer—J. T. Cooke, editor, which continued three months. At the end of these nine years, in 1862, Melick and McConnell started the Eddyville Star. The latter soon afterward went to the war, leaving the former alone. Upon the completion of yet another cycle of three years—in 1865, S. W. Sherman succeeded Mr. Melick, and in August of that year the Star forever disappeared. In March, 1866, Melick and Bitner started the Independent. Clement and Craig subsequently started the Gazette. Neither survived long. In 1869 the Eddyville Advertiser was established by W. L. Palmer, and is still conducted by the same publisher. Politics, Republican. The Eddyville Advance, of Democratic politics, was started by W. A. Fast, in June, 1875.

The Agency City Newsboy was started in February, 1871, by S. A. Morehead, with the office material of the suspended Eddyville Gazette. After a feeble existence of about six months the Newsboy expired, and his remains were conveyed to Batavia, Jefferson County. In the Fall of 1873 the Agency Independent, of Republican politics made its appearance, C. L. Morehouse, publisher, who still conducts it.

OTTUMWA.

Ottumwa, the county seat, is pleasantly situated on the north side of the Des Moines River, very nearly in the geographical center of the county. Here intersect the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Keokuk and Des Moines, and the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern Railroads. A large part of the city site, immediately on the river, is level, but sufficiently elevated to be secure from freshets. It is principally occupied for railroad, manufacturing and general business purposes. Back of this part suddenly rises to a considerable height a range of hills, exclusively the locality of private residences, including many handsome and costly mansions. Views more attractive or extensive than are here obtained seldom lend a charm to western scenery.

The town was laid out in May, 1843, by the Appanoose Rapids Company, composed of James R. McNeite, Urial Biggs, John D. Elbert, Paul C. Jeffries, Thomas D. Evans, Hugh George, David Glass, John Lewis, William Dewey, Sewell Kinney and Thomas Devin. This company, previously, in 1842, surveyed the county to find the center, at which point they anticipated the building of a city so soon as the Indian title to the land should become extinguished. When this occurred, in the following year, they established their claim to the site of the town by instant occupation and continuous possession. Of about four hundred lots first laid out, each alternate lot was donated to the county, upon the condition that the county seat should here be located. In May, 1844, the commissioners appointed to locate the county capital, in the exercise of their evidently sound judgment did locate it upon the identical quarter-section whereon the Appanoose Rapids Company had founded the new town to which they had well given the name Ottumwa. This name—the Indian name of the place—is of somewhat doubtful signification. By some versed in Indian terms, it is thought to mean "the place of the lone chief," by others, "the lone village;" by still others, "tumbling water," or "rebel rapids." The latter meaning accords with the apparent understanding of the term by the Rapids Company, who, in their articles of incorporation are described as "proprietors of the property or claim near and adjoining the Appanoose Rapids of the Des Moines River, known by the Indian name of 'Ottumwa.'" The county seat commissioners dubbed the town Lewisville. To this ville-anous appellation the Rapids Company, with creditable taste, of course objected. In persistently adhering to the original, very appropriate, and very beautiful name, they were fully sustained by a large majority of the settlers. In the following year the name Lousville was finally dropped, and the name Ottumwa permanently adopted.

Among the earliest settlers in Ottumwa were Doctor Charles C. Warden, Hugh George, William Dewey, Paul C. Jeffries, David Glass, S. S. Norris, David Hall, Sewell Kinney, David P. Smith, John Myers, David Armstrong, Heman P. Graves, William H. Galbraith, Levi Buckwalter and Reverend R. A. Spaulding.

In 1844, the town contained but nine log cabins, and one small frame house built by Elder Jameson, a Methodist preacher of the pioneer type, who had several charges. In the same year S. Richards established the first store in a log structure not far from the corner of Court and Main Streets. It was under the charge of Heman P. Graves. About this time also the Ottumwa House—the first public house for the accommodation of travelers—was built, first of logs, but afterwards clapboarded and made to answer the purposes of a fine hotel. The first landlord of this house was David Hale, the owner.

During the year 1845, the Appanoose Rapids Dam and Milling Company was organized for the building of mills and the improvement of the Des Moines River water power. A county jail for temporary use, and the first brick house, the latter erected by Dow Davis, were prominent additions to local improvements in this year.

About 1846 an Israelite established the first drug store, which was well patronized. The next year Mr. Graves introduced the first cook-stove that superseded bake kettles and tin reflectors.

In 1847 and '48 fevers and other disorders incident to settlement in a new country travelled on the Des Moines River; in nearly every family the sick outnumbered the well. In 1848 several flatboats loaded with grain at Ottumwa, and others at Eddyville, went down the river to Keokuk, where the grain was re-shipped to St. Louis on steamboats. In 1848, also, Ottumwa Lodge No. 9, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows was organized with seven charter members. The lodge met in a hall owned by John [illegible].

In 1849, Empire Lodge, No. 9, of the Masonic Order, was established with thirty charter members. The "California fever" carried off many Ottumwans to the golden coast, likewise in this year.

In 1850, Doctor Warden had a store in Ottumwa, the goods for which came from New York City by sea to New Orleans, thence by steamboat to Keokuk, and thence by wagon to their destination.

In 1851, Ottumwa became an incorporated town under a general city and town incorporation act of the State Legislature. The town officers chosen at this time were, George Gillaspy, President of the Board of Trustees; Bertrand Jones, Clerk; Joseph A. Leighton, Assessor, and C. A. Taylor, Marshal. The Trustees were J. W. Caldwell, A. Mudge, Silas Osborn and John Myers, Sr. This year witnessed also the erection of Methodist and Congregational Churches. In the Spring and Summer of 1851, incessant rains caused the Des Moines River to rise ten feet higher than ever before known to "the oldest inhabitant," white or Indian. Boats navigated the principal streets of Ottumwa and Eddyville, and great destruction of property resulted.

On the 17th of January, 1852, was held the first of many subsequent railroad meetings in Ottumwa. On this occasion aid was sought to be given to the Lafayette, Burlington and Council Bluffs Railroad project, which, like others, proved a failure. Thereafter, during several years, various schemes for the construction of railroads passing through Ottumwa created much excitement in the county.

In 1855 the present court house was built, and the present jail in 1857. In the latter year, moreover, the city was organized, under a special charter. The first city officers were: Duane F. Gaylord, Mayor; James D. Devin, Recorder; Erastus Washburn, Treasurer; S. W. Summers, Solicitor; Hosea B. Jones, Assessor; John A. Newman, Marshal; S. W. Hartwell, Engineer. Aldermen: First Ward—D. B. Abrahams, F. W. Hawley, and Thomas Bigham; Second Ward—H. P. Graves, A. Hawkins, and James Milligan; Third Ward—Charles Lawrence, William L. Orr, and J. A. Hammond.

In 1858 a Baptist church was built, mainly by the extraordinary efforts of the Reverend Mr. Worcester, a Baptist missionary preacher, who first bought the lot, mostly with his own earnings, and afterward contributed to the erection of the building mostly by his personal labor. He was pastor of the church for seven years, then retired from the ministry and engaged in business in the city.

In 1859 the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad was completed to Ottumwa, the first passenger train leaving the depot near the river on the 14th of August in that year. Also, in 1859, C. F. Blake laid out Blake's addition, a new and since very populous and important addition to the city. The publication of the first map of the city, by A. Hodge, surveyor, was another notable occurrence in this year.

In 1860 the Des Moines Valley Railroad, now the Keokuk and Des Moines Railroad, was completed to Ottumwa, by the aid, as in the case of the Burlington and Missouri River Road, of a liberal issue of Wapello County bonds.

Since 1860 Ottumwa has continued to advance steadily in population, wealth, trade, manufacturing, and general importance. The completion to this point, in 1870, of the North Missouri Railroad, now a part of the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern Railroad, thus affording direct connection with St. Louis, as well as with Chicago, gave increased impetus to the material progress of the city. For many years Ottumwa has done probably more business than any other city of its size in the state. It has long had a heavy wholesale trade with many of the southern counties of Iowa and northern counties of Missouri. This trade at present amounts to about $3,000,000 a year. Comparatively little capital employed in the city has come from abroad. The citizens having here made the most of their money in legitimate business, manifest their confidence in the stability of the city and the permanent growth of trade, by erecting substantial and costly buildings, constructed almost exclusively of brick.

Business Statistics.—The total amount of business done in Ottumwa may be summed up as follows: Wholesale trade, $3,000,000; retail grocery trade, $500,000; retail dry goods trade, $400,000; retail clothing trade, $200,000; retail meat trade, $130,000; retail hardware trade, $125,000; retail drug trade, $110,000; retail boot and shoe trade, $100,000; retail furniture trade, $80,000; retail agricultural implement trade, $70,000; retail sewing machine trade, $65,000; retail saddlery and harness trade, $60,000; retail stove and tinware trade, $50,000; retail music trade, $40,000; retail jewelry trade, $30,000; retail crockery trade, $20,000. If to these be added the grain, wool, and live stock trade, and various minor branches of business not above specified, the grand total trade of the city at the present time will be found to approximate very nearly, if not quite amount to $6,500,000.

Manufactures.—Among the principal manufacturing establishments in the city are one of agricultural implements, two breweries, two foundries, four of machinery, three grist mills, one planing mill, one plow manufactory, one saw mill, one sewing machine ruffler manufactory, one steam cigar-box manufactory, one show-case manufactory, four carriage and wagon manufactories; besides which others of the usual variety and of lesser importance abound. Two pork packing establishments in the city during the season, beginning November 1, 1874, and ending March 1, 1875, employed eighty men, and packed 35,000 hogs, doing an aggregate amount of business in the period named of about $500,000. Three lumber yards in the city do an annual business of $250,000.

Water Power.—A considerable fall in the Des Moines River at Ottumwa affords an immense water power, which is about to be made available for manufacturing and other purposes. To this end the Ottumwa Water Power Company was organized in March, 1875, with W. B. Bonnifield, President; A. H. Hamilton, Vice President; J. O. Briscoe, Secretary; C. F. Blake, Treasurer; and W. B. Bonnifield, C. F. Blake, A. H. Hamilton, W. Daggett, and D. Eaton, Directors. Capital stock, $100,000. The improvements contemplated will consist of dams across the river, and head and tail races across a bend of the river at this point, about three-quarters of a mile in length. A fall of water ten and a half feet, or 2,460 horse power, will thus be obtained. The company will also erect an industrial building in which water power will be rented to small manufacturers. The entire improvements will be completed by means of present cash subscriptions to the amount of $75,000, and of an additional sum of $25,000, to be paid by the city for the use of water and incidental power, for fire and sanitary purposes. No bonds will be issued nor permanent indebtedness incurred.

Churches and Schools.—Ten church buildings in Ottumwa are occupied by two white and one colored organizations of the Methodist Episcopal denomination, and one organization each of the Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, Protestant Episcopal, Roman Catholic, Christian, and Swedish Lutheran denominations. Religious services are also held regularly in the court house, by a portion of the German residents of the city. Several of these church erections are neat and commodious.

The school buildings of Ottumwa are three in number. The principal of these is a high school building, constructed of brick, three stories high, containing twelve rooms well arranged and seated, and capable of accommodating from eight hundred to nine hundred pupils. It occupies a plat of four and a half acres on one of the highest and most prominent elevations in the city, and was erected in 1864, at a cost of $30,000. A ward school building in the north part of the city, erected in 1871, also of brick, is two stories and a basement in height, contains four rooms and accommodations for two hundred and fifty pupils. It was erected at a cost of about $8,000. A second ward school building, now in course of erection, is also of brick, three stories and basement in height, and will contain six rooms and accommodations for three hundred and fifty pupils. The latter building will occupy a plat an acre and a half in extent, in an elevated and beautiful part of the city, and will probably cost, exclusive of ground, about $12,000. It is designed to be an ornate as well as a model school structure. The conduct of the public schools of the city is vested in a board of directors, of which J. W. Edgerly is president, and W. E. Chambers, secretary. Professor Wilson Palmer, superintendent of schools, is assisted by a corps of seventeen teachers.

In addition to the public schools there are three private schools in the city. The principal of these is the Academy of the Visitation, under the charge of the Sisters of Visitation—Roman Catholic. In this institution three female instructors impart instruction to one hundred and twenty-four female students, in all the branches of a thorough English and classical education, including music, needle work, etc. The income of this institution, in 1874, was $2,600. St. Joseph's School, also a private school under the charge of the Roman Catholics, has one male and one female instructor, and sixty-five male students. Income in 1874, $1,500. The third private school—not sectarian—is attended by twelve male and twenty-eight female students, and is under the conduct of two female instructors. These three are the only private schools in the county.

Masonic and other Orders.—Ottumwa Lodge, No. 16, A., F. & A. M. Regular communication on Thursday on or before full moon. Empire Lodge, No. 269, A., F. & A. M., meets on Thursday after full moon in each month. Ottumwa Council, No. 12, of R. & S. M. Regular convocation on Tuesday on or before full moon. Clinton Chapter, No. 9, of R. A. M. Regular convocation on the first Wednesday in each month.

Ottumwa Lodge, No. 9, I. O. O. F., meets every Tuesday evening in Odd Fellows Hall. Ottumwa Encampment, No. 22, I. O. O. F., meets first and third Friday evenings in each month in Odd Fellows Hall. Laramie Lodge, No. 230, I. O. O. F., meets every Monday evening in Odd Fellows Hall.

Wapello Lodge, No. 12, K. of P., meet every Thursday evening at their (Castle) Hall.

The Ottumwa Library Association was organized in 1872, and the library was first opened to subscribers in August of that year. Two thousand well selected volumes in the various departments of literature are now collected on its shelves.

City Police and Fire Departments.—The police force of the city consists of a City Marshal, Deputy City Marshal and two additional policemen. Special policemen also are appointed on occasions when the services of a greater number of officers are required.

The fire department consists of a small but efficient body of men, under the charge of chief and assistant engineers. The fire apparatus pertaining to the department consists of one Silsby steamer, one hook and ladder truck, two hose carriages, and about 1,500 feet of hose.

City Property and Finances.—The total valuation of the city property, in the current year, is $31,500. This property consists in part of a City Hall, 46x90 feet, built of brick, two stories in height, and erected in the Winter of 1873-4, at a cost of about $15,000. The lower part is used principally as the repository of fire apparatus, and the upper part as a council chamber, and a commodious public hall. The city is the owner of other minor real estate to the value of $3,000 more.

On the 1st of July, 1875, the entire bonded indebtedness of the city was $13,000.

Population of the City.—According to the census returns of the present year, the population of the city, within the corporation limits, comprising an area of about three hundred and forty acres, is 6,326. The population of additions to the city, not included in the city limits, is 1,175. Total population of Ottumwa, 7,501. These figures doubtless do not fully represent the present population of the city and its suburbs, which is conceded by all acquainted with the facts, to amount to 8,000 at the very least. The population, as well as the wholesale and retail trade of the city, continues steadily and materially to increase.

Present City Officers.—The present officers of the city are Honorable W. L. Orr, Mayor; A. Vannaman, Marshal; W. H. Fetzer, Clerk; D. W. Tower, Treasurer; O. M. Laid, Solicitor. Aldermen: First ward—W. B. Armstrong, P. G. Ballingall. Second ward—James Hawley, H. L. Waterman. Third ward—J. L. Moore, Simon Chuney. Fourth ward—J. M. Lamme, C. C. Peters.

OTHER TOWNS.

EDDYVILLE is situated in the northwest corner of Wapello County, a part of it reaching over into Mahaska. It lies on the Des Moines River, and is surrounded by a very rich agricultural region. The Des Moines Valley Railroad passes through it, and is intersected at this point by the Iowa Central, giving the town the advantage of two roads. Eddyville is named after J. P. Eddy, who laid out the village in 1843. Mr. Eddy had been a trader with the Indians, and when they were removed he continued his store, which was for some time the only one in this part of the county.

At one time Eddyville was a strong rival of Ottumwa, but the latter, from its location in reference to the trade of Southern Iowa and Northern Missouri, and doubtless other causes, outstripped its rival, which, although it has been doing a good, steady business, has grown and improved but little during the past few years.

The business enterprises of Eddyville consist of six dry goods stores, five grocery stores, three drug stores, one hardware store, three millinery stores, two leather and saddlery stores, one boot and shoe store, two jewelry stores, two clothing stores, two furniture stores, one woolen goods store, one marble works, two lumber yards, two breweries, two saw mills, two grist mills, one woolen mill, four wagon manufactories, one plow factory, one packing house, and a variety of shops. There are also one private banking institution, a graded school building, brick, erected in 1868, at a cost of $20,000. an opera house, erected in 1874, Masonic and Odd Fellows halls, and Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist, Methodist and Roman Catholic churches. Population, 1,300.

AGENCY CITY is situated on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, seven miles east of Ottumwa. It is the oldest town in the county, having been the Indian trading post when called the Indian Agency. The town contains Methodist Episcopal and Baptist churches, and a Congregational Society as yet without a church building; also two grist mills, two saw mills, two wagon manufactories, one carding mill, four dry goods stores, two drug stores, four groceries, one agricultural implement warehouse, various shops, etc. Population, 700.

KIRKVILLE, eleven miles northwest of Ottumwa, contains one Methodist church, one Presbyterian church, three dry goods and grocery stores, one drug store, saw and grist mills, and the usual shops. Population, 400.

ELDON is located at the crossing of the Keokuk and Des Moines, and southwestern division of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroads, in the southeastern part of the county, and is comparatively a new town, of railroad origin. Besides a Methodist Episcopal church, it contains three general stores and several shops. Population, 400.

BLAKESBURG, fifteen miles south of west of Ottumwa, is situated upon a high rolling prairie adjoining a heavy body of woodland. In the vicinity is an abundance of excellent coal. The town contains principally Methodist Episcopal, Baptist and Protestant Methodist churches, one grist and one saw mill, five general stores, one drug store, wagon, blacksmith and other shops. Population, 350.

DAHLONEGA, four miles east of north of Ottumwa, originally settled by immigrants from Dahlonega, Lumpkin County, Georgia, was at first nicknamed "Shellbark," from the fact that the primitive buildings were erected of shell bark hickory logs, from which the bark had been stripped. The town was at an early day quite famous in the county, and at one time an aspiring rival of Ottumwa for the honor of being the county seat. It soon subsided, however, into insignificance. It now contains one Methodist Episcopal Church, two stores, and one or two shops. Population, 200.

CHILLICOTHE, on the south bank of the Des Moines River, eight miles northwest of Ottumwa, contains a Methodist Church, grist and saw mills, three general stores, and a few shops. Population, 200.

BLADENSBURG, ten miles northeast of Ottumwa, contains Christian and Methodist Episcopal Churches, saw and grist mills, and two general stores. Population, 250.

Ashland, Marysville, Port Richmond, Point Isabel and Ormanville are small hamlets.

County Officers, 1875.—Treasurer, W. H. H. Asbury; Clerk of Courts, L. M. Godle Auditor, W. H. Caldwell; Recorder, Wade Kirkpatrick; Sheriff, Thomas P. Spilman Superintendent of Schools, Clay Wood; Surveyor, William McGlashon; Coroner, E. Lathrop; Supervisors, D. H. Michael, S. McCullough, S. M. Wright.

MUSCATINE COUNTY.

This, one of the oldest counties in Iowa, lies in the eastern part of the state, on t great bend of the Mississippi river; by the township survey, seventy-five miles fr Missouri and one hundred and seventy-five from Minnesota. In shape it is nearl parallelogram, with its southeast angle lying on the Mississippi River. The greate length east and west on the north line is thirty miles, while the shortest is on the so —fifteen miles; the greatest breadth on the west line is eighteen miles, and nine on t east. It contains ten whole and three fractional townships, making an area of fo hundred and thirty-two square miles, or 276,480 acres, which is subdivided into th teen municipal townships.

SURFACE, SOIL, ETC.

The general surface of the county is rolling, and in many parts quite rough a broken. The bluffs on the Mississippi are extensive, and frequently rise to an altit of one hundred and fifty feet above the river, while it is not more than eight or miles across some portions of the county to the Cedar River, which is bordered valuable bottom lands that end in bluffs more or less abrupt. All of the streams surrounded by these bottom lands, which are among the richest and most product in the West, while the remaining portion of the county is composed of h prairie, and broken, bluffy lands partially covered with timber. The Governm survey divides the land into three classes, about two-tenths being classed as first r which consists of the bottom land; seven-tenths as second rate soil, embracing upland and rolling prairie; while the remaining one-tenth is put down as third r and consists of the sand plains and barrens, which are not suitable for cultivation.

Muscatine Island, which is formed by the Mississippi River and Muscatine Slou is some eighteen miles in length, and five in width two miles below the upper end, contains over twenty thousand acres of land, most of which was originally a level s prairie, too low and wet to be of much value. The larger portion of it has howe been reclaimed, by means of a levee built around the upper portion, so that it contains some of the best and most valuable farms in the county, possessing as it an excellent sandy loam soil, peculiarly adapted to the growth of garden vegeta melons, vines and small fruits, all of which grow with remarkable luxuriance an superior quality. The soil in other portions of the county is a rich black loam, wi clay sub-soil, while in the bottoms there is mixed with the loam a considerable por of fine sand. Wheat and corn are the staple productions, while all kinds of gra grasses and vegetables common to this climate are successfully cultivated. The rol lands and side hills are well adapted to fruit culture; and grape growing whi more extensively carried on here than in most portions of Iowa, is really becom quite an important branch of its agricultural resources. Owing to its varied excellent soil, its adaptability to the growth of grass, and the abundance of h water found in all sections, it is peculiarly adapted to stock raising; and for a num of years it has stood among the best counties in the state for the number and excel of its short horned and other classes of thoroughbred stock. Some of the largest best herds to be found, not only in the West, but in the United States, are in the vic of West Liberty.

STREAMS AND TIMBER.

The Mississippi River, which forms nearly one-half of the eastern and south boundary, is of course the principal stream. The Cedar River, running through western or central portion of the county, has an average width of two hundred y and is navigable a portion of the year as far as Cedar Rapids, about one hundred thirty miles from its mouth. The Wapsinonoc, an Indian name meaning white-e creek, is the most considerable creek, rising in two principal forks in Cedar Co which unite soon after entering this, and running in a southeast direction some tw miles, empty into the Cedar. Sugar Creek also rises in Cedar County, and em into the same river near Moscow. Pine Creek, which rises in Scott County, waters its tributaries some four townships, and empties into the Mississippi some twelve m above Muscatine. The remaining streams are Mud, Sweetland, Mad and Pap Creeks, which are small, and empty into the Mississippi, except Mud, which swells volume of Sugar Creek. Muscatine Slough is an arm or bayou of the Mississippi R and probably may have once formed the main channel, from which it diverges at calling, and running in a southwest, south and southeast direction, unites again the "Father of Waters" a short distance above the mouth of the Iowa River. It is thirty miles in length, with an average width of about thirty yards. There is a of high bluffs which leave the river at Muscatine, and from the western bound the slough, at a distance from it of from one-half a mile to four miles, enclosing of the finest and best improved land in the state. Numerous springs, strongly im with sulphate of iron, are found under the bluffs bordering the river and the s The county is well watered with many small lasting streams and springs. Wel easily obtained in nearly all parts of the county, while pure soft water is found in places.

About one-eighth of the area of the county is timber land, there being 32,053 ac native timber, and 1,053 acres of artificial or planted groves which consist mos soft maple, cottonwood, and other fast growing varieties. The native timber wh found along the streams is well distributed over the county, and consists principa white, black, red, yellow, and burr oak, hickory, hard and soft maple, black and ash, black and white walnut, linn, yellow, white and red elm, honey locust, birch, cottonwood, poplar, willow, cherry, with a little cedar and pine.

STONE, COAL, ETC.

Limestone is found on the banks of the Mississippi, in several places above Mu of Muscatine, and also on the Cedar, while sandstone quarries have been opene number of places in the county. The Iowa state Geology gives the following de tion of its geological structure: "This county is chiefly underlaid by limestone Hamilton group, which crops out in the adjacent counties, north and west, but seen within the limits of this on account of the heavy superficial deposits. The narrow belt of the carboniferous series along the banks of the Mississippi, appears to be an outlier of the Rock Island coal field. This is finely exhibit section made for railroad purposes just below the steamboat landing at Mus The superficial deposit of loamy clay is exposed to the thickness of about fifty f is extremely destitute of foreign boulders, and appears to be made up almost exclu of detritus formed from the decomposition of the rocks which are in the imm vicinity, which may be seen in numerous localities, gradually crumbling und influence of various causes. Beneath their deposit a thickness of about fifty fe somewhat argillaceous sandstone may be observed. This sandstone is pretty re stratified in its upper portion; but, lower down, it is much disturbed, as if it ha deposited under the influence of varying currents. It contains a great num spherical concretions, which vary in size from a few inches to eight feet in di Some of them are remarkably symmetrical. These concretions are distinctly str and the lines of stratification pass from the adjacent rock through them without ruption. The material of which they are composed is much harder than the adjacent sandstone; contains more calcareous matter, and more sulphurate indeed, in the smaller ones, a nodule of their substance may not unfrequently be in the center. The fossil stems which occur in the sandstone are seen to extend into, and sometimes through the concretions, which, as well as the other fac tioned above, show conclusively that they have been formed by segregating a such as are often observed to have been operating in the rocky strata, but whi here caused the aggregation of larger and more symmetrically formed masses t have elsewhere observed. The sandstone is filled with impressions of stems an of fossil plants of the coal measures, some of which are of considerable size. observed which was traced for twenty feet in length. It was eighteen inches in G in one direction, and nine in the other; being, like most of the stems found in siderably flattened by the pressure of the superincumbent material. Bene sandstone is a bed of coal, which is not regularly continuous, but is broken small independent basins at its eastern extremity. Further west it becom regular, attaining a thickness of two and a half to three feet; with the highly i ous shale which is taken down with it, it reaches a thickness of four feet. It is very poor, as it contains an unusually large proportion of iron pyrites mixed oal is underlaid by bluish argillaceous and shaly beds, and, so far as known, this ation extends down to the level of the river." Coal is found in several places in Mississippi bluffs, and a number of banks have been worked with fair profit, while one three miles above Muscatine is now being worked with good success.

ABORIGINES.

t the close of the Black Hawk war in 1832, the Sac and Fox Indians ceded to the ed States a strip of land along the Mississippi River, varying in width from forty e hundred miles, and extending from Missouri on the south to the Sioux country e north. In this tract there were several Indian villages, in which they were itted to remain three years after the making of the treaty. One of these villages, lges as they were called, was six miles down the Slough road from Muscatine, on order of Keokuk Lake, and was the home of Keokuk and his band. There was ner near Moscow, while Poweshiek's village was situated on the west banks of the farther down. The noted Fox chief, Wapello, dwelt with his band, until 1836, at ace where the Town of Wapello, Louisa County, now stands, while Florence is as the home of the warlike Black Hawk, and the place from which he sounded ar-whoop, and rallied his countrymen to the last deadly conflict, in defense of homes, their hunting grounds, and the graves of their fallen sires. Black Hawk vards lived at Wapello, where he was visited by Suel Foster, one of the oldest rs of this county, who says of him that he was kind and dignified, and could talk English and Indian. His wigwam was a rude affair, and constructed by setting in the ground, over which were lashed pole rafters, which were covered with pieces of walnut bark. The cracks were stopped with moss and mud, which made e tight and comfortable for winter. The roof was as tight as a shingled roof, t a hole in the center for the smoke to pass out. There was no floor, the fire being on the ground in the center of the cabin. At each side were bunks made of raw which were used for seats in the day time and for beds at night. Black Hawk out, was introduced, and talked for a few minutes, when he silently returned to bin and commenced smoking his pipe. Mr. Foster describes him as being a large, ful, fine looking Indian, but seemed dejected and broken down, appearing ncly sour, morose, and unsocial, having been deposed, at the close of the war, by ik, who was at that time head chief of the united tribes of Sacs and Foxes.

HISTORY.

there was considerable trade with these several lodges of Indians, and as it was convenient for them to receive their heavy freight at what is now the Muscatine g, Major George Davenport, whose principal trading post was on Rock Island, Mr. Farnham, one of his agents, down from there in the Fall of 1833, rected a small cabin on what is now Water Street, a little up the river from Avenue, and supplied it with a small stock of goods suitable for the Indian trade. ed and carried on his trade here for some two years, when in the Fall of 1845, he t Stephenson, now Rock Island, Illinois, and Major Davenport sold the trading including a claim of half a mile square, lying a quarter of a mile up and down er from the cabin, to Colonel John Vanata. The first permanent white settle- made in the present limits of the county was made by Benjamin Nye, at the of Pine Creek, in the Spring of 1834, which was really about one year after dians, by the terms of their treaty, had given possession of the territory. He t a town at that place which is some twelve miles above Muscatine, and called it eller, which, however, never became a place of much note, and is now known history. In May of the following year, 1835, James W. Casey made a settle- and built a cabin a short distance below the trading house, and adjoining the of Colonel Davenport, near the foot of Broadway. He chose this spot because w it was an important consideration in selecting a town site on the Mississippi a place where there was a sufficient depth of water to admit of large boats land- all seasons, and he had discovered, by sounding, that the deepest water and shore were opposite the highest bluffs extending nearly down to the head of ine Island. Thomas and Lewis Burditt came in a little later that same season tled about four miles above Levi and Lot Thornton on the slough, while Doctor nolds located up the river some three miles above, where he afterwards laid wn to which he gave the name of Geneva. The next year Thomas M. Isett, Couch, William St. John, Henry Reece, and a few others located at Bloming- ow Muscatine, William Chambers, Sr., with his four sons, Vincent, Alexander, n, Jr., and John. Aaron Brewer, James H. Franklin, Henry Mockmore, and Bamford located in the upper part of the county; Captain Samuel Holliday and Charles Drury, near Moscow; Arthur Washburn, at Montpelier; and Samuel ram Gilbert and H. Burdett, near Muscatine.

the early Spring of 1836, Colonel John Vanata brought on his family and laid central part of the town on the claim he had previously purchased of Colonel port, and called it Bloomington. The surveying and platting was done in May or William Gordon. Captain Benjamin Clark had an undivided one-sixth interest town which he afterwards sold to Suel Foster. A few months afterwards J. W. others laid out a portion of the town down the river which they called ry. Charles H. Fish built a log cabin that same Summer on lots since occupied ge Woodward, and laid out an addition in the upper part of town, which was lf a mile square from the center of the Court House square east.

hese plats were all laid out on claims made some two or three years previous to ernment surveys, some explanation of the manner of holding and conveying tate is perhaps necessary. Previous to July 4, 1836, Iowa was included in n Territory, but at that date the Territory of Wisconsin was formed, of which mained a part until the creation of a separate territorial government by act of s, approved June 12, 1838, and taking effect on the 4th day of the following July. early times the laws were but poorly understood and administered, in fact they well adapted to the condition of the early settler. In a measure to remedy the ode of laws was invented to protect the rights of the claimant who had staked any other way marking the boundaries of a claim, which did not exceed certain A clerk was appointed, who platted and recorded the claims, while a committee ration was appointed to settle disputed rights. This court had the power, and es used it, of dispossessing a trespasser by taking him and his family and goods he house, and forcibly moving them from the premises. These laws were imple, short and easy of administration, and it was a sorry undertaking for a to dispute their authority. Late in the Fall of 1837, the government surveyors township lines in this county, which were subdivided into sections and staked following winter. The original claims of Vanata, Casey, Fish and others, in heir town lots, sold only their rights under the claim law, to enter and obtain title by the payment of government prices, and the land office fees. The first nal sales in the territory took place in November, 1838, at Burlington. By the Congress, counties had the privilege of taking a quarter section of land on to locate the county seat. Muscatine County, by her commissioners, John Van- on Asher and Ed. Thornton, selected the quarter on which the court house now ying nearly in the center of the City of Muscatine. There were probably fifty s, and some two hundred people then living upon that part of the town plat in- the county quarter. The county commissioners decided to raise eighteen d dollars from the residents and lot owners, and accordingly made an equitable n of all lots in the quarter. For the other parts of the town, trustees were ap- to purchase the land at the land sales, who severally gave bonds in large to deed the lots to the rightful owners, as should be determined by the claim ce or arbitration. The parties appointed were Charles A. Warfield for the east uel Foster for the fractional quarter south of the county quarter, and William for all the balance in the north and west part of the town. The county com- rs gave a power of attorney to Adam Ogilvie to make deeds to the lots in that land to these parties must be traced the titles to all lots except those on the South Muscatine. This proved to be a very satisfactory arrangement, as but ficulty occurred in adjusting the claims of all rightful owners. There was one however, grew out of it in the case of Suel Foster, who refused to deed to the se unclaimed fractional lots lying between Water Street and the river, that ac- ding to the agreement by which Mr. Foster had been appointed a trustee to enter the e was to have sold for the benefit of the city, but which he claimed to hold as nation for extra time and trouble expended in completing the arrangements, hat the citizens had no power to invalidate claims, and forfeit lots to the city. was decided against Mr. Foster, in the district court in 1846, and upon being ken to the supreme court, that tribunal re-affirmed the decision in 1851.

st-office was also established at Bloomington early in 1837, with —— Stowell as ter, but absconding before his commission arrived, Edward E. Fay was ap- ed his stead, and was therefore the first postmaster in the county. Adam Ogilvie e store in 1837, which was the first one opened by a permanent settler in the e 18th day of August, 1837, the steamer Dubuque, Capt. Smoker, exploded ch miles below Bloomington, by which twenty-two lives, all deck passengers, . The Dubuque was towed to Bloomington by the steamer Adventure, and ll of the dead were buried in one grave in the old cemetery, at the very spot e school house in District No. 1 now stands. The first hotel, the Iowa House, d been partly constructed and opened late the preceding Fall by Robert C. was completed early in the Spring of 1837. Among others who came into the s year may be mentioned Adam Ogilvie, William Gordon, Pling Fay, Suel Foster, Giles Pettibone, Joseph Bridges, H. H. Hine, Myron Ward, Daniel and Isaac Mauck, George Bumgarder and J. Fish.

The early growth of the county, which had been from the first quite slow, became more rapid and substantial during 1838. In November of the last named year there were in the town of Bloomington, of all description, eighty-four houses, while some good settlements had been made in other parts of the county. Of those who came in during 1838 there m y be mentioned J. S. Parvin, Judge Williams, M. M. Berksheer, Samuel Lucas, Thomas Norford, D. R. and A. O. Warfield, and J. P. and J. W. Walton, who located at Bloomington or vicinity, and S. W. Stewart, at Moscow. In 1839, came John A. Parvin, Dr. James Weed, A. Smalley, with his brothers, Shepherd, John, William and Henry, William G. Woodward, S. Whicher, Fred. H. Stone, A. M. Winn, P. Jackson, George W. Humphrey, D. C. Cloud, J. Ziegler, H. Matthews, William Leffingwell, G. Daniels, J. M. Kane, Henry Funk, Mrs. Dibble with her daughter, Mrs. B. S. Olds and daughter, Jacob Israel, J. A. McCormick, G. H. Hunt, H. O. Jamison, John McCloud, G. A. Springer, and P. Fayberget. The Winter of 1838 set in very severe and unusually early, so that navigation was suddenly closed at so early a date that the settlers on the upper Mississippi were prevented from securing their usual winter supplies. Dry goods, sugar, coffee, etc., were conveyed from St. Louis by wagons. Salt retailed at six dollars per bushel, while it is said that two barrels of flour, all there was in the town of Bloomington, sold for twenty-five dollars each.

In 1839 occurred the excitement in regard to the Missouri and Iowa boundary line, which was dignified by the name of "Missouri war." The Sheriff of Clark County, Missouri, in accordance with the claim of that state, proceeded to collect taxes in Van Buren County, when he was arrested on the charge of usurpation, and brought to Bloomington for safe keeping. Gen. J. E. Fletcher, of Muscatine, was ordered to call out the Second Brigade of Militia, John Vanata was commissioned Colonel and C. E. Hastings appointed Captain of the horse company, while two infantry companies were raised in Muscatine County by volunteering, and some by draft. They marched to Burlington, where a compromise being effected, they returned, more harmed by whisky than Missourians.

Among the early settlers came a man by the name of Dana, with his wife and beautiful boy of five summers. He died of fever shortly after arriving here, and the boy followed him the next day. His widow, Mrs. S. B. Dana, being left alone in a strange land, bore the affliction with becoming fortitude and patience, and as the inspiration of that great grief conceived and wrote that beautiful song, "Pass under the Rod," which has thrilled and soothed so many aching hearts through the land.

REMINISCENCES.

In the earlier years of the settlement of this county there were many Indians about, who made themselves very troublesome as beggars and petty thieves, but who were never belligerent, as they had not forgotten their dearly bought experience obtained in the Black Hawk war. They were mostly social, and afforded much amusement, in a measure compensating the settlers for the pleasures they had left in their Eastern homes. In the Spring of 1839 Stephen Wicher gave a large social party, which event for those days was of a novel kind. His guests were composed of the entire elite of the town, and about twenty Indians with their squaws, who came dressed in calico breeches, roundabouts, moccassins ornamented with beads, and trinkets of various kinds attached to their persons. The Indians were also rigged out in their best for the party, with painted faces, gay blankets, buckskin breeches, and fantastic wammuses ornamented with their war trophies, jewels in their ears and noses, brass bands on their arms, long ornamented pipes, tomahawk and skunk skin tobacco pouches, war clubs trimmed with feathers, bears' claws and tusks, and strings of highly ornamented wampum. This was probably the most peculiarly constructed social gathering that ever met in the state. The first thing on the programme of the evening was a war-dance by the Indians. The large front room being cleared, and nothing lacking but music, Mrs. W. brought out some tin pans, a fire-shovel and tongs, which with a few sticks made ample music. Kiskekosh, the noble chief, first stepped on the floor alone, divested of nearly all his garments, and presenting a fine, well-formed and powerful form, led the dance in a majestic, savage style. Soon one and another of the men joined, until the floor was nearly filled, the whole circling around in all sorts of savage and fantastic shapes and forms of attitude, keeping time with the din of the pans and tongs, at the same time uttering low guttural sounds—hew-wa-wa-hew-ha-wa-we-hu-hew-ha-woo—which increased in loudness and tone until it became a savage howl, and then charged at each other until the ladies were greatly frightened. The doors being closely guarded so as to allow no one to escape, the tumult soon became general. As the dance subsided one of the painted warriors suddenly sprang at and kissed one of the fairest of the fair white ladies, who, not appreciating the honor done her, screamed a scream more piercing and frightful than the howling of the Indians. As a return for this extraordinary entertainment, the Indians insisted that the white s, especially the "white squaws," should have a dance. A violin was accordingly procured, and several dances were performed in the most elegant frontier style, which appeared to delight the Indians as much as their performance had the whites. The entertainment was kept up until the wee small hours, when the parties dispersed to their respective homes and wigwams, thus ending one of the most brilliant and social entertainments in the history of Iowa.

A good story is told by Suel Foster, of an Indian scare which occurred in the Winter of 1836-7. There was a man by the name of Maine then living on the island some two miles below Muscatine, who kept a barrel of whisky for traffic with the Indians, who were very fond of that article. On one noted occasion, when there had been a new arrival in his family, this old man having taken a little too much himself, was troubled by several Indians who, having already drank enough to make them feel quarrelsome, insisted upon having more whisky, which he refused. The Indians, determined not to be refused, threatened him to such an extent that he started towards town to secure help. As he left, an Indian fired—at the whisky-barrel, and tapped it in the head. The crack of the rifle brought a neighbor woman who was helping in the house to the door, and finding the Indians sucking at the bullet vent in the whisky-barrel, she resolutely caught up a hoe, drove the Indians off, and set the barrel on end. But the affrighted Maine, when he heard the rifle imagined that his family and the woman there were being murdered, and he alone would escape to tell of their fate. The nearer town he got the faster he ran, and the more piteous were his cries for help. The villagers were alarmed, and as soon as he could get breath to utter an audible word, he said: "The Indians have murdered all my family, and as they fired at me, but I have outrun 'em. Go down and cut them down"!! There was a hasty gathering of guns and what means of defense could be found, and guards were placed to protect the village. The "landlord," R. C. Kenney, who is said to have been the fattest, laziest quietest, can't-run-man in the town, exclaimed: "God of Heaven, what shall we do! John Champ, take my horse, and go to Moscow and give the alarm; tell them that the Indians have killed all the folks on the island, and that we will run in that direction, and they must come and meet us." The braves who charged on the whisky-barrel got so shot with the fire-water, that they set fire to the rank grass, discharged their guns, and after screaming and yelling at a fearful rate for a while, quietly entered their canoes and left for Coa-Kack Island.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

While the "Black Hawk Purchase" was attached to the territory of Michigan, it was divided into two counties—Des Moines on the south, and Dubuque on the north; the division line entering the Mississippi River at the Rock Island Rapids. This division placed the present county of Muscatine, or Mosquitine as it was then called, mostly in Des Moines County, though a portion of the northern part was in Dubuque. The county was organized, and Bloomington made the county seat, by act of the Wisconsin Territorial Legislature, approved January 8, 1837. At the next session of the legislature, held at Burlington in the Winter of 1837-8, Doctor Eli Reynolds, who was the representative from this district, succeeded in getting a bill passed removing the county seat to Geneva, a small burg he had laid out on the river a short distance above Muscatine, but the bill was vetoed by Governor Dodge. The first officers of the new county were: Judge of Probate, Arthur Washburne, appointed in 1837; County Commissioners, or Supervisors, as they were called under the old Michigan and Wisconsin statutes, Arthur Washburne and Edward Fay, elected in 1837; Clerk of District Court, John S. Abbott, appointed in 1838 or '7; Justices of the Peace, Er. Thornton, John G. Coleman and Silas S. Lathrop, appointed about the close of 1838 or beginning of 1837. Arthur Washburn was the first acting postmaster in the county, appointed in 1836. The first election held in the county after its organization, was probably held in the Spring of 1837, although there is no record showing just when it took place. The first general election held on the west side of the Mississippi occurred in 1835, under the jurisdiction of Michigan. J. B. Teas and Jeremiah Smith were elected representatives from the County of Des Moines, and Messrs. Hill and Parker, from Dubuque, to the Territorial Legislature which assembled at Green Bay. There were in 1838-9 five voting precincts in the county, viz.: Clark, Moscow, Montpelier, Fair Haven and Bloomington.

ORIGIN OF NAME.

The origin of the word Muscatine, or Musquitine as it was formerly called, is somewhat uncertain, and is differently explained by those who ought to be informed, though there are none who doubt that the county and town both derived their name from the Island. According to the historian Bancroft, the name was derived from a tribe of Indians who were located near the great lakes two hundred years ago. Antoine Le Claire, founder of Davenport, who for years was very familiar with the languages spoken by the Indians that once occupied this country, and was himself of French and Indian extraction, says it is a combination of an Indian and French word: Mus-quo-ta, the Indian word, means prairie; to which was added the French termination "tine," forming the compound word Musquotine, or Musquitine, meaning little prairie. He further says that the Indians used to call the island Mus-quo-ta-menis, which means prairie island.

FIRST COURT.

The first District Court ever held in Muscatine County, was convened at the house of Samuel Parker, in Bloomington, now Muscatine, on Monday, April 24, 1837. Honorable David Irwine, Judge of the Second Judicial District, and Associate Judge of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Wisconsin, presiding; W. W. Chapman, U. S. Attorney; John S. Abbott, was appointed Clerk. The following is the first grand jury empaneled for the county, and on the part of the United States: Robert Bamford, foreman, Benjamin Barton, Edward E. Fay, Robert C. Kinney, Jonathan Pettibone, Eli Reynolds, A. L. McKae, Joseph Mountz, Thomas I. Starks, Nathan Palsons, Samuel Parker, William Sparkes, Christopher Barnes, John Briggs, Levi Chamberline, Norman Fullington and Andrew Pace. Alexander W. McGregor was admitted to the bar during this term, while the principal other business transacted was granting licenses to different parties to run ferries across the Mississippi River. Judge D. Irwine held a second term, in May, 1838; while the first one under the territorial government of Iowa, was convened October 8, 1838, by Honorable Joseph Williams, who was one of the Judges of the Iowa Territorial Supreme Court, and presiding Judge of the Second Judicial District. The first meeting of the Supervisors was held at the house of Robert C. Kinney, in Bloomington, at which session Samuel Shorteridge, James R. Strithers and S. C. Hastings, were appointed assessors of the County of Muscatine, and were allowed two dollars per day. The first taxes were collected by James Davis, for which service he was allowed fifteen dollars. In 1838, an annual license tax of one hundred dollars was assessed on liquor saloons and peddlers of brass or wooden clocks.

FIRST THINGS.

The first school in the county was taught by George Bumgardner, in the Spring of 1837. The first birth was a daughter of Samuel Kinney, the same spring, and the first death that of Mrs. J. W. Carey, which occurred a little earlier. The first sermon was preached by a Baptist minister by the name of Lowren, in the house of Samuel Kinney, early in the Spring of 1837, while the first regular preacher stationed here was Reverend Norris Hobert, a Methodist, who came later the same year. The first church organized was the Methodist, in 1839, while the Presbyterian was organized the next year, with Reverend John Stocker as pastor. The first school house in the county was built in Bloomington, in 1839, and was used for a long time for a church, school house, public hall, etc.

RAILROADS.

But few counties in the state have better railroad facilities than Muscatine. The main line of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific passes through the northern tier of townships, while the southwest branch of this road intersects the main line at Wilton, and running in a southwest direction, passes through the City of Muscatine, and the eastern portion of the county. The main line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota passes through the western townships, crossing the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad at West Liberty. The Muscatine Western Railroad, starting at Muscatine, and running west, has been completed across the county, crossing the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota at Nichols, and has penetrated quite a distance in Johnson County.

COUNTY BUILDINGS

The court house was built in the Summer and Fall of 1867, on the site of the one previously burned, is one of the best and most convenient in the eastern part of the state, and cost thirty thousand dollars. It is a handsome two story brick building, surmounted with a well proportioned and neatly designed dome, whose crest is ornamented with a large and elegant statue of the Goddess of Justice, who continually poises her balance over the wall dedicated to justice. It is situated a little east of the central portion of the city, in a beautifully shaded park that occupies a commanding position. The jail, a substantial brick building, with stone cells, is in the block back from the court house, and is still a serviceable building, although built in 1855 or 6.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Muscatine County Agricultural Society was organized June 4, 1853, held a fair the following Fall, and continuously ever since, although for a number of years during the war and prior to 1867 or '8, it was not in a very flourishing condition. They now have a beautiful fair ground containing forty acres, adjoining the city, on a high tract of ground, which commands a beautiful view of the river and a portion of the surrounding country. They have a fine track and good buildings, and are financially in a prosperous condition, with a very flattering future before them.

SCHOOLS.

The public schools are in a flourishing condition, and are on the whole making gradual and permanent improvement in all respects material to their prosperity and success. Old school houses are being replaced with new and elegant structures, containing all the modern conveniences calculated to improve the condition of the teachers and scholars. Successful institutes and normal classes are held, doing much to advance the standard of excellence sought to be obtained by the teachers.

WAR RECORD.

Muscatine County has a war record of which it may well be proud. Probably no county in the truly patriotic and loyal State of Iowa, responded more promptly, or furnished more men for the late war of the Rebellion. When treason reared the bloody altar of rebellion, and the muttering thunder of civil war reverberated along the horizon of the republic, the noble, heroic young men of this county, sprang to arms, their country's honor to maintain, and more than four hundred of those brave heroic hearts now sleep beneath the sod whose sacred soil they stained with their life's blood, that the beautiful banner of liberty that has so often carried peace and joy to many fainting ones, might still wave pure and untarnished over the land they loved so well. About eighteen hundred men went from this county to swell that grand host of noble patriots who, when the dark clouds hung the thickest, begged to be allowed the proud honor of dying for their country and liberty. Two companies for the gallant Iowa First, and one for the gray-beards' regiment, show how fearfully in earnest they were. Not content with sending their volunteer soldiers, the proudest, most soldierly soldiers the world ever saw, the mothers, sisters and wives at home were among the most zealous in rendering aid and assistance to all philanthropic institutions which had for their object the improved condition of the soldiers or their families. The City of Muscatine has the proud satisfaction of being the first in a commonwealth whic d the sisterhood of states in providing home comforts and educational advantages o the children whose fathers' strong arms held the bayonet at the breast of armed treason. Their last, though not least, praiseworthy act, was to rear an elegant monument in the shady court house park, to the memory of their heroic slain, which was dedicated and unveiled July 3, 1875, by Iowa's War Governor, Honorable Samuel J. Kirkwood. It is a beautiful marble shaft, surmounted by a life-size statue of a "volunteer soldier," standing at parade rest, where he will stand on his eternal pedestal as long as the virtuous and heroic deeds of the dead are cherished by the living, proclaiming to generations yet to be, that America will ever cherish and hold sacred the memory of those who fell in the holy cause of freedom.

MUSCATINE.

This beautiful city, the county seat of the county of the same name, is situated on the west bank of the Mississippi at the apex of the great bend, and at the head of the island from which it derived its name. The natural location, in a business point of view, is the best in Iowa on the Mississippi, being located at a point where that river penetrates nearest to the center of the state, which fact gives it superior advantages as a distributing center, while it has an excellent landing, and is more healthful than most river towns, owing to its elevated position and superior drainage facilities. It is surrounded by a good farming country, besides being convenient to Muscatine Island, which, for garden purposes and melon culture, has no superior if it has an equal in the Northwestern States. The ground naturally very rough and broken, lying on both sides of Pappoose Creek, has been greatly improved by grading, so that it now presents a fine location for a large and healthy city. The streets are regularly laid out, parallel with and at right angles from the river, the principal business street—Second Street—being the second from and parallel with the river, contains many fine buildings, and is probably as handsome a street as can be found in the state. A considerable portion of the buildings in some parts of the city are old, and show somewhat the ravages of time, while it also contains many new and elegant buildings, both business houses and residences.

BLOOMINGTON.

Muscatine was first surveyed and laid out in 1836, by Colonel Vanata and others, and was named Bloomington. The first name given it by the Indians was Wall-wall-tuckel-wan, which, being interpreted, signifies house-touch-corn. This name was given it from the fact that the Indians received most of their provisions here, which consisted in part of the long gourd seed corn raised in Kentucky and Tennessee. General Pike, who explored the Mississippi River in 1805, gave it the name of Grindstone

Bluffs, an account of the height and boldness of the shore and overhanging bluffs. It was incorporated as a town of the second class in February, 1839, and on the 6th day of the following May, Honorable Joseph Williams was chosen the first president or mayor. The other officers elected at that time were: Trustees, Arthur Washburn, Benjamin P. Howland and Henry Reece; recorder, Moses Couch; constable, John Marble; street commissioner, Giles Pettibone. The population of the town was then seventy-one, mostly men with only a very few women and some four or five children. From the time of its incorporation the growth was more rapid, so that in 1843 it had a population of nearly one thousand. The subject of changing the name of Bloomington to Muscatine was agitated for some time during 1842, but meeting with so much opposition, the matter was dropped until in June, 1849, when in accordance with the prayer of a petition numerously signed, it was changed by the district court of Muscatine. During 1849 and '50, the California excitement and the appearance of cholera, had the effect to, in a measure, retard the growth and prosperity of the town, which afterwards advanced with no rapid strides, but has, however, made a more healthy and substantial growth than most of the towns in Iowa can boast.

INCORPORATION.

On the 21st day of February, 1851, Muscatine became a city upon the adoption by its citizens of a special city charter, which had been approved by the Legislature on the first of the same month. The first election for city officers was held March 5, at which time Z. Washburn was elected Mayor; G. S. Branham, Marshal; C. F. Browning, Wharf Master; Thomas Crandol, Recorder, L. C. Hine, Treasurer, with the following City Council: Henry Reece, John L. Irwin, John B. Dougherty, M. D. Cossitt, A. Fisher and B. Bartholomew. Washburn soon resigned, when the Council appointed A. McAulay in his stead. The cars on the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad, now the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, reached Muscatine November 20, 1855, and their arrival was signalized by a grand celebration. The city was first lighted by gas, August 18, 1857, which event was appropriately celebrated by a gas-light illumination.

GROWTH AND BUSINESS.

Although Muscatine has always had a steady, substantial growth, yet from 1856, until some two years since, its progress was so slow that many who did not look at the matter closely were accustomed to think that it was really retrograding, and would often remark that "Muscatine had seen her best days." During 1873 and '4 a discernible change took place which was exceedingly gratifying to those interested in her future. Business revived, an unusual activity in building was manifested, while the constantly increasing demand for real estate, showed that the unequaled inducements it presented to those seeking homes in the West were beginning to be understood and appreciated. The improvements, while they have been more numerous than formerly, have been of a much better class. New enterprises are constantly being started, while old ones are more vigorously and successfully prosecuted. The leading business interest is probably the lumber trade, which for years has been the largest in the state, excepting only Clinton, has lately assumed such astonishing proportions as to amaze any one not in a measure familiar with its magnitude. There are now three large mills running constantly, which in 1874 cut 37,000,000 feet of sawed lumber, besides manufacturing 20,547,000 shingles, and 6,885,000 lath, and furnished employment for nearly four hundred men. Five wholesale and retail yards sold during the same time, of lumber manufactured in the pineries and rafted to this place, 32,170,000 feet of sawed lumber, 7,100,000 lath, and 8,235,000 shingles, besides some 5,000,000 feet of lumber and 1,000,000 lath and shingles that have been landed here and shipped to dealers in the interior. The grain interest is not small, as will be seen by the following amount purchased and forwarded from here during 1874: Wheat, 127,874 bushels; oats, 171,142 bushels; corn, 62,250 bushels; rye, 36,635 bushels; barley, 73,656 bushels; live hogs, 18,700; potatoes, 68,000 bushels, while one large hay pressing establishment have shipped 3,737 bales. The freight paid on the shipments made by railroad, during the same year, have been $318,080.80. Among the manufacturing interests may be mentioned five large sash, door, blind and scroll manufactories, three carriage and wagon shops, four large merchant flouring mills, one agricultural implement, and one large furniture manufactory, one boiler works, two foundries and machine shops, a wash board, shirt, knitting and broom factories, besides many other smaller enterprises that are necessarily found in a city like Muscatine. An inventory of the commercial and remaining interests show it to contain nine dry goods and notion stores, eight drug stores, five jewelry and six millinery stores, twenty-nine retail and three wholesale groceries, six boot and shoe stores, three book stores, four hardware houses, sixteen hotels and boarding houses, eighteen saloons, nine restaurants, six sewing machine offices, seven saddlery establishments, eight barber shops, six cigar manufactories and tobacco shops, two bakeries, four bakeries, six meat markets, four printing offices, three agricultural warehouses, five insurance agencies, three banks—two national, one marble yard, while the professions are well represented by fourteen lawyers and fifteen physicians.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

Being settled largely from the east, the citizens of Muscatine have not neglected the educational interests of their children, and several handsome school buildings, containing all the modern improvements, beautify the city, while ample free school accommodations for all those who see fit to enjoy their munificent advantages. The religious and moral wants of the community are well provided for by the following religious denominations, who all have good houses of worship, hold regular services, and each sustaining one good Sunday school, besides assisting in the management of three mission schools in different parts of the city: First Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational, United Brethren, Episcopal, Friends, Catholic, African M. E., German M. E., German Evangelical, German Congregational, Lutheran, German Baptist, German Presbyterian, Albright German, Holland Church, and Musserville Methodist.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper published in Muscatine was the Iowa Standard, issued by Cruts & Bally, October 23, 1840. Early the next year it was removed to Iowa City, then assuming prominence as the capitol of the state. One week after the appearance of the Standard, the first number of the Bloomington Herald was issued, by Hughes & Russell. This paper was a fair specimen of the newspapers of that day, though it lacked much of originality of thought and expression found in the average country press. In 1845, Russell disposed of his interest in the Herald to Doctor Charles O. Waters, who, assuming editorial management, greatly improved the character and tone of the paper, and conducted it for about one year, when the establishment passed into the hands of M. T. Emerson, a practical man of good judgment. Death ended his career and connection with the paper at the same time. He changed the politics of the Herald, which had always been Democratic to Whig, and it has never since been the organ of the Democracy. After Mr. Emerson's death, the Herald became the property of N. L. Stout & Wm. F. Israel, who ably conducted it as a strong Abolition organ until 1848, when F. A. C. Foreman became the sole editor and publisher. Whisky was too much for Foreman, and he was obliged to succumb to financial fate in about four months, when the publication of the Herald was discontinued, never to be resumed under the same name. Some six months after the Herald had been suspended, the material was purchased by Noah M. McCormick, who revived it under the name of the Muscatine Journal, and ran it until July, 1852. when he sold to Jacob and John Mahin, father and son, who jointly conducted the paper until September, 1853, when they took in a partner, Orion Clemens, a brother of "Mark Twain," and the style of the firm became Mahin & Clemens. In June, 1854, they commenced publishing a tri-weekly edition. Their partnership lasted until January, 1855, when J. Mahin & Son sold to Chas. H. Wilson, and the name of the firm was changed to Clemens & Wilson, during whose administration in June, 1855, the first number of the Daily Journal was issued. Later the same year, Clemens sold his interest to James W. Logan, who conducted the paper until the following January, when Wilson sold to D. S. Early, who only held it a short time, when he sold to John Mahin and F. B. McGill. The firm of Logan, Mahin & McGill managed the paper till August, 1857, when John Mahin assumed sole charge, and continued its management without change of proprietorship, till January, 1866. When L. D. Ingersoll purchased a half interest, and assumed editorial charge, remaining with the paper just two years, when James Mahin took a proprietory interest with his brother, and the style of the firm has since been Mahin Brothers. They still continue the publication of the weekly, tri-weekly and daily editions.

The Democratic Enquirer was started in July, 1848, by H. D. LaCossitt, who remained connected with it, excepting a six-months' administration by W. B. Langridge, in 1853, until 1854, when it was purchased by Jerome Carskaddan & T. Meason Williams, who in June, 1855, gave way to Williams, Gibson & Co., the senior member of the firm being Robert Williams, present police judge. In January, 1856, Daniel S. Biles and E. W. Clark took charge of the Enquirer. Clark retired in a few months, and was succeeded by Samuel McNutt, who edited it for a short time, when he sold to Biles, who had the sole management of the establishment until 1860, when it was suspended. John Tranior King then bought the office and established the Daily Review, and was succeeded in 1861 by Edward H. Thayer, who changed the name to Courier, and in 1864 sold to the Barnhart Bros., who, with W. W. Whitmer, now of the Des Moines Leader, continued its publication till 1873, when they sold to Geo. W. Van Horne, who consolidated it with the Weekly Tribune. The Telegraph was started in 1870, by E. O. Upham and Charles Sibley, who run it for six months, when it was bought by Geo. W. Van Horne, who commenced the publication of the Weekly Tribune, which about one year later he consolidated with the Courier and published as a weekly until April, 1874, when, associating himself with E. H. and Wm. Betts, he commenced the publication of the morning Daily Tribune, which has since met with flattering success.

In 1860, a campaign paper called the Messenger, was published for a short time by Samuel C. Dunn, since which several minor publications have appeared, such as the Roaring Rag, issued semi-occasionally, by B. F. Neidig; the New Era, an advertising sheet, published in 1872-3; the Humming Bird, a neat little paper, possessing considerable literary merit by O. G. Jack, has been published monthly for a year or two past.

The German Press was first represented by the Zeitung, established by Charles Rotteck, in 1857, but the following year was removed to Keokuk. In the Spring of 1874, J. W. Weippiert issued the first number of the Weekly Deutsche Zeitung, which has since steadily grown in patronage and general favor.

WEST LIBERTY.

A flourishing town containing some eight or nine hundred inhabitants, is situated in the northwest corner of Muscatine County, at the crossing of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota railroads, and is surrounded by an excellent farming country. It is a pleasant village, regularly laid out, and is steadily improving with a substantial and healthy growth, keeping step with the advancement of the surrounding country. It contains a large steam flouring mill, a carriage manufactory, five dry goods stores, ten groceries, three hardware houses, one tin and stove store, one notion store, one millinery and notion establishment, three drug stores, two saddlery and two agricultural implement establishments, four grain elevators, four hotels, three jewelry stores, three blacksmith shops, one wind-mill factory, one lumber yard, one bank with a cash capital of $100,000, and the other necessary branches of industry usually found in towns of this size. The different religious denominations are well represented, and have erected five handsome churches which are an ornament to the village, as well as the large and commodious public school building, which furnishes ample accommodations for the education of the children and youth.

The West Liberty Enterprise was first established as a seven-column republican sheet, in April, 1868, by Barker & Eaton, who in March, 1870, sold to George Trumbo, and he enlarged it to a nine-column paper, in November, 1872. It was purchased by its present able manager, J. W. McElvary, in February, 1874, who in the Spring of 1875 changed the form to a six-column quarto. It is a live, wide awake local paper, fully alive to the best interests of West Liberty and Muscatine County, and is receiving as it deserves, a liberal support.

WILTON.

This is an enterprising, well built village, containing a population of some twelve hundred, and situated on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad at the intersection of the southwest branch with the main line. It is surrounded by a rich, productive and rolling prairie, except on the west, where the timber runs up to the outskirts of the village. The town was laid out in 1855, by S. Butterfield, S. Tufts, and Greene & Stone, and a settlement commenced the following year, the first settlers being P. S. Corey, J. J. Rider and W. McNaughton. It has a good retail trade, and is a large shipping point for grain, hogs and cattle. It contains a large flouring mill, several handsome churches, good graded schools, and all the advantages usually possessed by other Iowa towns of its size and importance. Two newspapers are published here; the Herald, by J. E. Stevenson; and the Exponent, by J. M. Rider & Co., both of which are good local papers.

WRIGHT COUNTY.

The meeting for the organization of Wright County was held in the log cabin of S. B. Hewit, on the Boone River. The election was held in August, 1855, and the first officers elected were: David Dean, County Judge; C. H. Martin, Clerk of District Court; Anson Bousfield, Treasurer and Recorder; S. Cruger, Sheriff; S. B. Hewitt, Jr., County Surveyor; William Davis, Coroner; and N. B. Paine, Attorney.

When the county judge system was abolished, the county came under the government of a board of supervisors, who held their first meeting in January, 1861.

The county has eleven organized townships. Originally it contained but eight. Previous to the present organization it was attached to Webster County, which also comprised what is now Hamilton and Humboldt. The county contains five hundred and twenty-six square miles. The soil is of the richest, and is in all respects well adapted to farming and stock raising. It is well watered with numerous creeks, streams, and lakes. The pasture fields of this county, with their nutritious grass in abundance, and streams of ever living water, their sheltering hills and beautiful valleys, fully equal those of any other section. The Boone River flows southerly along the extreme west line of the county, and the Iowa along the eastern edge. The banks of these streams are covered with groves of timber, which, being protected, are larger in extent than when the county was first settled. Along these streams are lands of the first quality. In the center of the county from north to south is one grand and beautiful panorama of prairie, with farm houses dotting its surface, and cattle in large herds feeding upon its luxuriant grasses; while a number of beautiful lakes add grandeur and loveliness to the picture.

Lake Gertrude, of late years called Twin Lake, is located in the northern central part of the county. It is about two miles long by half a mile wide, and near to it on the south is a smaller lake. A few miles further south are Cornelia and Elm Lakes, possessed of considerable beauty. The first was so named in honor of Miss Cornelia Eastman, of Clarion, and the latter derived its name from a stately elm on its southeast border. This lake is in Clarion Township, its waters are very clear, and it is a place of considerable resort for pleasure parties.

Wall Lake is the largest in the county, and is some three miles long by two miles wide. It was so called from a wall of earth and large boulders which surrounded it, but more especially so on its northwest side. This lake is located out on the prairie about equi-distant from both rivers, where such boulders are to be found. A great deal of wonder has been expressed whether the wall was a work of art, or of nature; but we venture to presume that it was formed by the ice freezing fast to boulders on the bottom of the lake, and in the Spring the winds dashed the ice on the shores, leaving the boulders as the ice melted. The process must have been slow, but thousands of years would accomplish much. On the south bank of this lake is a beautiful grove, and the lake has sand and gravel beaches. It is quite a resort for parties in search of recreation, who find excellent boating, gunning and fishing. This series of lakes constitutes a prominent feature in the scenery and beauty of this county, and adds greatly to its attractiveness to settlers.

As yet this county has no railroads; but the Iowa Pacific, being already graded on the route indicated on the map of the county, will doubtless soon be in running order.

EARLY ITEMS.

The pioneer settler of this county, Major W. Brassfield, settled on the Boone in 1854. In the following year he built a saw mill and grist mill, which were the first erected in that section. During the year 1854 several other settlers located in different parts of the county, and during the following year many families came into the county, and it has since then rapidly settled.

The first merchant in the county was John Melrose, Esq., who built a store in 1856, in the village then called Liberty. Previous to this date the settlers were obliged to go a long distance for supplies, sometimes sixty or seventy miles.

The first marriage celebrated in Wright County was that of Alexander Usher and Lucy Ann Brassfield, who were married by Judge Dean, on the 27th of December, 1855.

The first school house was built of logs, 12x14, in Troy Township, in which the first religious services were also held.

The first newspaper was started at Liberty in 1861, by G. D. Ingersoll, and was called the Wright County Free Press, but lived only a short time. In January, 1868, Mrs. Mary Reed edited and published the Wright County Register for about one year in same village.

No difficulties ever occurred with the Indians, but at the time of the massacre at Spirit Lake the settlers were filled with alarm. Many fled, but a portion of the men in northern parts of the county organized themselves into a military company, with Doctor Cutter as Captain. A mud fort was hastily constructed on the west side of the river at Belmond, overlooking the river. For better security, the women were all gathered into one log cabin, while the men remained in the fort and established regular military discipline. Pickets were established and sentinels posted, but no enemy came. After several days scouts reported all the settlers as having fled to Webster City. The cause of all danger having passed, the people returned to their homes.

The number of acres in the county is 358,328, of which the census of 1875 reported in cultivation 28,957, or about every thirteenth acre,—thus showing a vast field for new settlers.

There are in the county 57 school houses, and the cost of maintaining schools was, for 1874, $16,750. That education is advancing in this county is evident from the number of new school houses being constructed.

JOHN L. MORSE, Auditor. J. H. ROWEN, Treasurer.
L. P. DAVIS, Clerk of Courts. ED. HARTSOCK, Recorder.
T. GARTH, Superintendent. A. R. NELSON, Sheriff.
M. H. AUSTIN, Surveyor. C. PACKARD, Coroner.

SUPERVISORS.

D. N. INMAN, Chairman, Dry Lake.
ADRIAN ELDER, Belmond. N. B. PAYNE, Eagle Grove.

CLARION.

This is the county seat, and situated in the geographical center of the county. Up to 1865, Liberty was the county seat, and, upon its location at Clarion, the county purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land as a new site. The following year, 1866, a court house was erected, and very soon other buildings were constructed until a handsome village has grown up, with hotels, newspapers, bank, schools, churches and business houses.

The Wright County Monitor was established here in 1869, by W. Smith, and is now published by Messrs. Gates and Hathaway.

The Township of Clarion was organized in 1868, and is the central township of the county, and was made from portions of Iowa, Liberty and Eagle Grove Townships.

The population of Clarion Village is about 100, and of the township 261, and voters 65. This is from the census of 1875, as are also those of other localities mentioned.

BELMOND.

This is the largest village in the county, and situated on either side of the Iowa River in the northern part of the county. It was laid out in the Summer of 1857, by A. Dumond, E. Rogers, and J. Elder. It originally bore the name of Crown Point. The first house put up in the village was built by Dr. L. H. Cutter, in 1856. In the same year he also built a flouring mill and a saw mill, which were carried off by a flood, and replaced the next year by a steam mill, which was afterwards removed to Kansas. In 1856, a school house was built, and numerous private residences, and the village has constantly increased in size and business. Thre are three churches, Methodist, Congregational, and Catholic; one bank, two hotels, mill, and the usual complement of stores and shops. The Belmond Herald is published every week by J. H. Brayton, and has reached its fourth volume. The first settlers in Belmond Township were three families, who came here in 1854, but owing to fear of the Indians they did not remain. The next year A. Dumond, T. Oliver, and Dr. L. H. Cutter became permanent settlers. They built a log cabin in which no less than twenty-one persons lived all through the Summer. At that time the prairie was covered with game, and as many as forty elk have been seen at one time feeding on the prairie. The population of Belmond Village is about 300; the township, 398; voters, 90.

WALL LAKE. This township derives its name from the beautiful lake heretofore described. It was originally part of Vernon Township, but in 1863 it was formed into a separate township. The first settler here was E. P. Purcell, who, in 1856, settled on the southeast border of the lake, and was said to be the only settler there for five or six years. But of late years it has rapidly filled, and new settlers are fast occupying the fertile prairies. Waterman post office is in the southwest corner of the township. Population, 229; voters, 45.

WOOLSTOCK.—This was organized into a township in 1868, and was formerly the east half of Troy. Eagle Creek and White Fox Creek run through this township. All along the banks of Eagle Creek, as far north as G. Perry's fine farm, are groves of timber. The first settlers came here in 1858, and were G. Perry, J. Boring, and R. Brewer. Woolstock post office is on the southern border of the county. Population, 216; voters, 34.

PLEASANT.—This township is in the extreme northeast corner of the county, bounded on the west by the Iowa River. The first settlers were Wm. Gray, H. Luick, and Anthony Overacker, who came in July, 1855. On the 13th of that month they planted several acres of corn, which yielded a good crop and ripened well, there being no frost that year until the 29th of November. It is rightly named, and is a pleasant township with several groves and streams which empty into the Iowa. Population, 446; voters, 94.

IOWA.—Is the next township south of Belmond; the Iowa River passes through the center, and on its banks are numerous groves of timber. Fryeburg post office is in the center of the township, but the early settlers found the post office at Eldora, forty miles distant, and quite often went to Davenport for groceries. It contains some excellent farms and fine groves. Population, 288; voters, 71.

VERNON.—In the most southeastern part of the county is Vernon Township, which originally included Wall Lake. The Iowa River runs along the eastern border, and the banks are covered with good timber. The soil is classed with the best in the county. According to the State geologist, this township contains "fifty acres of fine peat, from six to eight feet deep." Otisville and Dry Lake are post offices. Vernon has a population of 237; voters, 46.

TROY.—The first settler in this township was William Striker, who, in 1854, located in Bach Grove. During the next year several others settled. Provisions were hauled seventy miles, and this continued until about 1859. Bach Grove covered three thousand acres of timber, and black walnut, elm, and oak grew to large size. A post office is established at Bach Grove. Population, 406; voters, 85.

EAGLE GROVE.—This is one of the western tier of townships, and the Boone River, with its valuable groves of timber, passes through the western edge. The first settler here was William Davis, who only remained about a year. Afterwards W. B. Tabe and others built a log cabin on the Boone, and in this the meeting to organize the county was first held. This party brought with them four large wagon-loads of provisions from Davenport, a distance of nearly three hundred miles. The nearest post office was then thirty miles. Eagle Grove post office was once an Indian village of five hundred wigwams. Population, 279, with 51 voters.

LIBERTY.—Here the first settlement in the county is supposed to have been made by W. Brassfield. The Boone River passes along the western border, and Otter Creek empties into the Boone near the original Village of Liberty, which was laid out in 1855 by H. B. Martin. Among the early settlers were John Melrose, W. Nees, Barnes, Doty, and others. Goldfield post office is in the south edge of the township. Population, 306; voters, 83.

BOONE.—This is the northwest township of the county. The first settler here was C. H. Martin, who settled on the banks of the Boone in 1855. This is the largest township of the county. The Boone River here, as elsewhere, is lined by groves of timber, while the eastern part is an unbroken prairie for ten miles. By the census of 1875 it has a population of 178; voters, 30.

WEBSTER COUNTY.

GENERAL SURFACE.

The general surface of Webster County is very similar to that of the northern tiers of counties, extremely beautiful. It is what may be termed moderately undulating, except on the margin of the rivers and streams, where there are frequent ranges of bluffs or hills of considerable size, intersected with ravines. The county is well watered by rivers and creeks, the margins of which are skirted with woodland and beautiful groves, there being an admirable distribution of prairie and woodland to suit the wants and convenience of the farmer. There are twenty congressional townships in the county, and 460,800 acres of land, 42,300 of which is timber of good quality, besides what may be called inferior timber, in small detached groves, which would make the timber land about equal to one tenth of the whole. The growth of the uplands consists of every variety of oak, hickory, hazel, elm, grape vine, blackberry, linn and plum; the bottom lands produce ash, different varieties of oak, black walnut, white walnut or butternut, elm, linn, quaking asp, sugar maple, hackberry, cottonwood, grape vine, plum, crab apple, sumach, and a variety of other trees and shrubbery.

SOIL.

The soil of the prairies, and particularly of the alluvial bottoms is extremely rich and fertile; it is a black, vegetable mould, intermixed with a sandy loam, easily cultivated, and stands drought remarkably well. In the upland prairies the soil will average from 18 to 24 inches in depth. The surface is nearly black, but becomes lighter in descending until it imperceptibly mingles with a bed of reddish clay, or gravel and sand, sufficiently compact to preserve moisture, and capable of being converted into excellent soil. The county generally abounds with fine springs of water, and good water is usually obtained in the upland prairie, from 20 to 30 feet below the surface. The proportion of wet or swamp land is small, and this proves to be the best when it is properly drained and cultivated.

STREAMS.

The principal streams withint he limits of Webster County, are the Des Moines, the North and South Lizards, and the Boone Rivers. The Des Moines enters the county on the north line, and winds through near the center, running from north to south. The North Lizard enters the county from the northwest, its general course being from the northwest to the southeast; the course of the South Lizard is from the southwest to the northeast, and the two streams uniting near the City of Fort Dodge, run directly east, and there empty into the Des Moines River. The Boone River flows westward but a few miles through the southern portion of the county, emptying into the Des Moines. Besides these rivers the county is intersected with a large number of smaller streams, among which are Skillet, Crooked, Brushy, Deer, Elk, Badger, Beaver, Soldier, Coal and Holliday Creeks, all of which are tributary to the Des Moines River. The Des Moines is a beautiful stream, with rock or gravel bottom; its main branch heads in Minnesota, about 70 miles north of the state line, and is fed by what are called the Shetek Lakes. This river was originally named by the Algonquins the "Moingonan," by Charlevoix "Moingona," and by the Dakota or Sioux Indians "Eah-sha-wah-pa-tah," or Red Stone River. The Lizard was named by the Sioux "Was-sa-ka-pom-pah," the river with lizards. Boone River was named after Captain Boone, of the U. S. Dragoons, who first explored the Des Moines Valley, above Coon forks. The Sioux name for Boone is "Sha-i-ha-shah-wah-pa-tah," Red Willow River. The smaller streams were all named by the first settlers, and the troops stationed at Fort Dodge.

EARLY HISTORY.

This county was originally included in the neutral ground established by treaty with the Sac and Fox and the Sioux Indians. Owing to the warfare kept up between those Indians, the United States Government interfered, and brought about a treaty between them, which resulted in their ceding to the United States a strip of land forty miles wide, reaching from a point on the Mississippi, near the mouth of Paint Creek, above Prairie du Chien, to the Des Moines; the Sac and Fox Indians ceding twenty miles wide on the south, and the Sioux twenty miles on the north.

In order to arrive at any thing like a correct knowledge of the early history of Webster County it will be necessary to go back to the establishment in May, 1843, of Fort Des Moines, situated at the junction of the Des Moines and Raccoon Rivers—on the site of what is now the City of Des Moines—which continued to be the outpost on the northern frontier of Iowa, until the 11th of October, 1845, when it was abandoned. At that time the territory lying north, northeast and northwest of Fort Des Moines was comparatively an unexplored region of country, inhabited only by the wild Sioux Indians, and ranged by buffalo and elk.

The Legislature of the State of Iowa during the session of 1850-'51 laid out what is now Webster County, then named Yell County, and the present Hamilton County was called Risley County. But afterwards at the session of 1852-'53 the Legislature was induced, upon a petition from the settlers at Boone Forks—then the only settlement in the two counties—to unite them into one, which was named Webster, and in April, 1853, Webster County, embracing the two counties above named, was organized.

At the session of the Legislature in 1856-'57, the original county lines were restored, by striking off the territory formerly embraced in Risley County, and erecting a new county, which was named Hamilton, and Webster City made the county seat. The new county embraced the Town of Homer. This left Webster County with all the territory originally embraced in Yell County, to which has since been added township number 90, taken from Humboldt County.

The troops having abandoned Fort Dodge previous to the division of the county, the idea of a military reservation of land, which before then had been entertained by the government, was abandoned. A United States Land Office had been established, and opened for business on the 5th day of November, 1855, with Gen. V. P. Van Antwerp, for Receiver, and William H. Merritt, Register; after which the increase of population in the northern part of the county, in the vicinity of Fort Dodge, was very rapid.

At the session of 1859-'60, the Legislature virtually abolished the office of county judge, and made provisions for the election of county, or rather township supervisors, whose duty it was to manage county affairs.

In August, 1853, the first county election was held, at which seventy-six votes were polled, and the county officers elected were as follows: Judge, William Pierce; Register and Treasurer, Tolman Woolsey; District Clerk, Jesse Goodrich; School Fund Commissioner, John Tolman; Sheriff, J. Doty; Justices of the Peace, John Johns and L. Mericle; Constable, John Hefley; Township Clerk, Sherman Hart; Assessor, Samuel Eslich; County Surveyor, George Warner.

Homer, the first county seat, situated about 19 miles southeast of Fort Dodge, near Boone River, was surveyed and laid out in the Fall of 1853. Here the first post office in the county was established, and Granville Berkley was appointed post master. His office was in his house, and he kept the mail matter in a box under his bed, and those who called for letters drew out the box and examined for themselves.

The first court in Webster County—embracing what is now known as Webster and Hamilton Counties—was held at Homer, in the Fall of 1854, the Honorable C. J. McFarland, District Judge, presiding.

In April, 1856, after a very exciting canvass, the citizens of the county decided by a large majority, at an election held, to remove the county seat from Homer to Fort Dodge.

The first court held in Fort Dodge, after the removal of the county s at, was in August, 1856, Honorable J. C. McFarland presiding. Court was held in the public school house, then in an unfinished state. In April, 1858, the County Judge, Doctor L. L. Pease, submitted to the citizens of the county a proposition to build a Court house at Fort Dodge, which was carried by a majority of one hundred and ninety-nine votes, a violent opposition being made by the citizens of the south part of the county. In August, 1858, the contract for building the court house was given to Messrs. H. D. Merritt and Israel Jenkins, at $39,450. The plan adopted for the building was drawn by A. V. Lambert. After commencing the building, the original contractors sold out the contract to Messrs. Sweeny & Tierney, who progressed with the building until the first story was completed, when they gave up the contract to the original contractors, Merritt & Jenkins. In June, 1860, they sold out to Thomas Snell, of Illinois, and Abner Taylor, of Fort Dodge, who never finished the building as required by the plan adopted, omitting cupola and other parts. They were obliged to pay a considerable amount of money, as damages for non-compliance with the contract.

The building is situated on a reserve square, on the corner of Market and Sixth streets. The Fort Dodge Company, by their agent, William Williams, donated to the county the ground on which it stands, also the square opposite. Commencing to build the court house roused the citizens of the southern part of the county, who, urged on by their old allies at Homer, commenced the war against Fort Dodge anew. They held meetings, from time to time, and finally determined to remove the county seat to Border Plains, for their own especial benefit. G. C. Goss, John Johns, and others, circulated petitions praying for the removal. In July, 1858, they came up in force, accompanied by lawyers from Homer. Profound arguments were made, but the remonstrances presented to the County Judge were too strong for them—they failed in their attempts. The first of November following they made another effort, and again failed, their chief object being to stop the building of the court house. Finally, they called in a lawyer of Webster City who, in council with legal men of Homer, determined on the plan of forming an alliance with the settlers in Humboldt County, (who fancied they had grievances also) to take from Webster County township No. 90, alleging that it belonged to Humboldt. They took out an injunction, which was granted by Judge Hubbard, of a foreign district, to stop the work on the court house.

FIRST SETTLERS.

When Fort Dodge was established, the Indians deserted the east side of the Des Moines River and fled to the west side, then Indian territory.

In August, 1853, the population, independent of the troops at the Fort, was about 150 souls, all of whom were located in the vicinity of Boone Forks, from eighteen to twenty miles south of Fort Dodge. They were composed principally of emigrants from Missouri, North Carolina and Indiana, with some three or four from New York. They formed a Republic of their own. Law and justice was administered in their own way. Every one read the code of Iowa, and expounded the law to suit himself. It was not long until a few troublesome characters came in and trouble commenced. Quarrels about claims and all kinds of contention arose amongst them. (It was the privilege of all to make claims. Every man, woman and child had a claim to sell to new comers.) Little was attended to but quarrels and litigation with one another, for the first two or three years. When a law suit was to be tried, all the settlers would attend, quite an array of men with their rifles in their hands.

The first settlers in Webster County were Isaac Bell, L. Mericle, Jacob Mericle, D. B. Spalding, Osborn Brannon, Henry Lott, John Tolman, Frank McGuire, Minton Brasfield, Squire McGuire, William Pierce, Tolman Woolsey, Samuel Eslich, Thomas Holliday, E. Gatchell and Philemon Johnson, independent of the troops at the garrison.

Reverend J. Johns, who settled among them, preached and expounded the scriptures for them on the Sabbath day, when he was not too busily engaged in hunting elk and deer, or bee hunting or trapping.

The first child born was Jackson Mericle, son of Jacob Mericle. The first death was that of Henry Lott's wife.

The first marriage that appears on record was that of John A. Holmes and Emily Lyons, May 14, 1853, by William Pierce, County Judge. It does not appear, however, that Judge Pierce was elected, or that the county was fully organized, until in August of this year, and therefore the presumption is that he held his position by virtue of appointment.

The first settlers in Webster County underwent severe trials and privations. They had emigrated from other states to better their condition, by securing land. They dearly earned all the advantages they gained, shut out, comparatively speaking, from the world, to shift as best they could, and obliged to resort to hunting and trapping to procure the necessaries of life. The nearest mills where flour or meal of any kind could be had were at Fort Des Moines or Oskaloosa, a distance of from 80 to 150 miles.

COAL.

The State Geologist, in his report for 1870, says: "It is believed that about four-fifths of the area of the county are occupied by the lower coal measures, the strata of which, including valuable beds of coal, are well developed." Again, "Thus far, at least three distinct beds of coal have been identified within the limits of Webster County." Then, after explaining that at present it is only along the valley sides of the Des Moines River and its tributary creeks that these beds are at present accessible, he says, "But there can be no doubt that they may be reached by shafts from the prairie surfaces, over a large part of the county."

All the coal mines of the county are opened by "drifting" from the ravines and minor valleys into the hill sides, and as the veins seldom "dip" the mines are easily drained, and consequently kept very dry. They are also easily ventilated. In relation to the quality of Webster County coal, the State Geologist says: "The quality of the coal of Webster County is equal to the average Iowa coal." But by comparison of the coal of this region with that of the other coal districts in the State, competent judges declare that the coal of this county is far superior to any yet found in the Western States. Cannel coal, which is most valuable in the manufacture of gas, yielding 10,000 feet to the ton, is here found in great quantities, the supply being deemed inexhaustible.

There are large tracts of coal lands in the county, which indicate veins of from two to eight feet in thickness, in which banks will be opened as soon as the superior quality of the Webster County coal becomes sufficiently known to create larger demand for it. And from the interest exhibited by railroad and manufacturing companies, and others in the mining enterprises of the county, and the superiority of the coal to be found here, it is safe to predict that for the "Fort Dodge Coal" there will, at no distant date, be a demand far in excess of the most sanguine expectations entertained for it.

By the census of 1870 there are nineteen coal beds now open, which employ 227 hands, and mined during the preceding year 78,800 tons of coal.

IRON ORE, OCHRE BEDS, FIRE AND POTTER'S CLAY.

"Vast deposits of black-band and kidney iron ore are found imbedded along the streams and draws, extending back into the hills, and containing a percentage of iron which renders it valuable for smelting. This ore is found on sections 1, 12 and 13, township 87, range 28, and 2, 37, 28, which is easy of access.

"On sections 1, 12, 13 and 18 we find heavy deposits of red and Spanish brown ochres, of excellent texture and quality.

"On sections 12 and 13, township 87, range 28, and section 18, township 87, range 27, are found immense deposits of fire and potter's clay, of a superior quality.

"Representative samples of the above named deposits have been procured for the Centennial

COAL INTERRUPTIONS.

"A short distance up the river, above the sections we have mentioned, is disclosed a ledge of massive sandrock, commencing on section 1, township 87, range 28, and following the line of the river on both sides, through sections 35, 26, 27, 22, 21 and 15, township 88, range 28, which taking the place of the upper beds of coal, cut them out entirely. Yet, on section 21, this rock rises but a few feet above the coal seam again, embracing the Otho coal fields, where banks are opened and large quantities of coal taken out by different parties."

GYPSUM.

The State Geologist in his report for 1870, before alluded to, says: "The large deposit of gypsum near Fort Dodge is one of the most important yet discovered in the United States, and is the only one of any economic value known to exist, not only in Iowa, but in any of the adjoining states." This gypsum deposit is near the center of Webster County, the Des Moines River running through it. This gypsum does not occur in "heaps" or "nests," as it does in most deposits of gypsum in the states farther eastward, but exists here in the form of a regularly stratified, continuous formation.

As little can be said with certainty concerning the lithological origin of this deposit as can be said of its geological age.

According to the results of the analysis by Professor Emery, the ordinary gray gypsum of this region contains only about eight per cent of impurity; and it is probable that the average impurity of the whole deposit will not exceed that proportion. Although it is a gray color, it becomes white by grinding, and still whiter by a calcining process necessary in the preparation of plaster of paris. No hesitation, therefore, is felt in stating that the Fort Dodge gypsum is the best in quality in the country, even for the finest uses. It has been long and successfully used for building stone by the inhabitants.

Besides the value of this gypsum for building purposes, it is of incalculable value in manufacturing plaster of paris, hard plaster, cement, stucco, calcine, etc., etc.

It was from one of the above quarries that the celebrated "Cardiff Giant" was originally taken in a coffin-shaped piece, and shipped by rail to Chicago, where it was chiselled into the statue of the size of a giant. From thence it was taken to Syracuse, New York, and buried so as to be easily found when the owner of the land started to dig a well, for a while it was a great mystery.

The ordinary uses to which gypsum has been applied are perhaps known to most readers. It is easily crushed or ground to a fine powder, commonly called "plaster," an article which is used as a fertilizer. Being subjected to a further chemical process, an article called "plaster paris" is manufactured from it, some of the uses of which are known to most people. But the people of Fort Dodge have for a number of years been using it as a building material in the place of common stone. The first to use it in this way was Honorable John F. Duncombe, who, several years ago, erected a fine gypsum mansion on one of the beautiful eminences overlooking the Des Moines Valley at Fort Dodge. This experiment has been sufficient test of its durability to induce many others to use it as a building material, and as the result, Fort Dodge now has quite a number of gypsum houses. The new six thousand dollar depot building of the Iowa Falls and Sioux City Railroad at this place is constructed of this material, and makes a fine appearance. Some of the advantages of using it as a building material here, are its great abundance, its accessibility, and the ease with which it is quarried and dressed for the wall. It may be bored with a common auger as easily as wood, and, as a consequence, the use of the drill for blasting in the quarry is unnecessary. The blocks may be sawed, hewed, planed, or mortised as easily as wood, and with the ordinary tools used in wood-work.

FORT DODGE.

The site of Fort Dodge was first selected for a military post by Brevet General Mason, then Colonel of the 6th Regiment of United States Infantry. The object in establishing the post was to keep in check the Sioux Indians, and it was placed at the extreme western part of what was called the neutral ground between the Sioux and Sac and Fox Indians. In the Spring of 1850, Major Samuel Woods was ordered on with a portion of the 6th United States Infantry, and established the post which was named Fort Clark. But it was found that another detachment from the same regiment had established another post on the frontier west, which they also named Fort Clark. To prevent confusion in mail matters and in forwarding supplies, the name was changed, by order of the Secretary of War, from Fort Clark to Fort Dodge, in honor of Senator Dodge, of Wisconsin.

The reservation of land laid out for the use of the post was four miles north and four miles south of the fort, and two miles on each side of the Des Moines River, making a strip of land eight miles in length, and four miles wide, with the fort in the center. The treaty of 1852 with the Sioux Indians was confirmed, and the United States Government by that treaty purchased of the Sioux all the territory in Minnesota, from Lake Pepin to Rock River on the St. Peters. Also, all lands of the Sioux lying within the limits of the State of Iowa. This embraced the lands west of the Des Moines River. Captain Dana, of the 6th United States Infantry, and others, were ordered to select a site for a permanent post on the north line of the new purchase. The selection was made at the junction of Rock River and St. Peters (or Minnesota River), about one hundred and fifty miles north of Fort Dodge. In the latter part of July, 1853, the troops at Fort Dodge were ordered to abandon the post and march to the St. Peters to assist in building the new fort. The country between Fort Dodge and the point they were ordered to being unexplored, it took them until late in September to finally leave Fort Dodge, being baffled by high waters, etc. The new post established was named Fort Ridgley. The principal cause for the abandonment of Fort Dodge as a military post, was the decision given by the Commissioner of the Interior of the United States, that the grant of lands made by Congress in 1846 to the State of Iowa for the improvement of the Des Moines River, extended from the mouth of the river to its source. By that decision it was found that the land (section No. 19, T. 89, R. 28 W.) was embraced in that grant, and belonged to the State of Iowa.

The main buildings of the fort now form principally the north side of William Street, beginning between Fifth and Sixth Streets, on what is now in the town plat, Lot No. 4 in Block No. 2, and extending west to Lot No. 5 in Block No. 6.

ANCIENT FORTIFICATIONS, MOUNDS, ETC.

After establishing Fort Dodge, some time was spent during the Summer and Fall of 1851, in reconnoitering and examining the country, with the view of ascertaining the location of the Indians, and to determine on the best route for roads as well as to gain a knowledge of streams and the country generally. "We found many remains of ancient fortifications and mounds, which had evidently, from their location and construction, been (at some very remote period) raised for defense and positions of observation, giving evidence that this northern country was inhabited by a race of people long before the present race of Indians inhabited it. On viewing the location and tracing the lines we found them arranged with some judgment. Others evidently were burial places. On directing the attention of the Indians to them, we were unable to find any among the oldest Sioux who had any knowledge of them, either by tradition or otherwise; they all asserted that they were here when their people first came into the country. The most distinct of these ancient works will be found in the forks of Boone, on and in the neighborhood of L. Mericle's place, on the west side of the Des Moines, near where Mr. Beam lives, on Indian Creek, about twelve miles north of Fort Dodge, on Lizard Rivers, and at Fort Dodge. Some of the mounds at Fort Dodge have been removed, and in digging into them they were found to contain the remains of human beings, such as parts of skulls, teeth, thigh bones, etc., and along with them pieces of burnt or charred wood and coals. From their location, on high and dry ground, covered with sand and gravel, together with the appearance of the bones, their color, etc., physicians and all who examined them, were of the opinion that a great length of time had elapsed since they had been deposited there, perhaps two hundred years or more; the ancient mound-builders were in the habit of burning their dead, which is not the custom of any of the Indians of whom we have any knowledge."

INDIANS.

The Indians that inhabited this county and the surrounding section were Sioux. The acknowledged chief was Red Thunder. These Indians were great thieves, constantly roaming about in parties, watching trappers and emigrants who attempted to settle. After the troops abandoned Fort Dodge they became exceedingly troublesome. For the protection of the settlers, William Williams was given authority from the Governor to keep peace between them and the settlers. Major Williams succeeded in doing so very well, until Henry Lott, a desperate character, wayland and shot "Si-dom-i-ma-do-tah," their chief, and murdered his squaws and children, of which an account is given in the history of Humboldt County. After that outrage the Indians were naturally more difficult to manage, and for some time threatened the whites with destruction. It was some time after the murder committed by Lott before the skeleton of the murdered chief was found. In the meantime, the Indians generally fell back and united with other Sioux from the St. Peter's, in an expedition against the Omahas, over five hundred warriors in all. This array of Indians collected on the north, alarmed the few settlers then in the county very much, until their intentions were ascertained. They made their raid on the Omahas of the Missouri, returning with a great number of ponies and much plunder

CITY OF FORT DODGE.

Fort Dodge, the county seat of Webster County, is situated on the east bank of the Des Moines River, about two hundred miles west from Dubuque, on the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railway, and about eighty miles north of Des Moines City, the Capital of Iowa, and is the terminus of the Des Moines & Fort Dodge Railroad. The town of Fort Dodge is situated on an elevated plateau, composed of three terraces, which rise in all about one hundred and fifty feet above the level of the river. On the east it is approached by an extensive prairie, beautiful in appearance; on the northwest and south it is surrounded by heavy timber; the banks on the west side terminate precipitately, forming an amphitheater, and adding exceedingly to the beauty of the scene, which is not surpassed by any thing west of the Mississippi River.

The Des Moines is a pure clear stream; flows over a rock and pebble bottom, at the base. The other streams in the vicinity of the town are Soldiers' Creek, on the north, and Deer Creek, on the south. On the east of the Des Moines, above the town, the Lizard River empties into the Des Moines. This stream affords good water power. All these streams are skirted with timber. The first town plat was surveyed and laid out on the 27th of March, 1854. After the troops abandoned the fort, Major W. Williams, and his son J. B. Williams, and Sergeant John Hefley, were the only residents for nearly two years.

Among the first settlers that came to Fort Dodge, after it was laid out as a town, we find Colonel Cyrus C. Carpenter, who subsequently distinguished himself as colonel of an Iowa regiment during the rebellion, and now so ably fills the office of Governor of Iowa.

In April, 1856, the county seat of Webster County was (by the voice of the people) removed from Homer to Fort Dodge. Additions were then laid out, and the town extended.

The first sermon preached in Fort Dodge was by Reverend J. H. Burleigh, of the Methodist Church. He came to the fort in the Fall of 1851, and was furnished with a large hospital tent, which was pitched on the ground now lot No. 11, in block No. 3, where he held a three days' meeting, very much to the gratification of the officers and men.

In July, 1856, the first newspaper was published, called the Fort Dodge Sentinel, edited by A. S. White.

Honorable C. C. Carpenter had the honor of teaching the first school in the place, there being at that time about twenty children of school age.

William Williams was the first post master appointed, and the first store opened was that of Williams & Lemp.

Doctor S. B. Olney was the first physician, and John F. Duncombe, Esq., the first lawyer.

W. R. Miller opened the first house of entertainment, in the building known as the "Wakonsa House."

The United States Land Office was opened here in 1856, and in June of the same year the railroad company located their road to this place; and from that time on the village rapidly grew, until now, by census of 1875, it has a population of 3,587.

The churches of the place have hardly kept pace with the other improvements of the village; but the Methodists have just completed a handsome, costly, brick edifice. The Presbyterian church, of brick, was erected in 1857, and the Congregationalists erected a chapel in 1870. The Universalists built in 1869; the Episcopalians in 1858. The Catholic church, Reverend T. F. Lenehan, pastor, was built in 1856; German Lutheran in 1862, and was built of stone from the famous gypsum quarries. The German Evangelical built in 1867.

There is a large, brick high school building erected on a very commanding site, surrounded by a large yard. Other ward schools are built at convenient locations. A course of study has been adopted by the board, occupying four years. A convent school, in connection with the Catholic church, is under the supervision of the Sisters of Mercy, and is styled "Our Lady of the Lourdes Convent of Mercy." This order was introduced into this state three years ago, by Reverend Thomas M. Lenehan, and by reason of the competent manner of conducting the schools has rapidly grown in favor. There is now an average attendance of two hundred day pupils. The buildings are large and commodious. See view of the buildings in this Atlas.

The passenger depot of the Illinois Central Railroad is built of stone, at a probable cost of $30,000. The company have a round house and a repair shop, etc., located here.

There are three flouring mills—two steam and one water power; two breweries; one pottery, which makes a good article of stone ware; and a few other small manufacturing establishments.

Almost every branch of trade is represented in Fort Dodge, and the city is in a flourishing condition.

The Semi-Weekly Times has reached its seventh year, and is managed by L. R. Train, as editor and proprietor.

The Messenger (Republican) is issued by Albert and Pauline Swalm, as editors and proprietors, and is now in its second volume.

DUNCOMBE.

Nine miles from Webster City. The place was laid out in November, 1869, by the Iowa Falls & Sioux City Railroad Company, and named for John F. Duncombe, of Fort Dodge.

There are several other small villages and post offices about the county, but none of sufficient size to require a description. Around the various coal mines are erected numerous buildings, mostly occupied by the miners.

The population of Webster County, by census of 1875, is 13,114. Of this number, 4,597 were born in Iowa, 3,264 in foreign countries, and 5,253 in various parts of the United States.

DELAWARE COUNTY.

This county is situated in the third tier south from the Minnesota line, and the second west from the Mississippi River, and is divided into sixteen congressional or land survey townships, containing in all 368,640 acres.

SURFACE.

The county is divided into timber land and prairie, the latter comprising about three-fourths of the surface, and is desirably varied, being generally undulated and gently rolling, presenting a pleasing landscape to the eye, and affording superior drainage, without the disadvantages of high hills and steep declivities. The timber land which is found in the neighborhood of the streams is more rough and broken, and is in some places quite hilly. As a whole, the general surface and appearance of the county is attractive to one seeking a good farm, or a pleasant home.

SOIL.

The soil is excellent, being composed of a deep black loam, with a considerable mixture of sand in many places, rendering it warm, and causing a rapid growth of vegetation. It is unsurpassed by no county in this part of the state for fertility, and its adaptation to the growth of all kinds of grains, fruits and vegetables, which can be produced in this climate.

STREAMS.

Throughout it is well watered, the number and distribution of its springs, streams and lakes being admirable, and leaving no considerable portion of the county destitute of an abundant supply of living water. The principal stream is the South Fork of the Maquoketa River, which enters the county near the northwest corner, and passes through it in a southeasterly direction, with its tributaries, the chief of which are Plum and Honey Creeks on the east, and Prairie and Buck Creeks on the west. The other streams are the North Fork of the Maquoketa in the east, the Little Turkey in the northwest, and the Buffalo in the southwest. Nearly all of these streams afford excellent water powers, which have as yet been only partly utilized, but will, when properly improved, return large profits to the enterprising capitalist.

Numerous springs of pure, soft water are found in abundance, and are largely used for family and stock purposes, while clear, cold water is found in never-failing quantities, by digging at an average depth of from twenty to thirty feet.

TIMBER.

Timber is well distributed, accessible to all parts of the county, and in sufficient quantities to supply the demands for fuel and other purposes. It is found mostly in the immediate neighborhood of the streams, the heaviest and most valuable being on the west side of the Maquoketa, and on Turkey Creek in the northeast part of the county. The facilities for procuring coal from adjoining counties, and building timber from the pineries of the north, are so good that the demand for native timber does not seem to increase with the growth and increased wealth and population of the county. The varieties of timber are those usually found in this climate; among the most important and valuable of which may be mentioned nearly the entire oak family, black walnut, butternut, hickory, soft, hard and birds-eye maple, ash, and many other well known varieties.

PRODUCTIONS.

Wheat and corn are perhaps the staple productions; while oats, barley, buckwheat, rye and potatoes, are raised with success. Garden vegetables in great variety and perfection, are grown in vast quantities. In short, all the cereals, grasses and vegetables cultivated in the Middle States, can be successfully produced here. Small fruits of every kind are readily grown of superior quality, and in such large quantities as to astonish those unacquainted with the fertility of the soil, while the hardier kinds of apples, pears and cherries, can be readily grown. Though not being a superior fruit country, yet all the hardier varieties can with a little care be raised with certainty and success.

STOCK.

Probably no portion of northern Iowa is better adapted for stock raising than this county, containing as it does a large amount of high rolling prairie, with openings and valleys in the timber which afford fine Spring grazing and late Fall pasture. The sparkling pebbly streams, and the clear pure springs of liquid coolness, which are every where found in abundance, afford advantages seldom united with a fertile soil. As a dairy country, it has no superior in the West, as can readily be shown by the amount of butter annually shipped, and the high prices it commands in the Eastern markets. Delaware butter has twice taken premiums at great fairs at St. Louis. Sheep do well; while pork claims greater attention, and is more generally and extensively raised by the farmers in this county, than any other class of stock.

BUILDING MATERIALS.

Excellent building stone can be obtained in almost unlimited quantities in all parts of the county. It is a magnesian limestone, of a formation lying above that of the celebrated quarries at Anamosa, in Jones County. The exposures are numerous along the Maquoketa and its branches. Near the streams the soil is usually thin, but on receding a short distance, the rocks are heavily covered, forming a rolling and fertile country. Whenever opened to a sufficient depth, a superior quality of building rock is obtained, of a pale yellow or soft white color, but somewhat harder than the Anamosa stone, yet is easily worked. Extensive quarries have been opened at Colesburg, Delhi, Hopkinton and in the vicinity of Manchester. Good flagging is found in some places, while nearly all the rock will make excellent lime. In many places fossils characteristic of the Niagara group are abundant. Very pretty cornelians and agates are found among the gravel of the Maquoketa. A good quality of pottery clay is obtained near Colesburg, which has been extensively worked; while clay from which good brick are manufactured, is found in all parts of the county.

EARLY HISTORY.

During the Summer of 1836, William Bennett moved with his family from Galena, Illinois, and built a cabin in the timber which has since been known as Eads Grove. This was the year before the government survey, and was the first settlement of any kind made in the county by whites. The next settlement, of which the writer is able to learn anything, was made by a party of Scotch early in the Summer of 1837. They emigrated from the Red River country of the North, part going up to Jones County, and the remainder locating at a grove in the southeast part of this county, which is still known by the name of "Scotch Grove." Two Livingston brothers, Hugh Rose and some others whose names have been forgotten, formed the party. A little later a family by the name of Keby located near Rockville, on the east line of the county. They all built cabins, broke small patches of prairie, and raised a few potatoes and some other vegetables during that season.

In the Spring of 1838, Joel Bailey and John Keeler came into the county, made a claim near the ford on the Maquoketa, still called "Bailey's Ford," built a cabin, and broke some twenty acres of prairie, which was probably the first breaking of any considerable size done in the county. William Nicholson made a claim and did some breaking that same season, on the present site of the town of Hopkinton; Abraham and William H. Whiteside, S. P. Whiteker, —— Nagle, Silas Gilmore, Wellington Woolsey, Thomas Coles, J. W. Penn, —— Swartz, Frank Moffit, John Corbin, the Cutler Brothers, G. D. Dillon, who built the first frame house in the county, all came that year.

During 1839-40, there was a slow but steadily increasing immigration. Among those who found their way here and became permanent citizens, the following are worthy of special notice: Clement Coffin, who settled first at Eads Grove, where, after remaining for a short time, he removed to Coffin's Grove, in the township now bearing that name, and was, at the time, located further west than any other white family in this part of the Territory of Iowa. William Eads and his son, Thomas Eads, John Hinkley, and Daniel Brown, who was the first blacksmith in the county, settled at Eads Grove. David Moreland, —— McMillen and —— McQuilton, located at Colesburg, or Colony, as it was then generally called. They came from Uniontown, Penn., chartered a small steamboat, on which they loaded their household furniture, farming implements, wagons, carriages, stock, etc., etc., came down the Ohio River and up the Mississippi, landing at Cassville, from which point they came across land to this county. They were thus able to bring more of the conveniences and luxuries of their eastern homes, than was enjoyed by any other family who settled here at that early period. C. W. Hobbs moved from Dubuque at this time with his family, and remained for some time at Rockville, removing to Delhi in 1843. Leroy Jackson and A. H. Carter bought out the Nicholson claim at Hopkinton, and each entered a quarter section of land, while Missouri and Sam Dickson located south of Colesburg. Lawrence McName at Colesburg, and Henry Baker at Eads Grove.

The first white child born in the county, was that of William Bennett, born in 1837 or '38, and living but a short time, was the first death. The oldest persons now living, who were born in this county, are William and Cornelia, twin children of G. D. Dillon. They were born in the Fall of 1840, and are living, one in this and one in Dubuque County. Soon after, on the 7th of January, 1841, was born to John Corbin a son, J. W., now living on a farm some two miles east of Delhi. The first death of an adult was that of Thomas Nicholson, father of William Nicholson, who died at Hopkinton in the Winter or Spring of 1839.

The first marriage which occurred in the county, was that of Thomas Cole and Miss Barbary Nicholson, step-daughter of William Eads, which was celebrated in July, 1841, the Reverend Simeon Clark, now of Farley, Dubuque County, performing the ceremony. It is related, with how much truth the writer can not say, that soon after this Samuel Kelley secured the "very best match in the county," by marrying the only marriageable woman then in the county.

The first flouring mill in the county was erected during the Summer of 1844, at Eads Grove, by William Bennett. It was what might be called a "corn cracker," having no smutter or bolt.

A REMINISCENCE.

The following incident, among others related to the writer, will illustrate the style of those times, and the intense simplicity of the pioneers of this county. A certain dignitary of the law, wearing the judicial ermine of a "Justice of the peace," was called upon to perform the solemn rite of marriage. Proceeding toward the dwelling designated, and finding his path obstructed by a rapid stream that had been suddenly swollen, and rendered impassible by a recent freshet, he called the high contracting parties to the water's edge on the opposite side, and made their hearts glad by marrying them from where he stood, although he was unable to salute the bride in the courteous manner his feelings and the custom of the times would have dictated.

ORGANIZATION.

This county was named and the boundaries defined by act of the Territorial Legislature at their first session, which met at Burlington in the Winter of 1837 and '38. At the session of 1839 and '40, William Smith, of Dubuque; Thomas S. Denison, of Bowens Prairie; and William Jones, of Bellevue, were appointed commissioners to locate the county seat. Early the following Fall, the first two mentioned, Smith and Denison, met, and together reviewed the locations which, in their opinion were the most eligable. After spending several days in making a thorough examination, it became evident that they could not agree. Each had fixed upon different locations, and the more they argued the more determined they each became, that the other was wrong and must submit. After spending much time in their futile efforts to convince each other, they finally determined to go home and leave the location of the seat of county government an unsettled question. They soon, however, changed their minds, when they remembered that unless they gave the county seat a location, they could not receive any compensation for the time and labor they had spent in their unfruitful efforts to agree. Both still being unwilling to yield or to compromise, they at last, hit upon the plan of determining it by chance, and Smith being successful, located it at Meilheirn or "Durchtown."

RE-LOCATION OF COUNTY SEAT.

As soon as the action of the commissioners became known, it gave almost universal dissatisfaction. A mass meeting was called at Penn's Grove to protest against the injustice of their action. Petitions were put in circulation and generally signed by the citizens of the county, asking the Legislature to grant a re-location of the county seat by a vote of the people. This petition, duly signed, was presented to the Territorial Legislature, which met at Iowa City the following Winter, and on the 13th day of January, 1841, an act was approved granting to the citizens of Delaware County the right to locate their county seat by a vote of the people at the general election in the following August. This act was passed without opposition, except from Doctor Mason, of Dubuque, who very eloquently argued that it was too important a question to be left for the citizens of the county to decide. His eloquence, however, did not convince his associates of the danger, as it passed without further opposition.

In order to fix upon some location, that the people might vote intelligently, a mass meeting was called at Penn's Grove, about two and a half miles from the present location of Delhi, and after discussing the matter at length, a committee of seven was appointed, whose duty it was to visit all the suitable locations in the county and report. This committee was composed of Joel Bailey, Leroy Jackson, William H. Whiteside, Roland Aubrey, S. P. Whitaker, J. W. Penn and Cyrus Keeler. They met at Penn's some days later, and first proceeded to the geographical center of the county, a little west of the present Village of Delaware Center. It was, however, unanimously considered to be ineligible, as it was high rolling prairie without wood or water. They then went southwest to Spring Branch, it being the nearest timber, but upon examination found it to be hilly, broken, and wholly unsuitable for a town site. They then followed this stream to the Maquoketa, at a point some two miles west and two south of the center, where some of the committee thought best to locate the future shire town. A majority, however, not being satisfied, it was determined to visit Silver Lake, a beautiful sheet of water surrounded by fine burr oak groves, in which were several large springs that were then considered almost indispensible in the location of a town site. As they were riding leisurely along, having reached the brow of the hill overlooking Silver Lake, and where the Village of Delhi now stands, a large deer suddenly sprang up, and running a short distance, stopped and stood looking at them. Roland Aubrey, who, frontiersman like, always carried his trusty rifle, quickly dismounting and taking aim, fired a piece, was about to fire when Jackson exclaimed, "Now, Aubrey, kill that deer and we will stick the county seat stake right here." Aubrey then fired bringing down the deer, and with his unerring aim located the seat of county government of the now populous and wealthy County of Delaware.

FIRST ELECTION.

At the general election, held on the 3d day of August, 1841, the people ratified at the polls the action of their committee. Several unsuccessful attempts have been made to change this early decision of the people. Both Manchester and Delaware Center are eager to secure the honors which the early settlers of this county conferred upon Delhi. At this election, the first ever held in the county, the total number of votes cast was thirty-five, all except six of which were cast for Delhi as the county seat, while the entire population of this county, including Buchanan, was one hundred and eighty-five souls.

The law under which this election was held, required that the election returns should be made to the Clerk of the Board of County Commissioners of Dubuque County, and the duty of making these returns devolved upon Charles W. Hobbs. As he was not then the owner of a horse, and was unable to secure the loan of one from his more fortunate neighbors, he was compelled the morning of the last day on which the returns could be legally filed, to set out on foot and alone for Dubuque, a distance of forty-five miles, where he arrived about nine o'clock in the evening.

At the same election, William H. Whiteside, Daniel Brown and William Eads, were elected County Commissioners, and Leroy Jackson, Sheriff, thus completing the organization of the county, which up to this time had been attached to Dubuque County for judicial and revenue purposes, and still remained so in a measure until 1844, when a court was established at Delhi. The first meeting of these commissioners was held at Eads Grove, on the 12th day of November, 1841, when Charles W. Hobbs was appointed clerk of the board and county recorder. The remaining other first officers of the county were J. W. Penn, Collector; Joel Bailey, Surveyor; Fayette Phillips, Assessor; Robert B. Hudson (who it is said could neither read nor write), Treasurer; Clement Coffin, Probate Judge.

FIRST MEETING OF COMMISSIONERS.

At this first meeting of the Board of County Commissioners, William Eads was authorized to borrow money at an interest not exceeding forty per cent. per annum, and enter the quarter section of land on which had been located the future town of Delhi. From some cause he was not able to comply, and the order was rescinded at a subsequent meeting. The land was finally entered March 5, 1846, by Leroy Jackson and Lawrence McName, and afterwards conveyed to the county, who, subsequently realized enough from the sale of town lots to build the present court house and jail.

FIRST COURT HOUSE AND COURTS.

During the Winter of 1843 and '4 the Territorial Legislature designated Delhi as one of the points in the 3d Judicial District for holding court during the following Fall. As there was no suitable building, and none in fact except the small log cabin of C. W. Hobbs, at the county seat, the citizens of the county seeing that something must be done, generally turned out, and while some cut and hewed logs in the timber, others came with their teams and hauled them to a designated point on the hill overlooking Silver Lake, and there constructed a commodious log court house some 18x24 feet, two stories high, with a court room on the first floor, and a jury room above. The contract for roofing, putting in doors and windows, and otherwise completing the building, was let by the county commissioners to Simeon Phillips, at a contract price not to exceed sixty-five dollars.

It was, however, not completed until after the holding of the first term of the District Court, which convened on the 30th day of September, 1844. Honorable Thomas S. Wilson one of the judges of the Territorial Supreme Court, and presiding judge of the 3d Judicial District presiding; J. W. Penn, Sheriff, and Charles W. Hobbs, Clerk.

The grand jury, after being charged by "his honor," were conducted by United States Marshal, William E. Lafling well, now of Clinton, in this state, to a thick clump of timber not far from the court house, where with a fallen tree for a seat, they held their first deliberations. As there was no business presented to them, their session was a short one, and they were discharged without finding a single indictment. The court adjourned for the term, on the evening of the first day, having transacted but little business, and without calling a petit jury.

FIRST CRIMINAL TRIAL.

The first criminal trial which took place in the county, was at the second term of the District Court, in April, 1845. Jefferson Lowe, still a resident of the county, was tried, being charged with the murder of D. R. Dance, who had been found lying dead in the timber, shot through the head. United States District Attorney, James Crawford, prosecuted on the part of the people, while the prisoner was ably defended by General James Wilson, of Dubuque. The trial was an exciting one, and called together a large number of people from this and adjoining counties. The case was argued and given to the jury late in the evening, who were not long in disposing of it by bringing in a verdict of "not guilty," which was in full accord with the feelings of all who had witnessed the trial. So hearty and enthusiastic was the approval of those present, that one spontaneous shout of joy rang out clear and strong upon the evening air, reverberating in constantly extending circles, until it died away in the distant and moonlit forest.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The county buildings consist of a court house and jail, the county offices, and the poor house or asylum.

The first court house was the rude log structure heretofore referred to, which was erected in the Summer of 1844. The present court house and jail were built in 1851-'2, at a cost of about four thousand dollars, which money was realized from the sale of lots owned by the county in the Town of Delhi. It is a wood structure, 30x46 feet, with the jail and jailor's room on the first floor or basement, the court room, jurors' rooms, sheriffs' offices, etc., above. It is an old-styled, storm-beaten building, scarcely up to what the population, wealth and influence of the county would seem to demand.

The county offices, as well as the court house, stand in a fine natural park, pleasantly shaded with noble samples of the native forest, and occupies an elevated position near the center of the Village of Delhi. It is a substantial two story brick building, of a rather novel and antiquated style of architecture, which might perhaps remind one who beholds it for the first time, of the castles and battlements of feudal days, without presenting to him any of their beauty or grandeur. It contains four large, well lighted and pleasant rooms. It was built in 1857, at a cost of about five thousand dollars. It has well answered the ends for which it was built, and will probably continue to do so until decay, and the spirit of progress shall demand and erect a more artistic structure.

The poor farm, which is situated a short distance northwest of Delhi, contains two hundred and forty acres of land, forty of which are timber, and is well stocked and managed, affording a good home to the "county wards." The poor house is a fine, two story brick structure, with gothic roof and dormer windows, which gives it an accommodating capacity equal to a three story building, while its external appearance is much finer. It was erected in 1873, at a cost of about five thousand dollars, and is a credit to the county.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Delaware County Agricultural Society was organized in accordance with the laws of Iowa, regulating agricultural societies, by the adoption of a constitution and by-laws, at a meeting held in Manchester, on the 30th day of January, 1869. N. Ruggles was elected president, and J. Piper, secretary. A suitable tract of land a short distance east of Manchester, was immediately rented for a term of years, enclosed with a substantial board fence, and the necessary exhibition buildings erected. The first fair was held the following September, with very gratifying results, which at once determined the future success of the society beyond a question. The first year it gave one thousand dollars in premiums, which it has been able gradually to increase, until in 1874 it gave upwards of sixteen hundred dollars. The annual exhibitions have all been good, while those of 1872 and 1874 were remarkably fine.

RAILROADS.

The Dubuque and Pacific Railroad was the first road which entered this county. It was constructed in 1858-'9 and passes through the center of the county from east to west. It has since passed into the hands of the Dubuque and Sioux City Company, and is now operated by the Illinois Central, under a twenty years' lease, about one-fourth of which has already expired. The Dubuque and Southwestern Railroad passes through the southeast part of the county, in a southwesterly direction, while the Davenport and St. Paul Railroad runs through the county from north to south, thus giving all parts of the county superior railroad facilities.

INCIDENT.

The following will illustrate the character of the school officers and teachers in those early days. A young man having made application for a school, presented himself to the board for examination. A majority of the committee invited a gentleman to officiate who happened to be present, and whom they supposed to be more competent to conduct the examination, when one of their number objected, stating that he would undertake it himself, and at once proceeded to catechise the young applicant in a very severe manner. Having at length exhausted his stock of questions, he vehemently exclaimed, "Your education, your ability to teach is first rate, but I do protest agin your moral character. Any man who will come on my land, on Sunday, and kill a deer, is not fit to teach my children." The young man immediately replied in language more forcible than elegant, "You G—— d—— old hog, I gave you half of the deer, and you want the other half and the hide, do you?"

The present county officers are: J. M. Holbrook, Treasurer; J. B. Boggs, Auditor; Henry C. Jackson, Recorder; J. B. Satterlee, Clerk of Courts; Abner Dunham, Sheriff; William H. Mertin, County School Superintendent; O. E. Noble, Surveyor; Thomas Cochrane, Poor House Director; P. Dunham, H. C. Merriam and J. B. Bailey, Supervisors.

WAR RECORD.

During the late terrible war of the Rebellion Delaware County did her full part, in a state which so nobly responded to the calls of the General Government. The names of upwards of one thousand private soldiers and sixty commissioned officers are enrolled among the national archives at Washington, where they will remain to proclaim to future generations the honor due to the loyal "citizen soldiery" of Delaware County. Many went never to return, and their bones are now bleaching beneath Southern suns, with no storied mausoleum to mark their final rest. But they are not forgotten, for they live in the memory of their relatives, in the hearts of a grateful people, and in the history of a mighty nation. Could they ask for a more glorious career while living, or a prouder fame when dead?

MANCHESTER,

Situated a little west of the center, is the largest and most important town in Delaware County. It is located on the Iowa division of the Illinois Central Railroad, forty-five miles west from Dubuque, on both sides of the south fork of the Maquoketa River, which at this place is from seventy to ninety feet wide. The natural advantages of the site for the location of a town are all that the most exacting could demand, being situated well above high water, sufficiently rolling to afford superior drainage, with a soil well adapted to gardening and fruit culture, and making excellent roads.

In Summer it originally presented many attractions to the eye of the early settler, covered as it was with a rich, thick carpet of grass, and dotted here and there with beautiful burr oak groves. It was the favorite resort of large herds of deer, which were often seen grazing beneath its shades, or sporting upon its grass plats. Wolves were numerous, and often ventured near the dwellings of the first settlers, while it is related that snakes of a large size were plenty and often showed themselves to the great alarm of the women and children, and in one case a lady rose in the morning in perfect unconsciousness that a huge serpentine monster, seven and a half feet in length, had been quietly coiled up in the same bed during the night. It is surrounded in many directions by prairies, which for fertility and adaptation to agricultural purposes are unsurpassed by any in the county, while in other directions timber of an excellent quality is found in abundance. Never failing wells of cold water are easily obtained, while the river and numerous springs afford an ample supply of living water. There are numerous quarries within two or three miles where building stone of an excellent quality are found in almost unlimited quantities, while there is an abundance of clay from which brick of a good quality are manufactured. Several excellent water powers now unused, but capable of running a large amount of machinery, are found in the neighborhood.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first settler upon the original town site was a Norwegian, who, in 1850 or thereabouts, entered the north half of the northeast quarter of section thirty-two, and the north half of the northwest quarter of section thirty-three, and some other adjoining land. He built a cabin, did some fencing and breaking, but soon after becoming dissatisfied, disposed of his claim to Allen Love, and left the county long before there was any thought of establishing a town here. Near by were the improvements made by George and Henry Achers, while the first settlers in the township were John, William, Adon and Levert Padleford, who, with their mother and three sisters, located in 1841, and did much towards the early development of this part of the county. The land on which Manchester now stands was owned in 1855 by O. P. Reeves, Allen Love and L. Burrington, who first conceived the idea of establishing a town, and made liberal donations of land for that purpose to Judge Dyre, of Dyresville, and a man by the name of Chesterman, who located and surveyed the village that same year, and called it Burrington, in honor of Levens Burrington, one of the donors. During the following year they sold to the Iowa Land Company, who resurveyed and greatly enlarged it, laying out the original plat of the town of Manchester as it now exists. Samuel Bethel, now a resident of California, did the surveying and laid out the town for the company.

Among the first settlers of Manchester were Edson Merrill, A. R. Loomis, Doctor Robins, Thomas Toogood and William White, besides those mentioned above, who were first upon the ground. The first white child born here was Marvin Reeves, the first death Charles E. Reeves, children of Marvin Reeves. The first marriage was that of Lyman Wright to Miss Sarah Lockwood, while Marvin Reeves erected the first frame dwelling. The first store was built by Judge Dyer, and is still standing and known as the "long store." The "Clarence House" by Toogood and Bethel, the old Exchange, the store of A. R. Loomis and some other business houses, with a number of dwellings, were put up the first season. The first bridge across the Maquoketa was built by the proprietors of the town, who erected and assisted in the erection of several business houses and dwellings. The first banking house opened in Manchester, which was also the first one in the county, was the Manchester Bank, owned by David Leroy.

As a large majority of the early settlers of the place had recently removed from the East, they keenly felt the loss of school and church privileges which they had there enjoyed, so that among the first things they did was the erection of a school house, which was used some ten years for school, church and political purposes.

Soon after the establishment of a post office, considerable annoyance was experienced in mail matters, owing to the similarity of the name Burrington to Burlington, a flourishing town in the southern part of the state, and the name was changed to Manchester, derived, it is said, from Chesterman, one of the original proprietors, by prefixing the last syllable "man" to "Chester," thus forming Manchester.

In June, 1865, the Maquoketa River rose to an unusually high point, and the substantial bridge, built some three years before, was washed away by the flood for the second time. It was immediately replaced through the exertions of the energetic business men of Manchester. It was again swept away during the following winter, again replaced, and for the fourth time carried off by the freshet of March, 1868. During the season the substantial structure now standing was erected at a point a short distance below the old crossing, at a cost of eleven thousand dollars, five thousand of which was appropriated by the county and the remaining six thousand by the town corporation.

INCORPORATED.

Manchester was regularly incorporated as a city in the early part of 1866. This was brought about through the active exertions of Messrs. Doggett, Green, Keller, Wells, and H. M. Conger. The first charter election was held on the 29th day of June, 1866, at which the following officers were chosen: Mayor, A. R. Loomis; Treasurer and Recorder, W. H. Board; Councilmen, C. H. Carpenter, N. Denton, Charles Paxon, Joel Bailey and John Schelling.

Manchester has a good graded school, with a high school building erected in 1866. The Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Universalist, Advent and Catholic Churches have organizations, and most of them have good church edifices. The Mason and Odd Fellow orders have organizations, which are in a flourishing condition. They have two fire companies, a lecturing and a dramatic association.

PRESS.

The first newspaper printed in Manchester was the Delaware County Union, which was started by the liberality of the citizens, who raised a bonus of three hundred dollars for Edward Burnside, who issued the first number March 25, 1864, and continued to conduct it with success and ability until his death, in December, 1866. It then passed into the hands of L. L. Ayres, under whose management it was enlarged to seven columns. Under Mr. Ayres' control it grew in popular favor, was the organ of the Republican party, and for a time was very successful; but at last, "for want of financial breath," died on the 31st day of December, 1872.

The first number of the Manchester Press was issued on the 16th day of June, 1871, by H. L. Rann, who conducted it until July 1, 1873, when he sold to Honorable C. Sanborn, who on the first day of January, 1875, took in L. H. Fisk as associate editor and publisher. The Press is a large seven column quarto sheet, neatly printed and ably edited. It is Republican in politics. The office contains a large Potter power printing machine, with a well selected job office, the most complete in the county.

The Manchester Democrat was established, and issued its first number on the 20th day of January, 1875; F. B. Gregg, publisher and proprietor. It is a five column quarto sheet, Democratic in politics, and editorially is ably conducted by L. L. Ayres, who is making it emphatically a local paper, spicy and readable.

DELHI,

The county seat of Delaware County, is located some four miles southeast of the center of the county, on the southeast quarter of section seventeen, in township eighty-eight north, of range four west, of the fifth principal meridian. It was located by a vote of the people, held on the 3d day of August, 1841, and was surveyed, platted and laid out on the 5th day of April, 1842, by David Ivory, county surveyor.

In the Summer of 1843, Charles W. Hobbs and family moved to Delhi, erected a log cabin, made a claim, and were for two years the only inhabitants in the place. In the Fall of the same year a post office was established, under the then existing regulation of the Government giving every county seat a post office, and Mrs. Mary E., wife of C. W. Hobbs, was appointed post mistress. This was the first post office in the county, and was supplied with mail once a week by William Smith, of Dubuque, who had the first mail contract through the county, from Dubuque via Delhi to Quasqueton, in Buchanan County, which he carried on horseback.

During the Spring of 1845 the population of Delhi was augmented by the arrival of John W. Clark, William Phillips, Thomas Norvis, A. K. Eaton and Joseph Mitchell.

Thomas W. Hobbs, now a resident of this town, and a son of C. W. Hobbs, was the first white child born in this vicinity, and Marshal, son of A. K. Eaton, was the first child who died here. The first public school in Delhi, and probably in the county, was held in the log court house during the Summer of 1846, and was taught by Miss Roxy Brown.

From the first settlement up to the Spring of 1851 the growth of the town was very slow, though there was a steady increase. As it was on the stage line from Dubuque west, and one of the principal stopping places, immigration about this time began to pour in more rapidly, and it soon gave evidences of becoming a town of considerable importance. Good buildings were put up, and energetic, wide-awake business men, mostly from the far East, located here; and with the almost certain prospect of securing a railroad at no very distant day, business of all kinds became lively. Had the citizens of Delhi then embraced the opportunity offered them, and secured the completion of the Dubuque & Pacific Railroad through their town, they would have made its future certain, and forever silenced all cavil about the removal of the county seat. Under the impetus given by its railroad prospects, it rapidly increased in wealth and importance, until in 1856 or 1857 it had a population of about eleven hundred, and was the most important town west of Dubuque. They however failed to comply with the requests of the railroad projectors, giving the matter but little attention, as they believed the road would come to Delhi whether they encouraged it or not. Thus they let pass the one opportunity offered them; and when the railroad was built it passed three miles north, and they were left "out in the cold." Since then the town has seemed to be on a decline, losing many of its most energetic men, and decreasing in wealth and population, until it now contains scarcely five hundred inhabitants.

PRESS.

The Delhi Argus was the name of the first newspaper printed in Delaware County, and was edited by E. D. Coon, since a brigadier general in the volunteer service, and now a resident of Alabama, who commenced its publication at Delhi in 1853. Captain J. L. Noble, then a small boy, rolled the first form of this newspaper. After running it for some time Coon sold to G. W. Field, who managed the concern with energy and ability until the Fall of 1856, when he transferred his interest to C. F. Hobbs. About this time the office was partially destroyed by fire, the press being greatly injured, and many fonts of type rendered useless by missing letters. Under Mr. Hobbs' management it was enlarged to a seven column paper, the name changed to the Delhi Democrat, and the office did a flourishing business. It was afterwards purchased by Reverend L. S. Ashbough and J. L. McCreery, who again reduced it to a six column sheet, and issued the first number of the Delaware Journal, January 1, 1859. Reverend Ashbough did not, however, remain long in the publishing business, but soon disposed of his interest to James L. Noble, who soon after handed over the entire control of the paper to McCreery. About this time James Wright, afterwards secretary of state, bought and held for some time an interest in the concern. After McCreery obtained the sole management he changed the name to the Delaware County Journal, and continued its publication until the 1st of January, 1864, when it died from starvation, or inability to collect. The press and material were taken to Manchester in the following March by Edward Burnside, when he immediately commenced issuing the Manchester Union.

Some time during the Spring or Summer of 1860, Charles Hays established a small sheet called the Iowa News, which he carried on for about a year with indifferent success, and finally discontinued on account of insufficient support.

The Bariville Sun was started at Bariville, March 24, 1870, by J. A. Cole. Honorable C. Sanborn bought the office February 1, 1871, and with the commencement of the second volume changed its name to the Bariville Record. In the following June he removed the office to Delhi and changed the name to the Delaware County Record. It was continued here under his management till August 22, 1872, when he sold to J. B. Swinburn, who, immediately upon taking possession of the office, changed the name to the Delhi Monitor, which name it still retains. Swinburn still continues to edit, which he does with judgment and ability. It is an eight column sheet, republican in politics, and the only illustrated political paper in this part of the state.

HOPKINTON.

The Town of Hopkinton, situated in a beautiful grove on the east bank of the south fork of the Maquoketa River, is an enterprising village, and a station on the Davenport & St. Paul Railroad, some twelve miles southeast from the center of the county, and five from the south and east boundary line.

It lies on the second branch of the Maquoketa, in a burr oak grove sloping towards the river, which gradually rising opens into a large rolling prairie on the southeast and extends to the timber of the north fork of the Maquoketa, a distance of seven miles. On the north are oak openings extending to Plum Creek, while the country lying between is broken, abounding in extensive limestone quarries which have been opened in many places. West and south it is bounded by the Maquoketa and a heavy growth of timber among the finest in the county. At the foot of the hill, on the west, are the celebrated springs known as "Jackson's Springs." They are three in number, issuing from the solid rock, and excite the surprise and admiration of all visitors, while meeting, they form a sparkling stream capable of supplying an entire city with excellent pure soft water.

The pioneer settler in this town was William Nicholson, who made a claim and did some breaking in 1838, having been attracted by the fine mill sites, the rich beautiful valley land, and the valuable timber in the adjacent neighborhood. In the Fall of 1840 he disposed of his claim to Leroy Jackson and Henry A. Carter. Jackson took possession in November and Carter in the following March.

In 1842 the first white child was born, Sarah B., daughter of H. A. Carter. The first death was Thomas Nicholson, father of William Nicholson, which occurred in the Spring of 1839. In the Summer of 1843 or '4 the mother of Owen Lovejoy, for many years an honored and influential member of Congress from Illinois, then living with another son, Honorable John Lovejoy, since Minister to Peru, South America, but then living on a small farm near Hopkinton, taught the first school in this portion of the county. It was a private school only patronized by a few families. She continued it but a few weeks, as her son Owen came and took her with him to his home in Illinois, where she remained, never returning to this county. During her short stay she made a lasting impression upon all who had the good fortune to make her acquaintance, as being a lovely woman of marked ability and noble character, in every way worthy of her lamented son, the Christian statesman, Owen Lovejoy. The first public school was opened in 1850, and taught by Samuel Perry, who came from Maine in pursuit of health, but died at Hopkinton in the Spring of 1851. It was a good school, but sustained only through the continuous and persistent efforts of Carter and Jackson.

The first Sunday school established in Hopkinton, and probably in the county, was organized by Messrs. Jackson and Carter in the Summer of 1841. They were the first and only teachers at that time.

As the gradual increase of inhabitants created a demand for lumber, Carter and Jackson both built saw mills, one on the Maquoketa, and the other on Plum Creek. They laid out the town in 1850, and by holding out inducements to enterprising settlers it soon became quite a flourishing village. Care was taken from the first to exclude everything that would exert an immoral influence, and to secure all the religious and educational advantages that could be found in a new and comparatively wild country. A good district school was established, and occasionally a select school with evening sessions. No billiard or liquor saloons of any kind were tolerated, while principles of the highest moral character were inculcated, and the community became noted for its intelligence, enterprise, and patriotism. Sometime during 1854 a large colony of Reform Presbyterians, attracted by the natural advantages and the favorable situation to locate in a body, bought a large tract of land, and cutting it up into farms opened and improved them, thus greatly adding to the prosperity of the town and surrounding country.

LENOX COLLEGE INSTITUTE.

The location and establishment here of Bowen's Collegiate Institute, now Lenox Collegiate Institute, occurred in 1857. C. T. Bowen, a wealthy Chicago merchant, made the first donation. The school was opened in 1868, under the management of Professor Jerome Allen, of Dubuque, with two able assistants and forty students, and was early placed under the supervision of the Presbyterian Church. The school is at present somewhat embarrassed for the want of funds, yet had an attendance, during 1864, of two hundred and fifty-four students in all the departments, and is under charge of Reverend Samuel Hodge, D.D., its able and efficient President.

SAND SPRING.

This town received its name from a large and beautiful spring which was quite noted in the early settlement of the country. In 1851, A. C. Bowen entered by warrant several thousand acres of land, on what is now called Bowen's prairie, including the present town site of Sand Spring, on which he built a cabin in 1856. During the same year the Dubuque and Southwestern Railroad was surveyed, and a station located here. The Land Company in connection with T. H. Bowen, laid out one hundred and sixty acres of land in the original town plot. The next year, Reverend Bolles laid out the colony addition, containing forty acres, and about the same time Sherwood and Cummings added nearly the same amount.

The Exodus Colony was designed to cluster at this point, but many of the number owning small farms in the vicinity preferred to build on them. It, however, brought in a number of good, industrious citizens and mechanics, who put up a number of creditable buildings. Bowen's prairie, which surrounds the town, contains about twenty-five thousand acres of excellent land, was rapidly settled and improved by an energetic class of well-to-do farmers. The location of the railroad depot gave the farmers the advantage of a fine market where they could dispose of their surplus products at good prices. The town has gradually increased, keeping step with the demands of the surrounding country, until it now has a population of about five hundred.

EARLVILLE.

This town is situated near a fine grove on the line of the Iowa division of the Illinois Central Railroad, some five miles east of the center of Delaware County. Plum Creek runs near the edge of the town and furnishes a fair water power, which is partially improved. It is in the center of a rich farming country, well improved, and settled by a class of agriculturists above the average for intelligence and thrift. It contains honest, wide-awake business men, who have by fair dealing built up a large trade. They have secured good society, excellent schools, and strong church organizations, which give it a solid and permanent growth that augurs well for its future. Earlville was the first town in the county to secure a good school house, which has been, and still is, a credit to the people.

A prominent feature of this village, and one which first attracts the attention of the visitor, is the neat and tasty appearance of the dwellings and their surroundings, while the sidewalks are superior in quality and length to any village of its size in this part of the state. These characteristics, which are peculiar to towns settled largely from New England and the East, indicate that the people are industrious, enterprising and happy.

The town derived its name from G. M. Earl, who, moving from South Bend, Indiana, was nearly the first settler on the town site. He was permanently engaged in business here for a number of years, taking an active part and deep interest in all public improvements. Among the early forces engaged in building up and improving this town should be mentioned C. G. Gillman, who came with the railroad in 1858, opened a lumber yard, erected a number of buildings, developed a fine stock farm, and in general did much to stimulate immigration and build up business. B. Thorp, Senior, came about the same time, entered into trade and grain buying, and, with his sons, kept a large first-class general store.

GREELEY.

is a pleasant little town located on the Davenport and St. Paul Railroad, north of Delaware Center, and contains some five hundred inhabitants. The village contains a good public school, which is well sustained and patronized, three churches, two hotels, some six or seven stores, blacksmith and wagon shop, post office, telegraph office, and other improvements and advantages usually found in towns of its size.

MASONVILLE.

This village is a station on the Illinois Central Railroad, seven miles west of Manchester and fifteen miles east of Independence. It was laid out in the Spring of 1855, by the Dubuque & Pacific Railroad Company. The land was originally owned by A. R. Mason, a resident of Massachusetts, who gave the railroad company an undivided one-half interest in the town plat, in consideration of their locating a depot here. The first settler was A. K. Martin, who came from Illinois, in June, 1858, located here and still remains a resident of the village. The first and oldest merchant is O. B. Dutton. It is a small quiet village, containing a population of about two hundred, is pleasantly situated near Prairie Creek, and is surrounded except on the northeast, by a fine, well improved prairie.

COLESBURG.

Is situated in the northeast part of the county, in a fine fertile farming section, a little south of the Turkey River Valley which contains some of the best timber in the state. The village was started in 1848 by H. Cole, from whence it took its name. He established the first store in 1850, in a small log building. D. Moreland was the first post master. J. B. Moreland erected a good stone building and opened a stock of goods in 1851, and P. C. Bolsinger a general stock in 1852. John V. Watson was the first attorney, while Mrs. McCleunend taught the first school, in a log school house about a mile from the village. They now have a fine graded school, employing none but the best teachers.

DELAWARE CENTER,

Is a pleasant village located a little east of the center of Delaware County, from which fact it derives its name. It is at the crossing of the Illinois Central and the Davenport & St. Paul railroads, thus possessing the best railroad facilities of any town in the county. It is on a high, rolling prairie, which gives it quite a sightly and commanding position. Although a new town, it has some very good buildings, handsome residences, two or three churches, and two hundred and fifty or three hundred inhabitants.

KEOKUK COUNTY.

The boundaries of this county were defined, and the name given, by an act of the Territorial Legislature, February 17, 1843, and until its organization it was attached to Washington County.

A part of the territory included in Keokuk County became the property of the government by a treaty with the Sac and Fox Indians, ratified on the 21st day of February, 1838. Nearly all of the southeastern township, about half of the first, and a small part of the second township north of it, was included in this purchase, and on this strip the whites were entitled to settle October 21, 1838.

By a treaty with the Indians, made at Agency, and signed October 11, 1842, the whites came into possession of all the territory lying east of Red Rock, in what is now Marion County, and under this treaty the balance of the territory embraced in Keokuk County was open to settlement on the first day of May, 1843. The principal chief who represented the Indians in making the last named treaty, was Keokuk, in whose honor the county was named.

PIONEERS.

The 21st of October, 1838, is usually regarded as the date of first settlement, although a few claims, upon which small improvements were commenced, ante-date the removal of the Indians. They were made within the limits of the "Old Strip," in the present townships of Clear Creek and Richland. In the latter township the earliest pioneer was Aaron Miller, who came in the Spring of 1838, and, after him, William Searcy. In June John Wasson visited the country, and, liking its appearance, decided to settle. Cyrus Jordan, Jacob Weiner and Mr. Tays were next, and in the Spring of 1839 Mr. Wasson returned, accompanied by James Higginbotham, William Lewis, Mitchell Gill, William Bristow, Thomas Pringle and Samuel P. Bristow. A man by the name of Griffith turned the first sod in Clear Creek Township, in 1837, on the farm afterwards owned by Doctor Washington Nealey. Doctor Nealey came in 1838, and in 1839 came Harvey Stevens, Sr., afterwards sheriff, and William Grimsley. In 1840 the accessions were William Shockley, John Baker, William Goss, James Junkin, Sr., Thomas Henderson and L. B. Holmes, and the following year, Michael Hornish, Edward Cooley, John Crill, Sr., and Robert Alexander. Further up the river, in the neighborhood of Sigourney, at Stillman's Grove, Jacob Shaver located in 1843, built a cabin, and brought his family the following Spring; and in 1844 William Shaver, Robert Linder and John Shaver settled in the neighborhood.

A saw mill was erected on the South Skunk, just above its confluence with the north branch, as early as 1843, by L. B. Hughes.

ORGANIZATION.

The organization of the county was effected in pursuance of an act of the Territorial Legislature, approved February 5, 1844. This act appointed Harvey Stevens sheriff, and provided that the clerk of the District Court should designate the place of voting, and appoint judges of an election, to be held on the first Monday of April following; to the office of clerk, Honorable Joseph Williams, Judge of the District Court, appointed S. A. James. The election was held as directed, and Jeremiah Hollingsworth, James M. Smith and Enos Darnal were chosen County Commissioners; John M. Waters, Judge of Probate; Edom Shugart, Clerk; William H. Brown, Treasurer; A. P. Tannehill, Recorder; George W. Hayes, Sheriff; S. E. McCracken, Surveyor, and Andrew Ogden, Assessor.

COUNTY SEAT.

The act above referred to also appointed a commission, consisting of John A. Stewart, George H. Stone, M.D., and Samuel Shuffleton, Esq., to locate the seat of justice. They met May 5, 1844, were sworn, and proceeded on horseback to examine the situation, and after five days' travel selected the northeast quarter of section 2, township 76 north, of range 12 west, as the county seat, giving it the name of Sigourney. This location, although within one mile of the center of the county, caused some temporary dissatisfaction; for the principal settlements were in the extreme southeast part of the county. Within less than two miles of Washington County on the east, and Jefferson on the south, was the town of Richland; and near the Washington County line, about three miles north of Richland, a rival called Western City, or Newton, where the organizing officer, S. A. James, had fixed the place of business until the county seat was located. Newton then consisted of a log school house, a tenant cabin, and a few stakes defining the future town, which is now known as an excellent grain field. Both places aspired to become the county seat, and were disappointed by the choice of the commissioners. Richland was the stronger, and here the county commissioners hastened to convene on the 15th of May, and ordered that all proceedings in relation to providing conveniences for the public business at Sigourney be deferred, and ordered also that "suitable rooms be provided in the town of Richland for holding the first term of the District Court." Taking a different view, however, of official responsibility, the newly elected clerk gathered the office papers and statutes in one hand, and a change of raiment in the other, and quietly proceeded to the place designated by the State commissioners, where he found a stout pole planted in the ground, but nought else to disturb the solitude of nature. Here the clerk erected a cabin 12x16, floored with puncheons and sided with clapboards, and in this room Judge Williams held a term of court, on the 1st day of July, 1844, at which the business consisted in admitting four aliens to citizenship, and two law students, one of which was S. Harned, afterwards County Judge, to practice at the bar. The county commissioners met soon after, and, finding that Judge Williams had not availed himself of their offer of rooms, prudently ordered their own removal to Sigourney. And so the incipient county seat struggle came to an end, and the question has never been re-opened.

COURT HOUSE.

At the meeting of the board last mentioned, they ordered a survey of a public square and lots surrounding it, and prepared specifications for a court house, to consist of a hewn log building 20x24 feet, with thirteen sleepers, and as many joists; rafters and shingle roof, and weather-boarded gable ends. To these specifications, a new board in September following added a door, windows and floor, for better convenience, and let the building contract to W. B. Thompson, for $218. This court house was finished in January, 1845, and was occupied until the completion of the present edifice, in 1859. The present court house is a substantial building, and was erected at a cost of $17,200. The square on which it stands is 276 feet each way, and, in 1860, was decorated with a border of forest trees, by request of Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney, of Hartford, Connecticut, at her expense.

A NEW BOARD—ITS DOINGS.

Returning now to 1844, we find that in August a new board of commissioners were elected, consisting of Elias Whetstone, Andrew Taylor and Obadiah Tharp. They ordered a sale of Sigourney town lots to be held on the 1st day of October. The day of sale brought but a single purchaser, who bought a single lot, for twelve dollars, payable half in three and half in six months. The solitary speculator was Joel Manchester. In January, 1845, the board succeeded in borrowing $200 with which to enter the quarter section, and ordered the survey of the entire tract into lots, which was done by Mr. Stump, the County Surveyor of Wapello. Lots about the court house square now rose to fifty dollars each.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The north part of Keokuk County is traversed in a line running nearly due east and west by the watershed which very nearly coincides with the northeastern boundary of the carboniferous age of the geological system of Iowa. North of this line the south fork of English River drains about one-fourth of the county. The north and south forks of Skunk River, which unite in the eastern part of the county, and their numerous small tributaries, drain the remainder. The descent from the watershed to the valleys of these streams is abrupt, rendering the face of the country quite rolling, except along the margin of the rivers, which are skirted by broad, level valleys. Timber borders the principal streams in considerable quantities, but is limited to occasional groves on the uplands. The county has, therefore, considerable variety in its surface features. It has an excellent soil, derived from the very deep deposit of drift, and well adapted to the production of corn and nearly all the small grains, grass, fruits and vegetables. Stock raising has proved very remunerative, as the county possesses all the requisite advantages for success in this branch of business. Frequent and good water power is afforded by both branches of Skunk River, and in its banks are exposures of good limestone for ordinary uses. The county lies about equally in the sub-carboniferous section of Iowa and the region of the coal fields. Several good coal mines have been opened, but as the sub-carboniferous limestone frequently comes to the surface along Skunk River, and as coal exists only between this and the drift, its presence is chiefly limited to the south part of the county. The drift contains an abundance of excellent clay for the manufacture of brick.

PRESENT CONDITION.

Many interesting facts concerning the present condition of the county may be found in the statistical tables in another part of this work, a few more be added here. Its public schools number 134 and its school houses are valued at $95,000. For the payment of teachers and other expenses in maintaining schools nearly $40,000 are expended annually. The permanent school fund is $22,686.

By the state census of 1873 it appears that there were then about 170,000 acres of land in cultivation, a little less than half the area of the county. There were harvested the season previous 2,995,255 bushels of corn, 570,823 of oats, 232,022 of wheat and 44,662 of barley. Reversing the order, these figures are in the ratio of 1, 5, 13, 68, nearly, barley being assumed as the unit of comparison. The wool clip for the year 1872 was 54,321 pounds.

The present county officers are Aaron A. Davis, Auditor; John M. Hrunt, Treasurer; Minor Wightman, Clerk; John M. Jones, Recorder; Andrew Stranahan, Sheriff; Henry D. Todd, Superintendent; Joseph Merryfield, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

SIGOURNEY.

The county seat, is a thriving town of about 1500 inhabitants, located about three miles north of Skunk River, on high ground. It has good railroad communications. Sigourney has been for many years the western terminus of the Muscatine Branch of the Mississippi & Missouri Railroad, more recently known as the Sigourney Branch of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad. This road is now being completed to Oskaloosa.

The principal circumstances concerning the origin of the town have already been given. The first family that located here was that of W. B. Thompson, who erected a cabin during the Fall of 1844, and moved his family in about Christmas. The first lawyer who located in Sigourney, was A. W. Blair, who came about the first of January, 1845. The first mail was received on the 7th day of February, and contained a roll of official blanks and three newspapers. S. A. James was post master.

Besides a large mercantile trade the town does an extensive shipping business, has a good lumber trade, woolen mills, flouring mills, and a National Bank with a capital of $50,000. Several of the leading churches have good houses of worship, and its public schools are efficiently organized.

Sigourney has two newspapers, the News, published by J. W. & T. M. Havens, and the Iowa Review by Kennedy & Hollingsworth. The News is Republican, published every Wednesday; it was established in 1859. The Review is Democratic, published Wednesdays, and was established in 1871.

The town is incorporated as a city of the second class.

RICHLAND.

This is the oldest town in the county, and was platted in 1840 by Pryor C. Woodward. Among the first residents of the town were Ezra Bales, Charles E. Woodward, John Noyes, John Raines, Ransom L. Mark, and James Williams. Williams was the first post master. The first house was built by John T. Hoover. The first store was opened by Berlah Haworth in 1844, although a few groceries and liquors had been sold the year previous by L. J. Smith. The first hotel was opened in 1845, by Dr. Tingle. In 1848, Williams and McCracken put in operation a steam saw mill in the place.

KEOTA.

This is a thriving young railroad town in the eastern part of the county, nearly midway between Washington and Sigourney. It is a shipping point for the produce of a considerable extent of country.

The Keota Courier is a weekly newspaper established at this place in 1873; it is independent in politics, and published every Friday by Bruce and Hunter.

HARPER is a lively railway station between Keota and Sigourney, and enjoys considerable trade and a large shipping business.

TALLEYRAND, in the east part of the county, is one of the earliest villages in the county. It was first settled by Doctor Maley, elsewhere mentioned.

SOUTH ENGLISH is a town laid out on a projected line of railway along South English River. The Western Herald is published at this place.

LANCASTER is a handsomely laid out village of some importance, between the North and South Skunk Rivers, in the township of the same name.

The other villages are, Martinsburg, Ioka, Petersburg, Coal Creek, Springfield, Webster, and Baden.

PLYMOUTH COUNTY.

Plymouth County is on the western boundary of the state, in the third tier from the north line. Its average length east and west is about thirty-five miles, and its width north and south twenty-four miles. It contains an area of about 840 square miles, or 537,000 acres. The principal streams are Floyd River, West Fork of Little Sioux River, West Branch of Floyd River, and Broken Kettle, Perry and Willow Creeks. Floyd River, the largest stream, crosses the county diagonally from northeast to southwest. It has many important tributaries, affording fine stock water and drainage to a large portion of the county. It also affords some water-power for mills. The West Fork of Little Sioux River crosses the southeast corner, draining and watering two or three townships. The entire county has a thorough system of natural drainage through small streams which course their way through all parts of it. The streams are clear, and never fail to furnish a supply of living water, as most of them are supported by springs. There are no swamps or marshes.

The general character of the surface is rolling prairie, with some broken land in the western part of the county. The soil is the productive bluff deposit peculiar to the western part of the state. The valleys along the streams are not excelled in fertility of soil, and are adapted to all kinds of grain and vegetable crops. The uplands are not so well adapted to corn as the valleys, but produce fine crops of wheat and oats. The valleys of Big Sioux and Floyd Rivers present splendid belts of rich farming lands. The county is well adapted to grazing purposes, as there is a never-failing supply of pure, living water for stock, with an abundance of excellent pasturage.

The supply of native timber is quite limited, the principal groves being along the Big Sioux River, and a few small groves on Floyd and the West Fork of Little Sioux. Some of the early settlers have fine groves of planted trees, which will soon attain sufficient growth to furnish fuel for their owners. Some stone has been quarried in this county, but it is of little use as a building material. Some of it is burned into a fair article of lime. Material for brick is obtained in sufficient quantity.

HISTORICAL.

The first settlements by whites in the county were made in the Summer of 1856, and were in the valleys of Big Sioux and Floyd Rivers. The following persons that year located in the valley of Big Sioux River: J. B. Pinckney, David Mills, Isaac T. Martin, Bratton Vidito, J. McGill, John Hipkins, James Dormichy and a Mr. Gulliams. The settlement on Big Sioux River was commenced by Martin, Vidito, McGill and Hipkins, the last-named having a family. They erected two houses, one for Hipkins and his family, and the other for the young men. In July they laid out a town, calling it Westfield. This was the first town laid out in the county, and its proprietors regarded it as the future metropolis of the Big Sioux Valley. They were joined in their enterprise by a man named Moody. These young men seem to have been fond of adventure, for on the last of July, Martin, Vidito, McGill and Moody, with five others, started on an exploring expedition to the Black Hills. When they had proceeded part of the way, Moody accidentally shot himself, causing a serious, but not fatal wound. He was taken by his comrades to Fort Randall, and placed in charge of the surgeons at that post. The party abandoned their expedition and returned home. Moody remained nearly two years, and then returned to his comrades on the Big Sioux River, lame, penniless, and an object of charity; but he was cordially received. In February, 1860, Martin went on a visit to Pennsylvania, leaving Moody in charge of his effects. While he was gone Moody sold his property and invested a part of the proceeds in the purchase of a dark-eyed maiden of the forest, with whom he remained a brief honey-moon, and then started for Pike's Peak.

In 1856 the following persons located in the valley of Floyd River: A. C. Sheets, James B. Curry, E. S. Hungerford, Corydon Hall and Joel Phillips.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized October 12, 1858, by William Van O'Linda as organizing sheriff. The election was held at the house of John Hipkins, on the Big Sioux River, and at the house of A. C. Sheets, on Floyd River. The following persons were elected county officers: William Van O'Linda, County Judge; Isaac T. Martin, Treasurer and Recorder; A. C. Sheets, Clerk of the District Court; David Mills, Sheriff; and A. E. Rea, County Superintendent of Schools. The same Fall a township election was held at Westfield, on the Big Sioux, when Isaac T. Martin was elected Township Clerk. There were sixteen votes cast at this election. The county judge held his office on Floyd River, in the middle of the eastern part of the county, while the treasurer and sheriff held theirs in the Big Sioux Valley.

The first place recognized as the county seat was called Melbourne, and was more a scattered settlement than a village, in the Floyd Valley. Here the business of the county court was transacted, and here the first district court was held by Judge A. W. Hubbard. Here also the first religious meetings were held by the German Methodists, and the first school taught by William Van O'Linda. Westfield, the rival of Melbourne for the honors of the county seat, was abandoned in the Spring of 1860, on account of large selections or entries of land made in that vicinity by half-breed Indians, which greatly retarded the settlement. The entries of land were made with half-breed script.

In the Fall of 1859 an incident transpired which, at the time, created considerable excitement. An Irishman named Barney Roney, with his family, had settled a few miles south of Westfield, and an old sailor named Brookins had taken a claim near him. The latter was assisting Roney to clean some wheat, and both had been drinking freely. When the work was completed a difficulty arose in regard to the division of some wheat. Brookins stabbed Roney, inflicting a wound which resulted in death. The murderer was arrested and taken to Sioux City, where he was confined in jail to await his trial. At the next term of court he was convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years. The authorities of Plymouth County employed one Sherwin to take the prisoner to Fort Madison, for which service he received one hundred dollars in advance. He started with his charge, and the first evening stopped at the house of Mr. Sheets, on Floyd River, when he permitted the prisoner to make his escape. He was not heard of afterward in Plymouth County. Sherwin also resumed his journey next morning, leaving the impression behind that he had planned the escape of the prisoner, after receiving his pay from the county.

LE MARS.

This place was made the county seat by a vote of 476 against 111, at the general election of 1872. It is situated in the beautiful valley of Floyd River, at the junction of Illinois Central and the Sioux City & St. Paul Railroads, twenty-five miles northeast of Sioux City. The town was located in the Summer of 1869, on land that originally belonged to Jerry Ladd, B. F. Betsworth and Mr. Marvin. Soon after its location the place was visited by John I. Blair and other railroad officials, accompanied by a party of ladies. Upon the latter Mr. Blair conferred the privilege of selecting a name for the prospective city. The initial letters of the Christian names of the ladies were combined so as to form the name Le Mars, and it was agreed that this should be the name of the new town. The first business firm established was that of Blodget & Foster, and very soon after J. W. Young, John Gordon, Orson Bennett and C. H. Bennett established themselves in business. February 3, 1871, the Le Mars Sentinel, the first newspaper in the county, was started by J. C. Buchanan. The place is surrounded by a wide farming region, and is a good shipping point. There is a fine school building, and church organizations as follows: Catholic, Congregational, Episcopal and Methodist. Within a few years several substantial brick business buildings have been erected. There is an elevator, bank, flouring mill, two newspapers, etc.

The population of Plymouth County, in 1875, was 5,282, an increase in two years of 1,398.

The Sioux City & Pembina Railroad has been graded along the Big Sioux River in the western part of the county.

CHEROKEE COUNTY.

Cherokee is the second county east of the west line, and the third from the north line of the state. It is twenty-four miles square, equal to 576 square miles, or 368,640 acres. It is well watered and drained, numerous streams flowing in a south and southeast direction. The largest is Little Sioux River, entering near the northeast corner, and passing out some six or seven miles east of the southwest corner—thus flowing diagonally across the entire extent of the county. West Branch is a tributary which waters three or four townships in the north part of the county. West Fork of Little Sioux is also a tributary, draining and watering several townships. The Little Sioux River is supplied with fish of many kinds.

The surface is rolling, and very little of it too broken to be cultivated with ease. The soil is of excellent quality, being composed of the bluff deposit of this part of the state, with a covering of rich vegetable mold, well adapted to the production of all the cereals in the greatest perfection. The valleys of Little Sioux, Maple and Mill Creek, are beautiful and rich farming portions of the county. There are many picturesque views along the Little Sioux River, meandering, as it does, through one of the most fertile and beautiful valleys of the state, skirted in many places with fine groves of native timber.

There are no exposures of rock, but boulders are scattered in places over the prairies. They are composed of granite, red quarizite, and occasional masses of light buff-colored magnesian limestone. Pure and excellent water is obtained in all parts of the county at a depth of only a few feet below the surface. The Little Sioux River affords several good mill sites. Along Mill Creek are some groups of artificial mounds that have attracted some attention, as the work of the ancient mound-builders. Traces of ancient pottery are found in the same vicinity.

HISTORICAL.

The first settlement was made in the Spring of 1856, by a colony from Milford, Massachusetts. This colony had organized themselves as an association, styled, "The Milford Emigration Society." The following persons with their families became settlers during that year, to wit: Doctor Dwite Russell, George W. Labourveau, B. W. Sawtell, Lysander Sawtell, Albert Simons, Daniel Wheeler, Lemuel Parkhurst, Albert Phipps, Carlton Corbett, James A. Brown, Asa J. Slayton, Robert Hammond, and Benjamin Holbrook. The land had just been brought into market, and a sufficient quantity was entered to allow each member of the association about one hundred acres. It was all selected near the center of the county, and included some of the best timber on the Little Sioux River. Other members of the association subsequently came at different times. Most of the colonists were mechanics, a large proportion being shoemakers, consequently some did not succeed as farmers. They laid out a town on a large scale, each member of the association having an interest in it.

The first house erected was built of logs, and its dimensions were seventeen by eighteen feet. Four other houses were erected during the season. During the same year settlements were made in other parts of the county. Some twelve or thirteen families located on the Little Sioux River in the southern part of the county. Among them were George W. Banister, John A. Moore, Robert Perry, Jacob Miller, Alpheus Moore, and Tip Lane. A small settlement was also made on the Little Sioux River in the northern part of the county, by Enoch Taylor and two or three others. Taylor was subsequently killed in a difficulty with one of the settlers in Buena Vista County.

In February, 1857, a few days preceding the Spirit Lake massacre, the Indians on their return up the valley of the Little Sioux from Smithland, where they had some difficulty with the whites, robbed the settlers in Cherokee County of their guns and some other property. They also killed some of the stock, but committed no personal violence, except to beat Robert Hammond for making resistance when they took his guns. They also shot through the door of his cabin. After remaining two or three days, feasting, carousing, and menacing the settlers, they passed on up the valley in the direction of Spirit Lake, where their fury culminated in deeds that form one of the bloodiest chapters in the history of the Indian ferocity.

In August, 1857, the county was organized by the election of the following officers: A. P. Tinyer, County Judge; B. W. Sawtell, Clerk; C. Corbett, Prosecuting Attorney; G. W. Labourveau, Treasurer and Recorder; S. W. Haynes, Sheriff; and G. W. Banister, Coroner.

The effect of the Spirit Lake massacre was to almost depopulate several of the counties in this part of the state, and the apprehension of Indian raids during the Rebellion also tended to retard settlement.

A company of soldiers was stationed at Cherokee, and a stockade and block-house erected. The stockade was constructed of large logs set in the ground, and about ten feet high. This enclosed about one-eighth of an acre in a triangular shape. It was provided with a single gate way. The block-house was a two-story building of hewed logs, provided with port holes. During the time these troops were stationed here no trouble occurred with the Indians, except an attempt of an Indian to steal a horse, for which he atoned in the loss of his life, being shot in the act. The blood-stained visions of Spirit Lake haunted the old settlers, and a fear that the indescribable horrors of an Indian war were about to break upon them, paralyzed the shattered remnants of a once prosperous colony. When news of the massacre reached the colony, Captain Millard advised the settlement to leave, as he felt unable to afford sufficient protection. The people took his advice, and thus a second time Cherokee County was depopulated. But of all that left only six returned. Mr. Corbett was treasurer, and he returned in the Fall to collect the taxes as the law required. The Commander had, in case of danger, notified him that he and his family could find shelter in the fort. The census returns of 1863 show there were but ten males and five females in the county. The census of 1860 returned a population of fifty-eight, showing pretty clearly that matters were in a most unfavorable condition. During the Winter of 1862-'63, the only whites in the county, with the exception of the soldiers, were Mr. and Mrs. Corbett, Mr. Brown and family, Orange Wigh, of Pilot Rock, and Robert Perry, of the same place.

For a number of years the settlement had had a monthly mail. At first the mail was carried by Badeaux & Nasson, from Mankato, Minnesota, to Sioux City.

In the year 1866, a weekly mail was established, and so continued until the Fall of 1870, at which time a daily mail east and west afforded the citizens complete facilities.

FIRST THINGS.

Byron Holbrook was the first post master, but he shortly afterwards resigned, and C. Corbett was appointed.

The first warrant ever issued in Cherokee County, was drawn October 2, 1858, for the sum of $4.30, payable to D. N. Stoddard, on account of services as chainman on road number one to Plymouth County line, signed by A. P. Thayer, County Judge. The records of 1858 and '59 are very neatly kept and easily read. The bulk of the warrants issued were to pay bounties on "scalps of prairie wolves," each scalp being $1.50, the first of this species being issued to Mallon Holbrook, December 6, 1858.

On the 16th of November there was a general settlement of the accounts of the different county officers, and the clerk was allowed $38.85 for his services from October 18, 1859, to November 16, 1860. The treasurer and recorder, $62.95 for his services for the same time, and the sheriff, $2.50,—"halcyon days those."

At this time O. S. Wight was the legal incumbent of only four different county offices, but he bore his honors meekly, and the universal testimony of old citizens is that he made a good official.

January 19, 1863, the board of supervisors made a contract with J. H. Cornell to erect a court house for the county, at a cost of $1,900, and the present edifice was built that year.

The first sermon ever preached in Cherokee Village was in the store of H. A. Fife, by the Reverend Alexander Darley, Presbyterian, in 1870.

On the 14th of November the county judge issued the first marriage license to C. Corbett and Rosabella Cummings, who were married on the 20th inst., this being the first wedding in the county.

A school was taught during the Summer in the old Cherokee House by Mrs. Parkhurst, the funds being sent from Massachusetts to sustain it.

The first bridge over the Sioux River was built by a man named Blain for $1,600, to pay which a seven mill tax was voted by the people, fourteen voting for the tax, and one against it.

In January the publication of a newspaper was commenced by J. F. Ford, called the Cherokee Chief. In October the Chief emerged into the Times, published by R. Buchanan.

The first house erected was built of logs, and its dimensions were 17x18 feet. It was occupied by nine of the settlers. Dr. Dwite Russell was the pioneer physician.

The first child born in the county was a daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Twiford in September, 1860, and the first death was Mrs. R. W. Luther.

OBJECTS OF INTEREST.

One of the noted objects of interest in this county is what is called "Pilot Rock." It is on the southwest quarter of section 15, township 91, north of range 40, west. This is in the south part of the county and about a quarter of a mile east of the Little Sioux River, on a point of the high prairie. It has long been a noted land-mark and guide to travelers across the prairie here, and hence the name. This rock is a hard red granite boulder, and is sixty feet long, forty feet wide, and twenty feet high above the surface of the ground at the west end. At this end hundreds of tons have been broken off, and the enormous masses lie scattered around for rods. The top is nearly a flat surface, with a small basin near the middle. Near the south end, on the upper surface, are several small holes evidently worked out by some artificial process by the Indians. A considerable portion of this king of boulders is doubtless embedded, below the surface. So far as we know this is the largest specimen of the kind to be found in the state.

Cherokee County has the best water in Iowa, and more timber than any ten neighboring counties all together.

CHEROKEE.

Cherokee is the county seat of Cherokee County, and has a tolerable central location. It is situated at the intersection of the Dubuque & Sioux City K.K. with the Little Sioux River, and nearly midway between Fort Dodge and Sioux City. The village has a surpassingly beautiful site, skirted on all sides by gentle bluffs, that swell just enough to shield it from the blasts of winter, yet not enough to impair the beauty of the landscape. Through the vale and to the south of the village the Sioux River winds its devious way in search of the great Missouri, where her crystalline waters are swallowed up in that current of mud. The banks of the Sioux are lined with timber, the first of any consequence that greets the eye of the traveler after leaving Fort Dodge. This greatly adds to the picturesqueness of the scene, and prepossess the traveler in its favor.

It was not until August, 1870, that the village was located, though a few small buildings had been put up prior to that date, but only of such a character that they could be removed to whatever point the railway company might locate their depot.

The residence of E. Cowles, Esquire, was the first building moved from the "old town" in March, 1870, and was the first dwelling in the present village, but the farm residence of G. W. Lebourveau, adjoining the village, was erected previous to that date.

A school house was built in 1873 at a cost of $6,000. It consists of four departments, each of which is presided over by a thoroughly competent teacher.

There are five churches in the town, the first erected was the Methodist Episcopal in 1871, cost $1,200.

The Presbyterian church was built in 1873, cost $3,500.

The Baptist church was the third church edifice erected. Built in 1873, cost $2,500.

The Congregational church was organized in 1870, and erected a commodious edifice in 1873, cost $3,000.

The Catholic church has a communion of about 100 families, the house of worship was built in 1873, cost $400.

The growth of Cherokee has been rapid but quite healthy. Each year has witnessed a large addition to its size and business. Among the fine business buildings lately erected we mention the fine brick bank building, with cut stone trimmings, erected by Scribner, Burrows & Co., bankers, also the brick block of H. C. Cornish & Co., hardware dealers. There are two newspapers, The Times and Leader, four grain elevators, one tannery, and most kinds of business are well represented.

AURELIA.—This is a village and shipping point on the railroad in the eastern part of the county. It is surrounded by a most beautiful and fertile prairie country.

HAZARD.—This place is six miles west of Cherokee on the same line of railway. It is surrounded by rich rolling prairies.

MARCUS.—On the same railroad, six miles west of Hazard. A fine little stream, Eleven Mile Run, passes through the village.

The other post offices are Pilot Rock and Washta.

HUMBOLDT COUNTY.

Humboldt is one of the Upper Des Moines River Valley counties. It is eighteen miles north and south, by twenty-four miles east and west, its superficial area being 432 square miles, 276,480 acres.

Few counties in the state are better supplied with pure running streams of water. The principal streams are the two branches of Des Moines River, Boone River, Lott's Creek, Indian Creek, Beaver Creek and Badger Creek. The west fork of the Des Moines enters the county near the northwest corner, and runs in a southeasterly course, uniting with the east fork near the south line. The east fork crosses the county from north to south near the middle. Boone River crosses the northeast corner township, passing into Wright County, and flowing south not far from the east line of Humboldt. Lott's Creek is a stream of considerable size. There are considerable bodies of timber bordering these streams, and also some groves along the smaller creeks. A large proportion of the county is prairie, but no part of it is more than eight miles from a grove of timber. The larger bodies of timber are found along the two branches of the Des Moines River. It consists chiefly of oak, ash, walnut, hickory, elm, linn and maple. There is an aggregate of about five thousand acres of native timber distributed through the county.

The surface is generally rolling, except a small portion on the east side near Owl Lake, where there is a series of grassy marshes, which, however, may be easily drained. The valleys of the principal streams can not be excelled in fertility. The soil is the warm, mellow drift peculiar to northern Iowa.

The county is well supplied with good stone for building purposes. Beds of limestone of the sub-carboniferous formation are exposed along both branches of the Des Moines River. The oolitic limestone at Humboldt is manufactured into a superior quality of quick-lime. At this place the exposed thickness of the strata for a considerable distance along the west fork is from twelve to fifteen feet. Above Dakota on the east fork, there is an exposure of about thirteen feet, made up of the following strata: Fragmentary, gray limestone, one foot; indurated, sandy clay, two feet; calcareous sandstone, in thin layers, six feet; and magnesian limestone, four feet. The last named is an excellent building stone. Peat exists in limited quantities in the eastern part of the county. In the southern part of the county, coal has been mined to a limited extent.

Both branches of the Des Moines River supply an abundance of fine water power, which, when improved and fully developed, will constitute an important element in the future wealth of the county.

EARLY HISTORY.

Henry Lott was the first white man who is known to have erected his cabin in Humboldt County. In 1852, Lott and his step-son went up from Webster County and squatted on what is now called Lott's Creek. They cleared an acre or two of ground in the timber, while thousands of acres of the finest prairie lay spread out before them in every direction. A short distance below the mouth of Lott's Creek, on the west bank of the east fork of the Des Moines River, the Indian Chief, Si-dom-i-na-do-ta, and his family, nine persons in all, at that time had their lodge. In 1846, this Indian had been instrumental in ejecting Lott from what was then Indian Territory, near the mouth of Boone River. Burning with revenge for the old offense, Lott conceived and carried into execution the horrible project of murdering Si-dom-i-na-do-ta and his entire family. He and his step-son disguised themselves as Indians, in order to conceal their guilt. The chief was shot a short distance from his lodge, and two squaws and four children were murdered at the lodge. Two others, a boy and girl, made their escape to tell of the perpetrators of the deed. Years after this tragedy, the white settlers found ear rings and other Indian trinkets where the murders were committed. Lott and his step-son burned their cabin and immediately left the country. The murders were committed in the Winter of 1852-3, and were avenged by Ink-pa-du-tah and his band in the horrible butchery of the white settlers at Spirit Lake. The creek on which the murder was committed has since been known as Bloody Run.

Among the first who arrived and made permanent settlement and improvement in the county, were Charles Bergk, August Zahlten, C. Hackmann, Edward McKnight-Newton Dowling, and Solomon Hand, all of whom came in the Fall of 1854. The next year came George W. Hand, Fletcher Hand, Elias Cusey, J. C. Cusey, Eber Stone, William Miller, and perhaps others. The first settlements were made on the east fork of the Des Moines River, at and above Dakota City.

Dakota City was laid out in 1856, at which time the county embraced another tier of townships on the south. These four townships were subsequently annexed to Webster County, a measure which gave rise to some feeling between the friends of Fort Dodge and Dakota City, the two points then aspiring to become the county seats respectively of Webster and Humboldt Counties. Both points, however, succeeded. Under an act of the General Assembly, approved January 28, 1857, two of the commissioners appointed for the purpose, Asa C. Call and William C. Safford, in the Spring of the same year, located the County Seat of Humboldt County at Dakota City. Prior to the change in county boundary, this was near the geographical center. A post office was established at this place in May, 1856, being the first in the county, Charles Bergk being the post master.

The first election for county officers was held on the first Monday of April, 1857; but the persons elected failed to qualify, and others were elected at the August election of the same year.

HUMBOLDT COLLEGE.

In 1863, Rev. S. H. Taft came to the county as the head of a colony of forty or more persons from Central New York. He purchased ten sections of land—a part of the Des Moines River Grant—and disposed of it mostly to settlers. He founded at Humboldt, a college now known as Humboldt College. The edifice is a fine stone building, on an elevated location at the north edge of the town. We present a fine view of this building in the illustrations of this atlas.

In the report of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, made to the General Assembly of Iowa, for 1873-4, on page 111, Humboldt College is referred to as greatly advancing the interests of education by the opportunity it has given to teachers to more thoroughly qualify themselves for their work; and much satisfaction is expressed on account of the large number who had availed themselves of its advantages.

To show the objects and aims of the founders of this college, we give an extract from a speech delivered by Rev. S. H. Taft, in reference to his efforts to "establish a truly Christian College in the West:"

"Accordingly ten years since, I purchased a few thousand acres of land of the State of Iowa, and in the Spring of 1863, in company with a small colony, emigrated from Central New York to the Des Moines Valley, which lies four hundred miles beyond Chicago, and commenced the building up of society and a town, preliminary to my educational work. There are now many thousand people in that part of the state where there were then but a few hundred widely separated pioneers. Our privations though great, were only such as are common to the settlers of a new country, far removed from society and commercial centers. Our first concern was to obtain shelter, which was of the most primitive and humble character; a number of families living in cellars, as it was almost impossible to get lumber for building until a saw mill was erected, which it took over a year to accomplish. We carried with us some large coffee mills, with which to grind wheat and corn, and found them of great service during nearly two years which passed before we got our flouring mill in operation. But when at last it was completed, and we could have bread manufactured from bolted flour of our own production, it was made an occasion of general rejoicing, and hundreds were present at the celebration. Toasts were drank (in nothing stronger than lemonade), speeches made, and songs and hymns sung in honor of the important event. Step by step, from this humble beginning, we have moved on, until we have now thousands of acres under cultivation, a thriving town of much beauty, in which no beer saloon is tolerated, and are enjoying many of the blessings of a well organized community. We have a church which recognizes the inherent right of every christian to fellowship and membership, regardless of his creed. While some of us individually hold very prohounced opinions, we have formulated no creed to impose upon the conscience of any one as a condition of fellowship, feeling that we have no more right to do so than the children of a household have to impose conditions upon one of their number precedent to his enjoying the common blessings which the Father designed for all his children. We have a flourishing Sunday School; as also literary and musical associations. So much had first to be done to command the bare necessities of life, that little was accomplished towards the establishment of the college, until three years ago, when I commenced in earnest my chosen life work. Many deeply interesting experiences and incidents have attended the work, but of them I may not speak on this occasion, other than to remark that it has received the favorable notice of the National Liberal Christian Conference, and of the American Unitarian Association, as also the hearty endorsement of a large number of distinguished scholars and divines, and has been signally blessed of God. I also take pleasure in acknowledging my obligation to the Old and New, Religious Monthly, Christian Register, and Liberal Christian, for the encouragement they have given me."

DAKOTA CITY.

This is the county seat, and is located on a high prairie, adjoining a grove of timber, between the two branches of the Des Moines River, but near the east fork, and about three miles above the junction. Edward McKnight was the original proprietor, and assisted in making some of the early improvements. The place was originally called Dakota City, but now the word City is usually omitted. A substantial brick court house was erected in 1873. There is a very neat Methodist Church and a substantial school house.

The first religious meeting was held by the Methodists in Dakota City, in 1856. The first school was taught at the same place, by Miss Hannah Thomas.

Charles Bergk and Edward McKnight at an early day erected a saw mill at Dakota City, which sawed most of the lumber used.

The first newspaper published in the county, was the Humboldt County Independent, the initiatory number of which appeared August 2, 1860. It was published by A. S. White and Charles Bergk, at Dakota City.

HUMBOLDT.

This place was originally called Springvale, and is situated on the east side of the west fork of the Des Moines River, about three miles above the junction. The town is located in the valley, with the sloping high prairie forming a crescent on the east, while the river forms the west boundary. The place is handsomely laid out, with broad streets and ample parks, several of which were planted with trees several years ago. This is the seat of Humboldt College.

The publication of a newspaper was commenced at this place in June, 1866, Rev. S. H. Taft being editor and proprietor. It was called the True Democrat. The name was subsequently changed to Springvale Republican, and finally to Humboldt Kosmos, and is still published.

The school house at this place is built of limestone, and cost four thousand dollars.

ROTLAND is four miles west of Humboldt. It has a fine water-power, and two mills in successful operation.

The other villages, or postoffices, are Addison, McKnight's Point, Park Grove, Viona, Von. Wacousta, Nora, Sumner and Randolph.

IDA COUNTY.

Ida County is in the fourth tier from the northern boundary of the state, and is the second east of the Missouri River. It contains 432 square miles, or 276,480 acres. The Maple River runs through the county from northeast to southwest. Its principal branches are Odebolt and Elk, flowing in from the east, and Battle Creek from the west. Soldier River flows westward through the southern tier of townships. There are many smaller streams draining the county in all parts. The valleys of the streams are unsurpassed in fertility, and Maple Valley is especially noted for the beauty and fertility of its farming lands. Maple River, in this county, furnishes several mill-sites.

The general character of the surface is undulating, or rolling prairie, no portion being too broken for cultivation. The soil in the valleys is a dark mold, in many places from three to six feet in depth. The uplands contain more clay, and are well adapted to the raising of wheat and all the cereal crops. This, like other counties in this part of the state, has but a limited supply of timber. "Ida Grove," on Maple River, near the center of the county, is the largest body. It is mostly oak, walnut, linn, elm and hickory. The white, or soft maple, skirts the borders of the stream in many places. Among the wild fruits the plum, grape, gooseberry and strawberry are found. The aggregate area of native timber does not exceed 800 acres.

Stock raising and the dairy might succeed well in this county, as it is unsurpassed for pasturage or hay. The wild grass, known as blue joint, predominates in the valleys, and in many places the yield of hay is as high as four tons per acre.

Fine well water is found in almost any locality by digging to a moderate depth, rarely exceeding twenty-five feet. No regularly stratified rock formations appear at the surface. The only rocks obtained in the county are the boulders. An abundance of material suitable for the manufacture of brick is found in all parts of the county. The bluff deposit, which overspreads the entire county, has been successfully used for making brick of a good quality.

The principal productions are wheat, oats, corn, rye and potatoes. All kinds of vegetables and root crops common to the latitude succeed well. The various kinds of small fruits are easily raised, as well as some varieties of cherries and apples.

HISTORICAL.

The first settlement of whites in Ida County was made at Ida Grove, on Maple River, in 1856. The pioneers were William Lownsley, from Kentucky; Edward Smith, from Illinois, and E. Comstock, from Michigan. Judge John H. Moorehead was also one of the early settlers at Ida Grove.

The county was organized in 1858. The first election was held at Ida Grove in August of that year, when the following county officers were elected: John H. Moorehead, County Judge; J. S. Loveland, Treasurer and Recorder, and Bushrod Warren, Clerk of the District Court. At this time the population of the county was only about forty persons.

The first district court was held by Judge Hubbard, at Ida Grove, in 1859. The first school in the county was taught by Miss Atwood, at the same place. W. P. Evans published the first newspaper, the Ida County Pioneer, at Ida.

IDA.

This is the name of the county seat, and is located at Ida Grove, on the northeast quarter of section 15, township 87, range 40. The village commands a fine view of the beautiful valley of Maple River. It is about 28 miles from Denison, Crawford County.

Upon one of the high ridges near the village there was formerly an extensive Indian encampment, where the remains of buffalo, elk, deer and other game are still scattered over the surface, or half-embedded in the soil. The course of a deeply worn Indian trail is still visible, which is said to have been a great highway for the natives, who only a few years ago occupied this portion of the state.

The first post office in the county was established at Ida, and for several years this was the only one. There is a Methodist church, school house and several business houses. The Ida County Pioneer is published by Messrs. Chaffee & Williams, and has reached its fourth volume.

There are two other post offices in the county, called Silver Creek and Willow Dale. The following is the list of county officials for 1875:

FRANK P. BURNS, Treasurer.	MAT. M. GRAY, Auditor.
W. P. EVANS, Recorder.	ISAAC BUNN, Clerk of Courts.
E. H. BARNES, Sheriff.	H. A. MOOREHEAD, Surveyor.

A. L. HOUSER, Superintendent of Schools.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

H. D. SQUYRES, Chairman; JOHN A. HITTLE, and GEORGE HARVEY.

CALHOUN COUNTY.

Calhoun County is in the fourth tier from the northern boundary, and the fourth county from the western boundary of the state. It is 24 miles square, and therefore embraces an area of 368,640 acres. By the census of 1875, there was 26,996 acres under cultivation. It contains but a limited supply of timber, the proportion being about one acre of timber land to one thousand of prairie. Although it may be considered one of the northwestern counties, it is wholly upon the Mississippi slope. The western portions are drained by Coon River and its tributaries, Lake and Camp Creeks, with other smaller streams. The south fork of Lizard River crosses the extreme northeast corner, collecting the drainage of two or three townships in that quarter. All the streams have shallow, though well defined valleys, and are bordered by narrow bottoms. The valley of North Coon River, in the vicinity of Lake City, has a depth of from 80 to 100 feet below the bordering upland prairies. There are several lakes in the northern and eastern portions of the county. Two of these are known by the name of Twin Lakes, which embrace within their margins an area of about seventeen hundred acres. In some places their shores are studded with limestone and granite boulders, having, in some parts, the resemblance of rude walls. Their beds are sandy or gravelly, covered with a depth of from five to twenty feet of water, abundantly supplied with fish of various kinds. The most northern of Twin Lakes is about two and one-half miles long, with an average width of half a mile. The south lake is more quadrangular in outline. The two lakes have the appearance of being once connected. One of the two lakes in Iowa (the other being in Wright County) known by the name of Walled Lake, is in this county. Its borders in places present the appearance of rude masonry, with the large boulders resting upon each in nearly regular layers. This, however, is characteristic of many of the small lakes in Northern Iowa, and the formation of these walls is attributed to natural causes. Some peat deposits have been discovered in the county. There are but few exposures of stone. The terraces, or "second bottoms" along some of the streams, constitute a pleasing feature of the valley scenery, and also afford some of the finest agricultural lands in the county. Materials for the manufacture of brick are abundant. For grazing purposes, this county is one of the best in the state, as it is a natural grass-producing region, and water for stock may be easily obtained. The prairies are generally undulating. The higher lands are covered by a dark gravelly loam, adapted to crops of all kinds common to the latitude.

HISTORICAL.

Ebenezer Comstock was the first white man that settled in the county. He moved his family into the county and settled near where Lake City now is, in April, 1854. He had to go to Des Moines, then called Fort Des Moines, for his provisions and mail matter, a distance of 85 miles.

Among the early settlers were, John Condron, William Inpson, J. C. M. Smith, and Peter Smith, from Cass County, Michigan. The county was organized in August, 1855, by Judge Phillips, of Green County, at which time there was a population of less than one hundred. The first election was held at the house of C. Smith, in August, 1855, for county officers, the following being elected: Peter Smith, County Judge; C. Smith, Treasurer; Joel Golden, Clerk; E. Vanhorn, Recorder; Ebenezer Comstock, Prosecuting Attorney; and William Oxenford, Sheriff. At this election there were nine votes cast. All the men in the county had offices but two—not quite offices enough to go around.

THE COUNTY SEAT.

Honorable C. I. McFarland, Judge of the 5th Judicial District, appointed William Phillips, John F. Howes, Rufus Keigley, commissioners to locate the county seat, October 10, 1855. They located it in town 87, range 33, section 34. The citizens, January 7, 1856, petitioned to change the location, and it was submitted to a vote of the people at the April election, 1856. Twenty-one votes were cast "for the removal of the county seat to southwest quarter of southeast quarter of section 7, and northwest quarter of northeast of section 18, township 86 north, of range 33," and none against it. The contract to survey and lay out the same into village lots was let to Charles Arney. The good citizens thought it best to make the place or village appear to be one of importance, to name it Lake City.

The first school was taught near Lake City in the Fall of 1856, by Daniel Reed. The first religious meeting was held by the Methodists.

The first district court was held in June, 1859, by Honorable A. W. Hubbard, District Judge.

This county was formerly called Fox County, and is so named in some of the early maps.

The Illinois Central Railroad from Dubuque to Sioux City passes through the northern part of this county.

By the census of 1875, the population of the several townships was as follows: Butler, 247; Calhoun, 828, Center, 274; Greenfield, 236; Jackson, 690; Lincoln, 465; Sherman, 410; Williams, 135; making the total population 3185, and the number of votes 681.

LAKE CITY

Is located in the southern part of the county, and has been the county seat since the early organization. It is in the midst of a fine agricultural region three miles north of North Coon River on a high prairie.

The first house built on the new town site was by Charles Arney, in 1857. The first store house was erected by Peter Smith and David Reed.

The first newspaper published in the county, was issued here by E. W. Wood, called the Calhoun County Pioneer.

MANSON is on the railroad in the northeastern part of the county. It is a new village, and has several business houses, churches, schools, etc.

POMEROY is in the extreme north part of the center of the county on the railroad. The town has been laid off in lots by the Iowa Falls & Sioux City Railroad Land Company, located at Cedar Rapids. The country around is rich and fertile, and well suited for farming purposes. In some localities it is quite thickly settled.

CALHOUN CENTER is very near the center of the county, and aspires to the county seat. It is on the line of the proposed Iowa Pacific Railroad.

POCAHONTAS COUNTY.

Pocahontas County is the fourth from the west, and the third from the north line of the state. It is twenty-four miles square, and containing five hundred and seventy-six square miles, or 368,640 acres.

The west fork of the Des Moines River passes through the northeast portion of the county. The eastern part of the county is well watered and drained by this stream and its tributaries, the most important of these being Pilot Creek, Lizard River and south fork of Lizard River. The western part of the county is watered and drained by Cedar and Little Cedar Creeks, the latter being an affluent of Cedar Creek. This stream has its source in Swan Lake, situated near the center of the northwest corner township of the county, and flows nearly south across the county, receiving its affluent, Little Cedar, in the southwest corner township. There are several small lakes, the two largest being Swan Lake, in the northwest corner township, and Clear Lake, about nine miles further south.

The supply of timber is quite limited, being chiefly confined to the groves on the Des Moines and Lizard Rivers. Many of the early settlers have fine groves of planted trees. There is a total of about three thousand acres of native timber.

The surface of the county is gently undulating, and the soil very fertile. Pure well water is everywhere easily obtained a few feet below the surface, even on the most elevated prairies, and the numerous small creeks and rivulets supply water for stock. The soil is a rich black loam, from two to six feet in depth. Fine crops of corn, wheat oats and potatoes are raised. The northern part is peculiarly adapted to stock-raising. Among the wild fruits found along the streams and about the groves, are plums, grapes and crab apples.

Limestone of the subcarboniferous formation, is found in township ninety-two, range thirty-one, about four miles south of Rolfe. It is a valuable building stone, and is manufactured into lime of excellent quality. This is the most northwesterly point in the state at which lime-producing rock is obtained, except in the bluffs of the Big Sioux River, a hundred miles further west. These quarries must therefore become exceedingly valuable. They extend for a distance of nearly two miles along a ravine, or low tract of land. Peat has also been discovered on Beaver Creek. Clay suitable for brick is obtained.

It is scarcely necessary to inform the reader that this county was named in honor of the Indian maiden rendered famous by her heroic intercession to save the life of Captain John Smith, in the early history of Virginia. To preserve the historical connection, the county seat was named Rolfe, in honor of the young English planter who became the husband of the Indian girl, and one of the townships Powhatan, perpetuating in the same connection the memory of the father of the historic maiden, whose blood, it is claimed, flows in the veins of some of the "first families" of the "Old Dominion."

Among the earliest white settlers of the county were David Slosson, Henry Jarvis, A. H. Malcolm, William H. Hart, Robert Struthers, William D. McEwen and William Hart. A county organization took place in 1859, at which time the population was about eighty persons. The first election was held at the house of Henry Jarvis, on the 15th day of March, 1859, when the following county officers were elected: David Slosson, County Judge; A. H. Malcolm, Clerk of the District Court; William H. Hart, Treasurer and Recorder; Oscar Slosson, Sheriff; and Guernsey Smith, Surveyor. At this election only seventeen votes were cast.

The first school was taught by William D. McEwen, and the first newspaper published by Bruce, McEwen & McVey. It was called the "Pocahontas Journal."

ROLFE.

This place is situated on section twenty-six, township ninety-three, range thirty-one, and is west of the Des Moines River, on a pleasant elevation. It was the first town laid out in the county, and is the county seat. The court house is a substantial two story brick building, 36x50 feet. There is also a good brick school house. The town is convenient to groves of timber on the Des Moines River, and within four miles of extensive quarries of limestone.

FONDA.

This is a station on the line of the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, in the southwest corner township of the county. It is a thriving business and shipping point, surrounded by a good agricultural region. The place was formerly called Marvin. The first settlement was made by Jacob Silbar, in 1869; in July, 1870, the place was laid out by F. Hess, and now contains over two hundred inhabitants.

POCAHONTAS CENTER.—This is a small village near the geographical center of the county, on the road leading from Rolfe to Fonda.

The other post office in the county is called BUDA.

SAC COUNTY.

Sac County is the third from the Missouri River, and the fourth from the north line of the state. It contains a superficial area of five hundred and seventy-six square miles, or 368,640 acres. It is admirably watered and drained by North Raccoon and Boyer Rivers and their tributaries, together with several branches of Maple River, which have their sources in this county. One of the largest of these is Elk Creek, in the northwest part of the county. Cedar and Indian Creeks are important tributaries of North Raccoon. Boyer River rises in Buena Vista County, and flowing south, crosses Sac County near the middle.

The southern extremity of the important chain of small lakes occupying the "Great Watershed," is in Sac County. The middle of the county is about on the summit ridge, Raccoon River on the east flowing to the Mississippi, and Boyer River on the west flowing to the waters of the Missouri. On the "watershed" between Raccoon and Boyer Rivers, are situated several small lakes, the largest of which is called Wall Lake. This lake is in townships eighty-six and eighty-seven, of range thirty-six, being in the southern part of the county. This little body of water covers an area of about three square miles, and in very few places exceeds a depth of twelve feet. Part of the shore is bordered by embankments of earth and boulders, in some places the boulders having the appearance of a wall laid up by the hands of man, and hence the name, Wall Lake. The lake is abundantly stocked with fish, and during the Spring and Autumn months is resorted to by vast numbers of water fowl. In the north part of the county another lake(et covers an area of about one square mile. It is in township eighty-eight of ranges thirty-six and thirty-seven.

There are some groves of timber bordering Raccoon and Boyer Rivers. The leading varieties are oak, black walnut, cottonwood, linn, elm and maple. The general character of the surface is rolling, but in no part much broken. Very little is too flat or wet for cultivation. The soil is of great fertility, being admirably adapted to corn, wheat, oats, grass, and vegetables of various kinds. The valleys of the principal streams present belts of farming country of great beauty and fertility. Stock raising is a profitable industry.

HISTORICAL.

The first white settler in Sac County was Otho Williams, who located at Big Grove, on North Raccoon River, in the southeast part of the county, in 1854. He opened a farm in the timber, with thousands of acres of rich prairie land on all sides of him. The following settlers soon followed him: F. M. Cory, Leonard Austin, Joseph Austin, William F. Lagourge, William I. Wagoner and Seymour W. Wagoner. The last named was major of a cavalry regiment in the Union army during the Rebellion, and was killed while leading a charge in battle.

Previous to 1856, Sac was attached to Greene County for political and judicial purposes. The first election for county organization was held at the house of Eugene Criss, April 7, 1856, when thirty-seven votes were cast for the entire county. The following were the county officers elected: Samuel W. Watts, County Judge; Francis Ayres, Clerk of the District Court; F. Lagourge, Sheriff; H. C. Crawford, Prosecuting Attorney; F. M. Cory, Treasurer and Recorder; and Jacob Mcafer, Drainage Commissioner.

The first District Court was held at Sac City, June 8, 1857, by Judge C. J. McFarland. Only three cases were tried. The first marriage in the county was that of Elijah Wine and Miss Montgomery, December 15, 1857.

During the latter part of August, 1857, a party of surveyors found a man dead in a slough on the prairie, who was supposed to have been murdered, as a ball had passed through his back. The remains were not identified, and at the time of the discovery created some excitement in the settlement.

Henry A. Evens' estate was the first administered on in the county, and Robert E. Browning the first administrator appointed. The first county warrant was issued July 31, 1856, to Thomas Napier, for county books; amount, $56.45. The second, August 2, 1856, to J. M. Jones, for county books, for $176.

The first deed on record is from Joseph Smith to A. N. Taylor.

Fort Dodge, a distance of fifty miles, was the nearest post office. The early settlers would frequently meet at Sac City and hire some one to go after their mail, and would pay twenty-five cents on each letter received. They had also to go there to get their blacksmithing and milling done, and to Des Moines, a distance of one hundred and five miles, for their groceries and provisions.

Near the mouth of the Cedar there were encampments of the Pottawattamies and Maquoketa tribes; they were attacked by a war party of Sioux, when the two tribes united, in common defense, the latter retreated up the Cedar, hotly pursued by the former. Near the north line of the county, the Sioux halted and fought the two tribes for several hours. A number were killed on both sides. The Sioux were defeated. The graves of the "fallen braves" are still to be seen on the banks of the Cedar, near the county line, and from their appearance a great number must have been killed.

Previous to the organization of the county, the following persons were appointed commissioners to locate the county seat: C. W. Williams, T. E. Brown, and a Mr. Buxford. They made selection of a point six and a half miles west of the east line of the county, on the west bank of North Raccoon River, adjacent to a fine body of timber. At this place a town was laid out on the 4th day of July, 1855, John F. Buncomb, of Fort Dodge, acting as surveyor. The new town received the name of Sac City.

SAC CITY.

This is a pleasant village in the oldest settled portion of the county. There is good water power here, and a fine body of timber. It was the first town laid out in the county, and is the county seat. The first house erected was a large log building, which was occupied by Eugene Criss as a hotel. He hauled the windows, doors, nails and lumber for finishing all the way from Dubuque, two hundred and seventy miles. The second house was built by James Gammon. A new, handsome and substantial court house has just been completed at this place.

GRANT CITY.—This is a village located on section fourteen, township eighty-six, range thirty-five, in the southeastern part of the county. Its location is on the east bank of North Raccoon River, in a grove of timber. There is also good mill power on the river at this point. The village was laid out in 1863. It has a Baptist, Episcopal and Methodist church, several mills, and stores with general stocks of goods.

BUENA VISTA COUNTY.

Buena Vista County is the third from the west and the third from the north line of the State. It is twenty-four miles square, containing 368,640 acres. The Little Sioux River meanders through the northern portion of the county, watering three townships, and furnishing some valuable bodies of timber. It receives a tributary from the south, which waters two or three additional townships. Several other small streams pass through different parts, affording good water for stock, and surface drainage. In the southern part of the county is situated Storm Lake, a beautiful body of clear water, with steep banks, with fine undulating prairie farming lands stretching away in all directions, except on the north side, where the thriving town bearing the name of the lake is now located. There are other smaller lakes in the county. The surface of the county is generally rolling, with a soil as fertile as could be desired. It is adapted to all the cereals and root crops. As in this part of the state generally, the supply of timber is limited. There are no stone quarries developed, but granite and limestone boulders are found on the prairies, along the streams, and about the borders of the lakes. Good brick are manufactured from clays found in the county, and from the "bluff deposit" which is characteristic of this part of the state. Many kinds of fish are found in the lakes and streams.

HISTORICAL.

The government surveys were made in this county in 1855. The first permanent settlement was made in May, 1856, by Abner Bell, from New Jersey, at that time a bachelor, his brother-in-law, William R. Weaver and family, and John W. Tucker. They settled in the north part of the county at Sioux Rapids. Among the early settlers were Arthur T. Reeves, Moses Van Kirk, James H. Gleason, Lewis, Lindsey and Metcalf. In March, 1857, occurred what is known in the annals of Iowa as Ink-pah-du-tah Raid, which culminated in the bloody massacre at Spirit Lake. Before reaching the lake the Indians passed up the Little Sioux River, driving away the stock and destroying the property of the settlers. The little colony at Sioux Rapids did not escape. The men were captured and guarded, and some of the women led away to the Indian camp, but the Indians committed no murders here. A few days after, the news of the terrible butchery at Spirit Lake came down the river, and Mr. Bell with a companion made his way across the prairie through the deep snow to Fort Dodge, to notify the people there of the massacre. This affair had the effect to check the settlement of this part of the state for several years. Late in 1858, or early in 1859, a county organization was effected, the following being the county officers: Arthur T. Reeves, County Judge; William R. Weaver, Treasurer and Recorder; John W. Tucker, Clerk; and Abner Bell, Sheriff.

In 1859 a man named Taylor settled on land at Linn Grove claimed by one Ambrose S. Wead, and the result was a quarrel between the parties. One O. M. Barker, a friend of Mead, attempted to haul rails from the claim of a man named J. J. Bickwell. The rails had been sold to Taylor, and he attempted to stop their removal, when Barker shot him with a revolver. Barker was arrested near Spirit Lake, taken to Sioux City, tried, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary. On his way to Fort Madison he escaped from his guards, and when next heard from was on the high seas.

In 1860 the county seat was first located, by a commission appointed by Judge Hubbard, composed of D. C. Early, John Kindlespeyer and Sartel, on a tract known as the "Fuller Claim." At that time the place was occupied by William S. Lee, who executed to the county a bond for a deed to the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 18, township 93, range 36. The tract was long known as "Prairieville, the County Seat of Buena Vista County," but no county buildings were ever erected upon it. Up to 1866 there were but few settlers in the county, and its affairs seem to have been badly managed. The early records of the county are very imperfect, and many of them are missing from the county. Up to this time the officials entered into large contracts for bridges and other improvements which were never made, although county warrants were issued in payment amounting to many thousands of dollars.

The first settlement made in the vicinity of Storm Lake, in the south part of the county, was by Daniel B. Harrison, who, in 1867, located near the west end of the lake. Soon after George Holt settled in the same vicinity. James Luddington was an early settler on the north side of the lake, and J. A. P. Harlan and W. S. Harlan on the south side.

STORM LAKE.

The width of the main lake is something over two miles, and, including the smaller one, it is about five miles long. The bottom is of sand and gravel, with large boulders on its shores. It is not deep, and no place has been found where the depth exceeds fifteen feet.

Map makers of an early day had very crude information about this lake, as one map marks it as being thirty miles long and eighteen miles wide, and of unknown depth!

The origin of its name was for some time in dispute, but seems to be settled as having been given it by an old trapper and hunter who had his tent and outfit scattered by the wind and storm, which are sometimes very severe on the lake. The lake has a great abundance of fish, and is a resort for sportsmen. The lake is well supplied with small boats. A newiron steamer plows the waters of the lake for the amusement of pleasure seekers, who often come in large parties from distant points, attracted by the beauty of the lake and its surroundings.

SIOUX RAPIDS.

This was the first town laid out in the county, and is located on the south side of the Little Sioux River, in the north part of the county. There is a fine settlement now in this part of the county, and the place has considerable business, as it is the county seat, and has the advantage of timber and water power on the river. In 1858 the present town site of Sioux Rapids, and much besides, was laid out into town lots by a man named Barnes, who had some money, and hoped to build a large city where Sioux Rapids now stands. But rumors of another threatened Indian invasion alarmed the settlers, and early in 1859 Barnes' son-in-law crossed the great prairie to Fort Dodge to procure arms and assistance for the settlement. On his way out his feet were frozen so badly as to render the amputation of both necessary. He never returned to the county, and his father-in-law, disheartened and almost bankrupt, soon followed him. Reminders of the old man's stay are found in the memory-names "Barnes Township" and "Barnes Grove." The Methodists have a church here. The Sioux City Echo is edited by D. C. & W. R. Thomas. It has several business houses, a flouring mill, etc.

STORM LAKE.

This thriving town is located on the north side of the beautiful lake from which it takes its name, and is about eighteen miles south of Sioux Rapids. It was laid out in July, 1870, and on the 11th of August of that year the first sale of lots took place. The original proprietor was John I. Blair, of New Jersey, who was interested in the building of the railroad that passes through the place. The first newspaper published in the county was the Storm Lake Pilot, commenced by Vestal & Young, October 26, 1870. It is still conducted by them, and is one of the best papers in that section of the State. The first issue was sold at auction for $106.00. The town is very handsomely laid out, and is improving rapidly. Many good buildings have been erected of late years, and the beautiful lake is attracting the attention of those in search of fine locations for homes.

The Buena Vista County Bank has just erected a substantial brick building on the corner of Lake avenue and Fifth street. It is well arranged for business, with fireproof vaults. It does a general banking business, negotiates loans, pays taxes, etc. It is owned and managed by John R. Lemon & Co.

Messrs. Suffin & Hay, bankers, have plans for a new banking house, to be built soon. They transact a general banking and collection business.

Messrs. Dean & Harker, real estate and money brokers, do a very large business in selling lands and town lots and in loaning moneys.

The town has many business houses, three grain elevators, one steam flouring mill, two hotels, and most kinds of business are well represented.

There are four handsome churches: Methodist, just completed, Baptist, Congregational, and Catholic, and a large two-story brick school house where a good graded school is maintained.

Storm Lake Township was surveyed by John Parker in May, 1855. The town was originally started a little east of the present town. The first building moved into the plat was L. J. Barton's office, but W. W. Sweetzer, Esq., built and occupied the first house, which is the one where he now resides, near the depot. T. L. Selkirk erected at the same time the first hotel, now known as the "Lake House."

Mrs. W. S. Harlan taught the first school here in 1868, and the first sermon was preached October 4, 1868, by Rev. Thomas Whitely, who still resides there. The first marriage was H. Wilson to Anna Andrews by Rev. Thos. Whitely.

The railroad company have erected here the finest and largest depot between Fort Dodge and Sioux City. It was completed in November, 1870. The Buena Vista County Agricultural Society was organized in 1873, and now has fine grounds, including nearly forty acres, less than a mile west of the business center of the town.

Attention is called to the view of Storm Lake as given in this Atlas.

NEWELL.

Situated on the railroad in the east part of the county. It is a thriving town, in the midst of a rapidly improving agricultural region, and a shipping point of considerable importance. The first settlement was made by H. Keeney, who arrived April 20, 1869, and erected the first house. The next year Geo. B. Sargent erected the first store. The town has several business houses, a steam mill, a church, etc. The Newell Mirror is published by W. White, and is newly established.

ALTA.

Seven miles west of Storm Lake, is the youngest of all the towns, and has but just entered upon what promises to be a very prosperous career. The town was platted late in 1872, and quite a number of buildings were erected in the year following. The surrounding country is of unsurpassed fertility, and is rapidly settling up with a good class of people. The railroad here reaches its greatest altitude between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, being 915 feet above the former, and 432 feet above the latter stream. The company have erected here a good substantial depot. The Iowa Falls & Sioux City Railroad Land Company surveyed and laid off the town.

W. B. FARRAR, Auditor.
L. A. CLEMONS, Treasurer.
E. E. MACK, Clerk of Courts.
T. P. LEE, Recorder.
J. D. ADAMS, County Superintendent.
ED. E. EVANS, Sheriff.
S. W. HOBBS, Surveyor.

SUPERVISORS.

L. T. SWEZEY, JOHN HALVORSON, S. OLNEY, E. C. COWLES, C. SCHELL.

WOODBURY COUNTY.

Woodbury County is situated on the western border of the state, in the third tier from the north line. It is twenty-four miles north and south, by from thirty to thirty-six miles east and west, embracing a superficial area of about 832 square miles, or 432,480 acres. About 146,000 acres of this land is Missouri River bottom, of great fertility, and unsurpassed for agricultural and grazing purposes. This bottom is from six to ten miles in width and mostly above high water mark in the Missouri River. Although apparently nearly level, it is dry and susceptible of easy tillage. The soil is a deep loam, with a sufficient proportion of silicious material to render it retentive of moisture, while it seldom remains for any length of time so wet as to prevent the farmer from giving attention to his crops. Immediately adjacent to the valleys are the bluffs, forming a narrow belt usually too much broken for cultivation, but a short distance back the land becomes gently rolling, and is well adapted to farming purposes. The Missouri, one of the great rivers of the continent, forms the western boundary of the county as far up as the mouth of the Big Sioux River. Thence, to the northwest corner, a distance of about five miles, the latter stream marks the western boundary. The principal streams flowing through the interior are Floyd, east and west forks of the Little Sioux, and Maple Rivers. Perry Creek is also a stream of considerable size. All these streams flow through rich and beautiful valleys, and receive many small affluents that completely drain the entire surface. The Little Sioux and Floyd Rivers furnish water power for machinery. There is a deficiency of native timber in this, as in other counties of this part of the state. There are some groves of valuable timber, however, bordering the Missouri and along the Big and Little Sioux Rivers. The varieties common are cottonwood, hickory, oak, walnut, elm, and maple—the first named largely predominating along the Missouri River. It has been found that many kinds of timber may be easily propagated, and when planted on the prairies make a rapid growth.

GEOLOGY.

The geological formation is such as to allow but few exposures of rock in the county, or indeed, in this portion of Iowa. The entire surface is covered by the peculiar formation known by the name of "bluff deposit," extending to the depth of many feet. The bed of the Missouri River at Sioux City is 340 feet above that of the Mississippi at Dubuque, in the same latitude. There are at Sioux City, and one or two other places, exposures of a sandstone formation of the cretaceous age, with a stratum of soft, chalky limestone overlying it. This is too soft for masonry, but is used for making quicklime. The sandstone is quarried for ordinary building purposes. The same formation appears on Big Sioux River about two miles above the mouth, and extends, with occasional exposures, to the northwest corner of the county. The surface of the "bluff deposit" is used for making brick. The clays in the cretaceous deposit furnish an excellent material for making pottery. Woodbury, however, must rely chiefly on its fertile prairies for its development into a prosperous and wealthy county.

HISTORICAL.

On the 14th of May, 1804, Captains Lewis and Clarke, with forty-two men, under the direction of the War Department of the Government, started from their encampment at the mouth of Wood River, in what is now the State of Illinois, to explore the Missouri River and the unknown regions of the Northwest. After many strange adventures, and the accomplishment of a thousand miles of their journey, on the 18th of August they landed on the Nebraska side of the river, nearly opposite the southwest corner of the present County of Woodbury, where they held a council with a party of Ottoe and Missouri Indian Chiefs. On the morning of the 20th the Indians mounted their horses and left, having received some presents from the whites. On the 19th, in camp at the place where the council was held, Sergeant Charles Floyd, of the expedition, became very sick and remained so all night. The next morning, however, which was Monday, August 20, the party set out on their journey up the river. Having a "fine wind and fine weather," they made thirteen miles, and at two o'clock landed for dinner on the Iowa side of the river. Here Sergeant Floyd died. About one mile farther up the river, on the summit of a high bluff, his body was buried with the honors due to a brave soldier. His comrades marked the place with a cedar post, on which were inscribed his name and the date of his death. About one mile above, a small river flows into the Missouri, and here the party encamped until the next day. Captains Lewis and Clarke gave this stream the name of Floyd's River, to perpetuate the memory of the first man who had fallen in their expedition. The next day they set out early, passed the bluffs, now within the limits of Sioux City, which are mentioned in the journal of Patrick Gass, a member of the expedition, as "handsome, pale colored bluffs." Willow Creek and Big Sioux River, the latter just above where Sioux City now stands, are also mentioned. During a great freshet in the Spring of 1857, the turbulent Missouri washed away a portion of the bluff, so as to expose the remains of Sergeant Floyd. The citizens of Sioux City and vicinity collected the remains and re-interred them some distance back from the river on the same bluff. Our map shows the exact location.

The title of the Indians to the land in this portion of Iowa became extinct in 1847, and in the Summer of 1848, forty-four years after the burial of Sergeant Floyd, a single pioneer, named William Thompson, settled at Floyd's Bluff—the first white man who became a permanent settler of the county. In the Autumn of the same year his brother Charles and another man followed and spent the Winter there, being, at that time, the only white men in the county. Anticipating an immense immigration, he laid out a town here and named it in honor of himself—Thompsontown. Like other western towns, this for a while was supposed to be the point. To give it an air of business, and aid in its development, he erected here his cabin, and, on the organization of the county, in 1853, this was made the county seat. It was a sort of post for Indian traders for some years, but the city lots were too steep for cultivation or for building, and, unfortunately, there was no place for a landing on the bank of the river, and the stakes are all that now remain to mark the progress of the town.

In May, 1849, Theophile Brugnier, a native of Canada, but of French descent, settled at the mouth of Big Sioux River, about two miles above where Sioux City now stands. He was the second white man who had visited the spot which he had selected. In 1835, at the age of twenty, Brugnier left Canada and went to St. Louis, where he had an uncle who was a member of the American Fur Company. Under the advice of his uncle he engaged in the service of the company, but remained in their employ only a short time, when he joined the Yankton Sioux Indians and married a daughter of the somewhat distinguished chief, Ha-yan-e-ka (War Eagle). He became a prominent man in the tribe, and acquired great influence among them. After remaining with the Indians, and sharing the fortunes of the tribe for some ten years, he concluded to change his manner of life, and notified the tribe of his intentions. Accordingly, with his faithful Indian wife and children, he left the post of the American Fur Company and came down the river and settled, as above stated, at the mouth of Big Sioux River. War Eagle, the Indian father-in-law of Brugnier, died at his house in the Fall of 1851, aged about sixty-five years. He was a noted warrior among the Sioux, but always a friend of the whites. He was first recognized as a Chief of the Yankton Sioux by Major Pilcher, the Indian agent. About the year 1830 he was for some time employed as a pilot on the Upper Mississippi. His remains, with those of his two daughters, one of them the deceased wife of Mr. Brugnier, now repose on the summit of a lofty bluff on the Iowa side of the Big Sioux River, just above its mouth. Here are also the graves of several other Indians, as well as whites—eight or ten in all. From this romantic spot may be seen for many miles the broad winding Missouri with its noble valley, the far-off Blackbird Hills in Nebraska, with the intervening plains, islands and groves, and a portion of the rich bottom lands of Dakota, stretching as far as the eye can reach between the two rivers toward the northwest.

In the Fall of 1849, Robert Perry, a man of somewhat eccentric character, but of fine education, removed from Washington, D. C., and settled on the small creek which meanders through Sioux City, where he remained two years, and then removed elsewhere. The creek now bears his name. The next year Paul Paquette located at the crossing of Big Sioux River, about two miles above the mouth.

In the Spring of 1852, Mr. Brugnier sold a portion of his cultivated land, including what is now a part of Sioux City, to a Frenchman named Joseph Lionais, for one thousand dollars. About this time some difficulty occurred with the Indians at Fort Vermillion, and a small number of French descended the river and made a temporary settlement in the same vicinity. After this no further permanent improvement was made until the Spring of 1854, when Doctor John K. Cook, who had a government contract for surveying, arrived with his party. Being impressed with the eligibility of the place for the location of a town, and the romantic beauty of its surroundings, he and his party immediately located claims. Among those who selected and located claims at an early day in the vicinity of Sioux City, was the brave General Lyon, who fell at Wilson's Creek.

In the Winter of 1854-5, the Town of Sioux City was laid out. Among the settlers at that time were the following: Hiram Nelson, Marshall Townsley, Franklin Wixon, G. W. Chamberlain, and Francis Chappel. About this time the Indians became troublesome, and began to steal horses, cattle, and other property. Expeditions were fitted out against them, none of which, however, were attended with bloodshed. In the Spring of 1855, Joseph Lionais sold his land for three thousand dollars, and on this an addition to Sioux City was laid out. It then contained two log cabins, but now comprises the principal business portion of the city. The first stage and mail arrived in Sioux City about the first week in September of this year, a post office having first been established. This event was hailed by the settlers as the beginning of the era of civilization. By Christmas day there were seven log houses, two of them being hotels—the "Sioux City House," and the "Western Exchange." Two stores were opened, one of which was kept in a tent, and the other in a log cabin. Late in the season settlers came in rapidly, and many who could not obtain houses were obliged to camp out. In the Spring of 1856 the population had reached about 150. The land office had been opened here for pre-emptions, October 22, 1855, but the public lands were not offered for sale until May 4, 1857.

By an act of the Legislature the county seat had, in 1853, been located at Floyd's Bluff. In the Spring of 1856 it was removed to Sioux City by a vote of the citizens of the county, the majority in favor of removal being fourteen. The county was organized in 1853.

The first steamboat freighted for Sioux City was the "Omaha," and arrived in June 1856. Her freight consisted of ready framed houses and provisions. In July of this year a steam saw mill was erected. Mrs. S. H. Cassady and Mrs. J. R. Myers were the first women who spent a Winter in Sioux City. Both came in the Summer of 1855. The first white child born in the place was a daughter of S. H. Cassady and wife, in 1856.

NEWSPAPERS.

The first newspaper established in the county was called the Sioux City Eagle, and was published by S. W. Swiggett. Its first appearance was July 4, 1857, and it was a twenty-eight column sheet, independent in politics. It continued nearly three years, and was a well conducted paper. The next paper was called the Western Independent, and was commenced about the 1st of August, 1857, by Cummings & Ziebach, at Sergeant's Bluffs. It was also a twenty-eight column sheet, and independent in politics. It continued about seven months.

On the 23d of July, 1858, the press and fixtures of the Western Independent were removed to Sioux City, and were used in the publication of a paper called the Sioux City Register, by F. M. Ziebach.

COURTS.

The first District Court convened in Woodbury County, September 3, 1855—Samuel H. Riddle being the Judge; J. R. Meyers, Clerk; and F. Chappel, Sheriff. But little business was transacted at this term. This county was a part of the Seventh Judicial District. The next court convened November 4, 1856, the same judge presiding.

The county has not yet erected a court house, but is the owner of a brick structure of ample room and accommodations, which is sometimes used as a jail.

SIOUX CITY.

This city is pleasantly situated on the Missouri River, immediately above the mouth of Floyd, and about two miles below the mouth of Big Sioux River. The business portion is on what was a dry and well drained prairie, extending from the river back to the bluffs. It is above the highest floods, and gradually rises as it recedes from the river. The city, however, extends back on the uplands, which furnish many fine sites for residences. The city is favorably situated for commanding the trade of a large district of country. There is an excellent landing for steamboats, and during the season of navigation there is trade with all points on the Upper Missouri River, by means of a line of steamboats. Several railroads center here, and some of them have expended large sums in the erection of machine shops, depots, and other buildings. The place is rapidly attaining commercial prominence.

From Sioux City to St. Louis is 1,010 miles by the river, and from Sioux City to Fort Benton, the head of steamboat navigation, is 1,955 miles.

On the west side of the town rises a majestic bluff which the people call "Prospect Hill." This hill rises gradually from the business portion of the city, and abruptly from the Missouri River, to the height of 200 feet. From its summit the spectator looks down upon Sioux City and its suburbs; looking across the Missouri River, southward, he beholds the State of Nebraska with its level plains, majestic groves, and pleasant villages; and two miles westward he sees the huge cottonwood forests of Dakota which border the junction of the Missouri and the Sioux. Man never rested his eye upon a scene combining more richness, freshness, beauty, and majesty.

In 1856 the town contained some ninety buildings and about 400 inhabitants. By an act of the State Legislature, approved January 16, 1857, the town was incorporated; and on the 3d of August of the same year the first election was held. From that time forward the wealth of the city has increased annually from 50 to 100 per cent, and its population has doubled biennially.

The Illinois Central Railroad, which runs directly from Chicago to the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, and from that point across the State of Iowa, has its western terminus at Sioux City.

The Sioux City and Pacific Road was completed to Sioux City in March, 1868.

The Sioux City and St. Paul Railroad was completed in the closing days of September, 1872.

The Dakota Southern Railroad starts from Sioux City and is doing considerable business. The Sioux City and Pembina Road is graded along the bank of the Big Sioux River, and is expected to be soon in running order.

In the Spring of 1855, there were two log cabins on the site of Sioux City. About the 20th of July of this year, the first stage and mail arrived, and was hailed by the settlers as the dawning of a new era. Doctor Cook was the first post master, and was succeeded by Charles K. Smith, who retained the position until the administration of Abraham Lincoln.

There are six organized Christian Churches in the city—Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal, Catholic, Presbyterian, and Baptist. Each society has a house of worship. The Presbyterians have a fine wooden church; the Catholics have lately erected a large brick edifice.

The principal school building, known as the high school, is a splendid structure, erected at a cost of $35,000. Ten teachers are employed in this building, and it is attended by more than 500 pupils. Another school building has been erected recently at a cost of $11,000. Four teachers will be employed in this building. In addition to these educational establishments there are also three primary schools employing one teacher each.

The newspapers of Sioux City are The Journal, daily and weekly (Republican), published by Perkins Bros.; The Times, weekly (Democratic), published by Charles Collins; The Courier, German paper (Republican), published by Doctor C. Krejci. When the population was only 1,200 Charles Collins published his Daily Times.

Sioux City was incorporated under an act of the Sixth General Assembly, approved January 16, 1857. The first election for municipal officers was held in August of that year, but the officers elected failed to qualify, and the next election was held April 5, 1858. On this day Henry W. Tracy, one of the persons elected alderman, shot and killed one William Copeland in the streets of Sioux City. Tracy left, and has not since returned. The affair grew out of some excitement relative to the election.

Sioux City has many fine residences and business blocks. The First National Bank is of brick, three stories high. The Academy of Music, of brick, four stories, and contains a public hall which will seat 1,000 persons. This building cost about $45,000.

SMITHLAND.

One of the early settlements in the county was at Smithland, on the Little Sioux River, about thirty-five miles southeast of Sioux City. At this place in January, 1857, began, between the whites and Indians, the troubles immediately preceding the Spirit Lake massacre. The Indians made some threats against the whites, which caused the settlers to arrest and disarm some of Ink-pa-du-tah's band. The Indians stole other arms, and passing up the valley of Little Sioux River into Cherokee and Clay Counties, committed further depredations. When they arrived in Dickinson County, they committed the outrages which form so painful a chapter in the history of the state.

CORRECTIONVILLE—Lies in a bend of Little Sioux River, near the line of Ida County. It was settled years ago, when Sioux City was little more than an Indian camping ground, and per force of circumstances still remains a village, though its situation and natural resources would warrant it in becoming a town. A pioneer by the name of Snook came into what is now Kedron Township in Section 1, in 1853. R. Candreau, C. Bacon, and M. Kellogg came the next year. Snook sold out to Bacon, who was the first permanent settler.

WOODBURY—This village was formerly called Sergeant's Bluff City. The railroad station here is still called Sergeant's Bluff. It is situated on the Missouri bottom, six miles south of Sioux City. It was located in 1850, by Doctor J. D. M. Crockwell and Doctor Wright, of Independence, Iowa. In 1857-8 a newspaper was published here, of which Benton has been made. In 1863 the manufacture of pottery was commenced at Woodbury, and the business has been lively and remunerative ever since.

SLOAN—Fourteen miles from Sergeant's Bluff, twenty-one miles from Sioux City. The land around is rich and excellent for grain and stock raising. J. B. Johnson formed a settlement in 1868, and in April, 1870, Mr. John I. Blair staked the place off in town lots.

By the census of 1875, Woodbury County had a population of 8,568, an increase in two years of 1,580.

JONES COUNTY.

The surface of the country in this county is rolling, not in waves, but thrown into heaps and low conical hills, the valleys winding in every direction, with considerable timber along the water courses, and here and there groves of oak, maple, walnut, ash and cottonwood on the prairies. The soil is fertile and produces wheat, corn, oats and potatoes abundantly, the climate salubrious, and the whole county well watered by the Maquoketa and Wapsinicon Rivers, which run in a southeasterly direction, and are fed by numerous tributaries. Flourishing orchards of apples, cherries, wild plums and small fruit are rapidly growing in all parts of the county. The chief employment is grain and cattle raising, and the dairy business. There are several cheese factories in the northern part, and some fine horses and blooded stock are exported from this county.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlers located at Bowen's Prairie and at Monticello, in 1836, in Fairview, Scotch Grove, Washington and Clay Townships in 1837, and at Anamosa in 1838. Wyoming, Rome, Jackson, Wayne, etc., were settled about this time, and some of them before 1836.

The facts herein recorded have been obtained from the old settlers themselves, from papers which have been published at old settlers' meetings, and from the records. The early records of this county, however, have been lost, and testimony depending upon the memory of county officials, etc., is the best that can now be obtained.

We state, in passing, that some claim to have settled in the county in 1835, but since they assert that they came a year after certain other parties who have left a written record that they came in 1837, there is evidently some mistake about it.

The following is a detailed account of a few of the first settled towns:

BOWEN'S PRAIRIE.

This place was first settled by Hugh Bowen in 1836, who visited the locality in company with John Flinn, Moses Collins, Joshua Johnson and Alfred Weatherford, who came the same year. The prairie was surveyed in 1837. T. S. Denson, G. Laughlin and C. Johnson selected their claims about this time, and the Delong family took possession of the falls near Cascade, where the first grist mill was built.

Reverend John Gillham, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held the first religious service in February, 1838. The first death was that of Alfred Denson, a lad six years old, who was lost on the prairie in a storm and perished April 24, 1838. Barrett Whittemore came this year and built his cabin near where he now resides. The first general election in the county for delegate to the Territorial Legislature, was held at Whittemore's house, where was also held the first preliminary meeting for the organization of Jones County. The first school house was built October 19, 1840, and was used for schools, courts and religious meetings. Hugh Bowen built the first frame barn, in 1841. The town was laid out by Otis Whittemore. At present it contains two churches, a school house, and about a dozen dwellings. The following were among the earlier settlers: William C. Johnson, William More, Thomas Dixon, John O'Sullivan, John Williamson, William Bracelton, Frank Dawson, Fletcher Burnight, William Tibbits, Mr. Vansant, David Graham, William Hines, James Miller, Alexander Laughlin, George White, Judge John Taylor, J. H. Eaton, J. P. Tibits, James Henderson, William Micheljohn, William Dawson, George G. Baughart, Joseph Green and James McVay. R. A. Rynerson set out the first nursery on the prairie in 1845. The first white child born was Cava, daughter of Charles Johnson.

MONTICELLO

Was first settled by Daniel Varvel, who erected his cabin in the Fall of 1836, and a few weeks afterwards was joined by William Clark. During the latter part of the Winter of 1836-'7, Richard South and wife settled in the vicinity. From this period up to 1840, T. J. Peak, B. Beardsley, J. McLaughlin, T. Galligen, John Stephenson and others arrived. Honorable Ansel Briggs, first Governor of Iowa, secured a mail contract from Dubuque to Iowa City via Monticello, and a two-horse coach was put on the route in 1838. The first couple married was T. J. Peak and Rebecca M. Beardsley, in 1840—a journey of sixty miles being necessary to secure the license. Mr. Varvel married Margaret E. Beardsley the same year.

In 1841 a post office was established, William Clark post master. The same year James Skelley came. The military road was laid out in 1842, through Monticello. Doctor W. B. Selders opened the first office in 1849, and was the first resident physician. In 1850 the Township of Monticello, including Richland and Castle Grove, was laid out, and the following year it was reduced to its present limits. In 1852 the first blacksmith shop by Dunlap, and the first hotel by Holstein were opened, and the first saw mill and store the following year. September 28, 1853, D. Varvel and G. H. Walworth platted the town, and James Flinton purchased the first lot. John Talor was appointed the first justice of the peace in 1855, and Mr. West erected a dry goods and grocery store. The first notary public was D. C. Quimby. M. M. Moulton was the first coroner in 1856, and F. Reiger built the first wagon shop in 1857.

In 1858 the railroad question was agitated; the school district established; Lodge No. 117, I. O. O. F., instituted; the first lumber yard, by J. L. Davenport; and the first flour made in the E. M. mills. In 1859 the first locomotive on the Dubuque & Southwestern Railroad went through Monticello; the graded school building erected; a tin shop on Main Street; a dry goods store west of the railroad; the first grain warehouse built; and the first law office opened, by A. J. Munroe.

In 1860 the Congregational Church and Sunday School were organized; a stone and brick store, by E. G. Wales, a photograph gallery, by D. B. McDonald, were erected; the following year the Methodist Episcopal church, lodge of Good Templars, and the first cooper shop, by Hoyt & Stowell, were commenced.

In 1862 H. K. Fuller opened a drug store; Company H, 31st Iowa Infantry, S. S. Farwell, Captain, was organized; and the year following C. C. Gilman built the first elevator, Houser & Gurney opened the first furniture manufactory.

In 1864 "Bradstreet's addition," of fifty-nine lots, and "Turk's addition," of forty-six lots, were made, and the first exclusively brick building built. The following year M. M. Moulton and O. D. Crane established the Monticello Express—first issue July 10, 1865; the first telegraph office, bakery, horse fair, horse protection society, Burn's Lodge, No. 173, were also established.

In 1866 Varvel's addition, of twenty-eight lots, the Disciples' church, Academy, were opened.

In 1867 Monticello was incorporated as a city; S. Y. Bradstreet elected the first mayor; the Episcopal Church, Library Association, Young Men's Christian Association, were organized, and the corner-stone of the Congregational Church laid.

In 1868 a Chapter of Royal Arch Masons was convoked; a foundry and machine shop started; Catholic Church, Baptist Church, Presbyterian Church and fire company were organized.

At this date (1873) Monticello contains six dry goods stores, eight groceries, four drug stores, four boot and shoe stores, two clothing stores, two book stores, two butter, egg and poultry stores, three hardware stores, eight grain, cattle and produce dealers two toy and fancy stores, five millinery stores, three agricultural establishments, seven blacksmith shops, four wagon shops, two meat markets, two furniture stores, three jeweler shops, one foundry and machine shop, five shoe-makers' shops, two gun and pistol shops, two merchant tailors, four paint shops, two flouring mills, two lumber yards, one glove and mitten factory, one well auger factory, one wood-sawing machine factory, four sewing machine offices, three harness shops, one brick yard, six stone masons, two hotels, seven saloons, two livery stables, one trotting park and fair grounds, two elevators, three churches, four church organizations, one graded and high school, one Masonic lodge, one Chapter, one Commandery, one Odd Fellows' lodge, one Good Templar lodge, two law offices, four notary publics, one internal revenue office, six physicians, one dentist, two express offices, one bank, two printing offices, two photograph galleries, two railroads, two ice houses, one laundry, two barber shops, two dairy milk factories, one library (of eight hundred volumes) and reading room, one literary club, and a fine unimproved water power on "Kitty Creek."

SCOTCH GROVE

Was first settled in 1837, by a colony from the Red River of the North—Lord Selkirk's country. They made a journey of a thousand miles with ox carts, drawn by a single ox, and not a particle of iron about the whole vehicle. The principal men were John and Alexander Sutherland, James Brimner, David McKoy, Alexander McLain, and their families—in all thirty persons.

In 1839 Donald Livingston, E. and D. Sutherland, Donald Sinclair, David Esson, with their families, numbering thirty-three, joined their friends at the Grove. They were an industrious and hardy people, and are now in prosperous circumstances.

October 31, 1872, the Applegates platted and recorded a town named Scotch Grove.

FARM CREEK, in Washington Township, was first settled in 1836 or 1837, by Abraham Hostetter, John Rafferty, M. Lupton and others, in all eleven persons. They built their cabins along the creek north of the Maquoketa River. In 1838 Charles P. and James Middleton and families—in all twenty persons—came into the same neighborhood.

CLAY TOWNSHIP.—Ben Collins, an old hunter, settled south of the river, in Clay Township, at an early day.

Among the old settlers were Cyrus Blancet, John French, Peter Smith and son, Mr. Hanna, James Hutton, D. K. and Daniel Barnhill, Chauncey C. Butler, widow Randall, J. Ingraham, Jesse Tomlinson, Chauncey Gowen, Jacob Bodenbutter, Isaac and Peter Dewitt, Alexander Milton and George Delong, Samuel and William Reed, Nathan Waters, M. C. Walters, James Hall, F. J. Tryon, etc.

ROME.—Richard J. Cleveland, about 1837; Horace and N. B. Seeley, Isaac Simpson, Daniel and Solomon Garrison, Orville Conkright, Hiram Stewart, William Hamilton, John Merritt, and others came before 1840, erected their cabins, and commenced the work of civilization.

AT WYOMING, Thomas Green, about 1839; William Knight, Taylor, Joseph and Richard Van Valkenberg, and their father were among the first.

LANGWORTHY was settled very soon after Anamosa, and some of the first pioneers are still living. The town was laid out January 3, 1855, by William T. Shaw. The Browns, Joslins, Peets, Crows, and Parsons were the first on the south side of the Wapsipinicon, and Clement Russell is said to be among the first, if not the first in Fairview.

CASTLE GROVE.—Among the first settlers in this township were, Simon Forman, Isaac R. Orcutt, Joshua R. and James Clark, Scott, Thomas S. Hubbard, Enoch, George and Albert Higby, P. Mitchell, George and Horace Gill, D. Bartholomew, D. M. Hogan, J. S. Lathrop, and others. The Indians occupied the country until 1847. The last elk was killed by Joseph Collyer, in 1842, and young buffalos were taken near Clear Lake as late as 1849. There is one cheese factory in this township, and the dairy business is rapidly increasing.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

Jones County derived its name from George W. Jones, then United States Surveyor, who had an office at Dubuque. It was a part of a strip one hundred miles in width, including all the counties from Dubuque to the Missouri line, called the "Blackhawk Purchase."

The first general election for delegates to the Territorial Legislature, was held September 11, 1838, at the house of Barrett Whittemore, on Bowen's Prairie—eleven votes were cast. Later the same year Jones County was set off with its present boundaries by act of the Territorial Legislature; and January 24, 1839, the county was duly organized, the first preliminary meeting being held at the house of said Whittemore. Honorable Thomas S. Wilson, Judge; William Hutton, Clerk. The military road from Dubuque to Iowa City, laid out by the United States Government through Jones County, greatly increased the population, and the act of the Territorial Legislature establishing public schools, January 1, 1839, encouraged immigration from the Eastern States.

July 24, 1839, the first political caucus was held in Clement Russell's house for nominating county and territorial officers, and George H. Walworth was nominated for the Assembly. August 5, following, at the second general election, Bowen's Prairie precinct cast 42 votes. At this time there were three precincts in the county, viz: Bowen's Prairie, Fairview, and Rome. Walworth was elected.

January 24, 1839, the Legislature appointed Simeon Gardner, of Clinton County; Israel Mitchell, of Linn County; William H. Whiteside of Dubuque County, to locate the county seat. In the Spring of 1840, the commissioners came to Jones County, and with George H. Walworth, examined different locations, and finally going to Scotch Grove, fixed on a central point and laid out a town, and named it Edinburgh, which they intended for the county seat. A few years afterwards it was moved to Newport, and in 1847, to Lexington. Edmund Booth, the deaf and dumb editor of the Eureka, gives the following amusing account of these early capital removals, and the state of the county at that time:

"In 1847, by vote of the people, the county seat was removed from Newport—three miles from what was then called Rome—to Lexington. Newport had but a single building made of logs; the dwelling of Adam Overacker, now in California. The county seat had been removed by a similar vote from Edinburgh to Newport two years previously, and the district court had been convened to meet there. Judge Thomas S. Wilson of Dubuque, one of the territorial judges, the lawyers, jury, witnesses, and the usual throng came in, and there was no court house, and only the small log building of Adam Overacker. Judge Wilson, naturally enough, was disgusted, and rather than hold court in the bushes and the tall wild grass that grew luxuriantly everywhere, he adjourned the court and went home. Of course the crowd followed his example, and there was no court.

"At the next session of the Territorial Legislature, a law was passed authorizing a free choice by popular vote. The law of two years previous had authorized the County Commissioners to name two places, and the people to select one or the other, and thus the choice was between Cascade and Newport, in opposite parts of the county. On the first vote—the point to be selected optional to all voters—no one place had a majority over all the votes cast, and, as provided by the new law, the two highest only were then voted on. This brought the county seat to Lexington."

At Lexington (now Anamosa) was held the next meeting of the Board of County Commissioners, consisting of Charles P. Hutton, Ambrose Parsons, and Matthew Simpson. William Hutton was county clerk then, and had been for several years previous. The first lawyer who established himself in the county was C. C. Rockwell, who subsequently became clerk of the Senate.

June 15, 1840, the first census of Jones County was taken by Hugh Bowen, and footed up as follows: Males, 290; females, 185; total, 475,—so rapidly did the settlers come in during the first three or four years.

It is proper to state here that the first public land sales for Jones County, took place at Dubuque, and Barrett Whittemore was selected to bid off the old settlers' claims.

March 22, 1841, the district court was held in Edinburgh, probably the first in the county. Judge Wilson, presiding; Hugh Bowen, Sheriff.

The old records having been lost, renders it difficult to state with accuracy the early proceedings.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The county officials for 1875, are:

CHARLES CLINK, Auditor.	B. H. WHITE, Clerk of Courts.
J. H. DICKEY, Treasurer.	J. O. DUER, Recorder.
A. J. BYERLY, Sheriff.	George O. JOHNSON, Supt. Common Schools.

J. A. CRAWFORD, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Anamosa News was the first paper started in Jones County, February, 1852. William Haddock, editor. This was changed to Anamosa Bulletin, —— Brooks, editor. In 1855, and again changed to Anamosa Gazette, Joseph Mann and Ralph Sawyer, editors, in 1856. In 1858 Mr. Hayes took charge, conducting it until October of that year, when it collapsed, and was revived in 1861, surviving but three months.

The Anamosa Eureka was established by C. L. D. Crockwell and John E. Lovejoy, in August, 1856. The following year Crockwell and Parrott were the editors; April, 1858, Booth and Parrott; December 11, 1862, Edmund Booth, and at present Edmund Booth and Son are editors and proprietors.

The Anamosa Journal was established in 1872 by C. H. Monger.

The Monticello Express was started by O. D. Crane, July 10, 1865. It passed into the hands of James Davidson—then Scott & Howard, then J. H. Scott, then G. W. Hunt, and at present is under the editorial management of John Blanchard.

The Jones County Liberal was established by George W. Hunt, September 19, 1872, and is still flourishing.

The Wyoming Journal, started by A. L. Smith, April, 1871, was afterwards edited by Reverend E. Skinner, and finally by N. W. Woodford, and is defunct.

The Wyoming News was established by Hunt & Howard, November 19, 1873, and has since been discontinued. The Wyoming Journal is now published under the editorship of F. D. Swigart.

The Olin Times was established by Sickle & Arlen, August, 1874, and has since died.

ANAMOSA.

The present county seat of Jones County, was named from an Indian girl, the daughter of Nashua, a chief, and signifies White Fawn. The name was chosen by Gideon H. Ford and Edwin Booth, and was suggested by the following incident; About 1842, three Indians—a man, woman and daughter—came into the hotel in the town, which was then called Dartmouth. At a glance it was seen they were not the common skin-dressed, half-wild and dirty class. They wore the look of intelligence, quite different from the general dull aspect of their race. The man and woman were dressed mostly in the costume of white people, with some Indian mixed, but the girl, bright and pleasant-faced, apparently about 8 or 10 years of age, was wholly in Indian dress, as became the daughter of a chief. She was really a handsome girl, and wore ornamental leggings and moccassins, having the appearance of a well dressed Indian belle. They were free from that wary watchfulness of their race, and although somewhat reserved at first, were possessed of an easy dignity. They became cheerful and communicative, and, when the name of the girl was asked, the parents replied, An-a-mo-sah. The daughter laughed the pleasant, half-bashful laugh of a young girl, showing that she understood the question, but did not speak. From this moment these gentlemen determined that the town should be called Anamosa, and it was some years afterwards changed by order of the court, Judge Wilson, presiding. The city seal bears the White Fawn.

The first settlers at the "Buffalo Forks of the Waubisipinicon," as the old maps have it, were George Russ and Sherebiah Dakin, both of Maine, who came May 15, 1838, and claimed sections 2, 3, 4, and ¼ of 9 and 10, in what is now Fairview Township, for milling purposes. They employed J. H. Bartlett and family, Messrs. Smith and Carpenter, and D. G. Dumars, who came the same year, and commenced building their cabins. In August that sickness which extended over Northern Illinois, Indiana, and Southern Michigan prevailed here also, and before October, Russ, Smith and Carpenter were dead.

A son of Major Russ (George H.) came a few days after his father's death. Gideon H. Ford arrived about the same time, and found them all disheartened and anxious to sell. Ford bought them out, and in the Winter of 1838-'9 sold two-thirds of the claim to Timothy Davis and George H. Walworth. The claim included the whole site of Anamosa. It was all government land, and was not brought into market till the Summer of 1840. In the Spring of 1839 they commenced building a saw mill, which was undermined the following year. Two brothers and two sisters of Mr. Walworth moved to the Forks in 1839, and Edwin Booth arrived there August 18th, of the same year. He says he "found a settlement consisting of eighteen log cabins, extending along the south border of the timber from Highland Grove to Viola." Clement Russell and family came into Fairview township, July, 1837, and John G. Joslin, Aug. 29, of the same year. Those who came in 1838 were Lathrop Olmsted, Silas, James and Ambrose Parsons, Benoni Brown (who died aged 103, lacking three months), Calvin C. Reed, Samuel Kelly et al. In the Spring of 1839 came Gideon N. Peet, Henry Van Buskirk and family, and others.

The first settlers within the corporation of Anamosa were Colonel David Wood and his brother-in-law, Edmund Booth. They built the first frame house, in 1840, at the present intersection of Brown avenue and High streets, near the grove. In this house E. Booth was married by J. G. Joslin, justice of the peace. He had no form. Queen Victoria had just been married, and the ceremony was in the papers. The justice took that form, and the happy couple were pronounced husband and wife after the manner of the Church of England.

Colonel Wood died the following winter, and his widow married Gideon H. Ford, now of Webster City. The first blacksmith shop in Anamosa was put up by G. H. Ford in 1842. The first shoe shop by Henry Waggoner, the first justice of the peace was Harry Mahan, the first child born was Maria, daughter of G. H. and Hannah Ford. She afterwards married Joseph Fisher, and resides at Webster City.

The town has borne three names, viz.: When Col. Fox, of Bellevue, was here surveying the county seat (Edinburgh), he accompanied G. H. Walworth to Buffalo Forks, and the next day laid off a new town. Walworth perplexed his brain for weeks for a name, and finally called it Dartmouth, in honor of Dartmouth College. Two or three years later, John Crockwell and Harry Mahan laid off—just west of Dartmouth, including the penitentiary grounds—a plat, and named it Lexington, and placed it upon the record. Dartmouth was never recorded as such, and so was dropped. In 1846, or 7, by vote of the people, Lexington became the county seat, and the name was afterwards changed to Anamosa, as above described. In 1856 it was incorporated as a village, and in 1872 as a city—Robert Dott being the first Mayor.

The present city officials are: Mayor, Robert Dott; Aldermen, E. B. Alderman, —. Rigley, J. S. Belknap, L. Sconoover, C. M. Falling, Geo. Watters, E. V. Enton, J. B. McQueen; Treasurer, W. S. Benton; Clerk, L. D. Peck; City Solicitor, G. W. Field.

At this date, 1875, Anamosa contains seven dry goods stores, twelve groceries, four drug stores, five boot and shoe stores, four clothing stores, three book stores, three butter, egg and poultry stores, four hardware stores, five cattle, grain and produce stores, four fancy goods and toy stores, four millinery stores, three agricultural establishments, seven blacksmith shops, five wagon shops, one meat market, two furniture stores, two jewelers, one foundry, six shoemaker shops, one gun shop, two merchant tailors, three flouring mills, one lumber yard, two wood-sawing machines, four sewing machine offices, three harness shops, three brickyards, twenty-five stone masons, three hotels, five saloons, two livery stables, two elevators, five churches, two schools, one high school, one Masonic lodge, one Chapter, two Odd Fellows' lodges, one Good Templar's, ten law offices, six doctors, two dentists, one express office, two banks, two printing offices three photograph galleries, two railroads, three ice houses, two laundries, three barber shops, one dairy milk factory, three libraries, two reading rooms, two literary clubs, two dramatic clubs.

WATER WORKS.

April 26, 1875, an ordinance was passed by the City Council to provide the citizens of Anamosa with water for domestic use and fire protection, and a company was formed, under the laws of Iowa, consisting of H. C. Metcalf, N. S. Noble, E. Blakeslee, C. L. Niles, T. W. Shapley, Geo. Watters, E. B. Alderman, John Watters and J. C. Deltz, with a capital stock of $10,000. Ground was broken May 20, 1875; water to be taken from the Wapsipinicon river.

STATE PENITENTIARY.

The new State Penitentiary, now in process of erection at Anamosa, will be one of the finest buildings in the state, and among the best arranged and magnificent prisons in the west. The grounds consist of fifteen acres, which are enclosed.*

The citizens of Anamosa donated to the state the fifteen acres in town, and upon which the prison has been located; and also, sixty-one acres of good pasture land, in close proximity to the prison. The quarry lands, purchased of N. G. Sales, for $15,000, contain 128 acres, and have three open quarries upon them. The largest has quite an extent of surface stripped, and a great quantity of stone is now available. The second has a small surface exposed, and good flagging and rubble stone is taken out. The third was opened by the railway being graded through it, exposing a fine strata of stone—with but little earth upon it. The quantity of stone can not be estimated. From the highest point in the first quarry, a depth of seventy feet has been reached, and the deeper the work has been carried the better the stone becomes—a finer texture being found. These state quarries are sufficient to meet all demands of the state for public buildings, even though all those now erected and in course of erection were to be replaced—all to be taken out of the main quarry. The supply is inexhaustible for centuries to come. Lime of good quality has been made from these stones, and could be made a profitable business. The state geologist describes the stone as follows: "The Anamosa quarries are in the upper silurian limestone, which, every where in Iowa, is magnesian, and which usually larks uniformity in both stratification and structure; but within an area containing apparently about two square miles its stratification is wonderfully uniform, and its texture is quite homogeneous. When first taken from the quarry the stone is easily worked, but hardens by exposure to the air, and becomes firm and durable, enduring any amount of pressure."

The quarry is but three miles from the prison.

The building, shops, walls and all will be built of stone obtained from the state quarries mentioned, and the labor will be chiefly done by the prisoners, who seem to work with a will, as though they had a personal interest in completing the entire work before their engagement with the state expires.

THE STATE PISCICULTURAL ESTABLISHMENT,

A full description of which is given in the state history, is located near Anamosa, and is under charge of the superintendent, B. F. Shaw. The buildings and improvements were erected during the Summer of 1874, and every thing is now in good working shape and the institution is destined to accomplish much by suppiyin the streams and lakes of the state with valuable varieties of fish.

RAILROADS.

The county is well supplied with railroads—the Dubuque & Southwestern passing through Fairview, Cass, Wayne and Monticello townships in a northeasterly direction; the Sabula, Ackley & Dakota passing east and west through the southern tier of townships; the Iowa Midland running east and west through the center of the county, and the St. Paul & Davenport passing in a southeasterly direction through six townships—in all about 110 miles, affording the citizens ample facilities for travel and for shipping of produce.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The alms house and farm, near the site of the ancient county capital, Edinburgh, is well managed by Mr. Pintner, overseer.

The county has no court house, but occupies a very commodious hall in Shaw's block.

The jail is a substantial stone building in Anamosa; Thos. Buckner, jailor.

CHURCHES.

The Methodists are the most numerous. They have one church in Richland township, two in Monticello, one in Cass, three in Wayne, two in Scotch Grove, one in Clay, one in Wyoming, two in Madison, one in Fairview, and two in Rome—total sixteen, with an estimated membership of 780.

The Baptists have five churches, one in Anamosa, one in Fairview, one in Olin, one in Hale and one in Clay, with a total membership of 322.

The Congregationalists have four churches; one in Anamosa, one at Bowen's Prairie, one at Monticello, and one in Cass—total membership, 262.

A large number of other denominations, the Disciples, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Universalists, Catholics, etc., are represented.

SCHOOLS.

There are about 175 public schools in the county; three high schools, at Monticello, Anamosa and Wyoming, all under the supervision of a county superintendent. The houses are frame and brick buildings, substantial and commodious, and the system of instruction improving. There is a Catholic school at Anamosa.

STONE QUARRIES.

The county is amply supplied with quarries of the finest building stone. Near Monticello and Anamosa, and in other localities, the upper silurian limestone crops out. This is every where magnesian in Iowa, and lacks uniformity in structure and stratification, but in this locality it is far otherwise. The quarry on the west bank of the Wapsipinicon, three miles west of Anamosa, possesses wonderful uniformity, and its texture is perfectly homogeneous. From the water to the top of the bluff, a thickness of ninety feet, nearly all available building material. The stone is fine-grained, non-crystalline, very uniformly and horizontally bedded, and is easily worked. It readily splits into thin layers, with smooth surfaces, and makes most excellent flagging. Some of these layers will furnish blocks three or four feet thick and of any desirable length for sills, caps, water tables, and even for columns. The color is light buff, and does not change by action of the atmosphere.

FAYETTE COUNTY.

Fayette is the second county both from the northern and eastern boundaries of the state. It is a county of the larger size, containing an area of seven hundred and twenty square miles. The face of the country within its limits is greatly varied. In the eastern and northeastern portions, bold and prominent bluffs, crowned with forests of timber, mark the course of the larger streams, and between these bluffs the waters have eroded, not broad, but very beautiful and picturesque valleys. Toward the southwest these rugged and prominent features gradually melt away in the broad undulating prairies. The face of the country undergoes a marked transformation as it recedes from the hilly region that skirts the Mississippi toward the high, gently rolling region of the interior.

TIMBER.

About one-fourth of the area of the county is covered with timber of excellent growth, the larger bodies lying in the eastern and northern parts, and embracing nearly all the hardy varieties, including oak, maple, elm, linn, poplar, black and white walnut, hickory, hackberry, cherry, cottonwood, etc., with occasional pine of insignificant growth.

SOIL.

The classes of soil are peculiarly divided. Southward of Otter Creek, which diagonally crosses the Township of West Union, the soil is of a light, yet very productive character; some patches are quite sandy. North of Otter Creek it is a rich black loam, exceedingly productive. Cultivated grasses grow well on this soil, and in the county generally the soil is of such fertility that the yield of all cereals common to this latitude (43°) is uniformly good, and quality excellent. The prairies produce nutritious native grasses.

STREAMS.

The principal streams afford highly valuable water powers, many of which are already improved; but the opportunity to increase the already quite extensive manufacturing interests of Fayette County by the utilizing of these water privileges, will be improved as rapidly as the requirements of the country demand. No stream in the state affords as many first-class water powers in proportion to its length as Turkey River. The north, northeastern, central and northwestern parts of the county are well watered, not only by numerous streams of greater or less size, but by a great number of living springs.

GEOLOGICAL.

The Niagara limestone occupies a large portion of the geological formation of Fayette County. It is well exhibited in various sections in the vicinity of West Union; on Otter Creek, at one place it is shown to the depth of one hundred and thirty-five feet. Here the lower layer is somewhat soft and irregularly stratified, resembling the Niagara as seen in the immediate vicinity of the Mississippi river. Above this is seen a very hard and almost white limestone. The Galena limestone appears in the valley of the Turkey through its entire length in this county. At Elgin the bluffs on the north side of the river, at an elevation of three hundred feet, and a distance of two miles from the stream, exhibit all the character of the Galena limestone. The Trenton limestone is noticed at various points in the valley of the Turkey River underlying the Galena, and is the lowest rock exposed in the county.

In the south and west parts of the county, on the high prairies, numerous rocks—boulders of massive size—are found, and in some places the ground is covered with smaller stones, in formation and composition very similar to the large boulders, differing only in size; while in the northern part of the county, on the prairie land, not a stone is to be found. The southeastern part of the county lies within the Devonian region.

PRODUCTS.

Fayette is an agricultural county. According to the last census reports, corn is the predominant crop, followed next by wheat, oats and barley. Rye does not prove a profitable or successful crop. Large shipments of live stock, beef, mutton and pork, are made every Fall, while during the Winter a great exportation of dressed hogs is carried on.

EDUCATIONAL.

Latest reports show the number of district townships, 19; sub-districts, 150; independent districts, 16. Number of ungraded schools, 158; graded, 6. Number of teachers employed—males, 82; females, 220. Average compensation—males, $32.50; females, $23.52 per month. Number of school houses, 155—frame, 133; brick, 11; stone, 7; log, 4. Total value of school houses, $88,354; value of school apparatus, $720.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The construction of the first court house of this county, was begun in the Fall of 1856 and completed in 1857. It was 40x60 feet in size; two stories high, built of brick, and cost $8,000. It was destroyed by fire September 15, 1872.

The present court house is built on the foundation that the old one occupied. Its construction was commenced in 1873; it was completed and accepted by the county commissioners, October 20, 1874. It is built of red brick, two stories high, and cost about $10,000; one-half of which amount was appropriated by the county; $3,000 paid by the citizens of West Union; and $2,000 realized from the debris of the old structure. It is well arranged inside, provided with fire-proof vaults, and furnished with fire and burglar-proof safes. The one in the treasurer's office is said to be the finest in the state.

Fayette County has no jail. When one is required, offenders of the peace and dignity of the criminal code are sent to Clayton County.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

In the Town of Center, the county owns a poor farm, consisting of two hundred and forty-six acres. It is situated six miles from the county seat—West Union. It is valued at $11,000. It is under the control of the county board of supervisors, and managed by Andrew Peets, Superintendent. At present its inmates number seventeen—nine males and eight females. The county formerly owned a poor farm of one hundred and forty-three acres in the Town of Illyria, for which it paid $2,000. It was deemed insufficient in size, sold, and the present one purchased.

This county has one of the most successful agricultural societies in Iowa. It was organized in 1854, under the name of the Fayette County Agricultural Society and Mechanics Institute. Their grounds are situated about three-fourths of a mile from West Union, and are enclosed. In the enclosure is a beautiful spring which furnishes an abundant supply of pure water for all purposes. The present President is John S. Brewer; Secretary, J. J. Berkey.

An Old Settlers Association was formed and the first meeting held January 1st, 1868. Its first officers were as follows: President, M. C. Sperry; Vice President, Aaron Brown; Recording Secretary, J. W. Rogers; Corresponding Secretary, C. R. Bent; Chaplain, Reverend John Webb; Treasurer, Reverend H. S. Brunson. Executive Committee: Thomas Kincaid, Palmer F. Newton and Horatio Warner. The society numbers one hundred and thirty-one members, and the present officers are: President, Thomas Kincaid; Vice President, P. L. Hinkley; Secretary, J. W. Rogers; Chaplain, Reverend John Webb; Executive Committee: M. C. Sperry, F. S. Palmer and Benjamin Dimond.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The following named gentlemen are the officers for Fayette County at the present time:

ALBERT SUTHERLAND, Auditor.	JAMES STEWART, Treasurer.
BENJAMIN MORSE, Clerk of the Court.	ROBERT W. MCFARLAND, Recorder.
HIRAM B. CAPWELL, Sheriff.	WILLIAM W. QUIVEY, Sup't of Schools.
CHARLES HOYT, Surveyor.	LEWIS ARMSTRONG, Coroner.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

FIELDING SNEDIGAR, HIRAM HOAGLAND, and PHILETUS L. CHAMPLIN.

*EARLY HISTORY.

The territory comprising Fayette County was divided, under direction of the government, by a line starting from a painted post in Allamakee County, and running in a southwesterly direction across Illyria Township, and following near to the north line of Smithfield Township, thence southwesterly to the west line of the county. Land south of this line was open for settlement upon the ratification of the Black Hawk Purchase in 1833, while land north of this line, known as the Reserve, was in complete possession of the Winnebago Indians until their removal in 1848.

The land south of this line was settled by that hardy, brave and honest class who make homes and pave the way for development—the pioneer band, the vanguard of civilization—kindling the fires, the light of which has guided thousands in the path of progress.

The first cabin erected in this county was by an Indian trader named Culver, and is yet standing on the farm of Major D. B. Herriman, in Illyria Township. As near as can be ascertained, it was constructed in the Spring of 1841. There were other trading posts in the county at an early day, but this is thought to be the first.

In the year 1842 Andrew Heasley came here, and two years after settled a claim in the town of Fairfield. He is entitled to the credit of making the first permanent settlement with his family. His settlement was followed at once by the Brooks family, who entered claims and began their permanent settlement. In 1848 Samuel Connor and Benjamin Dimond settled at Elgin; in 1849, William Wells, Jacob Ly Brand and J. W. Rogers, at West Union; also, in same year, Joshua Wells and Gabriel Long, near West Union; James B., Morris, B. and Hiram Earll, at Auburn; Thomas Woodle and Thomas B. Douglas, at the geographical center of the county.

ORGANIZATION.

During this period, above mentioned, Fayette was attached to Clayton County, but in 1850 it was organized, and the following named gentlemen filled the offices: County Judge, Thomas Woodle; County Clerk, J. W. Rogers; Sheriff, G. W. Neff; Recorder and Treasurer, G. A. Cook; County Commissioners: William Wells, Charles Sawyer and Jared Taylor; Clerk, C. M. Jones.

The first Board of County Commissioners met August 26th, 1850, and their first act was to set off road districts.

Judge Woodle held his first term of court October 7th, 1851.

The first marriage license was granted October 22d, 1851.

The first judge of the Second Judicial District to hold court here was T. S. Wilson, July 6th, 1852. The first suit was for divorce, at this term—William S. Kee vs. Jane Kee—and decree was granted.

The first indictment found was also at this term of court. It was against Chauncey Leverich, for retailing spirituous liquors.

The first attorney admitted by examination was Martin V. Burdick.

The first term of the Circuit Court was held by Judge B. T. Hunt, April 12th, 1869.

WEST UNION.

This flourishing town, the seat of justice of Fayette County, is situated on the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railway, over which road it holds commerce with Milwaukee, Chicago, and Eastern cities and points on the Mississippi River. It is surrounded by a very fertile and extensive farming country, and has tributary to it a populous and wealthy community. The principal streets run due north and south.

The Court House Square, consisting of nearly four acres of elevated ground, is in the center of the town, while around this square the business houses are constructed. Within the last two years some very fine brick blocks have been erected.

Prior to October 16th, 1872, West Union had no railway connection with Eastern markets, but since the completion of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad, the town has made rapid strides in business growth. The majority of business men have been engaged in business here for more than twenty years. There has not been a mercantile failure since 1860.

EARLY HISTORY.

In early years, 1848-9, West Union was known as "Knob Prairie," by reason of the rise of ground on which the court house now stands. The first letter ever received here was from Samuel Connor, by William Wells, directed to "Knob Prairie." An answer was returned to Mr. Connor, directed "Shin-bone Alley," which reached its destination at what is now Elgin.

The town was laid out in the Autumn of 1849 by William Wells, Jacob LyBrand and J. W. Rogers. In the Spring of 1850 it was re-surveyed. The first house built on the town site was by J. W. Rogers in 1849, the second was by Daniel Cook in 1850. In 1850 the post office of West Union was established, and J. W. Rogers appointed post master. In this year P. F. Sturgis' and other families arrived and were added to the settlement, and the first election was held. The demands of the neighborhood necessitated the building of a school house, which was constructed of logs, and in dimensions was 16x24 feet. The first term of school was taught in the Winter of 1851-2, by J. S. Pence. On the roll appear the names of Miss Rosina Peck (nee Stafford), John and Rhoda Cook, and Matilda Wells, who yet reside here.

In 1850 Daniel Cook opened the first dry goods, grocery and general supply store, and commenced the construction of the present West Union House.

In 1851 William McClintock and wife, H. C. Lacy, J. H. and David Stafford arrived here. The two latter bought the frame of the present West Union House, finished and furnished it according to the demands of that time, and opened the first hotel. In their office—which was less than the present in size—they opened a dry goods store, and it was used also as a boot and shoe shop, and as a tailor shop by Henry Wownenberg.

In this year the first law suit was tried. It was a civil action before H. F. Smith, Esquire. A farmer by the name of Stansbury had sold some dressed hogs to Daniel Cook, and the latter sold one to Martin V. Burdick, he, in cutting it up, discovered a purulent spot in the neck. An action was commenced against Cook for selling diseased meat. His ignorance of the fact of the purulent spot being proven, no cause of action was the verdict. William McClintock appeared for the defense. This case created considerable excitement in the little settlement.

In 1852 families continued to gather in, and one year later the town had become of such importance that a newspaper was established. October 21, 1854, John Gharky issued the first number of the Pioneer, a seven column democratic weekly journal.

In 1855 the construction of the present steam flouring mill was begun by Redfield, Maxwell & Allen. It passed into the hands of Redfield, Stafford & Nash, and was by them completed in 1857.

In 1856 the commencement of the construction of the court house, and the assurance it gave that this was to remain the county seat, encouraged the steady growth of the place.

In 1857 came the great financial crash that blotted out the enterprise of so many new towns. Fortunately West Union had no bank of "wild-cat" or paper scrip, and the amount of it in circulation in this new village being very insignificant (gold and silver being almost exclusively used here), the continuous prosperity of the place was not materially affected.

When the dark cloud of war overspread and threatened the dissolution of the Union, this little town was among the first to furnish men and money for its protection, and had we space a complete compilation of its military record could be made an interesting feature. The first from this county to yield his life in sacrifice for his country's honor was H. D. Norton, Company F, 3d Iowa Volunteers, at Blue Mills, Missouri, September 17, 1861. He was from Fayette. The first from West Union to suffer death in the glorious cause was brave A. G. M. Neff, First Lieutenant Company F, 9th Iowa Volunteers, who was wounded March 7, 1862, at the battle of Pea Ridge, Arkansas, and died March 11, 1862.

In the year 1862 the Pioneer was an ultra democratic or copperhead paper, and under Mr. Gharky, its editor, became so annoying and troublesome in its treatment of Union interests that a large delegation took possession of the office, broke the press, and emptied some of the type into the street. Its publication was renewed with a short time with all its former bitterness.

West Union was incorporated as a city and its first municipal election was held April 26, 1866. The following named gentlemen were elected: Mayor, H. N. Hawkins; Recorder, I. F. Clark; Trustees, J. S. Sampson, Charles Chadwick, Henry Eickel, Myron Peck and James S. Wright.

The first meeting of the Council was May 5, at which the following appointments were made: Marshal, J. J. Welsh; Treasurer, J. J. Berkly; Health Officer, W. A. Chase. At the election Mr. Hawkins was chosen to the mayoralty by one majority over S. S. Ainsworth.

DRIVING PARK ASSOCIATION.

West Union has a very successful organization of this name. It was organized May 2, 1874, and has a fine half-mile track, situated very conveniently to town.

BANKS.

The Fayette County Savings Bank, of West Union, is a very well organized institution, incorporated April 15, 1875. It has a capital of $50,000, and is officered as follows: S. B. Zeigler, President; Joseph Hobson, Vice President; and E. A. Whitney, Treasurer.

July 20, 1872, the present Fayette County National Bank was organized here with a capital of $50,000 and surplus of $25,000. The following named gentlemen are the present officers: Joseph Hobson, President; S. B. Zeigler, Vice President; and E. A. Whitney, Cashier. It is one of the best managed banking organizations in the Northwest.

RAILROAD.

In the year 1872 the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railway was completed, which has given an outlet, making West Union the principal market and shipping town of the county. Its substantial growth, so prudently begun by the highly intelligent and sagacious business men, it should feel proud of, is assured for the future, its business advantages, excellent society, and fine surroundings making it a very desirable location.

*[Some claim that William O'Rear built the first house in Fayette County, even prior to the Culver cabin, and that O'Rear settled this claim, built his house, broke quite a quantity of prairie land on what is now the Alexander place, Westfield township, in the year 1837. This statement is made by a very few early settlers, but a majority claim that Culver's was the first cabin erected. There are no facts by which to determine the precedence, so we give both to the public, but the historian is forced, after thorough investigation, to believe that at the Culver place the first cabin was erected, but that O'Rear was the first permanent settler.—EDITED.]

The officers for 1875 are: Mayor, Henry Rickel; Recorder, P. L. Hinkley; Trustees, J. S. Sampson, John Cook, John Owens, George H. Thomas and Milo McGlathery; Marshal, W. E. Welsh.

SHIPMENTS.

The table of shipments over the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railway, for 1874, are as follows: Wheat, 184,740 bushels; oats and barley, 12 800 bushels; live hogs, 2,970; dressed hogs, 28 car loads; wood, 32 car loads.

COUNTY SEAT CONTESTS.

By enactment of the Legislature the competing points named for the county seat were Centerville (at the geographical center of the county), Lightville (afterwards Lima, near Light's mill on Volga River), West Union, Auburn, and Claremont, (now Clearmont, and once called Norway.) This election was held the first Monday in April, 1851. Then the two points receiving the highest number of votes (West Union and Lightville) held an election on the first Monday in May, as the law required, and in this contest West Union was successful.

By legislative enactment, commissioners were appointed who located the county seat on the southwest quarter of section 17, township 93, range 8—Westfield Township, in the Spring of 1853. The law also prescribed that a vote should be taken on the question of removal to the chosen location, which was done in August, 1853, and resulted in favor of retaining it at West Union.

Another vote in April, 1860, ordered by the County Judge upon petition, resulted in favor of West Union.

At another election in October, 1867, between Fayette and West Union, the latter was again victorious.

In June, 1873, the county board was petitioned to submit the question. The names of a large number of petitioners were also upon a remonstrance; and for this reason a question of the legality of counting the names of the remonstrating signers upon the petition presented was raised, an injunction was served on the board restraining their counting these names as petitioners; this threw the matter into the courts and delayed the counting of the names until the time for submission had expired by statute, and West Union retains its position as the seat of justice of Fayette County.

SCHOOLS.

West Union has an excellent graded school in charge of a principal and four assistants. The building cost about $7,000. Latin, German, and higher mathematics are taught. In addition to this, S. S. Ainsworth, A.M., has a select school, where all the branches, including Latin, Greek, and higher mathematics are taught. He has a style of teaching peculiar to his own theory. The school is well patronized.

THE PRESS.

The West Union Gazette, the Republican paper of Fayette County, was first issued December 21, 1867, Shannon & Talmadge, publishers and proprietors. January 1, 1869, J. W. Shannon withdrew from the firm. C. H. Talmadge, the present proprietor, continuing its publication till August 19, 1870, when Judge J. W. Rogers was added to the firm. This partnership continued until November 8, 1872, when Mr. Talmadge again became sole publisher, and has continued in that position ever since. The Gazette has grown from a seven column sheet to a folio of nine columns to the page, and is printed on a power press. A first-class job office in connection. The circulation of the Gazette is about 1600 copies weekly, mostly in Fayette County.

The Fayette County Union was established January 1, 1866, by William McClintock & Henry Rickel, Democratic in politics, and in size a five column folio. April 1, same year, it was enlarged to a seven column sheet. January 1, 1867, it became the property of Wood & Lacy. January 1, 1868, they changed its form to a five column quarto, and in July following, Lacey sold out his interest, and the firm became McClintock, Rickel & Wood, and continued such until July, 1869, when Rickel sold out, and McClintock & Wood continued until 1872, when it became the property of McClintock & Son, till July, 1873, when it passed into the hands of Frank McClintock & Weaver, and December 1, 1873, Frank McClintock bought Weaver's interest, and has since continued it as a weekly Democratic journal. Last July it was enlarged to a six column quarto, given a new dress, and a new power press was added to the office, which has first-class facilities for book and job printing. Circulation of the Union, 900.

The West Union Weekly Times. This is an amateur journal printed weekly by L. T. Hobson, a lad fourteen years of age, at his own office. It is in the third year, and has a bona fide circulation of 160 copies. He has quite an assortment of job type, and conducts all departments in person with credit. His publication is as regular as a metropolitan journal.

EARLY NEWSPAPERS.

The Pioneer having been established as a Democratic organ, the strong Republican element here considered a public exponent of their faith necessary, and the Fayette Free Press made its first appearance, September 4, 1856, published by Badger & Myers; it expired in 1858. This was the first republican paper in the county.

A Democratic journal, The Western, was purchased by J. W. Rogers, and converted into a Republican newspaper, under the name of the National Era, in the Spring of 1861. He continued its publication until the time of his going into the army, when he sold to S. D. Helms, who afterwards sold it to Andy Felt, out of which he built the Public Record, which expired, and his administration was succeeded by present publications.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

The First Baptist Church of West Union, was organized October 23, 1852, at the house of Friend Dayton, under the direction of Elder Thomas Ritchie.

On the 24th of the same month the first public service was held by this denomination—the membership then numbering ten persons. Its name was the First Regular Baptist Church of West Union, and its first pastor was Job Arnold. In the year 1853-4, their first house of worship was erected and dedicated. It was a frame structure, 30x26 feet, and stood on Walnut Street. It is now used as a house of worship by the Lutheran Church. In the year 1861, the society filed articles of incorporation. In the Spring of 1867, it commenced the erection of a new house of worship on the corner of Vine and Main Streets; size, 47x58 feet; built of brick; cost, $5,700. It was dedicated January 6, 1870. The present pastor is Reverend J. C. Douglass.

The First Presbyterian Church of West Union, was organized on the 19th of June, 1867, by a committee appointed by the Presbytery of Dubuque, with a membership of fifteen. Present number of communicants, seventy-three. They have a church edifice erected at a cost of $5,000, including bell and church furniture. It was dedicated on the 21st of June, 1872. The first pastor is the present incumbent, Reverend J. W. Dickey. It is connected with the Presbytery of Dubuque, and Synod of Northern Iowa.

The Methodist circuit was organized at the meeting held at the big rock in 1850, and the first services held in that year; Reverend Mr. Greenup, pastor. Among the organizing members of this society were, Mrs. E. Cook, J. W. Foster and wife, H. S. Brunson and wife, Eli Hartsough and wife, and Eli Root. In 1853 they built a house of worship at a cost of $700. Reverend George Clifford was pastor when this station was organized.

The present church structure was erected in 1867, and dedicated January 8, 1868, at a cost of $8,000. The number of members is 165. The church is free from debt, and in a flourishing condition. Reverend J. R. Berry is the present pastor.

Catholic.—This society was organized and church built in 1869, under the direction of Reverend P. F. Harrison. The present pastor is Reverend M. O'Carrol, of Clermont. The cost of the church and lot was about $2,500. It is 28x50 feet. The amount of subscription to its construction was made up by Protestants as well as Catholics. The committee that had charge of the building were—H. Winkler, J. Owens, Edward Fooley, and William Cannon.

Scientific Society.—The West Union Scientific Association was organized in December, 1873.

First Officers.—President, C. R. Bent; Vice President, H. Warner; Secretary, Frank McClintock; Treasurer, S. S. Ainsworth. It is a successful organization.

FAYETTE.

This town is well situated on a plat of ground nearly a mile square; bounded on the north and west by well-timbered bluffs, on the southwest, south and east by a high ridge of bluffs which serve to protect and guard it from the severe winds that sometimes, particularly in winter, sweep over the more exposed regions of northern Iowa. It is well laid out, the streets following very nearly the cardinal points of the compass. Main, the principal business street of the town; runs north and south. In railway connections it is supplied by the Davenport & St. Paul Railroad, of which it is the present northern terminus. It is thus placed in direct communication with all eastern markets. The surrounding country is beautiful in landscape and surface, and productive in soil, as the large shipping statistics to eastern markets elsewhere appearing will show. The Volga River winds its way through the edge of the town, and is a stream affording good water-power at various points.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In 1846 a man named Mullican made a claim here. In 1849 Robert Alexander bought it of him and sold it to Samuel H. and James E. Robertson, and on the land owned by Samuel H. Robertson, the village was originally platted in 1856. In 1850 a settlement was made about a mile distant, at what was known as Westfield; and in 1851 it was platted by Robert Alexander. He built a saw mill in Westfield in 1850. The town did not thrive, however, by reason of its central location and expectations of the county seat. Fayette grew rapidly for the first few years. In the year 1856 H. B. Budlong was appointed post master at Fayette, but the name remained Westfield. Great jealousy existed between Westfield and Fayette, the former being envious of its strong rival, which gave rise to considerable strife for the post office. It was moved back and forth several times, until Mr. Derby was appointed at Fayette in 1857, when further contests were given over by Westfield. The first store started at Westfield was in 1851 by Newton Axtell, and the first post master there was H. N. Sutton.

The first store at Fayette was built by J. H. Maxon and J. A. Griffith in 1856. On the original plat, Samuel H. Robertson built the first frame house in 1852, yet one year earlier a frame house was built by Jas. E. Robertson, and is a part of the house in which he at present resides. The first hotel, the present Fayette House, was built by a stock company of $100 each; prior to this the house of Samuel H. Robertson was used as a hotel. In 1854 the first grist mill was built by Isaac and Leroy Templeton, at Westfield. The first newspaper at Fayette was the Fayette Journal, a republican sheet, with a Mr. Cook as editor. The first church edifice was built by the St. Paul's Episcopal Church in 1864, though there were church societies organized long before. The first Sabbath school had Jas. E. Robertson as superintendent. The first school house was built in 1852, and the first teacher was Louisa Newcomb. Among those that attended then as pupils who are yet living at or near Fayette, were Emaline Hulbert, nee Alexander, Caroline, Julia, and Eva Robertson, and James Osborne.

INDIAN SCARE.

In the year 1847, the people of this, then sparsely settled country, were greatly excited and alarmed by the murder of an Indian trader named Teegardner. Teegardner, a rather desperate character, had a quantity of whisky which the Indians wished to use too freely and he refused; a quarrel ensued in which he was killed, and his body and building destroyed by fire. The intelligence of this affray was conveyed to a neighbor by his daughter, about ten years of age, who escaped during the disturbance. The settlers feared a general massacre, but no further demonstrations were made, and the affair was soon forgotten. It happened about a mile and a half from Fayette.

UPPER IOWA UNIVERSITY.

The educational wants of the community are supplied by the well conducted institution above named. The University building is handsomely located on prominent ground above the town; and is an imposing stone edifice three stories high, and cost, when material and labor were much cheaper than now, $32,000. It is said that the institution was first suggested by Mrs. Robert Alexander, and the suggestion finding much favor with Robert Alexander, her husband, he subscribed land to the value of $5,000. Samuel H. Robertson subscribed a similar amount, and James E. Robertson about $1,500. Through the indefatigable efforts of Reverend L. S. Ashbaugh, and Reverend H. S. Bronson, the enterprise was put in motion. The contract for building was let in 1855, and completed in 1856. At the time of organization, 1855, Reverend H. S. Bronson was President of the Board of Trustees; H. W. Reed, Secretary; and James E. Robertson, Treasurer. It was placed under the jurisdiction and patronage of the Upper Iowa Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was originally a seminary, but in the Fall of 1857, changed to a university. It is nearly out of debt, and very popular as an educational institution both for its cheapness and thoroughness in tuition and training.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Fayette News is the only paper here. It came into the possession of the present proprietors, Burch & Scobey, August 5, 1874, and was first issued by them as an eight column sheet. September 23, following, it was enlarged to a nine column journal, and so continued. It is Republican in politics, has a circulation of 500 copies.

CHURCHES.

The first religious organization formed here was by the Methodists at the house of James E. Robertson, in December, 1849, under the influence of Reverend John Hindman. The membership numbered but five souls. Meetings were held at Mr. Robertson's house, and at the school house till the university was completed, since which time they have been held in the chapel. The first pastor was Reverend John Hindman, the present is Reverend S. W. Ingham.

The first Congregational Church of Fayette was organized December 1, 1855, at the house of N. N. Sykes, with a membership of six persons. Services were held for a time at the place of organization, and afterwards at the stone school house, both outside of Fayette, and for the first time in the village at the old log school house in 1856. October 9, 1870, their present church building was dedicated. It cost $2,500. Present membership fifty-nine. First pastor, Reverend S. D. Helms. Present pastor, Reverend W. S. Potwin.

The Episcopalian Society was organized, April 9, 1864, under the name of St. Paul's Parish. Their present building was completed in 1870, at a cost of about $2,500. The bell was a present from Jay Cooke, of Philadelphia. First rector, Reverend J. Rambo. Catholic.—The Catholics have an organization but no church structure in town, but are accommodated about four miles out.

Wheat, 79,900; oats, 41,480; barley, 2,800; live hogs, 1,155; dressed hogs, 5 car loads; shelled corn, 10,080; sheep, 2,520; other live stock, 17 car loads.

INCORPORATION.

Under general law Fayette was incorporated as a town in 1874, and elected the following officers: Mayor, Charles Hoyt; Recorder, C. W. Sperry.

Board of Trustees.—G. F. Lyman, E. R. W. Emmons, Elijah E. Gregory, A. Fussel, and R. Gaynor. H. Barnes appointed Marshal.

Officers for 1875.—Mayor, Charles Hoyt; Recorder, C. W. Sperry; Marshal, O. Crisly.

Board of Trustees.—G. F. Lyman J. E. Robertson, C. E. Hulbert, R. Hunt, W. A. Hoyt.

Fayette has a private banking establishment, conducted by Sperry & Davis. It was established in 1872, by D. C. and C. W. Sperry. In 1873, Mr. D. C. Sperry died, but the business was continued by C. W. Sperry, until January, 1875, when he sold a one-half interest to his present partner.

CLERMONT.

This flourishing village is well situated in the township of same name, on the Turkey River, and on the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railway. Where, twenty-eight years ago, stood the Indian encampment, stalked the timid deer, or skulked the cowardly wolf, and where night brought rest to our dusky cousins, and peace to all, with no sound to disturb their happy and contented possessions, the beautiful Village of Clermont now stands prosperous and thrifty, surrounded by the same hills that watch over this spot like mighty sentinels, to guard and protect it.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first to settle here was Andrew Moats, in the Spring of 1849. Prior to this Charles Delaplaine had made a claim here, which John Thompson, through the agency of E. D. Carleton, purchased, and Andrew Moats held possession for him until the Indians were removed, when Thompson took possession. The log shanty in which the original claimant lived was situated between where the Brick City Mill now stands and the mouth of Dibble Creek.

The first house built was by E. D. Carleton and Charles Sawyer, and stood about twenty rods east of the Brick City Mill. In the Spring of 1849, John Hendershot came and found only Andrew Moats. When the land came into market John Thompson secured large tracts on both sides of Turkey River, laid out the town, which was originally called Norway. The first frame building was erected by Frank Wood, and is yet standing and occupied by Mrs. Nancy Williams. The first brick made was by Ezra Dibble. In 1850, Edwin Stedman and wife were added to the settlement. In 1851, the contract was let for building a dam and erection of a saw mill. The contractors were Carleton & Sawyer. In this year the following constituted the families in what is now the Village of Clermont: Charles Sawyer, E. D. Carleton, Edwin Stedman, John Hendershot, Andrew Martin, and J. B. Huff.

In this year, 1851, the first election was held. The polls were opened punctually at 9 o'clock A. M., and closed as promptly at 6 P. M. Election at the house of Charles Sawyer, whose coffee-pot was used as a ballot-box. It was set up on a shelf, and the nine worthies who that day exercised the greatest right of American citizenship, sported outside at a game of ball. At the election Charles Sawyer was chosen Town Clerk, and Edwin Stedman and J. B. Huff, Justices of the Peace. The first school in this town, and probably the first in the county, was taught by Mrs. Edwin Stedman, beginning October 15, 1850, in a building since used as a blacksmith shop, and lasting twelve weeks. She received twelve dollars for her services.

In 1853, the first hotel was commenced by H. S. Brunson. It has since been enlarged and is at present a part of the Clermont House. In this year G. A. Appelman and family arrived.

In 1854, Thompson & Carleton broke ground and commenced the construction of the Brick City Mill. In the same year the same firm opened the old white store, which afterward passed into the hands of Stowe & Stedman. This year there were sixteen voters in the township. In 1855, merchandising was carried on by Thompson & Carleton and blacksmithing by William Davis. In addition to this Dibble's brick yard was in operation, which comprised the business of the town. In 1856 the first grist was ground at the Brick City Mill. It started with three run of stone and now has five. In 1859, the town commenced a substantial growth. Many brick buildings were commenced and business increased. The brick block and Appelman's Hall were commenced in 1858, and completed in 1860. In this last named year the chief event was the attempt of the sub-contracting parties in the construction of the McGregor, St. Peter and Missouri River Railway, to extort from the President of the Company, John Thompson, the amounts due them for services performed in the construction of parts of the road which had been left unsettled by the absconding of the Treasurer of the Company. They came from McGregor in force to Clermont, and threatened to undermine the mill if they were not promptly paid. Mr. Thompson was away from home, but the citizens turned out and resisted them, and without bloodshed they quit the town. They afterward got possession of Mr. Thompson, and held him in duress until he settled their entire claims.

In 1858, the present house of worship of the Presbyterian Church was commenced, and in 1859 completed. The first pastor was Charles R. French. At present it is supplied by Reverend J. W. Dickey, of West Union, as pastor.

The Catholic Church was built in 1859. First rector, Father Nagle; present, Father Martin Carrol.

The Methodists made an organization at an early day under the influence of Reverend John Littlejohn and others. In 1870 they commenced; and in 1874 completed the construction of their present edifice. Their pastor at present is Reverend J. A. Ward.

The Episcopalians have a very fine church structure which has been built at a cost of about $8,000. The principal part of the building fund was contributed by Mrs. Frances Jones Vinton, of Providence, Rhode Island, and Jay Cooke. Reverend Jacob Rambo was the first rector, and the last Reverend Smith.

The principal manufacturing interests of the town are the manufacture of flour and brick. The Brick City Mills turn out about 150 barrels every twenty-four hours. Excellent brick clay in any desired quantity can be found adjacent to the village, and makes a quality of brick as fine, if not superior, to the famous Milwaukee brick. Its general use in building up the town has given rise to the name, "The Brick City," by which Clermont is generally known.

For 1874, the shipments were as follows: Wheat, 34,340 bushels; brick, 19 carloads; flour, 144 carloads; live stock, 34 carloads.

THE PRESS OF CLERMONT.

In the Fall of 1865, the Clermont Leader was established, conducted about a year by Judge Edmonds, and sold out to parties as West Union.

In April, 1870, D. G. Goodrich started a monthly journal called the People's Paper. In April, 1871, it issued 6,000 copies as a weekly. In January, 1872, its actual circulation was 1,200 copies, and was in size an eight column sheet, both sides printed at the home office. Mr. Goodrich added a ten column Potter power press, enlarged the paper to a nine column sheet, and, in the Fall of 1872, sold a one-half interest to W. M. Newell. The firm continued as Goodrich & Newell till June 1, 1873, when it was changed to a stock company—The Clermont Printing Company—W. M. Newell, President; William Larabee, Treasurer; and D. G. Goodrich, Editor. January 1, 1875, it had a circulation of 1,763 copies. Terms, $2 per year. It has a complete book and job printing office.

OTHER VILLAGES.

AUBURN.—This is one of the oldest settlements of the county. At an early day it was a very important point, most prominent in 1856 of any in the county. In its early settlement it had every opportunity to outstrip the present populous City of West Union from which it is situated northwest six miles distant. Here the first manufacturing in the county was done. The first flour mill was built here, and we are informed that for a time people came from West Union to trade. At present it has a very fair retailing business, and numbers a population about 350.

ELGIN.—This village, in Pleasant Valley Township, was settled at a very early day. It is situated on the Turkey River, which affords it very good water power for milling and manufacturing purposes. It is on the line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railway. It is surrounded by a very good farming country and does a good retail business, and considerable in manufacturing. It has a population of about 300.

BRUSH CREEK.—This is a very good business town of about 500 inhabitants, situated in Fairfield Township. It is surrounded by a very rich and productive agricultural country. It has a weekly newspaper which was established in April, 1874. It is edited by O. H. Osborn. The town is growing well and promises a continued prosperity.

ELDORADO.—This is a village situated on the Turkey River in Dover Township. It has a fair representation of business interests, and being at the confluence of the north and south forks of the Turkey River could be made of importance as a manufacturing point. The population is about 300.

MAYNARD.—This is a thriving village which sprung up on the building of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railway. It is a village of nearly 300 inhabitants and situated in Harlan Township.

OELWEIN.—Like Maynard this town sprung up on the building of the railroad. It has made rapid progress in business and is a flourishing village of some 350 inhabitants.

Bethel, Wilson's Grove, Wadena, Otsego, Waucoma, Windsor, Oran, Lima, Mill, Putnam, Scott Center, Seaton, Leo, Illyria, Old Mission, Richfield, Eden, and Brush Creek are post offices.

HAMILTON COUNTY.

This county was originally a part of Webster County, but the Legislature of 1856-7 erected it into a separate county, with Webster City as its county seat.

The county has thirteen townships; one called Lincoln was taken from east part of Lyon, by the supervisors, in 1875. Like most Iowa counties, the greater part consists of high rolling prairie, with a small amount of timber along the streams. The Boone River flows along the western boundary from north to south, and has numerous mill sites. In various parts of the county, on the prairie lands, are found spring-ponds, which really deserve the name of lakes. They abound in fish, and at times are visited by flocks of wild fowl.

Owing to convenience of water and excellent quality of pasturage, it has few equals as a stock region. The soil of the high prairies is of great fertility, and adapted to raising both corn and wheat. Both limestone and building stone are quite common in various parts of the county, and very accessible. The limestone quarry of Mr. Briggs, three miles from Webster City, is especially noticeable.

POPULATION.

The reports made of the census of 1875 show an increase of about twelve thousand acres of cultivated land during the year. Of course this implies a large amount of new fencing and other improvements accompanying this increased tillage. Larger and improved residences meet the eye in every direction, in the midst of highly cultivated fields, while large herds of cattle graze on the beautiful prairie. Most of the people are from the Eastern and Middle States, especially along the northern half of the county. In the southeast part are many families of Swedes and Norwegians, with fine improved farms.

EARLY HISTORY.

Wilson Brewer, and Nathan and William Stanley were the first settlers in the present limits of the county. Brewer came in November, 1850, and located near where Webster City now is, on forty acres, to which was added another forty, and in connection with William Frake laid out the village of Newcastle; but sold out, in 1856, to the Willson brothers, who have since done much to improve the city.

In 1851 Peter Lyon, Isaac Hook, Jacob Crooks, S. Bell and others, settled along the Boone River.

In September, 1852, E. Russell settled on the same river, and since that date the county has rapidly settled up in all parts.

The first settlers were obliged to go to Des Moines for all supplies, and the nearest mill was ten miles north of that city. No Indians were seen by the settlers until some six years after the first settlement, and no depredations were ever committed by them.

The first mill was built on the Boone River, on section thirty-one, near Homer. The two burrs were brought on a wagon from Indiana in the year 1852. This mill was soon after washed out by high water. The next was a saw and grist mill combined, built by Gross Close in 1852, and afterwards known as the Fisher mills. It was on section fifteen, on Boone River. The third mill erected was a flouring mill, built by Eckerson. It is still standing, and known as the Atherton mill. There are now in the county seven grist and eight saw mills.

John D. Maxwell was the first county judge; and Isaiah Doane, Esq., served for six years, and until the office was abolished.

Charles Leonard was the first sheriff. These first officers were elected at a special election held in April, 1857.

Cyrus Smith was the first treasurer and recorder of the county, as well as the first post master of Webster City. He is now a prominent merchant of that city. He opened the first store there in 1855.

The first white person born in the county, as at present organized, was Leander Brewer, in November, 1851.

The first marriage was that of Mr. John Drought, a soldier from Fort Dodge, to Miss L. Stanley, in 1852.

The first death is supposed to be that of William Stanley, one of the first settlers, who died in 1852, leaving a widow and children.

The first school was taught in a log house three miles north of Webster City, in 1854, by John Hancock; and the next year Newton Hathaway taught the Webster City school, in the frame building, 20x30, since moved, and now used as a dwelling.

The first minister, Reverend Mr. Skinner, came from Des Moines, and preached in the private house of W. C. Wilson once in two weeks, beginning in June, 1855.

The first regular physician was Doctor H. Corbin, who located at Homer; and here, also, was opened the first law office, by Granville Bickley, now of Georgetown, Colorado.

A County Agricultural Society was organized in 1859, with W. W. Brooke, Esq., as President, and has been in operation ever since. The society own their grounds (of ten acres), near Webster City, which are enclosed and fitted up.

SCHOOLS.

There is hardly a settlement in the county that does not support a good school for at least a part of the year. In 1874 there were eighty schools taught in the county; 2,639 children drew public money. The school buildings were valued at $40,000, and are situated as follows: Boone, nine; Blairsburg, seven; Cass, seven; Clear Lake, four; Fremont, seven; Ellsworth, three; Hamilton, seven; Lyons, five; Marion, eight; Rosegrove, four; Scott, four; Webster, six; Homer Village, one, and Webster City, four. The cost of maintaining these schools was $16,026. An average of four new school houses are erected each year.

COURT HOUSE.

A new and beautiful court house is being erected at Webster City. It is of handsome design, and will be the finest in northwestern Iowa, costing some $35,000. The county was fortunate enough to have what is known as swamp lands, from the sale of which the building was constructed and no tax levied, or debt incurred. It will thus be noticed that the county is in excellent financial condition.

CHARLES WICKWARE, County Auditor.	A. A. WICKS, Clerk of the Courts.
JOHN ECKSTEIN, Treasurer.	J. V. KEARNS, Recorder.
L. BICKFORD, Sheriff.	C. A. HOWD, Superintendent of Schools.
M. L. TRACY, County Surveyor.	F. J. MCCONNELL, Coroner.

J. A. COOPER, Ellsworth Township; H. CORBIN, Chairman, Webster Township; J. W. LEE, Cass Township.

COAL.

One of the most important resources of Hamilton county is the vast supply of coal within its borders. In many places below Webster City, on the Boone River, it is found cropping out of the banks in layers, or veins, from one to four feet thick. Not much attention has, as yet, been given to these coal beds, nor will they be much developed until a railroad makes an outlet for the supply, and capitalists are encouraged to develop the mines. So far as worked, the conclusion is arrived at that the coal is fully equal to the average of western coal, and comparatively free from impurities.

The following extract, referring to the quantity and quality of coal found along the banks of Boone River, in Hamilton County, is taken from the report for the year 1868 of the State Geologist, Charles A. White, M.D. Speaking of his investigation of the Boone River coal region, he says: "Going down Boone River, the first exposure seen was on the right bank in the hill-side about four miles from town (Webster City.) The coal is of good quality, has been worked to a considerable extent, and the bed is said to be four feet thick, which no reason was seen to doubt. Between this point and Sternburg's mill, which is four miles from town, the same bed of bituminous coal again appears, as does a bed of cannel coal two feet in thickness, and of fair quality. The latter bed lies several feet beneath the former, and is of course no way connected with it. Near Sternburg's mill, and also at various points, for a number of miles below the mill, the coal makes its appearance in the banks where they are rendered steep by the washing of the river. These beds are continuous in broad, continuous layers beneath the surface, over a large area, and have become exposed to view, in places, by the deepening of the river valley by its own stream. They may doubtless be reached, with comparatively little labor, from the gentler slopes of the river valley; and when the demand will warrant it, as it probably will in the future, they may be mined by sluiking shafts to them from the higher lands away from the river."

WEBSTER CITY.

This is the county seat; situated on the Boone River, in the northwestern part of the county. It is about 175 miles from the Mississippi River, and about twenty-four hours' ride from Chicago by the Illinois Central, which passes through the northern part of the county. In many respects the city is well located, and surrounded by groves of timber, which afford protection from the piercing prairie winds. The population is estimated at 1,800, and of a quiet, industrious class. The buildings erected of late years are of a superior class of both wood and brick. Among the many private residences we may especially mention those of K. Young, Esq., (banker), L. Cary (merchant), Capt. G. H. Soules, L. L. Estes, and T. E. McCracken, editor of the Freeman.

There are several fine brick blocks, among them is the post office block, lately completed. It was erected by a stock company, and is a very substantial brick edifice. There are six churches. The Methodist, erected in 1866, is of brick, and cost some $5,000. The Congregational is a very handsome wooden building, constructed in 1869. The Catholics have a good brick church. The others are Baptist, Dutch Reformed and Universalist. The latter has just been erected, and is a neat wooden structure, with tall spire, and of modern style. The architect was John Hill, of Webster City.

There are two banking houses. Of these the First National was organized in October, 1871, with a capital stock of $50,000. They own a substantial brick building, fitted up with vaults and other banking conveniences. K. Young, Esq., is President, and B. S. Mason, Cashier.

The Hamilton County Bank was organized in 1866, and is the oldest bank west of Iowa Falls, except one at Fort Dodge. It is a private banking institution, conducted on the partnership plan, with B. F. Miller, Esq., Manager.

There is a large public school building built of brick, conveniently arranged, and divided into three departments. There are also three small wooden school buildings, situated for the convenience of the primary departments.

There are two foundries and machine shops, one brewery, three large elevators, three or four hotels, and the usual quota of merchants and dealers in various kinds of goods.

For beauty of scenery Webster City can not be surpassed. The building of contemplated railroads, reaching the coal mines near the city, will add largely to the business of the city and rapidly increase its population and importance.

NEWSPAPERS.

The first newspaper of the county was established here in June, 1857, by Charles Aldrich, and called the Hamilton Freeman. The paper is now managed by T. E. McCracken, editor and proprietor, and is one of the most readable papers in that section of the state. It is all printed at home.

The Webster City Argus has just completed its first year. It has a very large advertising patronage, and also extensive home news items, which go far towards making the local newspaper valuable. It is independent in its position, and ably managed by Messrs. Edwards & Bandy as editors and proprietors.

L. L. Estes, Esq., was the first mayor of the city.

BLAIRSBURG.—This village, on the line of the Illinois Central Railroad, was settled in 1869 by Robert Tinling. It is about eight miles east of Webster City. It was laid out in the Fall of 1869 by John I. Blair, of New York, one of the great railroad men. The village lots are mainly owned by the railroad company. This village is now beginning to grow and substantial improvements are being made. The country around is a level prairie, thinly settled, but is beautiful and valuable for farming purposes. This village and Williams are both in Blairsburg Township, and the population of the township, by census of 1875, is 453.

WILLIAMS.—This place was settled by Peter Laforge, who came there in 1868, but the town was laid out by John I. Blair the next year. It is on the Illinois Central Railroad three miles from the eastern line of the county. Its growth has been very slow until the last year or two, at the present time a large number of buildings are being erected. Five years ago the number of registered voters was thirty-four, and in 1875 it was only ninety-one. The Williams Press was established at this place in 1875 by J. A. Matthews, and is calling attention of people to the advantages of that locality as a place of residence.

HOMER.—Homer is in the southwestern part of the county, ten miles from Webster City, and has a population of 250. There are several stores and other business houses. It was formerly the county seat—at the time Hamilton was a part of Webster County. It is on the prairie, three miles east of the Des Moines River and the same distance from the Boone River. The removal of the county seat naturally detracted from the amount of business done at that point, and the building of the railroad in the north part of the county diminished it still more. There is a good school house and graded school.

Hook's Point is where Isaac Hook opened the first store in the county in 1852. Lakin's Grove, Poland's Grove, Rose Grove, Saratoga, and Randall are post offices, accommodating different sections of the county.

WORTH COUNTY.

GEOGRAPHY.

Worth is fifth from the Mississippi River in the northern tier of counties; area, twelve congressional townships, viz.: ninety-eight, ninety-nine and one hundred of ranges nineteen, twenty, twenty-one and twenty-two. Its surface is gently undulating in the eastern portion, more rolling further west, and in the southwest somewhat "knobby." Excellent natural drainage is afforded by the Shellrock and its tributaries, and other minor tributaries of the Cedar River, whose general trend is southeast.

GEOLOGY.

Rock is exposed only in the beds of Lime Creek and the Shellrock, and in one or two places near the water's edge. West of a line passing through Northwood and Rhodes' Mills it has not been discovered at all. What has been discovered is an impure limestone, belonging to the Hamilton group of the Devonian system. The drift deposit overlying this basis rapidly increases in depth from southeast to northwest, as the country rises from the valley of the Cedar, where the drift is shallow, to the elevated lake plateau of Northern Iowa and Southern Minnesota, where it reaches an unknown depth.

NATURAL RESOURCES.

The above described characteristics secure to this county a soil very fertile and durable, equally well adapted to grain and grass. Few counties in the state possess a soil so productive and so well adapted both to grain growing and stock raising. Its future wealth and importance is therefore certain. Beautiful prairie lands can now be had for prices ranging from five to twelve dollars per acre, but in a very few years they will double in value.

Timber is found along the Shellrock, and in groves distributed over the western and northwestern portion of the county. The total area of timber land is variously estimated at from 6,000 to 10,000 acres. Peat abounds in the western portion, but has not been utilized.

Abundant water power is afforded by the Shellrock, which has a rapid current of considerable volume, affording frequent mill sites. Lime Creek also affords some water power, upon which is built a good grist and saw mill.

Stone suitable for building purposes is found in several places. Materials for making brick are abundant. Lumber for building and fencing is now generally imported by rail.

STAPLES.

The staple productions of the county are wheat, oats, corn and hay. Wheat is the principal export. The export of beef cattle is increasing in importance, and stock raising is becoming more general as the farmers acquire the means to stock their farms. There were in 1874 33,157 acres of land in cultivation, which produced 410,487 bushels of wheat, 161,557 of oats, and 122,291 of corn, besides other crops.

DEVELOPMENT.

The early development of Worth County was hindered by several circumstances. The lands were mostly bought up by speculators in advance of immigration. Markets were distant and barely accessible. The advantages of railroad communication were at first thrown entirely in favor of adjoining counties. These disadvantages have one by one passed away, and the county is now being settled and improved steadily and rapidly. As shown by the census returns, the number of inhabitants was: in 1860, 756; in 1865, 1,140; in 1870, 3,892; and in the beginning of the present year (1875), 4,908.

RAILROADS.

The county has twenty-five miles of railway. The Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway passes eleven miles through the southeast corner. It was completed in 1870. The Central of Iowa was built in 1871 to Northwood, its present terminus. The Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railway have a track up the Shellrock as far as Plymouth, and propose to push on as rapidly as possible to Minneapolis, via Northwood, making the latter a division station.

UNITED STATES SURVEY, ETC.

The survey was made during the Summer of 1853, except in the three western townships. Two of these were surveyed the following year, and the last one—100. 22—not until 1856. Some of the lands were in market at Fort Des Moines, and afterwards at Decorah, in 1854-5-6, but found few purchasers. In 1857 the unsold lands of all but the three western townships were offered in market at Osage, and found ready takers in the speculators who were then wild for land anywhere. This sent immigration for a while mostly to the western townships, which were not brought into market until 1858.

ORGANIZATION.

Worth was attached successively to Chickasaw, Floyd, Mitchell and Cerro Gordo Counties, by the Legislature, prior to its organization. By an order dated September 1, 1857, from Arad Hitchcock, County Judge of Mitchell, to which it was then attached, Worth County was divided into two civil townships, Bristol comprising all its territory west of the center of range twenty-one, and Northwood consisting of the remainder. The order designated the house of Johnson & Turnure as the voting place for Bristol, with Frank Wiggins, Joseph L. Loveland and James Keeler as judges of election, and the house of B. H. Bedett as the voting place for Northwood, with Charles Wardall, David H. Phelps and H. Crandall as judges, and directed the election of county and township officers at the ensuing general election, October 13. At this election one hundred and eighty-six votes were polled, one hundred and twelve at Bristol and seventy-four at Northwood. Choice was made of Doctor James Keeler as County Judge; Chauncey S. Lane, Treasurer and Recorder; Benjamin K. Walker, Clerk of District Court; Stanley Wadsworth, School Fund Commissioner; Amos Bently, Prosecuting Attorney; Lorin Turnure, Sheriff; Edward Cole, Surveyor; W. C. Caswell, Coroner. Alonzo Frink and Martin Bentley were chosen Justices of the Peace of Bristol, and Charles Wardall and Warren Barbour of Northwood Township. Some informality delayed the organization until a legalizing act was passed by the Legislature the following Winter; it was completed, and the officers entered upon their duties during the first week of May, 1858.

The several townships were organized as follows: Bristol and Northwood in 1857; Hartland, 1859; Fertile and Silver Lake, 1861; Brookfield and Union, 1864; Deer Creek and Danville, 1872; Kensett, 1873.

COUNTY SEAT.

Bristol and Northwood were rivals for the county seat from the beginning. The influx of immigration in 1857 gave Bristol the advantage in numbers; but being near the western border, it desired to release a part of Worth on the east to Mitchell, and get a part of Winnebago in return. The Legislature, during the session of 1858, consented to the change of boundary; but, through the influence of a large land proprietor otherwise disposed, the Governor quietly pocketed the bill. Soon after, Judge Murdock, of the tenth district, appointed O. P. Harwood, of Mitchell, Van Patten, of Cerro Gordo, and George Finney, of Winnebago, commissioners, who, on the 7th of May, 1858, located the county seat at Bristol. Northwood several times petitioned to have the question of re-location submitted to a vote, but did not succeed until 1863, when the county seat was removed to Northwood, by a vote of one hundred and fifteen to forty. Thus ended the county seat struggle.

While at Bristol, the offices were kept first in a log hut, and afterwards in the upper room of a small frame building used as a store. At Northwood a small frame building was erected for their accommodation, motives of economy dictating the postponement of the erection of an expensive building until some future time.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement in the county was an off-shoot of the Scandinavian colony led into Mitchell County by Rev. C. L. Clausen in the Spring of 1855. About the 18th of June Gulbrand Olsen and three others from this company pushed out as far as the Shellrock. Olsen took up 160 acres, embracing a part of the present site of Northwood and the water power adjoining. His companions located in the vicinity, but soon returned to the principal colony, leaving him and his family without a neighbor nearer than fifteen miles. In the Spring of 1854 he was reinforced by four countrymen, Simon Rustad, Christian Ammundsen, Nelson, and Ole Lee, and also by three brothers by the name of Hart, who purchased the timber claim near the state line, afterward known as Phelps' Grove, four miles above Northwood, of one of Gulbrand's first company. They remained only until the following Spring (1855), when they sold to David H. Phelps. He was accompanied by Tolly McWithy, and Hiram Bilton and his two sons, with whom he divided the timber. Nelson died in the Fall of 1854, but his widow remained upon the claim. In the Winter of 1854 William Burgert, a trapper, settled near Phelps Grove. In 1855 the Norwegian settlement was increased by the arrival of M. Paulsen, John S. Mark, Aslak Lee, Elling Ellingsen, Ole and Hans Aslakson, S. Syversen, Ole Hansen, H. Halvorsen, Abraham Christophersen and G. Jorgensen, and may be said to have passed its pioneer days. It received a considerable accession again in the Spring of 1856. May 19, 1855, Charles Johnson made the first claim in the settlement, afterward known as Bristol, near Rice Lake, fifteen miles west of Northwood, and, during the following Fall, Chauncey Lane, Ben Bloker and John M. Bennett (the latter with family) located at the east end of the lake, where they were joined by Haskell Skinner and his family. The following Spring they removed about a mile distant to the present site of Bristol. Here, in the Spring of 1856, they were joined by Otis Greeley and two men by the name of Tyler, with their families, and Henry Greeley. In July, Dr. James Keeler came and located, and in September brought his family from Janesville, Iowa, accompanied by Millard and Frink, with their families. J. S. Loveland, Sperrin, Fuller and Isaac Cummings came in August, or thereabouts, and McPherson in October. Two ministers, named Sirobridge and Forbes, came about the same time. July 10th, 1856, Samuel Egbert moved in with his family, and took up a claim on what is now a part of Northwood, where he still resides. During the same season there settled in the vicinity of Northwood and Phelps' Grove, J. W. Thompson, John Bickell, W. H. Pritchard, Thomas Lowthin, N. W. Emory, William Senior, Frank Coop, Jerry Epworth, John Elliott, Benjamin Eyr, I. M. Bolton, Arthur T. Bolton and G. H. Atwood.

In 1855 Ed. Wright located in Glen Mary, but, the following Spring, two brothers, Martin and Amos Bently, took his place at Glen Mary, while Wright, with his brother Samuel, and two others named Crane and Crandall, located at Wright's Grove. Owing to trouble between them and the Norwegian settlement, a club was formed called the Settlers' Club, William Burgert, President; Samuel Egbert, Secretary; whose rules bound them to protect each other in occupying 320 acres each. Late in the Fall the settlement at Elk Creek was commenced by Rugg, Stevens and Platt, and the Silver Lake Settlement was commenced the same year by Lars Larsen and G. K. Hundeby.

The succeeding Winter (1856-7) is known as the hard winter by the pioneers. The snow fell to an uncommon depth, and was, much of the time, impassible to teams. Provisions were hauled on hand-sleds from Osage and other points. The log huts, many of them without floors, admitted the snow in drifts. Deaths by freezing were quite common.

FIRST THINGS.

The first birth in the county was that of a son to Gulbrand Olsen, November 23, 1853. The first marriage was that of William Burgert and the widow Nelson, in the Spring of 1856. The first road laid out was from Bristol to Northwood, in September, 1857. The first court in the county was held September 27, 1859, by John Porter, Judge of the Eleventh District, B. K. Walker, Clerk, and Lorin Turnure, Sheriff. The first mail route to this county was established July 1, 1858, from Howard Center to Bristol, via Osage; in the Fall it was changed so as to run via St. Ansgar and Northwood.

NORTHWOOD.

Northwood is beautifully located on the high, dry bank of the Shellrock. It is regularly laid out, with wide, handsome streets. It was surveyed and platted in November, 1857, and September, 1858, by Charles Wardall, Lemuel Dwelle and Joel Dayton. Additions have since been made by L. & A. J. Dwelle, Egbert & Jones, and A. M. Woodward, and the plat now comprises about 320 acres. Messrs. L. & A. J. Dwelle are the principal proprietors. Since the advent of the railroad Northwood has become a town of considerable importance as the only advantageous market and trading point for a large section of country, and has every promise of a permanent and steady growth.

EARLY HISTORY.

In the Spring of 1857 the land was owned by Gulbrand Olsen, Samuel Egbert and Kittel Olsen. Early that Spring Charles Wardall purchased Gulbrand Olsen's property, and, a little later, Dr. D. D. Franklin purchased that of Kittel Olsen. During the Spring the place was visited by Lemuel Dwelle and B. H. Beckett, both of whom invested and became permanent residents. Others soon followed.

The first frame building in Northwood was erected during the Summer by S. H. Franklin. B. H. Beckett opened a store in this building on the 9th of September, with goods hauled by team from McGregor, 130 miles distant. His was the only store here until 1864, when a second one was opened by Nelson, Peterson & Klove. In the Fall of 1857 Northwood was made a post office, with Dr. Franklin as post master. In the Summer of 1858 Charles Wardall constructed a dam and saw mill. In 1859 S. H. and Asa Franklin erected a hotel building, which was opened for custom in the Fall by John Becker. During this season the first school in Northwood was taught by Catherine Hostetter, in a room over Beckett's store. In 1860 a small frame school house was built. In 1861 Lemuel and A. J. Dwelle bought Wardall's mill property, and proceeded to erect a substantial grist mill, furnished with four run of stone. For some years grists were brought to them from a distance of a hundred miles. In 1863 the acquisition of a county seat gave the growth and trade of the town considerable impetus, which was greatly enhanced by the railroad in 1871, since which time its prosperity has steadily increased.

SCHOOLS.

Northwood was made an Independent School District in 1873, at the March election, choosing as School Board, A. C. Walker, President; Thomas Wardall, Treasurer; H. V. Dwelle, B. H. Beckett and David Abbey, Directors. These gentlemen superintended the erection of the finest building in Northwood, the Graded School House, during the Summer and Fall following. It is a tasty, substantial, commodious brick building, of two high stories and basement, well finished and furnished, and suitably adapted for enlargement by the addition of a large wing whenever necessary. Its cost was about $5,000, much less than the usual cost of buildings of this class of like proportions.

INCORPORATION.

Northwood has recently become an incorporated town of the second class, and July 3d, 1875, the first Town Council was elected, as follows: Mayor, O. V. Eckert; Recorder, E. W. Smith; Trustees, Lemuel Dwelle, Henry Peterson, C. A. Knapp, E. L. Johnson, J. B. Thomson.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Northwood Pioneer was established by F. D. Swick, who issued the first number the 24th of October, 1869. It was first published as a six-column folio, enlarged to seven columns in 1870, and to a five-column quarto in 1873, which is its present form; size, 30x44. A. T. McCarger, the present editor and proprietor, purchased the office of Mr. Swick in March, 1874. It is a good local paper, Republican in politics; circulation 500 copies; published Thursdays.

The Sentinel was started June 1, 1875, by Mr. Swick, in connection with Dar Weed. Published Tuesdays, by Swick & Weed. Form and size same as the Pioneer. Independent in politics. Both newspapers have fair job offices.

PRESENT BUSINESS.

Of stores, there are three general merchandise, two hardware, two drugs, one grocery, one furniture; one harness shop, two millinery, one jewelry and watchmaking shop, and six blacksmith and wagon shops. The professions are represented by two law firms and three physicians. Other business: One bank, two lumber merchants, two machinery firms, five real estate dealers, two hotels, one livery, and three grain dealers.

CHURCHES.

Northwood has two active church organizations, Methodist and Presbyterian. The Presbyterians have a good house of worship, and the Methodists are erecting a neat and elegant church edifice.

BRISTOL

Is situated twelve and one-half miles west, and two miles south of Northwood, within one and one-half miles of the west line of the county, on high dry prairie, near the head of Elk Creek. It was platted in the Spring of 1857, before Worth County was organized, by Chauncey S. Lane and Joseph S. Loveland, and the plat was filed for record with the Recorder of Mitchell County, May 4, 1857. Its main hopes were built upon the prospects of the county seat (as it was then in the largest settlement of the county), which its projectors sought and almost succeeded in obtaining permanently by a re-adjustment of county boundaries as elsewhere mentioned.

Goods were first brought here to sell as early as the Winter of 1856-'57, and soon afterwards a store was opened by C. S. Lane.

Doctor James Keeler was appointed post master October 30, 1857, with directions to get mails as best he could from accessible points until the establishment of a mail route the following Summer.

Charles Johnson and L. B. Turnure built the first frame building, and the latter opened it as a public house in the Summer of 1857.

May 7, 1858, the county seat was located here and the town began to rise.

During the Summer and Fall of 1858 its first school was taught by Harriet Lycan.

A commodious two story frame school house was built in the Summer of 1859.

The first birth in the place was that of Joseph B. Keeler, son of Doctor and Mrs. James Keeler, October 15, 1856.

The town continued to rise until the beginning of the war, when many of its most active citizens entered the military service, and soon after the removal of the county seat stopped its progress and led other prominent citizens away. At present a hotel, two stores, post office, agricultural warehouse, and a shop or two, comprise its business.

Among the pioneers who still reside there may be found Doctor Keeler, first County Judge of Worth County, and one of its most highly esteemed citizens, and Ben Bloker, proprietor of a store.

The Methodist Episcopal, Wesleyan, and Catholic Churches have organizations here.

KENSETT.—This is the name of a station on the Central Railway six miles south of Northwood, platted by James Thompson in October, 1872. It contains little more than a depot building.

POWESHIEK COUNTY.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

Poweshiek County lies between latitude 41° 30' and 42°, midway between Des Moines and Iowa City, the former State capital, and is the fifth county from the Mississippi at Davenport. It is twenty-four miles square, containing an area of 368,640 acres, of which 11,587 acres are native timber, the rest prairie. It is traversed, in a line passing through Grinnell and Montezuma, by the principal watershed of Iowa (except that of the Mississippi and Missouri), which marks the southwestern boundary of the territory drained by the Cedar River. Numerous small streams here find a source, on one side flowing southward and on the other eastward. The north fork of Skunk River touches the southwest corner of the county, and is the only stream in it of sufficient volume for valuable water power. The drainage is unexcelled, the streams falling rather abruptly from the watershed, having cut deep channels in the drift, which is here of great depth, and running upon muddy beds intermingled with sand and gravel. The face of the country is consequently varied. The level or undulating expanse of the watershed, part on either side in numerous ribs, whose rolling, and in some places, broken slopes, pass in turn into as many winding valleys. Frequent groves of timber nestle in the valleys, or skirt the uplands, adding variety to the scenery. The general effect of these picturesque features is highly pleasing to the eye.

The drift is not only of great depth, but is composed principally of soil free from troublesome beds of gravel or hard pan. Black vegetable mold is found, varying from two to six feet in depth. Underneath this a light brittle clay predominates. The soil is rarely surpassed for fertility, durability, or adaptability to diversified farming. Good well water is obtained at from fifteen to thirty feet. Rock appears only in the bed or banks of the Skunk, where a good quality of limestone is obtained. Traces of coal are here found also. Coal abounds a few miles south and west; but, as Skunk River is here very near the northeastern boundary of the Iowa coal-fields, nearly all of Poweshiek County is outside the limit, and embraced within the area of the subcarboniferous system, according to the classification of geologists.

PRODUCTIONS.

The staples of Poweshiek County in the order of their importance, are corn, hay, wheat, oats and barley. The chief exports are corn, beef cattle and swine. Wheat, oats and barley are exported in considerable quantities, but the former are the great sources of revenue. Timothy and clover flourish, and corn and hay are unfailing crops, oats usually good, wheat and barley fair. In 1874 there were 172,588 acres of land in cultivation, a trifle less than half the area of the county. For fencing, pine lumber, hedge and wire is chiefly employed. There are about seven hundred miles of good substantial hedge in the county, principally Osage orange.

RAILROADS.

The Mississippi & Missouri River Railroad line was completed to Grinnell in the year 1863. It is now known as the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, and has twenty-five and one-half miles of track in Poweshiek. The Central Railroad of Iowa was completed in the county, with twenty-three miles of track, in 1869. A branch road is in contemplation, to connect Grinnell and Montezuma, and a company has been formed for the purpose of building it, which they promise to do before next winter.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Poweshiek County was a part of the reservation held by the Musquaka Indians, a remnant of the Sacs and Foxes, until 1842, after which it was known as the "New Purchase." Pioneer settlements were begun at three points in the county, independent of each other; in Union Township, on the southern border; on Bear Creek, between Brooklyn and Victor; and on Sugar Creek, on the western border, near Grinnell. The tide of immigration that headed up the Des Moines Valley spread into the southern border. The Dragoon Trail, or military road, from Davenport to Fort Des Moines, opened a way to the other points. Richard B. Ogden settled within the present limits of Union Township in the Spring of 1843. Daniel Satchel, Joseph W. Satchel and Richard Cheesman followed in 1844 or '44. It is uncertain which, as authorities differ. Mahlon Woodward, Thomas Rigdon, Jesse Hyatt, Conrad Nixon, Elias Dement, Harrison Barnes and Joseph W. Hall came in 1844. Nicholas Moore and two sons, John and Stephen, came in November, 1844. John Moore is the present representative of the county in the Iowa Legislature, and resides on the fine farm on Union Prairie where he originally located. Quite a number of others followed in 1845, among them William English and James McDowell, who located a little farther west at a point known as Mill Grove, where English built the first saw mill in the county.

In the Spring of 1844 Henry Snook penetrated the wilderness as far as the east end of the grove on Bear Creek, called by his name, but better known as Talbott's Grove. His sons and daughters still reside in the vicinity. The 7th of April, 1846, a neighbor appeared at the west end of the grove, in the person of John J. Talbott, who, with his wife and seven sons and six daughters, emigrated from Holmes County, Ohio. The sons were Joshua, Robert, Joseph, John, Kinzie, Basel and David, the oldest twenty-three. Nearly all still reside in Brooklyn and vicinity. John J. Talbott died February 20, 1849. In the Fall of 1846, Jacob Yea er settled in the Grove, and in the Spring of 1849, Robert Manatt, Sr., another patriarch, located where Brooklyn now stands, bringing with him eight sons and two sons-in-law. Another son, William Manatt, now one of the principal men of Brooklyn, followed in the Fall.

About the same time that the Talbotts settled on Bear Creek, Lattimer, or Lattimore, located at the grove known by his name, on Sugar Creek, eighteen miles west. This was known for years as the "Lattimer Grove Route to Fort Des Moines." Neighbors gathered round him slowly, and the settlement gradually extended southward until it met that which followed up the creek from Mill Grove. This concludes the principal list of pioneer settlements, but there are one or two others worthy of mention, viz.: one in Deep River Township, near the present Village of Dresden, begun in 1848; and another on English Creek, within the limits of Lincoln Township, in 1849. The early settlers at the former place were Robert Taylor, Albert and John Morgan, Sargood, Ginther and Ephraim Cox; at the latter, Jonathan Harkleroade was first. About the same time Snider settled on Walnut Creek, in the northeast corner of the county, and was for years the only settler in that section.

The nearest flour mill accessible to the early settlers was at Wassonville, forty-five miles away; the nearest store at Oskaloosa, and the nearest post offices Oskaloosa and Iowa City.

The survey of public lands was completed in 1847, the township lines having been run some time before. The settlers then squared up their claims to the section lines. In the south part of the county there was an organization among them to settle disputes and prevent "jumping" of claims. In the Fall of '47, the land was brought into market at Iowa City. John J. Talbott entered the first tract in the county.

The first school in the county was in the Winter of '47-8, taught by Stephen Moore, in what is now District No. 4, Union Township, in a log cabin with greased paper in lieu of glass for windows; there were about ten pupils. The first mail was carried on horseback, through, between Iowa City and Fort Des Moines, in 1847. There was no post office in the county until 1851, when Joshua C. Talbott was appointed post master. This office supplied the entire county for some time.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

An act of the Legislature, approved January 24, 1848, provided for the organization of the county, and appointed commissioners to locate county seat. The preliminary election was held April 2d, following, at the house of Mahlon Woodward. The officers elected were Richard B. Ogden, Martin Snyder, and Jacob Yeager, County Commissioners; Stephen Moore, Clerk; Isaac G. Wilson, Treasurer; Wm. English, Sheriff; Mahlon Woodward, Surveyor. The commissioners held their first "court" as they styled their meetings, on the 14th day of April. Their only act worthy of note was the division of the county into two civil Townships, Jackson and Bear Creek, giving Bear Creek three-fourths of the territory on the north side. The impression then prevailed that the northern prairies would never be settled, and this belief finds curious expression in an official document dated June 17, 1848, which sets forth that the subscribers "proceeded to examine the situation of said county, taking into consideration the future as well as the present population; and, having also paid strict attention to the geographical center of said county, do hereby locate said seat of justice for Poweshiek County, on the southwest quarter of section six, township seventy-eight, range fourteen west, and have also named said seat of justice Montezuma." This document bears the signatures of David Edmundson, John Rose, and John White, commissioners appointed by the Legislature to locate the county seat. At their second meeting, July 3, 1848, the county commissioners formed a third civil township out of the four western congressional townships, and named it Sugar Creek. The following record of same date will give some idea of the state of county finances at that time: "Ordered, that Richard B. Ogden be appointed to negotiate a loan to the amount of twenty dollars, on the best terms that can be procured, and the faith of Poweshiek County is hereby pledged for the payment of the same, with interest." This was to procure stationery, and was entered upon the record no doubt with as much gravity as the pledge of faith to the railroad for $100,000 ten years later. At the same date (July 3, 1848), the commissioners authorized Ogden to negotiate a loan of $200, with which to enter the quarter section designated as the seat of justice. The land was purchased and platted, and the proceeds from sales of lots passed to the "municipal fund," with which in 1850 a wooden building was erected for county purposes and used until 1858, when it gave place to the present handsome and commodious structure built of brick, with limestone foundation, caps and sills, at a cost of $22,000.

POPULATION—SCHOOLS, ETC.

The first assessment of the county was made in the Spring of 1848, for which Wm. English received the sum of $500. The census returns of 1850 show a population of only 615; in 1860, it was 5,668; in 1870, 15,581; in 1875, 16,285, males outnumbering females 799. Barely one-tenth are foreign born. New England and the Middle States are largely represented. The people are intelligent, and maintain nearly 150 public schools, and pay teachers annually about $40,000. The value of their school houses is about $140,000, permanent school fund $61,976.66, Iowa College $200,000, making the sum permanently invested for educational purposes upwards of $400,000. With the exception of $89,000 of the $100,000 bonds issued to the Mississippi & Missouri River Railroad Company in 1858, and falling due in 1878, the county has no debt to pay, and its public finances are in excellent condition.

The present county officers are as follows: Supervisors, J. Leonard, Thos. Morgan, Henry Sherman; Auditor, F. L. Pierce; Treasurer, G. W. Kelruiff; Clerk, J. W. Carr; Recorder, S. S. Snider; Sheriff, J. W. Farmer; Superintendent, J. R. Duffield; Surveyor, J. Griffith.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Poweshiek County Agricultural Society was first formed at Montezuma in 1854, and a fair was held that year. There is not much trace left of its early history, and it was not regularly maintained until 1864, when it was reorganized and incorporated, with Porter J. Woods, President; J. E. Johnson, Secretary; and Thos. Ralnsburg, Treasurer; and an efficient Board of Directors. Grounds were leased at Brooklyn until 1872, when the affairs of the society had so far prospered that it was enabled to buy grounds. A suitable tract of twenty acres was purchased within the corporate limits of Brooklyn, for $1,500, which is now furnished with an excellent fence, a commodious hall, stables, sheds, wells, etc., and a good half mile track. The society maintains a sufficient membership to draw the $200 state appropriation annually. Thos. Ralnsburg is President, and A. J. Wood Secretary.

GRINNELL.

Eleven years after the first settler erected his cabin in the county, Grinnell was founded on the treeless prairie, in advance of civilization. This event marks an era in the history of Poweshiek County. Its founders were of New England origin, and imbued with the New England spirit. Neither love of adventure, nor thirst for gain, was their dominant purpose; they came to the West to secure homes, and did also in building up a literary institution which should be a center of moral and intellectual influence. Their hopes have been abundantly realized, and their influence has spread far and wide. In the Winter of 1853-54 there appeared in some of the leading New York papers a notice by Reverend J. B. Grinnell, a Congregational minister, of his purpose to form a colony and locate in the West. Accordingly, on the 8th of March, 1854, Mr. Grinnell, Doctor Thomas Holyoke, Reverend Homer Hamlin, and Henry M. Hamilton met by appointment at Iowa City, where the three former procured a team and a surveyor, and started out on the Des Moines road, leaving Mr. Hamilton behind to make further arrangements. Their objective point was the spot where the railroad survey crossed the "summit," or principal water-shed between Iowa City and Des Moines. They reached Lattimore's stage station, some four miles south-west of this point, at noon the second day; a town presented to view the location, and finding it satisfactory, determined here to locate the colony. Mr. Grinnell returned immediately to Iowa City, and entered a large tract of land in the vicinity for the party and others who were to follow. The school section, upon which the town was afterwards platted, was soon after secured of Poweshiek County for $1.50 per acre. The Chicago & Rock Island Railroad had then just been completed to Davenport. An extension of the line had been surveyed through to Des Moines, and definitely located as far as this point. Any required amount of land could be obtained in the immediate neighborhood at government price, and no prior settlement had been made. Such were the inducements which decided the gentlemen to plant their colony here, so far in the interior, where they could organize a town absolutely proper, without interruption from discordant spirits. They hastily constructed a log camp, and in May definitely fixed the location of the prospective town on the northwest quarter of section 16, township 80, range 16, and named it in honor of the founder. About the first of June they found themselves compelled to erect some means of shelter for the colonists who were arriving. A building was hastily put together for the occasion, which chanced to be low, long and narrow, and thereby got the name of the "long home," but its ominous name excited no untoward fears to deter others from coming. Accordingly we find the muster roll of the colony soon increased by the names of Deacon W. N. Ford, Deacon Bixby, S. N. Bartlett, J. P. Harris, W. S. Leisure, John Bailey, M. Stevens, J. B. Woodward, H. G. Fuller, S. G. Paige, Henry Hall, L. C. Phelps, L. H. Marsh, Deacon A. Whitcomb John Hays, Darius Thomas, and others. The first lady residents were Mrs. Dr. Holyoke and Mrs. Bixby, who soon followed their husbands. The first death in the colony was that of a Mr. Hale, in 1854, soon after his arrival. The first birth was that of a son to Doctor Holyoke, in April, 1855. The first wedding that of Homer Hamlin and Miss Hamilton. The first bill of goods brought to the place was purchased by J. B. Grinnell in Burlington, wagoned to its destination, and sold by Mr. Lawrence. The first store was opened in the Summer of 1854 by Mr. Anor Scott. A building was erected in the Fall for a hotel, and kept by George Chambers. The first permanent frame dwelling house was erected by Doctor Holyoke. During the first season a small building was hastily constructed as a place for the joint purpose of holding religious meetings and a school house. Miss Louisa Bixby taught the first school. Reverend J. B. Grinnell supplied the first religious instruction, and it is noteworthy that from the day the colony was first located not a Sabbath has passed without religious services. The formal organization of the Congregational church was perfected May 8, 1855, with a membership of twenty, from which it has grown until now it is the strongest society of that name in the State. The first election in the place was held in August, 1855; there were 35 votes. In the Fall of the same year a school house was erected, 40 by 40 feet, and two stories high. A post office was obtained in August, 1856; A. W. Lowry, post master.

The town was regularly platted by J. B. Grinnell, January 26, 1855, and deeded to a board in trust for educational purposes, for the nominal sum of $10 per acre. Thus the entire proceeds of sale of town property, over and above original cost, were secured to a "literary fund," to be devoted to education in the way in which the colonists should decide, every deed providing for reversion of title to Grinnell in case intoxicating liquors be sold on the premises described. This provision has thus far been an effectual bar against all saloons. Additions have been platted and recorded from time to time since, until the original plat has been surrounded by them. The town is regularly laid out, with handsome streets and a delightful park near the center. Shade trees are extensively cultivated, and profusely adorn the streets and grounds. Many neat, tasty and even elegant residences are to be found amid these miniature forests.

INCORPORATION.

The preliminary steps toward the incorporation of Grinnell as a city of the second class were taken by the citizens early in 1865, and consummated the 21st of July following, by the election of a town council composed of Colonel Samuel F. Cooper, Mayor; W. W. Sutherland, Recorder; and L. C. Phelps, S. N. Bartlett, Stillman Needham, G. C. Carmichael, S. T. Pruyn, Trustees. The present Mayor is G. M. Hatch; Recorder, J. Delahoyde.

SCHOOLS.

The Grinnell sub-district was organized as an independent district in 1867. In February, 1871, their school house was destroyed by fire, and immediate steps were taken to erect the present edifice, which was completed the following Summer at the contract price of $10,147.50. It is a very good and serviceable frame building of two principal stories and a basement of coursed stone. It contains eight principal rooms, well furnished, and capable of seating nearly 600 pupils. The school is graded in seven departments, employing seven and a portion of the time eight instructors. The principal is paid $100 per month.

CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

The organized church societies with regular meetings are the Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, and Universalist. The three former have church edifices. The Congregationalists have in contemplation a new edifice at a cost of $80,000 or upwards. Of secret societies the Masonic and Odd Fellows' Orders have prosperous organizations here.

PRESENT BUSINESS.

Grinnell is an important railroad junction of east and west, north and south lines. It has a large, fertile and rapidly developing farming region tributary to it, consequently its business is extensive and increasing. Six hundred thousand bushels of grain were shipped from here during 1874. It has one general passenger and two freight depots, five grain elevators, a national bank with a capital of $100,000, a good foundry and machine shop, three flour mills run by steam power, and two tanneries. Mercantile trade is represented by four general stores, one commission store, ten grocery, one dry goods, two clothing, three hardware, three drug, and five boot and shoe stores, and numerous shops of all descriptions. There are two large lumber yards, three agricultural implement warehouses, three hotels, and two liveries. Present population, 1,500.

The foundry and machine shop is owned and operated by Randolph & Lewis. It was erected in the early part of 1874, chiefly to construct the grain header, of which Mr. Randolph, senior member of the firm, is patentee. The principal building is 32x42 feet, two stories high, the lower part constituting the iron shop, the upper a wood shop. The wing part consists of an engine room, 20x20 feet, and foundry or molding room 25x36. The works do a general jobbing business besides the manufacture of the headers, which are being successfully introduced in Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas.

NEWSPAPERS.

In March, 1868, the first newspaper was founded in Grinnell by A. R. Hillyer, Esq., and called the Poweshiek County Herald. It was published by him and subsequently by his son, J. M. Hillyer, until December 1, 1869, when it was purchased by J. M. Chamberlain and Samuel F. Cooper, who edited and published it jointly until August, 1870, when Mr. Cooper sold to his partner. In January, 1872, Mr. Chamberlain sold a half interest to S. A. Cravath, and his remaining interest to Mr. Cooper in November, 1873. In May, 1874, Mr. Cravath purchased this other half interest, since which time he has been sole editor and publisher. It was first printed as a six-column folio, was enlarged to eight columns in March, 1869. Mr. Chamberlain still further enlarged it by widening the columns, in August, 1871, and changed its name to the Grinnell Herald. Dr. Cravath subsequently enlarged it to six pages. It is Republican in politics, published Thursdays, and has a large and increasing circulation. It has a cylinder press and a good job office. The presses are operated by means of a horse-power conveniently attached, and propelled by one horse. This is the only horse-power attachment to printing presses in Iowa.

The College News Letter is the name of a spicy little sheet of eight pages, edited by the students of Iowa College, and published monthly during the college session. It was established in July, 1873, and is printed at the Herald office.

IOWA COLLEGE.

One of the first acts of the Grinnell colonists was the appropriation of the net proceeds of the sales of village lots to the establishment of an institution of learning, and, in December, 1855, they set to work in earnest to give the projected institution a definite form. It was decided that the institution should be named "Grinnell University." Trustees were selected and arrangements made to proceed with the erection of a building. It is believed that every male citizen of the place became an "elector" in the organization perfected to carry on the enterprise, by the payment of $20 each to the "Literary Fund" raised for building purposes. Separate departments for males and females were contemplated. A site was chosen for the female seminary where the college buildings now stand, and work upon it commenced immediately, with the understanding that it should be used for both departments until better buildings could be provided. The building was not completed at the time of its transfer to the trustees of Iowa College, as hereafter described.

The establishment of a college in the then Territory of Iowa was a favorite plan among Congregational and new school Presbyterian ministers as early as 1841. This plan took definite form in 1845, when a Board of Trustees was elected, and Davenport selected as the location for the future college. The Board of Trustees was duly incorporated, and a charter was obtained in June, 1847. A building was resolved upon "not to exceed $2,000 in cost." Citizens of Davenport contributed $1,362, and thirteen lots as a site. The Preparatory Department was opened November 1, 1848, under E. Ripley, Professor of Languages. The first freshman class was admitted in the Fall of 1850; the first senior class was graduated in 1854. The professorship of mathematics was filled in 1851; that of natural science in 1853; that of mental and moral science in 1855. For many years the college had a hard struggle with poverty and adverse circumstances. The early contributions were small. In 1853 the professorship of languages was endowed by Deacon P. W. Carter, of Waterbury, Connecticut, with $5,080. In 1856, about $10,000 was raised on subscription. The Society for Western Colleges gave material aid from time to time. In 1854 the city laid out a street through the college grounds, and it was obliged to remove to a new location farther back, where a good stone building was erected. In 1867 the city again encroached on the grounds, and it was decided to remove the college elsewhere. In 1858 the trustees asked proposals from other places. The trustees of Grinnell University regarded this as a favorable opportunity to unify and centralize the educational interests of Congregationalists of Iowa in one college, and promptly offered their unfinished building and site of twenty acres, and an additional subscription, in all estimated at something over $40,000. The offer was accepted and the nuptials duly solemnized. Instruction was suspended at Davenport, and classes were organized at Grinnell, September 14, 1859, under the care of Reverend S. L. Herrick and L. F. Parker. The first freshman class at the new location was organized September 4, 1861. The prospects for the future now seemed peculiarly gratifying. For a time thereafter, however, the growth and progress of the institution were retarded by the events which drew away young men to the scenes of war. The first important effort to secure an endowment was made in 1868. In the Spring of that year Reverend J. C. Holbrook went East, by arrangement with the Society for Western Colleges, to obtain $2,000 pledged by the society to the current expenses of the college. His success led the society to consent to his raising $20,000 for endowment, and afterwards $50,000. Subsequent efforts have raised the endowment to about $90,000. Five chairs are endowed, three are not endowed. The entire property of the college has grown to about $200,000, including endowment. The college buildings are respectively forty-two feet by eighty, and fifty feet by ninety-five in size, three stories high: the one to contain eleven recitation rooms, chemical lecture room, laboratory, art and museum rooms, society and cloak rooms, janitorial, and apparatus rooms—part of these are already completed, and for the immediate finishing of others arrangements are on foot; the other containing seven recitation rooms, chapel, library, reading and apparatus rooms, with lodging rooms for students.

The smaller building is constructed of brick, the larger of stone. In 1872 the original building, or "East College," was destroyed by fire.

The college department embraces a classical course, and a scientific course of four years each, which are fully co-ordinate. These are open to gentlemen only. The course of study pursued in them is slightly abridged and modified so as to be applied to a college course or separate department of three years, for ladies exclusively. Besides this there is an academy course, or preparatory department, and a normal and English department, for ladies and gentlemen. The College Faculty consists of Reverend George F. Magoun, D.D., Professor of Mental and Moral Science; Reverend Samuel J. Buck, A.M., Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy; John Avery, A.M., Greek and German; Richard W. Swan, A.M., Latin; Stephen G. Barnes, A.B., Rhetoric, English Literature, Elocution and Esthetics; William H. Herrick, A.M., Chemistry and Natural Science; Jesse Macy, A.M., Physiology; Miss Mary Ellis, French and Botany, and Principal of the Ladies' Course; and Irving J. Manatt, A.M., Professor elect of Modern Languages. There are other instructors in the Academy and normal departments. The college library embraces a very good collection of about five thousand volumes, with a convenient reading room adjoining, besides which the several society libraries contain nearly two thousand volumes. The museum of natural history was thought to be unexcelled west of Michigan before the destruction of the east building, by which a portion of the collection was destroyed. It has been re-collected and arranged in a much ampler room in the new building, and many valuable additions have since been made. The old apparatus has been replaced by new, manufactured in Germany, which is adequate for the illustration of the principles of natural philosophy, chemistry and astronomy. The chemical apparatus is the donation of Henry Lee, Esq., of Manchester, England; the philosophical, that of citizens of Iowa. The department of civil engineering has recently been supplied with valuable instruments, to which additions will be made annually. The college has also a good physiological cabinet.

Iowa College was the first to offer free instruction to disabled soldiers.

MONTEZUMA.

Montezuma was purchased of the United States Government by the county, and platted under the direction of the commissioners, August 9, 1848. Previous to that date Martin Snyder had settled on adjoining land west of the plat, either in 1845 or '46. William H. Barnes built the first frame building on the town plat in 1848; it was raised election day. Isaac G. Wilson built a log house the following Fall or Winter, which was used as a hotel. In June, 1850, Gideon Willson opened the first store in the town and county. The first white child born here was Catharine Willson, daughter of Isaac

G. Willson, in March, 1850. The first death was that of William B. Hardee, in 1849. The town had a rapid and prosperous growth for some years, and for a time was the most promising point in this section of the state. It is said to have numbered at one time about a thousand inhabitants. Railroad lines gave it the go-by, however, and put a period to its growth, and dwelling houses were removed from town to country. Its population is now about five hundred. Its present business is considerable. It has a number of heavy dealers, and well stocked stores, and good hotels. The professions of law and medicine are well represented. Its public schools and churches are prosperous. It has the advantages of a delightful location in an old and well settled region of country, and the public business of the county, and its citizens hope to see the iron horse at their doors at no distant day, as elsewhere mentioned.

The town was incorporated in the year 1868. The election of the first town council took place May 9, resulting in the choice of A. W. Ballard as Mayor; G. W. Kelruff, Recorder; and W. R. Lewis, J. F. Searight, J. W. Carr, C. G. Adams and D. W. Bacon, Trustees. The succeeding mayors have been Edward Hall, Nicholas Carr, W. H. Redman, Thomas M. Adams, and W. W. McCready, present incumbent.

Montezuma was made an independent school district in 1857, of which S. W. Bosley was the first president. The present school house was built in 1857, but has since been materially enlarged. A new building is contemplated. The school is graded into four departments. Four teachers are employed: Charles R. Clark principal. There were during last term, Spring and Summer of 1875, 310 pupils enrolled.

There are three church organizations in the place: Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Protestant and Presbyterian. The Methodist Episcopal Church built the first house of worship in the place in 1857 or '8, at a cost of $4,400. The other societies have good houses of worship.

Montezuma has one of the oldest Masonic societies in the state, of which A. W. Ballard is W. M. The Odd Fellows also have a live and prosperous organization.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Montezuma Republican, the oldest newspaper in the county, was founded in March, 1855, as a seven column folio, by John Cassady. It was afterwards owned and published successively by A. M. Cowing, F. T. Campbell, J. B. Besack, Colonel S. F. Cooper, W. C. Condit, Sperling & Grove, Grove & Pike, and Grove & Dalby, until 1870, when J. W. Cheshire bought a third interest in connection with Grove & Dalby. In January, 1871, William Remsburgh purchased the entire office, but sold in March, 1872, to J. W. Cheshire, the present editor and publisher. The paper was enlarged in 1870 to eight columns. It is Republican in politics; published every Wednesday. The office is furnished with a power press and excellent jobbing facilities. In 1856 the Poweshiek County Gazette was started as a Democratic newspaper, by G. D. R. Boyd, but lived only about a year. In September, 1871, J. W. Cheshire founded the Montezuma Standard, which was merged in the Republican March 13, 1872.

BROOKLYN.

The Town of Brooklyn was originally platted by Robert Manatt, April 26, 1855. The more important additions since made are those by Robert Manatt, senior, in 1856; by Robert Manatt in 1862, by William Manatt in 1862, and by J. C. Talbott in 1865. Doctor Reuben Sears opened here the first store, September 9, 1854. The first frame house was built on the town plat in 1855 by Robert Skinner, and about the same time a hotel building was commenced by one Brondbrook. The school house near Talbott's was moved inside the town limits in 1856, in which John Davidson taught the first school in Brooklyn.

Brooklyn became an incorporated town of the second class in 1869. The first election for town council took place May 29, and L. L. Littlefield was chosen Mayor. He has been succeeded by T. Reinsburg, in 1870; S. M. Gibbs, 1871 and 1872; W. T. Sharp, 1873; B. M. Talbott and J. D. Halle, 1874, and W. T. Sharp, 1875. The addition to the town, platted south of the railroad track, was not included originally within the corporate limits, but was annexed in 1874.

The town was formed into an independent school district in February, 1868, and the following Summer a school house was built at a cost of $8,000. It is a large two-story frame building, constructed without regard to external ornament, and divided into four commodious apartments, which are well furnished. Total cost of building and furnishing about $10,000. The school is graded into four, and in the Winter five departments. The principal, Professor A. L. Shattuck, receives a salary of $700 a year. The South Side school house, a very neat and attractive building, was erected in 1873, at a cost of $3,500.

The Methodist, Presbyterian, Catholic, Episcopalian, Baptist and Advent societies have organizations here. The Episcopalians rent a hall for worship, the others have good church edifices. The Masonic Order has a prosperous Lodge here, and the Odd Fellows a very strong one, which is building an excellent hall for Lodge purposes. A Library Association was formed in January, 1873, and has now a small, but well selected library, of about 300 volumes.

Brooklyn is a division station on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, which has here a large engine house. It is an important shipping and trading point, containing two elevators, a steam flouring mill and elevator combined, three lumber yards, four hotels, four agricultural implement warehouses, six general stores, two clothing, two hardware, three tinning and repairing and two furniture stores, besides numerous shops of minor importance. The professions are represented by five lawyers and five physicians. Adjacent to the town are three brick yards and an establishment for the manufacture of Frear stone for building purposes. The population of the town is about 1,100.

MALCOM.

The Town of Malcom is a station on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, between Grinnell and Brooklyn, pleasantly situated on a southern slope, and numbering nearly 400 inhabitants. It was platted by Abel Kimball and Z. P. Wigton, September 26, 1866. Incorporation was decided upon in 1872, and on the 18th of May the first town council was elected. George S. Tabor was chosen Mayor and W. R. Ackers, Recorder, and have been continued in their respective offices until the present time.

The town was organized as an independent district in April, 1874. The school house is a good two story building erected in 1869, and is sufficiently large to accommodate 300 pupils. The Methodists and Presbyterians have organizations here. The Presbyterians own a neat, unique house of worship, which was built in 1868 or 1869. The Methodists are just completing an elegant small church building. The Masonic Order has a Lodge and Chapter here.

The town has a steam flour mill, two hotels, seventeen business firms in the ordinary branches of trade, two attorneys and two physicians. A bank is in process of organization.

SEARSBORO is a lively little unincorporated town and railroad station on the Central Railroad. The other villages in the county are Deep River, Victor and Forrest Home.

BUCHANAN COUNTY.

This county is situated in the northeast part of the state, is the third from the Mississippi River directly west from Dubuque, and in the third tier south from the northern boundary line of the state, and covers an area of five hundred and seventy-six square miles.

SURFACE.

The general surface is rolling, undulating and sufficiently uneven to be readily drained of surface water, rendering the soil warm and easy of cultivation. While it is not broken or hilly enough to interfere the least with agricultural purposes, it is sufficiently so to avoid the monotonous sameness of the level prairie, and presents when clothed with the bright emerald green of early Summer, the golden tints of harvest, or the deep, rich hues of Autumn, a landscape at once attractive and beautiful. Near the streams and water courses, where most of the timber is found, the undulations are not so gentle, being in some places quite abrupt and almost precipitous. There are no swamps or marshes in the county, and very little land that is not susceptible of the highest cultivation. The soil is a rich black loam, having a considerable mixture of sand, of a good depth, with a blue or yellow clay sub-soil. It is very productive, and extremely well adapted to the growth of all kinds of cereals, roots, garden vegetables and fruits, while tame and wild grasses grow with remarkable luxuriance. The average elevation is about three hundred and fifty to four hundred feet above the Mississippi River at Dubuque.

STREAMS.

The county is excellently well watered, having within its limits some eight distinct streams, with numerous small branches. The most prominent of these is the Wapsipinicon River, which passes diagonally through the county from northwest to southeast. This river rises near the northern boundary of the state, and drains not a very wide, but certainly one of the richest valleys west of the Mississippi. Being fed by innumerable springs and flowing over a pebbly and rock bed, its waters are clear, cold and silvery. Its average declination is some two and a half feet to the mile, furnishing a number of excellent water powers at convenient distances. Its banks, never bluffy, are yet so uniformly elevated as to preclude an overflow of the adjacent lands, even at the highest stage of water, and being almost entirely an outer opening of rock, can not be washed, insuring an easy and cheap improvement of its mill privileges. The east branch of the river joins the main stream in the northwestern portion of the county, and near the conflux receives the accession of the waters of Buck Creek. Otter Creek rises in Fayette County, and dral is the northern and western portion of Buchanan, is a never-failing stream, and furnishes a good water power. Pine Creek possesses the same characteristics, and together with Buffalo Creek, the second stream in size in the county, drains the central and eastern townships, contributing to swell the size and volume of the Wapsipinicon. The southwestern portion of the county is drained by Spring, Lime and Bear Creeks, which empty their waters into the Cedar, in which river the southwest corner of the county is situated. It will thus be seen that with these streams, and a large number of never failing springs which abound in all parts, this county is unusually well supplied with living water. Good wells are easily obtained at a depth of from ten to twenty-five feet. The origin of the sweet Indian name by which the beautiful stream that so evenly divides and admirably drains this county is called, is wrapped in the mystery of a thrilling legend of two Indian lovers, Wapsie and Pinicon, who chose death beneath its shining waters rather than separation.

TIMBER.

Those acquainted with the characteristics of this part of the state, will naturally infer from the above description of the water courses, that the amount of timber land is proportionately great, inasmuch as the timber in this region is almost exclusively confined to the neighborhood of the streams and rivers. This county contains more than the usual proportion of woodland found in prairie counties, which is a strong recommendation to those seeking homes in a prairie state. While the total area is 368,640 acres, there are between fifty-one and fifty-two thousand acres of timber land, or about one acre of timber to every seven acres of prairie, a proportion which few counties, not only in this state, but in the West can show. It is so well and evenly distributed, that no considerable portion of the county is very far removed from an abundant supply of good native timber, which consists principally of the various kinds of oaks, ash, black walnut, butternut, maple, basswood, hickory, and many other well known and valuable varieties. Along the borders of the Wapsipinicon, through its whole length through this county, there is a belt of timber from half a mile to six miles in width, with a probable average of over one mile. In the vicinity of Independence, Quasqueton, and Fairbank, the supply of timber for building purposes and fuel is abundant, while the belt bordering the east branch of the Wapsipinicon, extending into Fayette and Bremer Counties, is very fine. Buffalo Grove in the northeast, and Greeley's Grove in the northern part of the county, are both extensive and valuable bodies of timber. That bordering on the Wapsipinicon River and Pine Creek, in the center of the county, is much the largest body, covering an area of about thirty thousand acres, most of which is contiguous to Independence. Buffalo Creek, in the southeastern section of the county, is skirted with timber of a good size and quality, as are also Spring, Lime, and Bear Creeks in the southwest, some of the groves extending south into Linn County.

CLIMATE.

The climate corresponds with that of other portions of Northern Iowa, and is generally uniform. The winters are cold; the mercury often sinking from ten to twenty-five degrees below zero, yet they are of a steady temperature, subject to but few sudden changes. With a pure, crisp and invigorating atmosphere, with plenty of snow, and the absence of damp, foggy weather which usually characterizes the Winters of this latitude, they are by far more agreeable and healthful than those of the more indulgent South, where frost and snow are scarcely known. Persons suffering from pulmonary diseases find it much more healthful, and better adapted to their condition, than the less vigorous and more changeable Winters of the Middle and Eastern States. The Summers are delightful, the prairie winds which are gentle and continuous, modifying the atmosphere, preventing humidity, and making field labor comfortable and pleasant; while the Autumns are glorious, being filled up with those still, balmy, sensuous, dreamy days that are unsurpassed in any other part of the continent. The county is uniformly healthy; the miasmatic influences which are always found in new counties, and which were so troublesome in the early settlement of this region, have all passed away, and the few forms of epidemic diseases which prevail, are of a harmless character, and easily cured. The rate of mortality is as low as in any part of the Northwest.

CLASS OF INHABITANTS.

The largest portion of the present inhabitants are from Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and the New England States, and are an intelligent, wide-awake, progressing people, fully alive to the importance of building up and sustaining good schools, churches, and kindred institutions. There are German and Irish scattered through the county, the greater portion of the latter being in the southeastern townships, and they are mostly enterprising, industrious, and frugal citizens, slowly but surely amassing wealth and gaining influence.

RESOURCES AND PRODUCTIONS.

The resources of Buchanan County, like those of most counties in this state, lie in its rich and productive soil. Every variety of produce that can be grown in this latitude, comes to perfection here, and exhibits a size and quality even with the imperfect western cultivation, which can not be equaled in the best portions of the Atlantic States. Wheat and corn are the staples, of which an immense annual yield attests the richness of the soil, while oats, rye, barley, buckwheat, and other grains are produced largely. Potatoes, turnips, parsnips, onions, beets, and all the esculent roots grow to large size, and yet possess an excellent flavor; peas, beans, tomatoes, in short, all kinds of garden vegetables grow in profusion. All the varieties of tame grass grow with all the luxuriance of their native soil, which, added to the character of the land, generally high and rolling, with an abundant supply of living water, renders it peculiarly adapted to stock raising and dairy operations. For a number of years some attention has been paid to raising blooded stock, both cattle and hogs, so that the farmers of Buchanan County can now exhibit stock, which, for quality, will compare favorably with any in the state. Many parts of the county are well adapted to sheep grazing, and those who have engaged in it understandingly, have met with uniform success.

FRUIT.

Small fruits are grown with little care in large quantities, and of superior quality. Grapes and plums are produced in profusion, while all the hardier varieties of apples, pears, and cherries, are cultivated with a good degree of success. Though not what may be termed a good fruit country, yet by reasonable care in selecting the varieties, and in affording suitable protection and culture, there is no trouble in raising good paying crops with aver. ge certainty.

STONE.

Although the quarries in the county are not quite so numerous, and the stone of somewhat inferior quality to that found in some of the adjoining counties, yet there is an abundant supply of a fair quality of magnesian limestone for building purposes. This county lies within the drift region described by Professor Owen, as the largest in the world, and which he calls the "Cedar Drift." The drift rock, boulders, or lost rock, as they are generally termed, are mostly of granite, of various shades of color varying from the black, dark and light gray, to the red, which very closely resembles the Scotch granite. These boulders are large, and more numerous in this county than in any other part of the state, and have been extensively used in the foundations of the better buildings, while large quantities have been shipped. The foundation of the new State Capitol at Des Moines, is principally laid of this stone; while the foundation and sugiue house of the Insane Asylum at Independence, is built entirely of it.

A good quality of brick clay, with an abundance of sand, is found in never failing quantities in many places. The lime rock when burned makes excellent quick lime, so that all the necessary material for constructing substantial buildings are found in sufficient quantities to last for centuries.

EARLY HISTORY.

A little more than thirty years ago this vast extent of rolling prairie now teeming with life and animation, and dotted all over with the happy homes of an intelligent, prosperous, and wealthy people; these beautiful woodlands and lovely valleys which have so often rang beneath the woodman's axe, and echoed the clear joyous shouts of happy childhood; these babbling springs and murmuring streams with their life-giving waters, were part of a vast wilderness, the home only of wild animals, and still wilder savages who challenged the advances of civilization at every step, yet in that early day was heard

> "The tread of pioneers
> Of nations yet to be;"

And small hamlets sprang up along the streams, and here and there dotted the broad expause of prairie, but faintly foreshadowing the mighty throbs of emigration, which soon swelled the feeble Territory of Iowa, to a proud position among the sisterhood of states.

The early history of this county is veiled in much obscurity, yet, from the best information that can be obtained, it appears that in February, 1842, William Bennett, a resident and the first white settler in Delaware County, with his family, came to what is now Quasqueton and built a small log cabin at a point on the east side of the Wapsipinicon, about twelve rods above the present location of the flouring mill, and was the first permanent white settler in the county. The next who came to the county was S. G. and H. T. Sanford, who were soon followed by Ezra B. Allen. Early the same Spring Doctor Edward Brewer, now the oldest living settler in the county, and Rufus B. Clark and family came and settled about a mile and a half from Quasqueton. Frederick Kessler came about the same time and brought his family. A man by the name of Styles came with his family during the Summer, and for a while kept hotel, the first one in the county, at Quasqueton. Bennett was engaged in improving the water power and erecting a mill, and had several young men employed, who boarded with him. Their names were Jeffers, Warner, Day, Wall and Evens. This mill, which was the first in the county, was raised in October of the same year. During the Fall there came three young men—Henry B. Hatch, who stopped with Kessler, and Daggett and Simmons who worked and lived with Brewer & Clark. Some time during the Autumn a liquor saloon was opened and run for a short time. There were a few patches of land broken that year, on which a small quantity of potatoes and some other garden vegetables were grown, but there was no wheat raised in the county until the next season. Some time during the Fall or early Winter of 1842, a man by the name of Johnson settled at a point about equally distant from Quasqueton and the present site of Independence. Johnson represented himself as being the famous Canadian Patriot, who had lived for years among the islands of the St. Lawrence River. He was accompanied by a rather attractive young woman, whom he introduced as his daughter Kate, the identical "Queen of the Thousand Islands." Subsequent events, however, proved him to have been an escaped criminal, an adventurer of the worst sort.

The first marriage which took place in Buchanan County was that of Doctor Edward Brewer and Miss Mary Ann Hathaway, which was celebrated in March 1846. The ceremony was performed by Joseph A. Reynolds, then a justice of the peace for Delaware County.

The first white male child born in the county was Rufus Brewer, now a resident of Independence, and son of Doctor Edward and Mrs. Mary A. Brewer. He was born April 27, 1847. Frederick Kessler had a daughter, now dead, who was born about a year earlier, and was the first white child born in the county.

The first death was a boy some seven or eight years of age, and son of John Cordell, who died somewhere about 1843.

The first school in the county was the one taught by Doctor E. Brewer in a small log house, afterwards used as a blacksmith shop in Independence, in the Winter of 1848.

The first post office in the county was established at Quasqueton in 1845, and William Richards was the first post master.

ORGANIZATION.

Buchanan County was probably named, and its boundary defined by act of the first Territorial Legislature, which met at Burlington in the Winter of 1837-'8, although some claim that the name was suggested by S. P. Stoughton, the first proprietor of Independence, who was a strong Buchanan democrat—in honor of James Buchanan, President of the United States. Nine years later the State Legislature appointed Thomas S. Denton, of Jones County, Lyman Dillon, of Dubuque, and Sylvester Stevens, of Jackson County, commissioners to select some eligible location for the permanent capital of the county. These gentlemen met some time in June, 1847, and after due examination and consideration selected the present site of Independence, and gave the place its name.

FIRST ELECTION.

The first general election in the county occurred in August, 1848, at which time the following officers were elected to serve one year: Board of County Commissioners, Rufus B. Clark, James Colyer and Malcom McBane; Judge of Probate, Elijah Beardsley; Sheriff, E. D. Phelps; Coroner, Doctor S. McGonigal; Commissioners' Clerk and Recorder, Doctor Edward Brewer; Clerk of the District Court, S. P. Stoughton (Doctor Brewer was previously elected clerk before the organization of the county); Prosecuting Attorney, Elijah Beardsley; Surveyor, Daniel C. Greeley. The total number of votes cast at this, the first general election held in the county, was sixty-two. At this time the county was divided into three voting precincts, viz.: Washington, Liberty and Spring. Prior to this the county had been attached to Delaware for judicial and revenue purposes, and some elections had been held in connection with that county prior to 1848. At the first of these elections, which took place soon after the first settlement of the county, Quasqueton was the voting precinct for the entire county, and all of the country to the north and west as far as the Rocky Mountains and the British Possessions.

FIRST COURTS.

The first regular term of court held in Buchanan County, convened in the log cabin of Rufus B. Clark, on the 27th day of April, 1849, Hon. James Grant, Judge of the 3d Judicial District, presiding; E. D. Phelps, Sheriff, and S. P. Stoughten, Clerk. The first court, however, which might be called an irregular session, was held by Judge Grant in his buggy, in front of the clerk's office, in the Spring of 1848. He drove up to Dr. Brewer's house, called him out, and inquired what cases were on the docket. The clerk informed him that there were two, when the judge inquired what disposition, in his judgment, should be made of them, and was informed that one case should be dismissed, as there was no cause of action, and that in the other judgment should be rendered for the plaintiff. Judge Grant directed the clerk to enter judgments accordingly, and drove off without further ceremony. The second term of court was held in the store room of William Brazelton; then in a small building erected for a school house, and in various other places, until the completion of the present court house, in 1857, where it has since been regularly held.

VALUE OF LAND, ETC.

Only about one-fourth of the tillable land of the county is yet improved, and wild land ranges in price from $10 to $18 per acre. Improved land varies according to the improvements and location, from $15 or $18 per acre up to $40 or $50. The farm improvements are about the same as other counties in this part of the State, some sections being well improved, with fine, tastily arranged residences, and large barns, with good fences, and orchards, while the improvements on others are quite insignificant, and amount to little, except fencing and breaking.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The county buildings consist of a court house, jail, and asylum for the poor. The court house and jail occupy about one-half of a block in the center of the original plat of Independence, as laid out by the county. They are situated on the highest tract of land in the neighborhood, and command a fine view of the city of Independence, the valley of the Wapsipinicon, and the surrounding country. The court house is a plain, substantial, two-story brick building. The first floor is divided into light and pleasant rooms for the accommodation of the different county officers, while in the second story is a large and commodious court room. It was built in 1857, at a cost of $12,000, and was erected under the direction of Hon. Oliver H. P. Roszell, who was then Judge of the County Court.

The jail and jailor's house is a very neat two-story building, erected under the direction of the county supervisors by John Sunderland, in 1870, and cost, with the jail yard, about $20,000. The jail is built of Anamosa stone, with walls eight feet thick, and contains six cells.

The poor farm contains about two hundred acres, is situated some three miles northeast of Independence, and cost, with the improvements, about $8,000.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Buchanan County Agricultural Society was organized in March, 1870, as a joint stock company, with a paid-up capital of $6,000. The same Spring forty acres of land adjoining the City of Independence on the west, and nearly one mile from the river, was bought and enclosed with a substantial board fence, eight feet high. A fine half mile track was laid out and graded. Improvements have been made from time to time until it now contains a large octagon fine art hall, costing $1,500, a handsome pagoda, or judges' stand, a good barn, and other stabling for seventy-five horses and fifty cattle, with pens for one hundred hogs and sheep, and a good dwelling house. The first fair was held in the Fall of 1871, $600 being paid in premiums, which have since been held annually, paying from $600 to $900 in premiums. Financially it has been a success, the receipts since its organization being $8,218, while it has done much to encourage and stimulate among the farmers of the county a commendable pride in raising fine blooded stock, as is shown by the increasing interest manifested in the exhibitions of improved stock and other productions shown from year to year.

In 1858-9 an agricultural society was established, but never proving a success, was abandoned after a few years.

RAILROADS.

The Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad passes through this county from east to west, dividing the county into two almost equal parts. This road was built by the Dubuque & Pacific Company, and reached Independence in the last days of December, 1859.

The Milwaukee Division of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad passes through the county, its general course being north and south. These two roads furnish admirable railroad facilities, giving it two good and direct routes to Chicago, with one to St. Louis, and so dividing the county as to make all parts of it easily accessible to one or both of these lines.

The county officers for 1875 are as follows:

D. A. McLAISH, Auditor. D. L. SMITH, Clerk of the Courts.
JAMES A. POOR, Treasurer. JOHN HOLLETT, Recorder.
GEO. O. FARR, Sheriff. AMOS ROW, Supt. of Common Schools.
HORATIO BUYANT, Chairman of Board of Supervisors.

INDEPENDENCE,

The county seat and principal town in Buchanan County, is situated on the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad,—the most northern of the four great trunk lines which, stretching across the State of Iowa, link the old civilization of the East with the progressive development of the West,—at its junction with the Milwaukee Division of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad. It is sixty-nine miles west from Dubuque, one hundred and forty from Burlington, and is situated on both sides of the Wapsipinicon, which is here some two hundred and fifty feet wide, and spanned by a substantial iron bridge.

The original site was one of great natural beauty, and possessed many decided advantages which have been improved with the growth and development of the town. It is situated upon ground moderately elevated, sloping up from the river, sufficiently rolling to afford perfect drainage, and in some places rising high enough to present elevated and commanding building sites. A considerable portion of the town is built in a natural grove of oaks, many fine specimens still remaining, adding much by their native beauty to the attractiveness of its tasty homes, and broad well-graded streets. The town is surrounded in almost every direction, as far as the eye can reach, by beautiful, high, rolling prairies, dotted here and there with groves, orchards and pleasant farm houses, presenting as fine and attractive an agricultural scene as can be found in the state. The streets are laid out at right angles, running north and south, and east and west, are wide, and in many places shaded with handsome trees. The business portion of the town, which is mostly on the east side of the river, is regularly and uniformly built, containing many large and commodious business houses, that are elegant in their finish and furniture, while the dwellings, as a whole, are neat and tasty, with many fine ones, surrounded by ornamental grounds, which exhibit marks of high taste and culture. Altogether, Independence is one of the finest-built towns in Northern Iowa, or, in fact, in any part of the state. The site of the city was selected by the commissioners appointed by the Legislature to locate the county seat of Buchanan County, in the latter part of June, 1847. The ground covered by the original plat was entered at the land office, in Dubuque, in the name of the county, and a portion of it was surveyed and laid off into lots by T. J. Rigand, November 4, 1847.

EARLY HISTORY.

According to the best information that can now be obtained, Rufus B. Clark conceived the plan of establishing a town here, and was the first white settler. He located first, with Dr. Brewer, near Quasqueton, and was occupied mostly in hunting and trapping, which induced him to make long excursions through this and the adjoining counties to the north and west. Among the many eligible locations he observed in his hunting expeditions, none struck him so favorably as the site of this town. his practical eye at once discerning the advantages to be derived from improving the excellent water power he found here. As he did not have sufficient means to make the desired improvements, or even to enter the land at government price, he made a trip to Janesville, Wisconsin, and interested N. A. McClure and S. P. Stoughton in the enterprise. The latter returned with Clark, was well pleased with the situation of things, and, after remaining a short time, returned to Janesville to obtain the assistance of McClure and others, having agreed with Clark to erect a log house during his absence. On his way back Stoughton stopped at Dubuque and entered a quarter section of land, which included the water power, extending some eighty rods east and west from the river, and the same distance north and south of Main Street.

On the 18th of March, 1847, Clark moved up from Quasqueton, coming up the Wapsipinicon on the ice, and commenced his house, which he had ready for occupation early in April. It was not a very pretentious building, being simply a double log cabin containing two rooms, with a hall between, and was situated in the middle of what is now Mott Street, at the intersection of Chatham Street, directly south of Dr. House's residence. There Clark lived with his family, dispensing hospitality to all, his house being the headquarters and general rendezvous for the settlement. In April, Stoughton returned with Samuel Sherwood and T. Dolton, who were to build the dam and mill, and Dr. Lovejoy, who was the first physician in the place. Soon after came A. H. Trask, Eli D. Phelps and —— Babbitt, who all boarded with Clark. In the following June came Thomas W. Close, still a resident of Independence, S. S. McClure, and some others, who afterward returned. The second building erected was a store, which stood somewhere on the north side of Main Street, and east of Chatham, and was occupied by S. P. Stoughton, with a small stock embracing only the plainest and most common and necessary goods, which the inhabitants were forced to purchase, as there was no other market nearer than Dubuque. The third house erected was built of slabs, by Elijah Beardsley. Previous to this, however, the dam and saw mill had been completed, and the first slabs sawed were used in the construction of this house, which stood near where the handsome brick hardware store of W. R. Kenyon now stands. The fourth house was erected by Dr. Brewer, and stood for many years, being used as a residence, boarding house, district court clerk's office, post office, justice of the peace, law, real estate and broker's office, all at the same time. Those enumerated above, with several young men, were the only inhabitants prior to 1849.

Although there were a good many came, the place did not grow much for several years. The malarious diseases which always prevail more or less in a newly settled country were very bad, owing largely to the damming of the river and the constant use of river and slough water for drinking. The entire population suffered so severely from ague and malarious fevers, that but few had the courage to remain more than one season. In the Spring of 1848 there were eight families, viz.: Doctor Edward Brewer, Rufus B. Clark, Asa Blood, Elijah Beardsley, Thomas W. Close, Almon Higley, William Hammond and Doctor Lovejoy, who, with a number of young men, formed quite a village. These all left before the Fall of 1849, except Brewer, Close and Beardsley, and a family by the name of Horton came in. In the Spring of 1850 Beardsley and Horton left, reducing the population of Independence to two families, those of Doctor Brewer and Thomas W. Close. During that Summer, William Brazelton arrived with a stock of dry goods and other articles needed in a new settlement. Although his stock was small and inferior, he found a ready sale for his goods, and did quite a flourishing business. Charles Cummings came in and opened a stock of goods the next year.

Some time during the Fall or early Winter of 1848, a small log building was erected a little above the present location of the People's National Bank, in which Doctor Brewer taught the first school ever held in the town or county. He had about twenty pupils, and it is said that the doctor "wielded the birch scepter right lustily," and proved himself a very acceptable teacher. The building was used the following Spring as a blacksmith shop by Charles Robbins, who was the first son of Vulcan that made the anvil ring in Independence. Some time during the Summer of 1850, William Brazelton erected a small building for the things was used for a school house, and Judge O. H. P. Roszell taught the first school held in it. The building was used some time for school house, church, court house, public hall and other general uses.

In 1846 a post office was established, and S. P. Stoughton was the first post master. After holding the office for a while he turned it over to Doctor Brewer, who held it for six years, and frequently carried the mail to Quasqueton in his vest pocket. The revenue of the office for the first few years was very inconsiderable, not amounting to more than one dollar and twenty-five cents a quarter. The mails were received from Quasqueton, that being the first point in the county to which a mail route was established; and for several years the early inhabitants of Independence were greatly annoyed by uncertainty and delay in receiving their mails, owing to the fact that D. S. Davis, who was largely interested in Quasqueton—at that time a rival town—was the proprietor of the route, having obtained the contract from the Post Office Department at Washington about the time the first settlement was made in Independence. In November, 1847, he sub-let to Trask & Phelps, who run it a while as a horseback route, and then put on a democrat wagon, making weekly trips, which occupied four days. They did considerable shopping in Dubuque, not only for Independence, but for Buchanan County and for various points along the route, and were in high favor with the Dubuque merchants, who were all anxious to obtain the mail carrier's trade. In the Summer of 1849 they sold to Thomas W. Close, who continued for about one year carrying the mail and doing the county shopping, when it fell back into the hands of Davis, who refused to longer give Independence the benefit of the route. Soon after a direct route was established, since which time the mails have been received with the usual regularity.

The first marriage which took place in the town was that of Charles McCaffra and Miss Cynthia Messenger, which occurred on September 9, 1847—John Scott, the first justice of the peace for Independence, performing the ceremony.

The first birth was Diana, daughter of Thomas W. Close, who was born December 25, 1848.

The first death was Mrs. Rufus B. Clark, who died early in September, 1848, and the second Doctor Lovejoy, who died the same month, only a few days later.

INCORPORATION.

The City of Independence was incorporated by the County Court, August 6, 1864, and the first election for city officers was held on the 19th day of the following December, and resulted in selecting for Mayor, Daniel S. Lee; Clerk, James M. Wert; Marshal, Henry S. Cole; Solicitor, Charles H. Leavett; Treasurer, Edward Brewer; Engineer, Oliver H. P. Roszell; Councilmen, Richard Campbell, Oliver H. P. Roszell, James B. Thomas, Robert R. Plane, Sanford S. Clarke, Albert Clark, John T. Lyon and Samuel Sherwood, who immediately qualified and entered upon the duties of their respective offices.

The officers administrating the present city government are as follows: Mayor, D. D. Holdridge; Clerk, G. B. Smeallie; Marshal, J. A. Davis; Surveyor, D. S. Deering; Members of the Council, Louis Soener, R. O'Brien, E. Zinn, Asa B. Clark, J. L. Woodward, Mitchell McGowen, Charles M. Durham, S. R. Shepley and William Davis.

SCHOOLS.

There is no institution in the City of Independence that is looked upon with so much justifiable pride and satisfaction as the public schools. In organization and arrangement, in qualification of teachers, in efficiency of discipline and management, in convenient, suitable and tasty school edifices, it may safely challenge comparison with any other town of its size in the state. Two large three-story brick buildings, one on each side of the river, costing, with furniture, nearly fifty thousand dollars, and having a capacity to accommodate about eight hundred pupils, speaks well for the character, enterprise and liberality of the citizens of Independence. The graded school was established in 1857, and has since been conducted with that ability and success which has given it a high reputation abroad. The regular course in the high school is sufficiently extended and complete to fit its students for almost any situation in life. It is at present under the charge of Professor Brainard, with a corps of fourteen able and experienced teachers.

There are two Catholic schools. The Convent of Notre Dame Bonsecour, conducted by the Sisters of Mercy, that has an average attendance of about sixty, and the St. John's Catholic Parish School, which was organized in 1862, by Reverend J. S. Gosker, with fifteen pupils. It now has a regular attendance of about one hundred and thirty, and is free to all who are unable to pay their tuition. The convent grounds are among the finest in the city, and cost upwards of twelve thousand dollars.

FIRE.

Until the Fall of 1873, Independence suffered very little from the devouring element of fire, but on the night of the 28th of November of that year, a disastrous fire occurred, which was followed in the Spring by one more destructive in point of property burned, in proportion to the size and wealth of the town, than the memorable conflagration which, a few years since, swept over so large a portion of the Queen City of the Lakes, and thrilled the civilized world with the immensity of its destruction. This first fire consumed one-half of the block on the north side of Main Street, and east from Chatham, reducing to ashes ten business houses, and destroying upwards of $30.000 worth of property, on which there was some $17,000 or $18 000 insurance. This was quite a fire for a town of the size of Independence, but it was so far overshadowed by the gigantic proportions of the second conflagration, that it has been nearly forgotten, and is seldom spoken of by the citizens. This second fire, which was the largest that ever occurred in the history of Northern Iowa, broke out a little before two o'clock on the morning of May 25, 1874, in a frame building on Chatham Street, a little north of Main. It raged with terrific fury for some four hours, consuming thirty-nine business houses, two hotels, two newspaper offices, one church, four dwellings, and two livery stables—property in all amounting to nearly $600.000. In less than six months, phœnix-like, Independence arose from the ashes of her past glory more beautiful and elegant than ever before, and now can present a finer and better built business street than any city of its size in the West. A stranger visiting it for the first time would scarcely suppose that but a few short months had elapsed since this handsome street was an unsightly heap of smouldering rubbish.

CHURCHES, ETC.

There are seven church organizations having good houses of worship, viz.: Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, German Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, and Catholic. The Presbyterian Church was organized some eighteen years ago, with less than ten members. It now has a membership of 137, with a neat church edifice, erected in 1868 at a cost of $17,000. They have a fine pipe organ costing $2,500, and the best choir in the city. Reverend W. B. Phelps is the present pastor. The Congregational Church was organized May 8, 1867, with nine members, and has gradually increased until it now numbers eighty members. The Methodists were the first to organize, and the first to erect a house of worship. They now have a large membership and a fine church building erected in 1868. The Baptist and Episcopal both are in a flourishing condition and have commodious houses of worship. The German Methodists lost their church in the great fire of May, 1874, and have since erected a small but neat building. The Catholic Church was organized in 1862 by the Reverend John L. Gosker, who has ever since remained its pastor. The church edifice, which cost $13,000, was commenced in 1864. The present membership is 1,000.

There is nothing perhaps that speaks higher for the enterprise and intelligence of the community than the valuable public library and pleasant reading rooms, which are both well patronized and supported. Though principally destroyed by the great fire of May, 1874, they have since secured a fine collection of over 500 volumes, and fitted up a suite of pleasant rooms that are well supplied with the best dailies, weeklies, and monthlies published in the country.

The principal streets and business houses are lighted by gas, while they have a regular fire department with a fire marshal and two assistants. The city owns a new steam fire engine, of the Clapp & Jones manufacture, which cost $4,000, and is considered a superior machine, and a good hand engine, which are manned by about 120 men, who, with the hose men and the hook and ladder company, make a very strong fire department. They are thoroughly organized and uniformed, presenting a fine appearance, and affording such excellent protection that a repetition of the last great fire is almost impossible.

INSANE HOSPITAL.

During the Winter of 1867-'8 Honorable William G. Donnan, then a member of the Upper House of the Iowa General Assembly, introduced a bill for the erection of an additional insane hospital at or near the City of Independence. Through his untiring and well directed efforts it passed the Senate without a dissenting voice, and receiving little opposition in the Lower House, soon became a law, receiving at the same session an appropriation of $125.000. The bill named Maturin L. Fisher, of Clayton County, E. G. Morgan, of Webster, and Albert Clark, of Buchanan, a board of commissioners to supervise the erection of the building. Albert Clark died about one year after his appointment, and Honorable G. W. Bemis, of Independence was appointed to the vacant position. The bill required a donation of 320 acres of land within two and a half miles of the city, which was soon provided for by those interested in the work. The commissioners met in June, 1868, and approved the site, which is on the west side of the river, the east boundary line being about one mile from the river, and made other necessary improvements. The building is a little over two miles from the city upon an elevation gently rising from the river to a height of from fifty to one hundred feet above the surrounding country, giving it a commanding view. It was unbroken prairie and had a good supply of living water.

The plan of the building is that drafted and submitted by Colonel S. V. Shipman, of Madison, Wisconsin, and may be described as follows: It will, when completed, present a front view of 762 feet, consisting of a main center building and wings constructed in longitudinal and transverse sections, each receding towards the rear from the center building. The main center building is 60x100 feet, four stories and mansard roof in height. The wings are composed, first of a longitudinal section 45x92 feet, then a transverse section 40x108 feet, then longitudinal section 45x72 feet, then a transverse section 36x72 feet, then longitudinal section 26x56 feet, ending in a transverse building 35x72 feet. The longitudinal sections are all three stories high with plain slate roof, while the transverse sections are three stories with a mansard roof in height. In the rear of the main building is located the rear center building, the front section of which is 42x60 feet, three stories above the basement, the upper being the chapel, and is connected with the main building by a corridor seven feet wide by twenty feet long. The rear section of this building is 44x49 feet, three stories above the basement, and connected with the fan tower and engine house by a passage-way forty feet long. The engine house, which is directly in the rear of the center building, is 55x115 feet, is one story high with a roomy attic, which is used as a work shop and contains considerable valuable machinery. The chimney, directly in rear of the engine house, is 130 feet high. The base, which is built of granite, is twenty-two feet and six inches in diameter, while the top is fourteen feet and six inches. It is of an octagon shape, handsomely fluted, and took in its construction 250,000 brick. An iron pipe in the center of the chimney carries off the smoke from the furnace, leaving a large vacuum which is connected by subterranean ducts with all parts of the building, forming a superior and effective system of ventilation.

The lower portion of the main center building is occupied by the apartments of the superintendent, steward and matron, with rooms for the trustees and accommodation of visitors, while the fourth and fifth stories will be used for the better class of patients. The wings are divided into wards, each of which are entirely separate, and are provided with dining rooms, bath rooms, promenading halls, sitting rooms, water closets, and the attendants rooms, each ward being complete in its self. The north wing, which is now completed, is designed for male patients, but is now used for both, and the south wing for females. The rear center building is devoted to a dining room, kitchen, sitting and sewing rooms for patients, general storage rooms, and sleeping apartments for the female help. Every convenience is being introduced to do away with attendants as much as possible. A car is run in the basement from the kitchen to all parts of the building, and the food is elevated by dumb waiters, one to each section, to the dining rooms, which are situated one above another. By this means the entire hospital can be served with food by one man in twenty minutes, waiters being in each dining room to receive and remove the food from the dumb waiters. The entire building is heated by steam, pure air being driven by fans over radiators and forced into all parts of the building, giving a uniform heat and perfect ventilation. Cold and hot water are forced to all parts of the building by the engine, while the entire hospital is lighted by gas manufactured on the premises.

The main buildings are constructed of Anamosa and Farley limestone, which is finely dressed, and at a little distance has the appearance of gray marble. The basements are of native granite, worked from the immense boulders which are found in large quantities in this part of the state. The engine house is also built of this granite, which, owing to the variety of its color, presents a very novel and attractive appearance. The walls are surrounded by a plain iron cornice, with a variegated slate roof, giving to the building a fine general appearance. There has also been erected a large barn, costing about $5,000, with several immense cisterns. The first contract for erecting the two northern buildings was awarded to David Armstrong, of Dubuque, at a contract price of $88,114. At the end of the first season the commissioners decided that the interests of the state would be better subserved by having the work done by the day, and an amicable arrangement was made with Mr. Armstrong, by which he relinquished his contract. Since that time the work has progressed under the immediate supervision of the superintendent of construction, George Josselyn, who has conducted it in a very satisfactory manner.

Appropriations have been made as follows: By the 12th General Assembly, $125,000; the 13th, $165,000; the 14th, $200.000; 15th, 93,900; making a total of $583,900. Honorable George W. Bemis, treasurer and resident director, estimates that it will, when entirely completed and ready for occupation, cost about $900,000, and be the best built and arranged institution of the kind in the West. Its ordinary capacity is 450 patients, although by crowding somewhat, 500 can be admitted. The present number is 230, a larger portion of whom were removed from Mount Pleasant upon the opening of the hospital in 1873.

The present officers are A. Reynolds, M.D., Superintendent; Willis Butterfield, M.D., Assistant Physician; George Josselyn, Steward; Mrs. Anna B. Josselyn, Matron.

THE PRESS.

The Quasqueton Guardian, was established at Quasqueton, by Rich & Jordan, on the 13th day of December, 1856. It was a seven-column paper, and was ably edited by Doctor Jacob Rich, now political editor of the Dubuque Times. It was removed to Independence and issued its first number from that city, August 5, 1858. Rich & Jordan delivered their valedictory in the issue of May 31, 1864, having sold to S. B. Goodenow, who immediately took charge of the office and conducted the Guardian until July 7, 1866, when he sold to J. L. Loomis, who consolidated it with the Bulletin, under the name of The Buchanan County Bulletin and Guardian.

The first number of the Buchanan County Bulletin appeared June 20, 1865, under the management of J. L. Loomis as editor and proprietor. It immediately espoused the Republican cause, and was managed with such good judgment and success as the rival of the Guardian, that in a short time Mr. Loomis bought that office and consolidated it with the Bulletin. About the 1st of April, 1869, he sold the establishment to Judge Wm. Toman, who has continued its publication with marked ability and energy. It is a good paper, devoted to the interests of Independence and Buchanan County, Republican in politics, and neatly printed.

The American Eagle was established in Independence, in 1853, by D. P. Daniels, as a Republican paper, and continued such for two years, when it was changed to a spiritualist paper, and the name changed to the Rising Sun. It remained under the same management until 1865, when it was permanently suspended.

The first newspaper established in Independence or in Buchanan County, was the Independence Civilian, which made its first appearance May 17, 1855, with B. F. Parker & James Hilleary as proprietors. It was a seven-column paper of some merit, which they continued to manage until in February, 1857, when it passed into the hands of S. S. Allen, who shortly afterwards sold a half interest to G. W. Barnhart & J. S. Cornwell. In the following July Barnhart sold to Cornwell and went West, the other partners continuing the publication until March, 1858, when Barnhart returned and bought Cornwell's interest. These gentlemen conducted the paper until the Spring of 1859, when they sold the paper to Cornelius Hedgar, who assuming control, carried it on until August, 1860, and then transferred it to G. W. & W. Barnhart, who continued its publication until July, 1863, when it passed into the hands of the Buchanan County Democratic Association. It continued under this management for about one year, ably edited by Honorable O. H. P. Roszell. In the Spring of 1864, it was again purchased by the Barnhart Bros., who changing the name to the Independence Conservative, continued it until the Spring of 1872, when W. Barnhart purchased the interest of his brother, and assuming the entire management, has since conducted it in such a manner as to receive a liberal patronage and support. The Conservative is a good readable paper, Democratic in politics, and thoroughly identified with and sustained by the liberal enterprising spirit of progress that characterizes the business men of Independence.

QUASQUETON.

Upon the site of this town the first settlement in Buchanan County was made. It is situated upon the east side of the Wapsipinicon River, upon a gently rising plateau sloping back by an almost imperceptible ascent from the river to one of the finest prairies in the county. The town is connected with the west side of the river where there are some fine residences, by a substantial bridge some two hundred and fifty feet long. The name is a corruption of the Indian word "Quasquetuck," which signifies "Rapid Waters." In the early settlement of the country it was a noted ford, and the different Indian trails from all directions centered here.

Although the first settlement was made here early in 1842, yet the town was not laid out until 1847, when it was done by D. S. Davis, and the plat recorded; but owing to an unfortunate litigation in regard to the ownership of the land, which continued some six years, rendering it impossible for settlers to secure a good title, improvement was greatly impeded and progressed very slowly. Upon the settlement of this litigation, the place advanced with rapid strides, improvements of a substantial character were made, and for a time it bid fair to become a place of considerable importance. But, failing to secure railroad connections, improvements stopped, and the place has gradually retrograded in wealth and population until now it contains not more than five hundred inhabitants. The water-power, which is the best in the county, is but partly utilized in running a small flouring mill, saw and turning mills.

JESUP is a beautiful prairie village, situated near the west line of the county, on the Illinois Central Railroad. It was laid out a short time before the building of the road, and was its terminus for several months, which made it for the time quite a business point. It was named in honor of the Hon. Morris K. Jesup, of New York City, formerly President of the Dubuque & Sioux City Railroad. The present population is about seven hundred and fifty, and contains some twelve business houses, three elevators, five wagon and blacksmith shops, a good graded school with four teachers, three churches, two hotels, etc., etc. It is a pleasant place, a good shipping point, and has a gradual and steady growth.

The Jesup Vindicator was established July 3, 1874, by W. A. Hutton, as a six-column, Independent sheet. In the following December it was enlarged, and in April, 1875, again increased to eight columns in size. Soon after the second enlargement, G. E. Marsh bought an interest, and became associated in the management and control. It is a spicy little sheet, strenuously advocating the interests of its town and locality.

WINTHROP, eight miles east of Independence, contains about the same number of inhabitants and business interests as Jesup, while FAIRBANKS, in the northwest part of the county, is quite a pleasant place, and does a good country trade.

CONCLUSION.

Such in brief is the early history, natural resources, and the present advantages, improvements, and conditions of Buchanan County, which in population, wealth and material resources, may be taken as a fair average of the one hundred counties in the State of Iowa. Dating back but little more than a quarter of a century, to a point of time immediately anterior to the advent of Bennett and others, who were but the advance guards of the mighty immigration which has followed them into this country, we find it the home and favorite hunting ground of the red man. This broad expanse of rolling prairie, that now produces so bountifully under the hand of skillful cultivation, and is checkered all over with orchards, grain fields, and beautiful homes, is the same ground on which painted warriors fought fierce battles, won savage victories, and followed in the exciting chase noble game, which the steady march of civilization has driven westward. Where now solid brick blocks rise in architectural beauty, and elegant homes are found surrounded by the ornaments and luxuries of civilized life, beneath the protecting branches of stern old oaks, and along the grassy margin of the murmuring brook that still flows on

"With many a devious turn and dash,
With many a silvery water break

many a young forest brave has wooed and won his dark-eyed mistress. In truth, this county was a noble heritage to the red man—one which he was loth to leave; but, if noble to the untutored child of the forest, who knew so little of its material worth, how much more attractive and valuable should it appear to the thousands who now possess it, and who are able to understand its multifarious resources.

HOWARD COUNTY.

This county is situated in the north tier of counties, third west from the Mississippi River.

SURFACE.

This is chiefly a prairie county. The surface is undulating, and the elevation such that it is healthful and agreeable, while the landscape is beautiful and pleasing in any direction the observer may choose to look. All the rough land lies in the northeastern part, Albion Township. No county in Iowa presents, in proportion to its size, less waste land than Howard.

SOIL.

The soil is very uniform; it is a black loam, with clay sub-soil. In some places the loam reaches to the underlying limestone formation. In point of productive worth it can not be excelled, and all grains, grasses, and cereals common to highly valuable agricultural districts, succeed well.

TIMBER.

The timber region embraces a small proportion of Howard County, probably one-twelfth. A large portion of this is young timber of different varieties, but chiefly oak and poplar, but small bodies of burr oak may be found about the county at various points, skirting the rich prairies. There is also considerable timber along the western Wapsipinicon, and in places along the other streams.

STREAMS.

The Big Wapsipinicon flows through the county, while the Little Wapsipinicon rises within its limits. The name of these streams is said to be of Indian origin, signifying "craw-fish," from the great numbers of this species that inhabit the head-waters. The Upper Iowa River, the largest stream in the county, pursues a winding course, running through the north tier of townships in an easterly direction. The head-waters of the Turkey River are near the center of the county. The south fork of the Turkey, or Crane Creek, flows through the county centrally in a very direct south-easterly course. Some of these streams, particularly the Upper Iowa, afford very good water power. The county is also well supplied with small brooks and numerous pure springs, never failing in the dryest seasons.

GEOLOGICAL.

The rock basis of Howard County in the northeast corner belongs to the Lower Silurian age. On the southwest nearly one-half its area lies within the Devonian region. The intervening space is that of the Niagara limestone of the Upper Silurian age. There are frequent exposures of rock along nearly all the streams, furnishing good quarries of excellent building stone and lime.

SCHOOLS.

Howard County, educationally considered, stands high. The report of the county superintendent shows the following statistics: Number of districts, 80; ungraded schools, 69; graded, 20; teachers employed, 142; males, 66; females, 96. Average compensation—males, $37.91; females, $25.17. Number of persons of school age, 2,666. Number of pupils enrolled in public schools, 2,226; average attendance, 1,277; average cost of tuition of pupil per month, $1.22. Number of school houses in the county, 69; value, $45,175.00; value of apparatus, $1,491.00.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The formation of this society was begun in the Winter of 1858, and the Fall of that year it held a fair at Howard Center. The organization did not thrive, and never held another fair. In 1866 it was re-organized under the same name—Howard County Agricultural Society. Again it was not a success. In the Fall of 1871 a second re-organization was made, which has met with flattering success; in fact, no similar organization in the state is on a better or more substantial basis. The society owns ten acres of land in the enclosure of the Cresco Driving Park Association's grounds, with good buildings, sheds, pens, etc., a large floral hall, all of which are paid for, and the society has money in the treasury. The present officers are as follows: President, Calvin F. Webster; Vice President, John E. Peck; Secretary, John Stellman; Treasurer, Jesse Barber; and a Board of Directors, consisting of one from each township.

Old Settlers' Society.—In 1869 this society was organized, Darius Seeley, President; H. D. Noble, Secretary. The first annual gathering was held at Gillett's Grove the same year, and an address was delivered by Judge Martin V. Burdick. The next year the annual meeting was postponed, and the second annual meeting, a year afterwards, was held at Lime Springs Station, and was a very successful gathering, the principal speaker being Bill Dobson on the subject of the "first barrel of whisky in Howard county." In his address he told how the good women of that early day broke in the head and emptied the contents into Turkey River. The society was successful, and annual gatherings have been held ever since. The president of this society is Darius Seeley; W. H. Patterson, Secretary.

The following are the present county officials:

C. F. WEBSTER, Clerk of Courts.	W. H. PATTERSON, Recorder.
FRANK KYTE, Treasurer.	JEREMIAH BARKER, Auditor.
D. H. ACKERSON, Sheriff.	LABAN HASSETT, Surveyor.
O. N. HOYT, Supt. of Schools.	H. C. PRICE, Coroner.

JAMES OAKLEY,	THOMAS GRIFFIN,	S. S. LAMBERT.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The early settlement of Howard County dates back to December, 1851, when it is believed that Hiram Johnson built the first cabin in the county, at Oregon Grove; but what may be called the beginning of the permanent settlement of the county was commenced in the year 1854. Among the early settlers at Oregon Grove may be mentioned Henry S. Shuttleworth, S. M. Cole, "Uncle" George Scofield, Thomas Lewis, and C. M. Munson. This was about two miles from where Cresco now stands, in New Oregon Township. Here was the most flourishing town of the county, until the building of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad through Cresco, in 1866, when the buildings, business and population were transferred to Cresco. About the time of the settlement at Oregon Grove there settled near what is now Cresco, Chas. S. Thurber, M. L. Shook, James Siddall, M. G. Goss, L. Aspinwall, James G. Upton, Edmund Gillett, and a few others. The first frame house in the county was built by M. L. Shook. In 1854 Wm. S. Pettibone, James Hall, Martin Boardman, Lemuel Potter, Archibald Pooler, Edward Buttera, and Wm. P. Hough, settled on the Little Wapsipinicon, in Afton township. In 1855, Augustus Beadle came here. At this time a colony had been organized in New York City, and had purchased lands here and in Mitchell County, but only a portion of them came on from the east, and the colonial organization was abandoned. Also in this year (1855) John F. Thayer and Aseph Webster became settlers of Howard Center, which become quite prominent as a country town in after years. The same year a settlement was commenced at Jamestown by Dennis, Franklin, and Gilbert Rice, who built a mill on the Wapsipinicon at a place called Riceville. There was added to the Jamestown settlement several families from Massachusetts during the same year. They at once built a steam saw mill. A settlement was also begun at Foreston, Forest City township, by Joseph Daniels and S. L. Carey.

ORGANIZATION.

Prior to 1855 Howard was attached to Chickasaw for election, and to Floyd for judicial and revenue purposes. In 1855 it was organized, Edmund Gillett being the organizing sheriff. At the first election the following were the officers chosen: County Judge, James Upton; Clerk, Edmund Gillett; Recorder and Treasurer, William Woodward; Sheriff, John Harlow; Prosecuting Attorney, M. V. Burdick.

So to speak, the County Judge was ex-officio, the County Government, by reason of authority vested in him by the statute, giving him control of all matters of revenue and assessment, as the supervisor system was not established until 1860. The first recognized seat of justice for Howard County was located at Vernon Springs by the County Judge, in 1856. It was moved to Howard Center in the Spring of 1857. In December, 1858, the county seat contest was again inaugurated, and the District Judge appointed M. V. Burdick, Mr. Holbrook, and George Bronson commissioners to locate the future seat of justice, which Messrs. Holbrook and Bronson proceeded to do, Mr. Burdick not serving. They located it about midway between Vernon Springs and New Oregon, on a bluff, since known as Court House Hill. Here, as had been done previously at Vernon Springs, New Oregon, and Howard Center, the court house was furnished by volunteer aid. This at Court House Hill was built of basswood, and not until it became so rotten as to be unsafe, in the Spring of 1865, was it changed, when the seat of the County Government was moved to Vernon Springs, where a building was furnished as a court house. In 1867 the Board of County Supervisors transferred the county seat to Cresco, where it now remains. The stone building it now occupies was furnished by the citizens of Cresco.

To return to the settlement of Howard County. In 1856, H. D. Noble settled on the farm on which his family still resides, in Vernon Springs Township, and became a prominent settler. During this year many others came to the county and settled permanently. The severe winter of 1856-7, and the financial panic that was prevalent all over the United States, stopped, to a great extent, the influx of immigration to this county. In 1860 it revived again; but in 1861 the great civil strife came on. In 1866 the tide of immigration again turned westward, and with the construction of the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad through Howard County, hundreds came to settle and make homes in this county, and a steady growth has since continued and will continue until its highly valuable agricultural advantages have all been improved.

WINTER OF 1856-7.

During the severity of the Winter of 1856, in December, four men started with a team from Oregon Grove for Granger. The parties were Oliver Arnold, two men named Eddy and Carpenter, and the fourth, name not known. When about one and a half miles from the present Town of Cresco, it is supposed they had lost the road and turned into a little oak grove. Here Eddy and Carpenter said they would return to Edmund Gillett's place, about a mile distant. They started on a direct line, but with blowing snow, difficult walking, and benumbed by cold, they became bewildered, lost their direction, and turned south into a grove, where the Town of Cresco now stands, and here they perished. The two others of the party unhitched the horses, leaving them to their own will. Waiting until evening for the expected return of Eddy and Carpenter, who did not put in an appearance, they started on foot for Zeke Miner's, about a mile distant on the road to Granger. As soon as the horses were loosed they made direct for Mr. Gillett's, where they safely arrived. The storm was so severe the following day that it was impossible to search for the owners of the team, but on Monday succeeding the Saturday evening upon which the horses arrived, Mr. Gillett notified James Siddall, and they started in search, following the trail as best they could find it by digging down through the loose snow to where the horses had broken the crust, and after a tedious journey found the sleigh, and also Messrs. Miner and Stowe, who told them that the other two men were missing. Messrs. Gillett, Siddall, and Miner commenced search, taking turns in the lead, and tramping the snow, which was at least four feet deep on the level, and about half a mile distant from the sleigh found the body of Eddy. Carpenter had wandered off about a mile and a half farther, where he perished; but his body was not found until the next Spring, after the snow went off.

FIRST THINGS.

The first mill in the county was a saw mill at Vernon Springs on Turkey River, built by George Sprague in 1853. In 1855 A. H. Harris added to it a grist mill.

The first Board of County Supervisors, elected in the Fall of 1860, was as follows: John W. Baird, S. L. Carey, J. H. Baggess, G. W. Ostrander, T. R. Perry, T. Griffin, S. W. Seeley, S. Radford, M. Niles, C. M. Munson, W. Strother, and C. A. Salamon.

The first term of the District Court was held in Howard Center, in John F. Ayres' hall, June, 1857, by Judge Samuel Murdock.

The first man naturalized was Joseph Schafer, at the same term of the District Court.

The first marriage (of record) was Edmund Gillett to Miss Helen Barber, February 21, 1856.

The first County Auditor was D. O. Preston, in 1869.

The first store in the county was at Vernon Springs, by Miller, in 1854.

The first school taught was by Harriet Cole at Oregon Grove, in a log school house, in 1854. She is still engaged in teaching in this county.

The first church in the county was by the Congregational Society, organized under the influence of Reverend John W. Windsor at New Oregon.

The first post master in the county was S. M. Cole, and the office was at his house in New Oregon Township, three miles south of the present site of Cresco, where he still resides.

The first flour made in the county was at Foreston.

The first hotel in the county was the old stage house and stopping place at New Oregon, kept by S. M. Cole, who was agent for M. O. Walker's line of stages.

The first newspaper in the county was established at New Oregon, February 18th, 1858, and named the Howard County Sentinel. It was owned by the Howard County Printing Association, of which the President was S. M. Cole; Vice President, D. D. Soliday; Treasurer, M. M. Moon; Secretary, W. R. Mead; Directors, James G. Upton, J. F. Mitchell, J. S. Lawver, E. W. Allen, Geo. W. Scofield, C. M. Munson, and J. J. Clemmer; J. Howard Field, Editor. This gentleman is at present on the editorial staff of the Chicago Journal. The paper was a seven-column journal, thoroughly independent of party, creed, or religion. Early in the year 1859 the Sentinel office and its contents were burned, and the association dissolved.

The second paper in the county was a rival of the Sentinel, established at Vernon Springs, by Harrison & Peck, and called the North Iowa Gazette. It was a seven column sheet, and first appeared March 26, 1858; Democratic in politics. It expired in less than a year.

Immediately upon the dissolution of the Howard County Printing Association, after the burning of the Sentinel office, the New Oregon Plaindealer was started by H. Lick and W. R. Mead, the former as publisher, the latter as editor. It subsequently became the Iowa Plaindealer, published at Cresco, as elsewhere described.

For this history of early newspapers in Howard county, the writer is under obligations to Mr. S. M. Cole, who has all the first numbers.

CRESCO.

This flourishing young city is surrounded by far-stretching and rich prairies, the beauty of which is only exceeded by their high value as a rich productive district. The country, for a radius of from twenty to thirty miles, finds a market and transportation at Cresco, by means of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, and is a large contributor to this line, in the extent of its shipments. It is well laid out, the streets wide and roomy, Market street being particularly well adapted to the uses intended, and suggested by its name. Elm, the principal business street of the town, runs at right angles with Market street, and parallel with the railroad, and is lined by warehouses, ten in number, and on this street also stands Bassett, Huntley & Co's steam elevator. The buildings or business houses do not present a very attractive appearance on the outside, but inside they are large and roomy, and adapted to the purposes intended. It should be borne in mind that it is only eight years since the town was laid off. A better class of buildings will succeed them ere long. The town contains some very fine residences.

Cresco is fortunate in its location. The Davenport & St. Paul Railroad route at this point makes a junction with the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, and although not at present completed, there is enough of it already in operation to make it quite well settled that the road will be completed and running through the county at an early day.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Of this, very little need or can be said. The town sprang up so suddenly that we can only make mention of the land on which it is located, which was purchased from the United States government in 1853, and opened up as a farm by one Barber. In 1854 it was sold to Martin L. Shook, and was for many years known as "Shook's Grove." In April, 1866, it was purchased by Augustus Beadle, who in the following month sold an interest to Wm. B. Strong and B. H. Edgerton, and a portion of the property was platted into village lots. This commenced the rapid growth which has continued until it has become a town of considerable importance.

According to the census returned by the corporation assessor for 1875, it has a population of 1,500.

SHIPMENTS.

The shipments for 1874 by the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, at this station, were as follows: Wheat, 505,338 bushels; oats, 41,157 bushels; barley, 33,122 bushels; corn, 785 bushels; flour, 3,451 barrels; grass seed, 8,080 pounds; hides, 97,460 pounds; live stock, 200,000 pounds; live hogs, 276,000 pounds; dressed hogs, 365,590 pounds; eggs, 7,250 pounds; butter, 94,320 pounds; poultry, 5,830 pounds; horses, 18,020 pounds; miscellaneous, 723,650 pounds. Total number of pounds, including grain shipments, 35,798,630.

Cresco was incorporated in 1868, and at an election April 20, 1868, the following officers were chosen: Mayor, Isaac Gregory; Recorder, W. R. Mead; Attorney, Henry Widner; Treasurer, B. Chapin; Trustees, L. T. Woodcock, J. J. Clemmer, J. [illegible] and John E. Peck.

The present officers, elected April 20, 1875, are as follows: Mayor, J. [illegible] Recorder, Henry Widner; Treasurer, H. Clark; Attorney, H. C. McCarty; H. E. Crandall, John R. Peck, G. W. Coon, Fred. Miller and Jacob Lowry.

THE PRESS OF CRESCO.

The Iowa Plaindealer was started at New Oregon, Howard County, in th[illegible] as a Democratic weekly journal, by W. R. & F. J. Mead. It continued the[illegible] fully until Cresco absorbed the town and its business, when it was transferr[illegible] in 1867. The first number issued at Cresco was on May 26th of that year.[illegible] since regularly issued at this place from the office it at present occupies. It remained Democratic until the Presidential campaign of 1872, when it a[illegible] independent-liberal doctrine and supported Horace Greeley, since which [illegible] been and yet is independent of political parties. It has a circulation of 950 [illegible] is well conducted. It has a good job office in connection with the newspa[illegible] ment. W. R. Mead, editor, and W. R. & F. J. Mead, publishers and proprie[illegible]

The Howard County Times was established in Cresco, January 20, 186[illegible] Wood and Frank Mix, editors and proprietors, as a seven column folio, Re[illegible] politics, and has continued so during its whole history. August 22, 1867, sold his interest to Mr. Mix, upon whose death the paper was managed by C[illegible] enridge, for the estate of Mr. Mix, until its purchase by I. A. Hoxie, who s[illegible] N. Burdick, who, April 1, 1872, sold it to W. M. Fogo and W. W. White, who[illegible] it until April 1, 1873, when L. E. Smith purchased Mr. Fogo's interest an[illegible] editorial control. October 21, 1873, Mr. White sold his interest to Mr. Sm[illegible] which time L. E. Smith has been sole editor and proprietor. The nam[illegible] changed from The Cresco Times to its present name. The Times is claimed t[illegible] largest circulation of any paper in the county, as counted by the county supervisors. The office has a full line of presses, type and printers' stock, a[illegible] pared to do all classes of job work.

The People's Representative, a weekly, eight-column paper, Republican [illegible] with a circulation of 700 copies, Geo. F. Crouch, editor and proprietor. This [illegible] established as a seven-column paper in 1873.

SCHOOLS.

The first school in Cresco was taught in the building now occupied a[illegible] residence by Mrs. Bateman. The upright of the present large stone public sch[illegible] ing was erected in the Summer of 1869, at a cost of about $8,000. The wing[illegible] added in the Summer of 1874, at a cost of about $4,000. This school is well [illegible] under the able management of the principal, L. T. Weid, and five assistant te[illegible]

BANKS.

Kimball & Farnsworth.—As early in the history of Cresco as 1868 the[illegible] house of Kimball & Farnsworth was established, with a capital giving it[illegible] financial strength to average with $50,000 national banks. This bank has a[illegible] location on Elm Street.

A. D. Wright.—In August, 1873, the banking house of A. D. Wright was es[illegible] which continues with a capital of $50,000. It is located on Market Street.

STEAM ELEVATORS.

One of the institutions of Cresco, is the steam elevator of Bassett, Huntl[illegible] It was built in 1872, at a cost of $17,000. It has a storing capacity of 50,000[illegible] It has steam power for elevating grain, and the large amounts received and keep it running almost constantly.

CRESCO DRIVING PARK ASSOCIATION.

This is one of the most successful organizations of the kind in Northern [illegible] was organized in 1872. At that time it purchased eighty acres of land situat[illegible] one mile from Cresco, enclosed it, and completed one of the best mile track[illegible] State. This society is not entirely out of debt, but its liabilities are insignif[illegible] comparison with its assets. It is managed by a board of directors who cl[illegible] officers from among their own number.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Charles Best, an exhorter of the Methodist Church, settled in the northern p[illegible] county in 1855, and commenced holding meetings in a sparsely settled neighb[illegible] and organized the first class in the county, at Foreston. In 1856, Reverend G. [illegible] now a resident of Cresco, a local preacher, settled near Vernon Springs. In [illegible] organized classes at Vernon Springs and other points, which were immediately into a circuit, called "New Oregon Circuit." In 1866, preaching was comme[illegible] Cresco, and this soon became the central point of the circuit. In 1870, Cre[illegible] made a station, and the other appointments were attached to other circuits.

The first Methodist Church built in Cresco was completed in 1866. It is a ne[illegible] structure capable of seating about 300 people. It cost about $3,000.

The organization of a Congregational Church Society in Howard County w[illegible] made September 7, 1856, by Reverend J. W. Windsor, with sixteen mem[illegible] Oregon Grove. It is now known as the Congregational Church of Cresco. [illegible] 1861, Messrs. Windsor, Salsin, and Clemmer were appointed by the Church as[illegible] mittee to superintend the construction of a church in New Oregon. The buildi[illegible] completed and dedicated at a cost of $1,000, November 17, 1861. At that time th[illegible] bership numbered 44. In 1869, the building was moved to Cresco, enlarged by twelve feet front and a belfry, and the church was reorganized.

The first organization of the Catholic denomination in Howard County was [illegible] Oregon, the date of which is not positively known. The present organization [illegible] stituted by the Reverend M. A. McCarty, the present priest, in 1871. The [illegible] church building, 24x48 feet, was erected in 1872, at a cost of $3,000. The chu[illegible] owns a parsonage here, which has been built at a cost of $2,200.

The Episcopal Church Society was organized under the name of Grace [illegible] July 20, 1867. The rector was Reverend J. Rambo. Their church structu[illegible] erected in 1868. Its size is 24x34 feet, capable of seating one hundred and fifty [illegible] The cost of the building was $2,200, most of which was contributed by friends [illegible] denomination in the East. The bell was presented to the society by Jay Cooke, o[illegible] delphia. The society owns also a very pleasant parsonage.

OTHER TOWNS.

LIME SPRINGS STATION.—Next to Cresco in importance is Lime Springs Stati[illegible] in population and business. It is situated on the Milwaukee & St. Paul Rail[illegible] Forest City Township. The settlement of this township was commenced [illegible] Springs, a town about a mile north of the station, in 1854, by A. D. C. Knowl[illegible] Joseph Knowlton, and Charles S. Thurber. When the railroad was completed [illegible] the township of Forest City, it went just far enough from the old town to kill it[illegible] Springs Station has grown up rapidly, by reason of the excellent market afforded productions of the surrounding country. The following is a statement of th[illegible] ments for 1874, by railroad: Wheat, 246,944 bushels; barley, 14,335 bushe[illegible] 8,001 bushels; flour, 3,574 barrels; dressed hogs, 73,500 pounds; miscellaneous [illegible] 424,460 pounds. Total number of pounds, including grain shipments, 16,973,5[illegible] population of Lime Springs Station is 562. Lime Springs has a population of [illegible]

Chester, Foreston, Florenceville, Saratoga, Howard Center, New Oregon, B[illegible] post office villages. Chester being on the line of railroad, is the largest.

JEFFERSON COUNTY.

GEOGRAPHICAL SITUATION.

Jefferson County is situated in the southeastern part of the state, and is bou[illegible] the north by the Counties of Washington and Keokuk, east by Henry, south [illegible] Buren and west by Wapello. Twelve Congressional townships, in tiers of fo[illegible] east to west and three from north to south, are embraced within the coun[illegible] making an area of 432 square miles, or 276,480 acres.

These twelve Congressional are organized in twelve civil townships, desig[illegible] follows: Walnut, Penn, Black Hawk, Polk, Locust Grove, Fairfield, Buchana[illegible] ridge, Round Prairie, Cedar, Liberty and Des Moines. These are all unifo[illegible] gressional townships, except Fairfield and Liberty, the southern boundar[illegible] former and the northern boundary of the latter being mostly along Cedar Cr[illegible] enlarges Fairfield about seven sections.

The eastern part of the county is in the Purchase of 1832, the central in t[illegible] chase of 1837, and the western in the Purchase of 1842, as shown by treaties [illegible] Indians at those periods.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized by act of the Territorial Legislature, approved [illegible] 21, 1839, which act named Samuel Hutton, of Henry County; Joshua Owen[illegible] County, and Roger N. Crissup, of Van Buren County, Commissioners to lo[illegible] county seat, which they proceeded to do, and named the site Fairfield, completing their duties in March following. This was before the land was surveyed, and it was not until May 13, 1842, that Daniel Sears, Ezekiel J. Gillham and Barraca S. Dunn, County Commissioners, purchased of the government the quarter section upon which the county seat was located.

The first election was held in April, 1839, which resulted in the choice of John J. Smith, Daniel Sears and Benjamin F. Chatlain, Commissioners; John A. Pitzer, Clerk; John W. Sullivan, Treasurer, and William Bonnifield, Surveyor.

EARLY SETTLEMENT AND EVENTS.

The first settlement was made in the Spring of 1836, the honors of which are equally divided between James Lanman, Amos Lemons, George Stout, Alfred Wright, Noah Wright, William G. Coop, David Coop, Lambeth Morgan, John Huff, Rodham Bonnifield, Samuel S. Walker and George W. Troy, who were followed soon after by Harmon J. Akes and Isaac Blakely, all of whom settled in the eastern part of the county. Of these, John Huff, Alfred Wright and G. W. Troy are still living here.

Charles Negus was appointed to organize the first school district, which he proceeded to do by calling an election, to be held in the Fall of 1847. It resulted in the choice of Charles Negus, Evan C. Hampton and Arthur Bridgman, Directors.

The first court held in this county was at Fairfield, August 2, 1839, Hon. Joseph Williams, presiding; John A. Pitzer, Clerk, and Cyrus Olney, Acting Prosecuting Attorney.

His Honor, while on his way to Fairfield to hold this term of court, was taken for a horse thief by a settler, who refused him shelter or information, and he was compelled to pursue his devious and doubtful way "in the dark, black night," with no defined road, or other guide than the instinct of his horse, to enable him to find his way.

The first order of the court was that the eagle side of the silver dime should be used as the temporary official seal of the court.

The first court house was a two-story frame structure erected in the Fall of 1839, and was located upon the west side and fronting the southwest corner of the public square.

The first jail was built in 1841. It was 18x21 feet in dimensions. Double walls of squared timber, covered with heavy plank for floor, and the whole so fastened with heavy spikes as to render an attempt to "break jail" futile, made this sufficient for the needs of the county until 1857, when the present jail was completed.

The first tavern was opened by Thomas Dickey in a log cabin, with one room and a low loft.

The first store was kept by a man who could sell salt at $7.50 a bushel, and other commodities in proportion.

The first mill was built on the Cedar, in 1837, by John Troxel. It would seem that there was an attempt made, prior to this, to grind grain by machinery, by one Rowe, who, it is said, erected a rude structure, and put into it a horse mill, which appears to have been a failure.

Joseph Parker during this year took a load of grain to Rawis' Mills, in Schuyler County, Illinois, a distance of about one hundred miles, and was gone twenty-one days. To avoid such trips, coffee mills, sheet iron graters and other novel appliances were extemporized to prepare grain for use.

The first white child born in the county was Cyrus, son of Samuel S. Walker.

The first marriages were solemnized by Reverend Benjamin F. Chastain, who united Harmon J. Akes and Miss Martha Frost, March 14, 1839; and, three days later, Isaac Blakely and Miss Ellen Lanman.

The land office was removed from Burlington to this county in 1842, William Ross, Register, and in 1867 the United States Government located a Pension Agency here, David B. Wilson, Agent.

The Jefferson County Agricultural Society was organized January 24, 1852. The first officers were Benjamin Robinson, President; James Beaty, Vice President; Caleb Baldwin, Secretary, and Charles Negus, Treasurer.

The State Agricultural Society was organized in the court house here, December 28, 1853, and the society held its first regular annual meeting at Fairfield, in the year following.

The Jefferson County Library Association was organized March 18, 1853. The first year five hundred volumes were secured. It now has four thousand three hundred volumes. Its selections are so well made that it is visited from long distances by persons who desire references from its works. Its cabinet of curiosities is rare and choice.

The library performs a useful and marked influence in the education and refinement, and in forming habits which impart worth to the youth of the county. Its officers are: Honorable J. F. Wilson, President; N. S. Averill, Secretary; C. W. Slagg, Treasurer; and A. T. Wells, Librarian.

PATRIOTISM.

From a population of about fifteen thousand, the county sent to the front in defense of the Union fifteen hundred men, and it is the proud boast of its citizens that none returned with dishonor.

RAILROADS.

The Burlington and Missouri River Railroad passes through the Townships of Lockridge, Buchanan, Fairfield and Locust Grove, and has five stations therein. The Chicago Southwestern Railroad passes through the Townships of Penn, Buchanan, Fairfield, Liberty and Des Moines, and has five stations therein.

The County officers are:

M. S. CRAWFORD, Clerk.	JAMES S. BECK, Sheriff.
IRA G. RHODES, Treasurer.	S. M. BOLING, Auditor.
JAMES A. MONTGOMERY, Recorder.	G. D. EVANS, Coroner.

T. A. ROBB, Superintendent Public Schools.

SUPERVISORS.

J. H. ALLENDER.	R. T. GILMER.	THOMAS POLLOCK.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

The surface is undulating, except a small portion along Skunk River and Big Cedar Creek, where it is uneven, but generally tillable. There is timber along the banks of all the streams.

The soil varies in character from a rich loam, mixed with sand, to a loam mixed with clay. The former is particularly adapted to esculent roots, the latter more particularly to grain, but either produces all varieties of cereals, esculent roots and vegetables, succulent plants and herbage. Blue grass grows spontaneously, but the "hay crop" is mostly timothy and clover. Fruits, such as apple, pear, cherry and grape, together with all small varieties, are grown with great success.

The soil is about two feet deep, while the sub-soil extends about eight feet deeper, and when brought to the surface is, after one year's exposure to atmospheric action, found to be as productive as the virgin surface soil. This is owing, without doubt, to its porosity, which is such as to readily admit all humidity from the surface, where it is confined within the sub-soil reservoir, to be returned slowly to feed the growing verdure as needed, but more rapidly when the surface is stirred with plow or hoe.

TIMBER.

There is a liberal supply of timber, such as white, black, burr and red oak, hard and soft maple, hickory, elm, ash, birch, and other varieties common to this latitude.

STREAMS AND WATER.

Skunk River passes through Walnut, and a part of Lockridge Townships, and many of its feeders pass through portions of the county, while many other streams pass through the county in a southerly direction, which are feeders for the Des Moines River. Indeed, every part of the county is well supplied with clear running water. Good water can be raised to the surface from an average depth of thirty feet anywhere within the county, except on a few of the ridges.

GEOLOGY.

There is an abundant supply of stone, which does not scale from exposure to atmospheric changes. In the report of the committee on building stone, to the Board of Capitol Commissioners of the State of Iowa, is found the following description of Jefferson County stone: " * * * * a remarkable stone, not known to exist elsewhere in the state; * * * * splits readily in any direction, dresses finely, but not easily worked; * * * * weight per cubic foot, 171 pounds; specific gravity, 2-74; density, 2-7143, and crushes at 15250 pounds to the square inch; * * * * is a sand of coarse quartz fragments." Free stone of a good quality is also found, but mostly in connection with limestone. White and blue limestone is found in abundance, and the manufacture of quick lime is followed to a large extent.

BRICK.

In close contact with the coal seams, beds of fire clay are found, some of which are fifteen feet thick, and within the timber lands clay and sand are found for the manufacture of brick. Both of these clays are being extensively used.

COAL.

Bituminous coal of an excellent quality is found in abundance, and is extensively mined. It is sought after for smithing purposes, because of the small proportion of sulphur it contains.

FAIRFIELD.

Fairfield, the county seat, is pleasantly situated a little south and west of the geographical center of the county. The Chicago & Southwestern Railway crosses the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad here, and gives to the city the benefits to be derived from two large competing trunk roads.

A beautiful place, thrifty in business, rapidly increasing in substantial improvements, make up a whole of desirable facts not often found.

The first settler was Henry B. Notson, who erected his cabin in the Spring of 1839. During the Summer and Fall of 1839 came Mrs. Higgarbottom, Mrs. Crannore Gage, Miss Sarah A. Hurt (soon after the consort of Charles David), and Mrs. M. E. Woods, all of whom are still living here.

When the wounded soldiers of the war of the Rebellion were first sent to Keokuk Hospital, Mrs. Woods, a lady of culture, and, having a competency, volunteered as a nurse. Thereafter she was appointed sanitary agent, and her pass is dated February 11, 1863, issued by the Secretary of War. Her duties were arduous and eventful, and for which she never asked or received one cent of compensation.

The first store was opened by William Huston immediately after the location of the county seat, and in the Fall he was followed by E. S. Gage with another store.

THE FIRST TEACHER.

There is a conflict of authority as to who was the first teacher, but it is certain that Miss Clarissa Sawyer taught in the Spring of 1839, who was followed in the Fall by James F. Chambers. Contemporaneous with these was Mrs. Reed, wife of Rev. Julius Reed.

THE PRESS.

June 12, 1847, A. R. Sparks made his bow in the Iowa Sentinel, which was the first paper issued here. In 1850 it passed into the hands of Drown & Pass who discontinued it the following year. D. Sheward revived it in 1852, who also discontinued it after a three years' struggle.

The Ledger made its appearance in 1850, Orlando McCraney, proprietor, who was joined by A. R. Fulton in 1851. In 1853 McCraney was succeeded by W. W. Junkin, who became sole proprietor August 7, 1854, and still continues the publication. It has always been consistent,—started as a Whig and continues as a Republican paper. Mr. Junkin has the honor of being one of the oldest editors in the state.

The Jeffersonian appeared in 1851, which sustained an eventful life under the management of T. B. Taylor, who was followed at brief intervals by H. M. Moore, I. J. Tolan, Samuel Jacobs and R. M. Hanna, who discontinued the paper finally in 1860.

The Constitution and Union was instituted by David Sheward, August, 1861. The following year he was arrested by the U. S. Marshal for alleged disloyalty and lodged in the old Capitol Prison at Washington, where he was detained for three months. On the 8th of February, 1864, the press and material were partially destroyed by parties who deemed that their patriotism was improperly assailed. This ended the publication.

Home Visitor.—This paper was brought into existence in 1864 by Rev. A. Axline, who was assisted in the arduous duties of its publication by A. R. Fulton, R. H. Moore and W. B. Murry. In December, 1867, W. W. Junkin became proprietor, and merged it into The Ledger.

Iowa Democrat.—M. M. Bleakmore is responsible for the induction of this sheet upon the literary horizon, July 4, 1863. It afterwards suspended to be revived and issued as a Christmas Gift in 1864, and continued until 1874, when Mr. Bleakmore retired and was succeeded by Flint & Kent, who changed its name to Industrial Era.—Before the completion of the first volume I. T. Flint became sole proprietor, and is publishing the same with considerable success.

Iowa Democrat.—In December, 1874, M. M. Bleakmore revived this paper, and is now publishing the same with vigor. It is the official city organ.

EDUCATION.

The public school building is a large and elegant brick structure, used wholly for a graded school. Professor R. G. Gilson, Principal, ably performs his duties. There are several private schools, some of which are of high grade.

PARSON'S COLLEGE.

This is the only Presbyterian College in the state. Its location was secured here in December, 1874, by the citizens, who raised $30,000 for that purpose and secured it to the institution. It derives its name from Louis B. Parsons, Sr., who bequeathed $40,000 in Iowa lands as an endowment fund.

Twenty acres of land have been purchased just outside the city limits for its location. The site and grounds are beautiful. A large mansion has been remodeled and fitted up for the temporary use of the faculty, and the first college buildings are now in course of construction. The first term commenced in September, 1875.

CHURCHES.

There are nine churches, divided among the different denominations as follows: Methodist Episcopal, two; Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist, Lutheran, Roman Catholic, Episcopal, and Christian, each one; and the Free Methodists have a society which meet in a hall.

BENEVOLENT.

Odd Fellows.—Jefferson Lodge, No. 4, was organized March 10, 1846. It is flourishing.

Masonic.—Clinton Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., was instituted December 15, 1847, to which was subsequently added McCoid Chapter, R. A. M., No. 5.

BANKS.

The First National Bank was organized in 1865 with a capital of $50,000, which was increased to $100,000 August, 1871. Honorable James F. Wilson, President; George D. Temple, Cashier.

George A. Wells is a private banker who commenced business in 1864. Both are in a flourishing condition.

MANUFACTORIES

The manufactories are as follows; Two merchant flouring mills, one furniture manufactory, one woolen mill, three foundries and machine shops, which put up steam engines, horse powers and other heavy work, one agricultural implement manufactory, one carriage manufactory, two wagon manufactories, etc.

BUSINESS HOUSES.

There is one wholesale grocery house and ten retail groceries, nine dry goods, five drug, four hardware, three stove, three boot and shoe, one hat and cap, three clothing, two leather and hardware saddlery, and two woolen goods stores; two agricultural implement warehouse and sales rooms, two banks, three hotels, two livery stables, and three boarding and sale stables.

City Officers.—W. K. Alexander, Mayor; G. H. Case, Clerk; S. W. W. Coffin, Marshal.

ABINGDON.—This pretty town contains about thirty dwellings, seven stores, three churches, Masonic lodge, hotel, etc. It is situated in the northwest part of the county.

BATAVIA is situated upon the line of the B. & M. R. R. It has six stores, one grain elevator, one flouring mill, and four churches. It is ambitious and prosperous.

GLASGOW, in the northeast part of the state, is a small village, but has the honor to have been the first laid out town in the county.

GERMANVILLE.—This is also a small village in Walnut Towship.

PERLEE.—This is a business town which sprung into existence since the S. W. Ry. was extended through. It is seven miles northeast of Fairfield. It is noted for its coal fields—four shafts being sunk. It has about seventy-five dwellings, three general stores, one grocery store, and one drug store.

PLEASANT PLAIN is upon the line of the S. W. Ry. It has gained a new impetus since the completion of the road. It has an elevator, flouring mill, saw mill, eight stores, three churches, etc.

LIBERTYVILLE is situated upon the S. W. Ry. It has about thirty dwellings, three stores, hotel, etc.

BROOKVILLE is a small village of one store, post office, etc. Locust Grove Township.

LOCKRIDGE was laid out about one year since and is located upon the B. & M. R. R. It contains fifteen dwellings, two stores, one flouring mill, one church, etc.

GLENDALE is a post office.

COAL POINT is a station on the B. & M. R. R.

ACHISON is a station on the B. & M. R. R.

Note.—Thanks are returned to Honorable Charles Negus for favors in the compilation of the above sketch; also to Culbertson & Jones, Mrs. M. E. Woods and others for valuable information.

WARREN COUNTY.

It is believed that the first settler on territory now included in Warren County, was John D. Parmalee. He erected a saw mill on Middle River about the time the military post was established at Raccoon Forks, or very soon after, in the year 1843. The mill was erected at the instance, and under the supervision of the military, as this part of Iowa was still in the possession of the Indians. By the terms of the treaty made at Agency City, October 11, 1842, the title of the Indians expired October 11, 1845. In the Spring of this year, however, William Mason selected his location about two miles north of Palmyra, and remained on it during the Summer, although not permitted by the government to make any improvements. Among the early settlers were, Henry James, Robert Rees, P. P. Henderson, Alexander Gindler, Samuel Hayworth, Joseph Scott, D. Booker, and Messrs. Myric, Paul, and Dotson. When Polk County was organized under an act of the Legislature passed January 17, 1846, it included the territory now embraced in the northern tier of townships of Warren County, so that Mr. Parmalee's saw mill was at that time really in Polk County. In January, 1849, Warren County was organized with its present boundaries; the first County Commissioners being Samuel Hayworth, Alexander Gindler, and D. Booker. P. P. Henderson was the sheriff who officiated in the organization. Indianola, the county seat, was located in December following, and building commenced on the town site in the Spring of 1850.

ISAAC G. WRIGHT, Auditor.	JAMES M. MILLEN, Treasurer.
JONAS E. LUCAS, Clerk.	MILES W. JUDKINS, Recorder.
JOSEPH T. MEEK, Sheriff.	HOWARD A. HUFF, Superintendent.

SAMUEL IRWIN, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

Warren County lies immediately south of Polk, in which the state capital is situated. It contains about 571 square miles, or 365,440 acres. Excellent drainage is afforded by the Des Moines River and its affluents, and several of the latter are of sufficient volume to afford abundant power for mills and manufactories. Springs and small brooks are frequent, and afford the county an admirable supply of water for the convenience of the farming community. The general trend of the waters tributary to the Des Moines River, is in a northeasterly direction.

Considerable bodies of timber skirt the principal streams, and valuable groves are interspersed among the upland prairies. The timber is tolerably well distributed, although more abundant in the vicinity of the Des Moines River than elsewhere, and this section may be said to be heavily wooded. Ascending the streams, the forests become more limited, and, finally, in the southwestern portion of the county, are confined to the valleys. In all sections, however, the timber is rapidly encroaching upon the prairies.

The uplands between the streams are generally gently undulating in the eastern portion of the county; in the western half the divides ascend more abruptly from the valleys and the surface is consequently more rolling; but a limited area along Wolf Creek is the only portion that may be described as broken. The valleys consist of narrow tracts of bottom lands, bordered by acclivities more or less abrupt, which vary from fifty to two hundred feet in height, and are usually steeper on the right or south margin of the valleys, than upon the opposite sides.

The soil is uniformly a fine black loam of good depth and a high degree of fertility, except on small tracts in the northeast part of the county, where the drift has been worn away, exposing the shales of the lower coal measures, from which are derived the light-colored soil frequently observed near the Des Moines River. The underlying drift deposits of mottled clays, sand, and gravel are here somewhat thinner than in other counties farther northward. Like the soil proper, they are thin and sometimes wanting altogether along the acclivities bordering the valleys, leaving the rock exposed or covered only by a thin layer of debris. Descending to the valleys, the soil is found to be composed of fine alluvial deposits occupying nearly their entire width, gravelly elevations, or terraces, very seldom occurring.

THE COAL BEDS.

Warren County lies altogether within the coal region, overlapping all three of its principal formations known as the lower, middle, and upper coal measures. The lower measures outcrop in the northeast part of the county, and occupy about one-third of its area; the middle formation occupies the larger portion of the remainder, the upper formation being limited to a portion of the southwestern township and isolated patches elsewhere.

Only the upper portion of the lower coal measure has yet been reached by miners. The principal mines of this formation are at Dillard's farm, two miles above Hoover's mill; at Taylor's, two or three miles northeast of Hartford; at Allen's mill on Middle River; at Watts' mill; at Parson's, on South River; at Helm's, on the same stream, south of Indianola; at Randolph's, three miles west of the last named; and at Jenck's, in the southeast part of the county. At these places the beds are from two to four feet thick, and yield a very good quality of coal similar to that of the Des Moines beds.

In the middle formation coal has been found at various places within the limits previously described, and worked to some extent, but the beds are seldom more than twenty, and usually not more than fifteen inches in thickness. In some places they are of poor quality, but in others very good. No coal has been found in the upper formation in this county.

Good building stone is not abundant in this county. Both the lower and middle coal formations afford sandstones in abundance; but they are generally soft, and require much care in their selection. Some of the layers harden after removal from the quarry and make very good building material. Limestone sufficiently pure for making quicklime has been found in a few localities, but seldom furnishes a durable building stone as it rapidly disintegrates upon exposure. Materials for the manufacture of good brick are found in profusion, and brick can be supplied with such cheapness that the slight deficiency of rock suitable for building purposes is unimportant.

MILITARY RECORD.

Warren County is credited on the books of the Adjutant General with 1,005 soldiers furnished during the War of the Rebellion.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The county maintains about 120 public schools, supplied with school houses valued at eighty or ninety thousand dollars. The total compensation of teachers is from $22,000 to $25,000 annually; the total cost of maintaining schools, including various contingent expenses and cost of repairing, furnishing, and building new school houses, is from $35,000 to $45,000 annually. The permanent school fund of the county is $28,408.18.

INDIANOLA.

This is the seat of justice and the principal town of Warren County. It is located on the prairie about one mile north of the geographical center of the county, and nearly the same distance from South River, in the midst of a densely populated district. It posesses all the material advantages to be found in the best interior towns of the state, and enjoys educational, religious, and social privileges of a high order. It is a prosperous and enterprising town, destined to a substantial and permanent growth, though not aspiring to the dignity of a large city owing to its proximity to Des Moines and its location away from the great railroad thoroughfares. It is connected with the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad by a branch road from Des Moines, and is a shipping point for a large amount of produce and live stock. It is incorporated as a city of the second class.

The town was located as the county seat in December, 1849, and building commenced on the site early in 1850. Among the first residents were Zebulon Hackett, Amos Booker, and P. P. Henderson.

COURT HOUSE.

The court house is an excellent brick building on a foundation of sandstone. The ground plan is 60x117 feet, and the height from the ground to the cupola 120 feet. It is constructed upon the most approved plan, and cost about $48,000. The building was erected in 1867, and completed in 1868.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

This institution of learning, formerly a seminary, was located here under the auspices of the Des Moines Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It is now a very promising and popular educational institution, with a considerable endowment and an efficient Faculty. It is provided with ample grounds, an excellent college building and other facilities.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

In 1867, also, a fine public school building was erected at a cost of $15,000. This, it is understood, was the cost of the building without furnishing. The ground plan is 36x66 feet, height three stories, and the edifice is well finished and furnished.

The schools are graded in excellent manner, and employ nine teachers and a superintendent.

The newspapers of Indianola are the Herald, the Tribune, and the Record. The Herald is a Republican journal, published every Thursday by Graham & Knox. The Tribune is Democratic. It was established in 1873, by George F. Parker, the present editor and proprietor, and is issued every Thursday. The Record was established in July, 1870, by G. N. Udell, as the Independent, its name indicating its politics. In two months time, however, it passed into the hands of the Indianola Printing Company and became Republican, under the name of the Leader. In May, 1873, it was purchased by Mr. Carleton, who sold in August, 1873, to J. A. Everett, the present editor, who gave it its present name. It is Republican in politics; issued Thursdays.

OTHER TOWNS.

The other towns and post offices in the county are: Ackworth, Carlisle, Hammondsburgh, Hartford, Lacona, Lawrenceburgh, Liberty Center, Lathrop, Madora, New Virginia, Norwalk, Palmyra, Rose Mount, Saint Mary's, Sandyville, Schonberg, Sharon, Spring Hill, and Summerset. Ackworth has an academy maintained by the Society of Friends, which employs two teachers, and numbers about fifty pupils. Lacona also has an academy.

SIOUX COUNTY.

This county is on the western border, in the second tier from the north line of the state. In extent it is twenty-four miles north and south, by an average of thirty-three miles east and west, and therefore contains about seven hundred and ninety-two square miles.

The principal streams are Big Sioux, Rock and Floyd Rivers; also the West Branch of Floyd, Otter and Indian Creeks. Big Sioux River forms the western boundary of the county, furnishes water-power for mills, and is bordered in many places by groves of timber. Rock River is a tributary of the Big Sioux, and is a beautiful stream, with a valley of great fertility, and has some small groves of native timber bordering its banks. Floyd River crosses the county in a southwesterly direction, draining four or five townships, while the West Branch rises in the north part of the county, and flowing south drains several of the central and southern townships. Every part of the county is admirably drained, and the land susceptible of easy cultivation, there being no swamps or marshes, and but very little broken land. From the valleys along the streams, the upland prairies rise by gentle slopes, and then stretch away for miles in a succession of broad undulations. Before being brought under cultivation, the surface in the summer season was covered with the most luxuriant growths of wild grass; but when cultivated, produces abundantly wheat, oats, corn, and other kinds of grain, as well as vegetables. The only broken surface in the county is that formed by the bluffs of the Big Sioux. In some places the bluffs are from 150 to 200 feet in height from the water to the general level of the uplands. Being very steep, and destitute of trees these bluffs form an interesting and conspicuous feature of the scenery of this rich and beautiful valley.

The only stone in the county are the boulders, and timber being scarce, there is a lack of native building material. Since the completion of the Sioux City & St. Paul Railroad, however, pine lumber is furnished at reasonable rates at the stations in the county.

HISTORICAL.

Among the earliest white settlers of Sioux County were F. M. Hubble, E. L. Stone, Joseph Bell, W. H. Frame, and Francis Frame. They located in the valley of the Big Sioux, prior to 1860, while the county was regularly organized that same season, with a population of only fifteen persons. The election was held at a place known as "Buzzard's Roost," (probably some settler's cabin in the valley of the Big Sioux.) The following county officers were elected: W. H. Frame, County Judge; F. M. Hubble, Clerk; and E. L. Stone, Treasurer and Recorder. For ten years the county gained but little in population, owing to the war, and the apprehension of Indian troubles on the border. At the presidential election of 1868, only 11 votes were cast—6 for the Grant electoral ticket, and 5 for the Seymour ticket. After 1870, the population received large accessions, for in 1873, the census gave a population of 2,872.

The first county seat was a place called Calliope, situated on the Big Sioux River, in the southwest part of the county. It was laid out in 1860, and was recognized as the county seat up to 1872. The first District Court convened here, August 12, 1871, Judge Addison Oliver, presiding. The first religious meeting in the county was held at Calliope by the Methodists, in September, 1868. The first school was organized and taught the year before. The first newspaper published was the Sioux County Herald, at Calliope, by John R. Curry.

In 1869, Henry Hospers and others residing at Pella, Iowa, began to consider a proposition for establishing a colony at some suitable location. A committee was appointed to visit such locations as seemed to offer favorable inducements. This committee consisted of Henry Hospers, D. Vanden Bros., L. Vander Meer, and J. Pelmulder, who finally agreed upon Sioux County, and reported accordingly. In one week 562 preemptions were filed on lands lying in the southeast part of the county; and in the Spring of 1870, forty families from Pella settled upon claims in Sioux County. Pending the establishment of this colony, Henry Hospers received from the State Board of Immigration a commission as Agent to the Netherlands, and succeeded in making large additions to the settlement. On a high and gently rolling prairie, centrally located in the colony, in the Summer of 1870, Henry Hospers laid out the town of Orange City, embracing a quarter section of land. By a vote of the people of the county in 1872, the county seat was removed from Calliope to Orange City. The publication of the Sioux County Herald was also changed from the former to the latter place. The colony is chiefly composed of people from Holland, or Holland settlements in other parts of the United States, but welcome all classes of good citizens, regardless of nationality. Within three years after the first settlement by this colony, there were within its bounds eleven school houses, all supplied with teachers imparting instruction in the primary branches of an English education.

COUNTY OFFICIALS FOR 1875.

LEVI M. BLACK, Auditor.

ANTONIE J. BETTEN, JR., Treasurer.	JELLE PELMULDER, Clerk.
NICHOLAS JONGEWAARD, Sheriff.	FRANCIS LECOCQ, Recorder.

EDWARD O. PLUMB, Superintendent of Common Schools.
HENRY HOSPERS, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

ORANGE CITY.

This place is located in the midst of a rich and beautiful prairie farming region, about three miles from the line of the Sioux City & St. Paul Railroad. It has a public square, around which the principal business houses are located. Great attention has been devoted to the planting of trees in the park, and fronting all the lots sold or occupied. As before stated, this place became the county seat in 1872.

EAST ORANGE.—This is the railroad station about three miles somewhat south of east of Orange City. The railroad company have a fine depot building, and the place will doubtless become a good shipping point. It is in the valley of Floyd River.

HOSPERS.—This is a railroad station in the eastern part of the county in the valley of Floyd River, but a very small stream at this distance from its mouth.

CALLIOPE, was the first county seat, and the first town laid out in the county. It is pleasantly located on Big Sioux River in the southwest part of the county, and in the oldest settled portion.

O'BRIEN COUNTY.

O'Brien County is the second from the the west line and the second from the north line of the state, is twenty-four miles square, containing a superficial area of 576 square miles.

The largest stream is the Little Sioux River, which crosses the southeast corner. Henry Creek rises in the northeastern part of the county, draining several townships, while Waterman and Mill Creeks flow through the central and southern townships, and are all branches of the Little Sioux. Floyd River rises in several branches in the northwestern part of the county, affording drainage to several townships. The supply of timber is very limited, being mostly confined to groves on the Little Sioux, in the southeastern corner of the county, and is chiefly oak, hickory, maple, elm and cottonwood. When protected from the fires timber grows rapidly, and many of the settlers have promising groves of planted trees. The soil of this region is exceedingly productive, and in its wild state produces luxuriant crops of native grass, which is excellent for pasturage or hay. The bottom or table lands along the streams, are composed of a deep, rich vegetable mold, on a sub-soil resembling clay mixed with gravel. The soil of the upland prairies is the highly productive bluff deposit of this part of the state, with a vegetable coating, and produces in great perfection all kinds of grain and vegetables. The surface is generally undulating, and susceptible of easy cultivation. There are no exposures of rocks "in place," or in quarries, in the county. The only stone being the boulders that are found scattered over the surface, and are mostly granite, red-quartzite, with a few magnesian limestone. The material of the bluff formation is manufactured into very good brick, and this, of course, is abundant. Excellently pure water is easily obtained in all places at a few feet below the surface. The great abundance of excellent wild grass and pure water render this a fine region for stock-raising, especially where provision is made for winter shelter. In this, as well as other counties in this part of the state, settlers must plant trees to insure a future supply of fuel, and thus may soon obviate the necessity of depending upon coal shipped from other parts of the state.

HISTORICAL.

The first white settlers in O'Brien County were H. H. Waterman and family, who on the 11th day of July, 1856, located on the northeast quarter of section 26, township 94, range 39. They removed here from Bremer County, Iowa, but were formerly from the State of New York.

The county was organized in 1860, the first election being held at the house of H. H. Waterman, where the following first county officers were chosen: J. C. Furber, County Judge; H. H. Waterman, Treasurer and Recorder; Archibald Murray, Clerk and County Surveyor. The first county seat was at a place called O'Brien, in the southeast corner of the county, where the principal settlement was made prior to the construction of the Sioux City and St. Paul Railroad. The first district court was held here by Judge Henry Ford. The first religious meeting held in the county assembled at the home of pioneer Waterman, while Mrs. Waterman taught the first school at O'Brien. The first newspaper was the O'Brien Pioneer, commenced by B. F. McCormack and J. R. Pumphrey. It is now edited and published by A. H. Willits & Son.

At the general election of 1872 a vote was taken on the question of the permanent location of the county seat, which resulted in favor of the geographical center of the county. Accordingly a town was laid out at that point, to which the name of Primghar was given. At the time the surveyors were engaged in the work of laying off the town plat, the persons present were Messrs. Pumphrey, Roberts, Inman, McCormack, Green, Hays, Albright and Renok. The initials of these names in the order given form the word Primghar, and hence it was agreed that this should be the name of the new town. The first house on the town site was erected by J. R. Pumphrey for county purposes. The next was a house of public entertainment, erected by C. F. Albright.

The county officials for 1875 are as follows:

ANDERSON J. EDWARDS, Auditor.	ALONZO H. WILLITS, Clerk.
JULIUS C. DOLING, Treasurer.	ANDREW J. BROOKS, Recorder.
EDWARD A. NISSEN, Sheriff.	JESSE A. SMITH, Supt. of Common Schools.

JOHN F. BURROUGHS, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

PRIMGHAR.

This has been the county seat since 1872. It is located at the center of the county on a high and well drained prairie, 25 miles from Cherokee, 28 from Spencer, and 28 from Sibley. The place is laid out with a public park, which has been planted with forest trees, and as it is surrounded by a region of great fertility, will doubtless make a thriving town.

SHELDON.—This place is located on the line of the Sioux City & St. Paul Railroad, in the northwest part of the county. The town site is on a beautiful prairie slope rising from the railroad, and extending back on the higher land. The railroad was completed to this place, January 1, 1873, and the first building erected about the same time. Among the first buildings was a commodious hotel erected by the railroad company. It is a station and business point for a large extent of country.

O'BRIEN.—This is a village in the southeast part of the county, and is situated on a fine, dry plateau about seventy-five feet above the Little Sioux, the river forming a semi-circle around the village. The elevated banks on the opposite side form a pleasing back-ground to the landscape in that direction. This was the former county seat, and is the oldest settled portion of the county.

LYON COUNTY.

Lyon is the northwest county of the state, the Big Sioux River separating it from Dakota Territory. It is thirty-seven miles long, east and west, by about seventeen north and south, containing an area of about 573 square miles, and has an altitude of nearly 1,400 feet above the sea level.

The principal streams are the Big Sioux, which borders it on the west, and the Rock River with their numerous tributaries. The main branch of Rock River flows centrally across the county, receiving near the south line its principal tributary, Little Rock River, which flows through the county from northeast to southwest. A considerable tributary called Mud Creek, also rises in Minnesota and meanders nearly across the county. Among other tributaries of Rock River are Kanaranzo, Otter and Tom Creeks. These are all clear and beautiful streams, and completely water all parts of the county. The Big Sioux and Rock Rivers furnish some excellent mill sites. The valley of the Big Sioux is from three to six miles wide, and is exceedingly fertile. Along this stream are some fine groves of native timber, and there are also a few groves on Rock River, though the supply of timber in the county is quite limited. The prairies are rolling, and in fertility are unsurpassed, there being but little or no waste land in the county. The soil is generally a drift deposit, covered with a black sandy loam and vegetable mold. It produces the finest crops of cereals and grasses.

By an act of the General Assembly, approved January 15, 1851, the boundaries of the county were fixed, and the name of Buncombe given to it. By this name it was known on the early maps. By an act, approved January 12, 1853, Buncombe County and several others were attached to Wahkaw (now Woodbury) County for judicial and revenue purposes, and thus remained until its organization January 1, 1872; but by an act, approved September 11, 1862, the name was changed to Lyon, in honor of General Nathaniel Lyon, who fell at the battle of Wilson's Creek. At the time of the creation of Buncombe County the title to the soil still vested in the Sioux Indians, but by a treaty of July 23, 1851, they relinquished the title to the United States, and stipulated to remove at once to their reservation on the Upper Missouri. They did not take their final departure, however, until several years after. The governmentsurveys in the county were not completed until 1857.

Long before there were any permanent settlers in the county this was the resort of many adventurous hunters and trappers. One of the most noted was Daniel McLaren, who built his cabin on the Big Sioux at the mouth of the little creek which now bears his name. After the county began to settle he took a homestead, but finally went further west. "Old Tom" had his cabin at the mouth of Tom Creek, near the present town of Rock Rapids, and was killed by the Indians. The names of three other daring adventurers were Roy McGregor, George Clark and Thomas Lockhart, young men from Massachusetts, who were here in the Summer of 1862. McGregor was killed by the Indians; Clark was drowned in March, 1863; and Lockhart, after many narrow escapes, returned to civilization. Lewis P. Hyde, from Minnesota, made the first permanent settlement July 23, 1866, taking a homestead on the Big Sioux River, about two miles below the present Town of Beloit. He, with his sons, built the first settler's cabin. In the Fall they returned to Minnesota and spent the Winter, coming back in Spring with their families. Sioux City, seventy miles distant, was the nearest market, and during the Summer of 1867 the Sioux Indians were their only neighbors. In the Fall of 1867 Halvor Nelson, and his brother Ole Nelson, of Clayton County, visited the county seeking a location for a mill. Early in the Spring of 1868, with a colony, they returned to the county, and Halvor Nelson immediately set to work to build a saw mill. Part of this colony settled west of the Big Sioux River in Dakota. In May, 1868, H. D. Rice went from Clay County and settled on Rock River, locating at the place known as Doon. Mrs. Rice came in September, and was the first white woman to settle on Rock River. In August of this year Emerick Irwin and H. W. Reves built cabins and settled near, and J. B. Hartron in December following. These persons, and the little colony at Beloit, comprised the population during the Winter of 1868-'69. In the following May, Charles H. Johnson, of Wisconsin, settled on Little Rock River at the mouth of Otter Creek, and soon after T. W. Johnson, A. A. Johnson, Emerick Irwin, and the Messrs. McGuire, located in the same vicinity. In June of the same year D. C. Whitehead, of Webster County, went up Rock River to look for a location. On his way he was joined by Matthias Sweesy and Delos Tonsley. On the 23d of June they reached the point to which Mr. Whitehead gave the name of Rock Rapids, where they selected homesteads, and thus made the beginning of another thriving settlement. The following also settled in different parts of the county prior to 1870: George W. McQueen, John A. Wagner, S. G. Martin, Justice Martin, Amos Severson, Thorsetен Kovstel, Ole Sorenson, Hans J. Gierson, Simon Tolinson, John Albertson, E. W. Lewis and others, the colony at Beloit also receiving considerable additions. At the close of the year 1869 the population of the county had reached about one hundred, although the first settlement was made three years before. Since this time the population has rapidly increased.

On the 28th of May, 1871, the first white child was born in the county—Odena Lee, daughter of A. K. Lee. The first sermon was preached by Reverend Elief Oleson, at the residence of Mr. Nelson, at Beloit, September 6, 1870; and at the same time and place was solemnized the first marriage—that of Ole Torberson and Petrina Peterson. The first death was that of Lyman A. Wagner, son of John A. Wagner, December 26, 1870, aged four years and twenty days. The first school was taught in the Winter of 1870-1, by Mrs. D. C. Whitehead, at Rock Rapids. On the 25th of July, 1871, was commenced, by C. E. Bristol, at Rock Rapids, the publication of the first newspaper—the Rock Rapids Journal. At first this paper was printed out of the county. The first paper printed in the county was the Lyon County Press, the first number of which was issued at Doon, September 20, 1872, by L. B. Raymond & Co.

On January 1, 1871, Lyon County severed its connection with Woodbury, and was organized as an independent county. At this time the county was divided into two civil townships—Lyon and Rock. The first election was held October 10, 1871, at which ninety-seven votes were polled. The following county officers were elected: Charles Goetz, Auditor; James H. Wagner, Treasurer; D. C. Whitehead, Clerk; T. W. Johnson, Sheriff; Thomas Thorson, Recorder; L. A. Ball, Superintendent of Schools; Ethan Allen, Surveyor; and J. S. Howell, Charles H. Johnson and H. T. Helgerson, County Supervisors.

The county officials for 1875 are:

THOMAS THORSON, Auditor.	HARMON COOK, Clerk.
JAMES H. WAGNER, Treasurer.	OATIS B. DEPEE, Recorder.
MOSES NIXON, Sheriff.	W. S. PEIRCE, Supt. of Common Schools.

F. W. ALLEN, Chairman of Board of Supervisors.

ROCK RAPIDS.—This is the county seat, and is situated on a beautiful prairie table land at the junction of Rock River and Kanaranzi Creek. Adjoining the town there is a very pretty grove of native timber, and the river here furnishes several excellent mill sites. There is an abundance of rock suitable for use in the construction of dams.

BELOIT.—This place is situated on Big Sioux River, at the extreme southwest corner of the county. There is fine water power here, and also some beautiful groves of maple, elm and other kinds of timber.

DOON.—This town is situated on a smooth plateau on the east bank of Rock River, at the confluence of Mud Creek, Rock and Little Rock Rivers. It commands a fine view of the valleys of these streams. Two fine water powers are furnished at this point.

LARCH WOOD.—This is the central point of a large colony from Illinois, and is surrounded by excellent farming lands. It is in the northwestern part of the county.

PALO ALTO COUNTY.

Palo Alto is the fourth county from the west line of the state, and the second from the north line, and contains 576 square miles. The west fork of the Des Moines River crosses the county, flowing in a southeasterly course. It enters about three miles west of the middle of the northern line, and passes out near the southeast corner. It has a number of small tributaries flowing in on both sides, two of the largest being Cylinder and Bridge Creeks. There are several small, but very pretty lakes, the principal ones being Lost Island Lake, Elbow Lake, Silver Lake, Rush Lake and Medium Lake—all near the western boundary of the county, except the last named. These little lakes are well supplied with fish.

The county contains an aggregate of about two thousand acres of native timber, mostly skirting the Des Moines River, with a few small groves bordering the lakes mentioned. The leading varieties are burr oak, walnut, hickory, cottonwood, maple, linn, elm, ash and hackberry. Among the common varieties of wild fruits, are plums, grapes, strawberries and raspberries. The surface is generally rolling, with a deep, rich and productive soil. Along the Des Moines River there is a bottom on either side which before being brought into cultivation, produces a heavy growth of wild grass, some of which is the blue-joint variety, and regarded as excellent for pasturage or hay. On the upland prairies this variety predominates, and is regarded as very nutritious for stock. The chief productions are corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, and vegetables generally. The Des Moines River valley is especially adapted to corn and vegetables, while the upland prairies produce fine crops of wheat, and other kinds of small grain. The different small fruits are cultivated to some extent, and with success. The farmers of this county have devoted much attention to the raising of stock, for which it is well adapted. Numerous peat beds have been found in different parts of the county. There are probably no exposures of rock in place, the only rocks found being the boulders scattered on the prairies, and around the borders of the lakes. Good well water is obtained generally throughout all parts of the county, on the highest prairies as readily as in the valleys. The western part of the county lies on the great watershed, dividing the waters which flow into the Mississippi from those which flow into the Missouri.

HISTORICAL.

The first white settlement in Palo Alto County, was made in the vicinity of the present Town of Emmetsburg, by a colony composed mostly of Irish farmers, who arrived at their destination on the 5th day of July, 1855. Among them were James Nolan, John Nolan, John Neary, Martin Laughlin, Edward Mahan, Thomas Down and Orin Sylvester, all having families, and all from Kane County, Illinois. The colony from time to time received large additions, and extended up and down the valley across the county. They engaged largely in stock-raising, which proved a successful business. The Indian troubles at Spirit Lake, in March, 1857, had the effect for some time to retard the settlement of that part of the state. Although the population did not probably exceed fifty persons, the county was duly organized, December 20, 1858, and the election was held at the house of James Nolan; when the following were elected: James Hickey, County Judge; John W. Mulroney, Treasurer; and Thomas H. Tobin, Sheriff. Paoli was the first county seat, and some years ago a court house was erected there, but the county business was afterwards removed to Emmetsburg. For some time the county business was chiefly transacted at a place called Soda Bar, near the center. The first public religious meetings in the county were held at the house of James Downey, in July, 1857, by Catholics, most of the first settlers being adherents of that church. The first newspaper was the Palo Alto Democrat, started at Emmetsburg, by James White, in 1869.

The county officers for 1875 are:

WILLIAM H. SHEA, Auditor.	THOMAS J. PROUTY, Clerk.
MICHAEL L. BROWN, Treasurer.	JEREMIAH L. MARTIN, Recorder.
PATRICK C. NOLAN, Sheriff.	ALBERT L. DAY, Supt. Common Schools.

CHARLES GIBBS, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

EMMETSBURG.

This is the county seat, and was the first town laid out in the county, but for a number of years made very slow progress. It is situated in the valley of the Des Moines, on the east side of the river, adjoining groves of timber. The river affords good water power at this point. The location is a pleasant one for a town, being on ground sloping toward the stream. Although, as stated, it was the first village laid out in the county, it did not only began to assume the appearance of a town in 1871. During that year, Marvin Coonan, the original proprietor, caused a re-survey and enlargement of the town plat. This was done in view of the prospect of the early extension of the Iowa Division of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and the prospective construction of a road up the Des Moines valley. It is on the direct line of travel from Algona west to Spencer, Sibley, Rock Rapids and Sioux Falls, and is surrounded by a fertile agricultural region.

CLAY COUNTY.

Clay is in the second tier from the north line of Iowa, and is the third county from the west boundary of the state. It is twenty-four miles square, containing an area of 368,640 acres. The Little Sioux River and its tributaries afford water and drainage in nearly all portions of the county. This stream, with its serpentine windings, has a length of not less than seventy miles within the limits of Clay County, and furnishes quite a number of good water powers. Its largest tributary is Ocheyedan Creek, which rises in Osceola County and, flowing in a southeasterly direction, empties into Little Sioux River near Spencer. Both these streams have broad, rich and beautiful valleys. Among other smaller streams are Willow, Prairie, Henry and Muddy Creek. The eastern portion of the county has several small lakes, the most important of which are Lost Island Lake, Swan Lake, Pickerel Lake, Virgin Lake and Mud Lake. Fish abound in some of them.

The county has a very limited supply of native timber, but more than some of the other counties in this part of the state. The surface is undulating prairie, with scarcely any waste land, and the soil is exceedingly fertile. The staple productions are wheat, oats, corn, grass and the various root crops. The county is well adapted to grazing on account of the abundance of nutritious wild grass and pure water.

HISTORICAL.

The first settlement of whites in the county was made in July, 1856, by Ambrose Mead and Christian Kirchner with their families. The former built his cabin on section 34, township 94, range 38, and the latter on section 32 of the same township and range. John J. Bicknell had the honor of holding the plow that broke the first sod in the county, while Ambrose S. Mead was honored by driving the oxen. In the Fall of 1856 there were several more families came in, to wit: James Bicknell, Ezra Wilcox and two men named Gillett.

In the latter part of February, 1857, the Indians, on their way to Spirit Lake before the massacre, visited the infant settlement in this county, killed four head of cattle belonging to Mr. Kirchner, and drove away ten horses and five or six head of cattle belonging to Mr. Mead. Passing on to what was known as Gillett's Grove, they drove away forty head of cattle, four horses, and destroyed most of the personal property of the Gilletts. The five or six families in the county, in consequence of this raid, fled and were away several months. The first marriage was that of John A. Kirchner and Mary J. Bicknell, daughter of James Bicknell. The first birth was that of Ella, a daughter of these parties. The first death was that of Clay Crego, infant son of Y. B. Crego. A barn erected by C. Kirchner was the first frame building in the county.

The county organization was perfected October 18, 1858, and the following were the first county officers: Charles C. Smeltzer, Judge; Solomon M. Foreman, Treasurer and Recorder, and also County Surveyor; Ezra M. Wilcox, Clerk; John Kindelsperger, Drainage Commissioner; C. Kirchner, Sr., Coroner; and Ambrose S. Mead, Superintendent of Schools.

At the time of the organization nearly all the settlers were in the southwest corner of the county, and Peterson was made the county seat. There was at this place a considerable body of timber and a good water power on the Little Sioux, on which John A. Kirchner erected a grist and saw mill.

L. M. PEMBERTON, Auditor.	ACKLEY HUBBARD, Clerk.
MARION E. GRIFFIN, Treasurer.	A. H. CHENEY, Recorder.
WILLARD A. BENTON, Sheriff.	JAMES F. THOMPSON, Supt. Com. Schools.

P. PAGE OLMSTEAD, Chairman of Board of Supervisors.

SPENCER.

This place is now the county seat, and is situated on the east side of the Little Sioux. The valley here is broad, and unsurpassed in fertility. The first settlement of the present town of Spencer dates back only to 1869. Soon after the first settlement of the county, George E. Spencer laid out a town on the opposite side of the river, but there was never a house on the town plat. Its proprietor soon after became an officer in the Union army, and, after the war, a United States Senator from the State of Alabama. The proprietors of the new town laid out ten years later saw proper to retain the name. The river affords good water power at this point.

EMMET COUNTY.

This county, which was named after the immortal Irish patriot, Emmet, is in the northern tier, the fourth from the western boundary of the state, and is twenty-four miles east and west by seventeen north and south, and contains four hundred and eight square miles.

The Des Moines River enters the county near the northwestern corner, and flows across it in a southeasterly course, while the east fork of the same river, having its source in Lake Okamanpadu on the northern border, flows also in a southeasterly course across the northeast corner of the county. Both streams have several tributaries that drain a considerable portion of the county. Numerous small lakes of beautifully clear water are scattered over the county, among which are the Iowa in the northeast corner, the Tuttle five or six miles west of it, while near the center of the county is Swan Lake, a very irregular body of water several miles in length. In the western part of the county are Crane, Grass, Elmer, Eagle, Cheever's, Ryan, High, Clear, and Twelve Mile Lakes. Many of these have groves of timber on their borders, making this one of the best timbered counties in Northwestern Iowa, and all are supplied with fish. The valley of the Des Moines which passes through this county, is one of the most fertile and beautiful farming regions in Iowa, while it lies directly east of the Great Watershed, and, therefore, occupies nearly the highest land in the state. There is no difficulty in obtaining in any locality a good supply of the purest water. Fine groves of timber skirt the Des Moines River, consisting chiefly of oak, walnut, maple, hickory, elm, and cottonwood. There are some beds of peat in the county, but as yet they have been very little used as fuel. There are no exposures of rock in the county, the only stone obtained for use in building being the boulders of the drift, which are found scattered over the prairies, and about the borders of the lakes. The county is well adapted to the growth of cereals, vegetables, and grasses.

HISTORY.

In 1856, settlement began in that part of the county where Estherville is now located. Among the settlers of this year were R. E. Ridley, A. H. Ridley, George Granger, William Granger, Jesse Coverdale, D. W. Hoyt, Adolphus Jenkins, and Henry Jenkins, who mostly located near the present town of Estherville.

The first child born was a son of John Rourike and wife at the Mud Lakes Settlement in the south part of the county, in the Spring of 1857, while the first marriage was that of George Jenkins and Adelia Ridley in the Spring of 1859.

Emmet County was organized in February, 1859, and by the census of 1860 contained a population of 105. The commissioners who officiated in locating the county seat were Lewis H. Smith, of Kossuth County, and Orlando C. Howe, of Dickinson. They received their appointment from Judge Hubbard, of Sioux City. The first county officers were: Adolphus Jenkins, County Judge; Jesse Coverdale, Clerk of the District Court; R. E. Ridley, Treasurer and Recorder; A. H. Ridley, Sheriff; Robert F. Ridley, Superintendent of Schools; and Henry Jenkins, Surveyor. Along the Des Moines River valley, south of Estherville, there is a large and prosperous settlement of Norwegians, who have located in the county since 1860.

The county officials for 1875 are:

F. E. ALLEN, Auditor.	J. M. BAKER, Clerk.
D. M. L. BEMIS, Treasurer.	JESSE COVERDALE, Recorder.
KNUT ESPERSET, Sheriff.	E. H. BALLARD, Supt. of Common Schools.

ALFRED RIXBY, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

ESTHERVILLE.

This place selected by the commissioners as the county seat, is situated on the east side of the Des Moines River, has some fine groves of timber in the vicinity, and is surrounded on all sides by an excellent farming country. The river at this point affords an excellent water power. A part of the town was laid out in 1858, and before the location of the county seat; the original proprietors being Adolphus Jenkins, R. E. Ridley, and Jesse Coverdale. The name was given in honor of Mrs. Esther A. Ridley, wife of R. E. Ridley, who lived here one Winter without seeing another white woman. R. E. Ridley built the first house in the town, and the first child born in the place was his daughter Anna, born in the Spring of 1858. Soon after the Spirit Lake massacre in the Spring of 1857, a small military force was stationed here for the protection of the border against the Indians; a fort, or stockade, was erected, and a number of frame buildings put up by the Government. The first newspaper in the county was started here by O. C. Bates and Eaton Northrop, 1868, and was called the Northern Vindicator. With the natural advantages of being in the midst of a rich farming region, with fine water power and a good supply of timber in the immediate vicinity, the place has all the elements necessary for becoming one of considerable importance. The location is one of the most beautiful in the valley of the Des Moines.

DICKINSON COUNTY.

This is the third county from the west line of the state in the north tier, and was named in honor of D. S. Dickinson of New York. It is twenty-four miles east and west, by seventeen north and south, and therefore embraces a superficial area of four hundred and eight square miles. This is the most elevated county in the state, as it lies on the Great Watershed, and is drained by the upper branches of the Little Sioux River, one branch having its source in Minnesota. The two largest lakes in the state are located in this county, to wit, Spirit and Okoboji. Spirit Lake (or Minne-Waukon, as the Dakotas called it) embraces about twelve square miles of surface, its width and length being nearly equal, while its northern border rests directly on the northern boundary of the state. The shores are gravelly, and on the north and west banks are considerable bodies of timber. Okoboji Lake lies directly south of Spirit Lake, and is connected with it by an outlet, its surface being about six feet below that of Spirit Lake. Okoboji Lake extends about five miles southward from the point nearest Spirit Lake, then turns westward about the same distance, and then northward again nearly five miles, so that the entire length, in all its bendings, is about fifteen miles. The eastern area of this lake is comparatively narrow, and at the point where it turns westward it is so narrow as to be easily bridged. West of this lies the main body of the lake, which the Indians called Minnetonka, meaning "great water," in the Sioux dialect. This lake, with its surroundings, is the most beautiful and attractive in Iowa, having a clean, gravelly beach, clear water, and is bordered by fine groves of native timber. West of Spirit, and north of Okoboji Lakes, there are some smaller ones resting in depressions, several of which are beautiful little sheets of water. Surrounding them are some irregular elevations, the highest point being eighty feet above the surface of Spirit Lake, which is believed to be the most elevated point of land in the state. The outlet of Lake Okoboji is a stream about five miles in length, with a rapid fall, and flows into Little Sioux River. This outlet affords excellent and reliable power for machinery.

The general character of the surface is undulatory, largely prairie, which has a good soil of dark loam and exhaustless fertility, well adapted to the growth of all kinds of grain, vegetables, and grasses cultivated in Northern Iowa. It is also a good stock raising county, as there is an abundance of pure water and nutritious grass, combined with shelter in the groves about the lakes. No exposures of stratified rock in place has been found in the county. On the shores of the lakes there are large deposits of drift boulders, principally granite and red quartzite, with occasionally a magnesian limestone. Although, as stated, this county lies upon the Great Watershed, and is the highest land in the state, there is nowhere any difficulty in obtaining excellent water at a depth of a few feet below the surface. Fuel is obtained from the groves about the lakes, which are supplied with a variety of excellent fish.

HISTORICAL.

This attractive portion of Northwestern Iowa secured the attention of settlers as early as 1856, at which time a number of families settled around the shores of Spirit and Okoboji Lakes, and about the headwaters of Little Sioux River. Roving bands of the Sioux Indians still lingered in this region, occasionally committing petty depredations upon the property of the settlers, and upon hunters and trappers who happened to come within their power. Finally, on the 8th or 9th of March, 1857, they committed the horrible murders and outrages which annihilated the population of the county, making an indiscriminate slaughter of men, women and children. There was at this time a small settlement at a place called Springfield, on the Des Moines River, in Minnesota, eight miles north of the Iowa line, but there was such a heavy snow on the ground as to render it almost impossible for the sparse settlements in this region to communicate with each other. The sufferers and victims in Dickinson County were the following:

Mr. Gardner, his wife and son all killed, and a daughter fifteen years of age taken captive. Mr. Luce, a son-in-law of Mr. Gardner, his wife and two children, all killed. Mr. Matlocks, his wife and five children, all killed; also a Mr. Matteson, who lived with the family. Mr. Howe and four children, all killed; also Mr. Noble, who lived in the family; Mrs. Howe and a Mrs. Thatcher of this family were taken captives, and subsequently killed by the Indians. Mr. Marble and child killed, and his wife taken captive. Three men named Granger, Snyder and Harriott, were also killed. Mrs. Marble and Miss Gardner who were taken captive, were some months after purchased through the intervention of some friendly Indians. These comprise probably all the families who resided in the county at this time. At the lakes and at Springfield, forty-one persons were killed outright, three wounded and four captured, while twelve other persons were missing, and the remains of several afterward found. Some of the bodies were burned in the houses fired by the Indians. They killed all the cattle of the settlers and destroyed their household goods, burning most of the cabins. As soon as the news of this massacre reached Fort Dodge, then the nearest considerable settlement, an expedition was organized under Major Williams, to proceed to the scene of the massacre. After much difficulty on account of the severe weather and deep snow, they arrived at Emmet in Emmet County, where they learned that the Indians had left the country, and that it was not necessary for the entire command to go over to the lakes. Twenty-two persons under the command of Captain J. C. Johnston, went over and buried the dead, and on their return Captain Johnston and Wm. Burkholder were frozen to death. The same season, and soon after the massacre, other settlers began to take the place made vacant by savage barbarity around the shores of these beautiful lakes, among whom were R. A. Smith, J. S. Prescott, W. B. Brown, C. F. Hill, Moses Miller, C. W. Furber, B. F. Parmenter, R. M. Wheelock, M. A. Blanchard, O. C. Howe, William Lamont, Morris Markham, Henry Barkman and George E. Spencer. Morris Markham was a trapper, and lived in the family of J. M. Thatcher previous to the massacre; but at that time, he and Mr. Thatcher both happened to be absent, and thus escaped the fate of the other settlers.

SPIRIT LAKE.

This is the county seat, and is located on the peninsula formed by Spirit and Okoboji Lakes. It is on a beautiful elevated prairie, about one mile south of the lower end of the lake from which it takes its name, and of which it commands a fine view. The county was organized in 1857, and this place became the county seat. The original projectors were George E. Spencer, O. C. Howe and —. Parmenter. When the original town was laid out the land still belonged to the government, but was subsequently entered by Henry Barkman. The first newspaper in the county was issued here by Orson Rice, and was named the Spirit Lake Beacon.

MILFORD.—This is a thriving village on the outlet of Lake Okoboji, in the south part of the county, has a fine water-power, and it is surrounded by an excellent farming and grazing region.

BUTLER COUNTY.

Butler County is situated in the third tier of counties south of the Minnesota line, and is directly distant therefrom about forty miles. It is also about forty miles distant northwardly, and about twenty-five miles eastwardly, from the center of the state. It is bounded on the north by Floyd County, on the south by Grundy County, on the east by Bremer County, and on the west by Franklin County. Within its limits are comprised sixteen congressional townships, aggregating 576 square miles, or 365,070 acres of land, in form a perfect square, sloping to the south and east. The general surface of the county is rolling prairie, more rolling in the north part than in the south. Very little of the surface is flat.

STREAMS.

Shellrock River, formerly called English River, the largest and most important stream in the county, rises in Lake Albert Lea, Freeborn County, Minnesota. Pursuing a general southeasterly course, it enters the county about two miles west of the center of the northern boundary, and passes out thereof about two miles south of the center of the eastern boundary. It empties into Cedar River in the northwest part of Black Hawk County. Its flow is rapid, over a sandy and limestone bed, and its fall so great that milling power is available at frequent intervals. Its banks, comparatively high and dry, are in this county heavily timbered. The waters of the Shellrock are exceedingly pure and clear, and are well stocked with fish.

The west fork of the Cedar River, rising in Cerro Gordo County, passes diagonally through the county from the northwest to the southeast. It passes out of the county on the east side, about five miles north of the southeast corner, and unites with the Cedar in the northwest part of Black Hawk County. The west fork has a sluggish flow, over a sandy and muddy bed, and is somewhat extensively bordered by marshes. Along its banks grow the best wild grasses found in the county. A number of small tributaries enter this stream from the north and west within the county.

Beaver River, having its source in the southern part of Franklin County, flows eastwardly through the southern tier of townships in Butler County, at an average distance from the Grundy County line of about two miles. Ordinarily it has but a small and slow flow of water, adapted, however, at several points, to milling purposes. Its bed is sandy, and its borders generally marshy. It derives its name from the fact that it was formerly the home of numerous beaver.

Coldwater Creek, an important western branch of the Shellrock River, runs eastwardly through the extreme northwestern part of the county. It is well timbered, and passes through an excellent agricultural country.

Flood Creek, an eastern tributary of the Shellrock; Otter Creek and other minor streams, tributaries of the west fork and the Beaver, in the central, southern and western parts of the county, are well distributed for local needs, and afford ample drainage.

Cold, clear and pure well-water abounds in the county, at an average depth of twenty-five feet.

TIMBER.

Many varieties of timber, of which oak, maple and elm principally comprise the body, to a greater or less extent border the streams, and exist in natural groves numerously and promiscuously scattered over the county. Artificial groves likewise exist in different parts of the county.

SOIL, STONE, ETC.

Near the streams the soil is generally sandy and the sub-soil gravelly. While producing fair crops of corn, it produces but light crops of wheat and oats. Elsewhere in the county the soil is mostly a rich, black loam, with a yellow clay sub-soil, yielding largely of the various cereals.

Limestone quarries are numerous, and supply good building material. Boulders, of the glacial period, rear their hard heads above the surface, in various forms and sizes. Clay and sand well adapted to the manufacture of brick are abundant.

PRODUCTIONS.

Wheat and corn are the principal productions of the county. Oats, barley, flax, rye and hay rank next as crops most extensively cultivated. Much and increasing attention is devoted to improvement in stock breeding, especially in horses and cattle. Choice breeds of hogs and sheep are largely raised; but the incursions of dogs and diseases of early times among sheep have lessened the interest in this branch of husbandry.

Fruit culture in the county is as yet attended with difficulties. Apples are not very successfully grown, and pears but little cultivated.

Much less than half the county is under tillage. Farms are enclosed in greater part by wire and board fences; many are wholly unenclosed. Farms of the latter description are mostly rented—the tenants living on the land, and the owners in towns. Several extensive stock farms, and valuable and ornate farm improvements, exist in different parts of the county.

POPULATION.

The population of the county, numbering at the present time about 13,000, includes a considerable representation of European nations. These are principally Germans and Irish, of which respectively there are prominent settlements. The remaining foreign citizens consist mainly of English, Scotch, Norwegians and Swedes. Of the native American population, the representatives of the New England States and of the State of New York predominate. Of the entire population of the county, the foreign element is less than one-fourth.

FINANCIAL.

The financial condition of the county is that of absolute freedom from debt. The public affairs of the county are well and economically administered; and as a happy result to tax-payers, the county tax is comparatively small.

RAILROADS.

The present and prospective railroad facilities of Butler County promise to be ample for the requirements of its inhabitants.

The Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, extending through all the southern tier of townships, following the valley of the Beaver, crosses the county from east to west. It was constructed by the Dubuque & Sioux City Railroad Company, and was completed within the limits of the county in 1864.

The Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad enters the county a little south of the center of the eastern boundary, and, following the valley of the Shellrock River, passes out of the county a short distance west of the center of the northern boundary. A five per cent. tax on the land in each township through which it passes, and large additional gratuities, amounting in all to over $60,000, were freely contributed by the people along the line of the road in the county, in aid of its construction, which was effected through the county in the Summer of 1871.

The Iowa Pacific Railroad, a new road now partly completed, passes across the county from east to west, about midway between the northern and southern boundaries. It intersects the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad at Clarksville. In aid likewise of the construction of this road liberal donations of money have been made by the more immediately interested citizens of the county.

The Cedar Valley branch of the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, running northwardly through Bremer County, near the eastern line of Butler County, and the Iowa Central Railroad, running northeastwardly through Franklin County, near the western border of Butler County, afford the producers of Butler County additional facilities for shipping their productions.

Up to the month of June, 1873, the amount of local taxes voted by townships in Butler County, in aid of the construction of existing and projected railroads within their limits, was $77,568. The amount of local subscriptions toward the same objects, up to the same time, was $39,000. Total, $116,568.

EARLY HISTORY.

The beauty and fertility of the Shellrock Valley, early made famous by trappers, hunters, and others who chanced to visit this delectable region, soon excited the curiosity of prospecting pioneers, who at first sight were charmed by the natural attractiveness of the county. Consequently the first settlements in Butler County were made along the Shellrock River.

The honor of having erected the first cabin in the county is generally conceded to Harrison and Volney Carpenter, brothers, from Linn County, the former unmarried, the latter married. The erection was made some time during the year 1850, upon a claim in a grove thereafter known as Carpenter's Grove, now a part of the village of Shellrock. Prior to the Summer of 1851, when Volney Carpenter removed his family into the county, the brothers Carpenter occupied their cabin only at intervals, both being absent much of the time, Volney particularly, trapping and hunting.

The first actual and permanent settlement in the county was made by Joseph Hicks and family, who made their advent in what was then called Coon Grove, on Christmas Day, 1850. They were accompanied by Robert T. Crowell, who moved them into the country. All these first settlers emigrated from Milton, Rock County, Wisconsin. The Hicks family located upon a claim about three-fourths of a mile northwest of the present village of Clarksville, selected in September of the same year by Henry J. Hicks, father of Joseph, who then visited the locality in company with Mr. Cr. well. The latter, who was yet unmarried, took possession of a claim, selected by him also on the occasion of the visit mentioned, about half a mile east of the present site of Clarksville. In the Summer of 1851 Henry J. Hicks returned from Wisconsin, and erected a blacksmith shop on the family claim, wherein he forged the first iron forged in the Shellrock Valley. So distant at that time were his competitors in the trade, and so valuable his services, that he numbered among his patrons not a few living far away over in Bremer County. Joseph Hicks, during the first Winter of his residence in the county, was compelled to impersonate a pack-mule and transport provisions for the maintenance of himself and his family, on his back, from Cedar Falls, Black Hawk County, then but a small trading post. His time until the following Spring was principally occupied in hunting, fishing and trapping. His first crop, upon a small piece of broken ground, consisted of corn and vegetables. Joseph's wife is represented by a local historian to have been "a true western heroine," who could "talk Injun" or shoot a rifle with equal expertness.

Next following Joseph Hicks and Robert T. Crowell, in April, 1851, came Malon B. and William S. Wamsley, brothers, from Ohio, who settled upon adjoining claims about two and a half miles northwest of Clarksville, upon which they still live, two of the most honored and wealthy citizens in the neighborhood.

Jeremiah Perrin, Morrison A. Taylor, E. Ensley, Seth Hilton, Sr., and others, joined the preceding pioneers in the same year, and respectively settled in the vicinity of Clarksville.

In 1853 the number of settlers who had taken up claims in the county was sufficient to warrant an attempt to effect its organization. Accordingly, in May of that year, John T. Barrick, D. C. Overman, and William W. Payne, Commissioners for the purpose, appointed by Judge Roszell, of Buchanan County, located the county seat of the then unorganized county of Butler upon the site of the present village of Clarksville. The original part of the village was surveyed by His Honor in August following. Also in August, 1853, by the order of the same magistrate, an election was held in Butler County—then under his judicial jurisdiction—for the choice of officers and the organization of the county. A full complement of county officers was accordingly elected, but as the newly created offices were supposed to be not sufficiently lucrative to compensate the officers elect for the necessary trouble of journeying to Independence in order to become legally empowered to fill them, they unanimously omitted to qualify. Soon afterward Butler County was detached from Buchanan County and attached to Black Hawk County, then recently organized. Pursuant to the order of Judge Knapp, of the latter county, a second election was held in Butler County, in August, 1854, when the following officers were chosen: John Palmer, County Judge; William E. Burton, Clerk; Abner G. Clark, Treasurer and Recorder; James Griffith, School Fund Commissioner; Robert T. Crowell, Sheriff; Harlan Baird, Prosecuting Attorney; and John H. Morton, Surveyor. January 2d, 1855, Mr. Baird alone having failed to qualify, Aaron VanDorn was appointed Prosecuting Attorney, by the County Court, to supply the vacancy. The permanent organization of the county was effected, however, October 2, 1854. On the 28th of the same month the first levy of taxes was made. The total amount for that year was $698.50. In 1855 taxes were collected to the amount of $855.84.

Among other events, prominent in the history of the county, stated in chronological order, are the following:

In April, 1850, John Heery, of Milton, Rock County, Wisconsin, located the first land warrant located in the county, just in the bend of the Shellrock River, adjoining Clarksville on the southwest. He returned to Wisconsin the same season, performing the journey both ways on foot. Mr. Heery was guided through the valley by Mr. James

Newell, or Uncle Jimmy Newell, as he was familiarly called, a pioneer settler in the forks of the Cedar, about twenty miles southeast of Clarksville. Uncle Jimmy, who had extensively explored the Shellrock Valley, in his noted character of a mighty hunter, greatly aided the earlier succeeding comers, who sought to profit by his knowledge of the country, in making choice selections of land upon which to locate. Mr. Henry settled with his family upon his claim in the Spring of 1852. He is still a resident of Clarksville, and still owns part of the original entry.

In the Fall of 1851 was preached the first sermon in the county, at the house of Malon B. Wamsley. The name of the preacher, who was of the Methodist denomination, seems to be forgotten. Also in the same Fall occurred the first death, that of Joseph Kirker, aged about forty years, and a very recent comer from Pennsylvania. He was an uncle of the wife of William S. Wamsley.

March 17th, 1852, occurred the first birth, that of John Perrin, son of Jeremiah and Elizabeth Perrin. This pioneer babe lived only about six months.

In 1853 the first post office in the county was established at Coon Grove, now Clarksville. Abner G. Clark was the first post master. Up to this time the nearest post office was at Cedar Falls, whence the route was extended to Clarksville. Elwood Modlin was the contractor for carrying the mail, which was carried once a week, by his son, on horseback. In the Fall of 1853 Malon B. Wamsley was appointed the first justice of the peace—the first officer in the county—by the County Court of Black Hawk County. About the same time Seth Hilton, senior, received a like appointment from the same authority.

September 2d, 1854, the first legal instrument, a warranty deed, was filed for record. It was executed by Peter and Bridget Connor, of Black Hawk County, to Jesse D. Butts, of Otsego County, New York. It conveyed the west half of the southeast quarter of section 30, township 90, range 16, containing eighty acres of land, for the consideration of $100. It was acknowledged before R. P. Speer, a notary public for Black Hawk County.

November 1st, 1854, County Judge Palmer issued the first marriage license, to Greenberry Luck and Susan Williams, who were married on the same day by the Rev. W. P. Holbrook, a Methodist preacher.

January 8th, 1855, is the date of the first mortgage of real estate that appears of record. It was executed by Robert T. Crowell and Lucretia Crowell, of Butler County, to James Griffith, School Fund Commissioner of the same county. The southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 18, township 92, range 15, was the land mortgaged, for the sum of $298.14. It was acknowledged before County Judge Palmer, and was satisfied April 22d, 1857. April 21st, 1855, was recorded the first chattel mortgage. Ebenezer Walter was the mortgagor, and William Adair the mortgagee, both of Butler County. The chattels mortgaged were one yoke of red oxen four years old, and one cow and calf. The sum secured thereby was $75. June 26th, 1855, was recorded the first of articles of local incorporation—those of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Shellrock. The officers of the Board of Trustees were G. W. Adair, President; Alexander Glenn, Vice President; John H. Smith, Treasurer, and Asa Chance, Secretary. The first school in the county was opened the same year, in a small log cabin in Clarksville. It was taught by Miss Matilda Searles, afterwards the wife of Mr. Valentine Bogle, of Clarksville, now recently deceased. It began in the Spring of the year mentioned, and was attended by only a very limited number of pupils.

June 3d, 1857, was instituted, at Clarksville, Butler Lodge No. 94, A. F. and A. M., the first Masonic society, or other similar organization, in the county. The first officers were: Alpheus J. Lewellen, W. M.; George W. Polsall, S. W.; Robert T. Crowell, J. W.; John Palmer, Secretary. On the 24th of the same month William Hicks, a British subject, and the first foreigner in the county to renounce formally his allegiance to any foreign potentate, took the initiatory steps to become an American citizen, by the usual declaration of intention. John Palmer and William Glass, also British subjects, were the next to declare like intentions, on the same day. William Gough, a native of England, and the first foreigner in Bremer County to declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States, was the first foreigner admitted to full American citizenship in Butler County, October 6th, 1857. Patrick Hays, a native of Ireland, was the next person naturalized, at the same term of the district court.

In June, 1858, County Judge Converse advertised for proposals for the erection of the following bridges in the county, thirteen in number: two across Shellrock River, near Clarksville; one across Shellrock River at the village of Shellrock; one across the west fork of Cedar River, near Willoughby; one across the same stream at Mason's Ford; one across same at McConnell's Ford, on road leading west from Butler Center; one across same on road leading west from West Point to Hampton; one across Beaver River at New Hartford; one across same at Olmstead's Ford; one across same on Central road, near Mr. Daniels'; one across same on west side section 25, township 90, range 17, near Mr. Curtiss'; one across Beaver River, on section 20, near Mr. Parriott's; one across Coldwater Creek, at Cunningham's Ford. These bridges were the first structures of the kind erected in the county. Nearly all of them were, however, within a few years afterward, swept away by ice and freshets.

Still other occurrences in the history of the county, worthy of note, were the erection of the first church, Methodist Episcopal, at Clarksville, in 1864. Elias Smith, pastor; the organization of the first bank—the Butler County Bank—at Clarksville, in June, 1871, and the opening thereof for business in September following. Malon B. Wamsley, President, and Francis B. Cooke, Cashier, were the first officers of the bank mentioned.

Upon the division of the previously united offices of Treasurer and Recorder, J. H. Hale became the first Recorder, in 1865, and John Palmer the first Treasurer, in 1866. A. J. Tomkins was the first Auditor of the county, in 1870.

The first division of the county into townships was made February 8th, 1855, when four townships—Butler, Coldwater, Ripley and Beaver—were created. March 3d, 1856, West Point, Shell Rock and Monroe Townships were created. In the latter part of the year 1857, and in the early part of the year 1858, the remaining townships of Albion, Bennezette, Dayton, Fremont, Jackson, Jefferson, Madison, Pittsford and Washington were regularly organized.

M. M. Trumbull, who emigrated from Cedar Rapids, in 1854, was the first lawyer in the county. He was elected to a seat in the lower branch of the State Legislature, in 1858. Mr. Trumbull now resides in Dubuque. The first physician in the county was Doctor James E. Walker, from Maine, who settled at Clarksville about 1854. He subsequently returned to his native state.

COUNTY SEAT AND COUNTY BUILDINGS.

Of three different attempts to remove the county seat from Clarksville to other localities in the county, the first was made in 1858. In April of that year an election was held in the county to determine the question of its removal to Georgetown, a "paper town" in the center of the county. Its retention at Clarksville was secured by a majority of seven votes. The second attempt was made in 1859. At an election held April 4th, of the year last named, by a vote of 385 for removal to 364 against removal, a majority of twenty-one votes was cast in favor of Butler Center, then the competitor of Clarksville, for the honor of being the county capital. A writ of injunction was, however, sued out by the opponents of the successful locality, for the purpose of staying the removal voted until certain legal objections on their part could be duly adjudicated. In July following the District Court adjudged the election void because of certain irregularities in its formal conduct. On the 4th of April, 1860, the canvass of a third election held two days previously resulted in the declaration of a majority of upwards of 80 votes in favor of Butler Center over Clarksville, which ended the county-seat contest, and on the following day the records were removed accordingly.

The first court house, erected in a handsome square in the center of Clarksville, in 1857, at a cost of about $20,000, is a neat structure of brick, 40x60 feet in size, and two stories high. It is much the largest and best building in the county. On the removal of the county seat to Butler Center, the building was purchased from the county by the independent school district of Clarksville, for the very small sum of $2,800, and appropriated to local school purposes. The only building of any kind now existing and occupied for county offices, courts, or otherwise, is a most unpretentious frame structure at Butler Center, 26x36 feet in size, and two stories in height. The upper story, which is reached by an outside wooden stairway, is by courtesy called a court-room; the lower story, divided into three apartments of the most inferior character for such uses, are occupied as county offices. This structure, erected in 1860 at a cost of $2,000, was donated to the county, together with about two acres of land appurtenant thereto, by Mr. Andrew Mullarkey, of Cedar Falls, since deceased, who owned a large amount of land in the vicinity, and who was greatly instrumental in securing the removal of the county seat from Clarksville.

FIRST TERMS OF THE COURTS.

The first term of the District Court convened at Clarksville, October 5th, 1857. The Honorable James D. Thompson, Judge of the Thirteenth Judicial District, presided. Walker H. Bishop, sheriff, and James E. Walker, clerk, were the officers in attendance. The grand jurors named in the venire returned by the sheriff, were William Hoisington, James Woods, D. W. Miller, John T. Newhard, John Braden, L. D. Owen, G. S. Root, John Palmer, James Bywaber, James McKinney, John Boggs, L. A. Orris, Judd Bradley and Peter Riley. The panel not being full A. J. Lewellen, a talisman, was added. D. W. Miller, at his request, was excused, and his place supplied by M. B. Wamsley, a talisman. John T. Newhard was appointed foreman. J. M. Vincent was sworn as bailiff. The following were the petit jurors regularly summoned at the same term: P. Landis, Christian Forney, John M. Hart, Benjamin Eikenberry, Charles Ensign, Aaron Hardman, George Harlan, Samuel McCreery, and John Lash. Benjamin Eikenberry was excused by the court. The panel not being full, the following talismen were added: James Blake, Aaron Van Dorn, J. H. Smith, William Burress, Charles Lasted, Alexander Glenn, and Jacob Shapper. Aaron Van Dorn was appointed foreman, and G. W. Stow was sworn as bailiff. On motion of M. M. Trumbull, Messrs. James R. Fletcher and Charles A. Bannon, both members of the Pennsylvania bar, were admitted to practice as attorneys of the court. The first case called for trial was that of "The State of Iowa vs. William Casterline." The defendant was charged with threatening to assault and do bodily harm to one Rufus L. Hardy, and was under bonds. The prosecuting attorney declined further to prosecute the charge, and the defendant was awarded eighty-five cents costs. The first two appeal cases coming up to be heard were those of "The State of Iowa vs. William R. Jamison," one an appeal from the docket of J. H. Smith, J. P., and the other an appeal from the docket of J. M. Vincent, J. P. The judgment of the court below was reversed in both cases at the plaintiffs' costs. Committees, each consisting of three attorneys, were appointed by the court to examine and report upon the qualifications of Messrs. John Palmer, Orson Rice, and George A. Richmond to be admitted to practice as attorneys. They were all favorably reported upon and admitted on the second day of the term. Mr. William R. Jamison was afterwards similarly admitted, at the same term. The grand jury, on the third day of the term, returned into court "a true bill" against Thomas Bird for larceny. At the June term, in 1858, the indictment was quashed and the defendant discharged.

The first term of the Circuit Court for Butler County convened at Butler Center, February 22, 1869. Hon. George W. Ruddick was the presiding judge. The officers present were L. L. Smith, sheriff, and James W. Davis, clerk. "Theron Landon vs. T. B. Hanna," an attachment case, the second case on the calendar, was the first case called. It was settled by the parties, the plaintiff withdrawing the suit and paying the costs. W. R. Jamison appeared as attorney for the plaintiff. The following petit jurors were empaneled for the term: E. H. Gilloghy, Charles Hitchcock, E. Town, John Kimmons, David Soash, Sr., E. D. Marquand, Charles Bates, H. Billhimer, W. Foster, C. V. Surface, N. F. Manley, George A. Burnett, J. L. Kemmerer, S. M. Townsend, and John A. Smith.

The first case ever prosecuted in the County Court was entitled "Solomon W. Ingham vs. Daniel D. Meyer." It arose upon an injunction issued by Judge Palmer to restrain the sale of land. The first official service of the first sheriff—Sherift Crowell—was performed in this case.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

The first Board of Supervisors convened at Butler Center, on Monday, January 7, 1861, when the following named supervisors appeared and were qualified: Orson Rice, of Jefferson; James Wilson, of Shellrock; Thomas Haggarty, of Dayton; Milo Hard, of Beaver; George W. Stoner, of Ripley; Moses Aldrich, of Coldwater; Julius Hoffman, of West Point; Jonathan Gilbert, of Jackson; Peter Coyle, of Madison; W. H. Long, of Washington; William R. Jamison, of Pittsford; Shadrach Bonwell, of Fremont; S. H. Taylor, of Albion; and Wells A. Curtis, of Monroe. Peter Coyle, of Madison, was chosen chairman, and James M. Davis was clerk. On the second day of the session Milton Wilson, of Bennezette township, appeared and was admitted to the Board. The same day the terms of the several members were decided by lot. Messrs. Wilson, Haggarty, Stoner, Aldrich, Coyle, Long, Jamison, and Taylor drew terms of two years each. Messrs. Rice, Hard, Hoffman, Gilbert, Bonwell, Curtis, and Wilson drew terms of one year each. Also on the second day of the session a petition of citizens and legal voters of the county, asking for an order of the Board calling an election upon the question of removing the county seat from Butler Center to Clarksville, was presented and referred to a select committee, consisting of Messrs. Hard, Stoner, and Gilbert. On the following day a remoustrance against granting the prayer of the petition was presented. On the fourth day the proceedings of the Board were ordered to be published in the Butler County Jeffersonian, for which publication the sum of $25 was appropriated. On the fifth day Messrs. Hard and Stoner, of the select committee previously appointed, made a majority report adverse to the prayer of the county-seat petitioners, for several reasons affecting the required legal formality of the proceedings taken in the matter. Mr. Gilbert, of the same committee, made a minority report in favor of the petitioners. The majority report was adopted by a vote of ten ayes to four nays, and the select committee were thereupon discharged. At the following June term J. J. Criswell was admitted to the Board, to supply a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Wells A. Curtis, supervisor from Monroe township. Charles A. Bannon was likewise admitted, on the second day of the same term, as supervisor from Butler township. At an evening session of the Board, on the second day, a committee consisting of Messrs. Bannon, Jamison, and Rice, appointed at the morning session of the same day, to draft resolutions expressive of the sorrow of the Board at the then recent death of Stephen A. Douglas, of national fame, reported as directed. The resolutions were ordered to be recorded in full in the minutes. The Board was at the same time addressed upon the subject of the life and public services of the illustrious deceased, by President Coyle and fifteen others, members of the Board and prominent citizens of the county.

January 3, 1871, upon the inauguration of a later system of electing supervisors, the number of these officers in the county was reduced to three, at this time consisting of M. B. Wamsley, of Jackson township; H. C. Brown, of Pittsford township; and A. Chrystie, of Monroe township. Their terms of office, decided by lot, were one, two, and three years respectively, in the order mentioned. Mr. Wamsley was elected chairman, and A. J. Tompkins, auditor, was clerk of the Board ex-officio.

NEWSPAPERS.

The first newspaper in the county was The Butler County Transcript. It was started by Palmer & James, in July, 1858, and was published at Clarksville. It was of Republican politics. The office material was sold in the Spring of 1860, and removed to Winterset, Madison County.

The Butler County Jeffersonian was next started by William Haddock, at Butler Center, about August, 1860. Between that time and October, 1861, about thirty-six numbers only of the paper were issued. In the month and year last named it passed into the hands of Martin Bailey, who, in January, 1862, changed the title to The Stars and Stripes, and during two years continued its publication regularly. Mr. Bailey then went to "the war," and the publication of the paper ended. In August, 1865, McCormick & Francis purchased the office material, and with it established The Butler County Argus. About February, 1866, the latter publication was purchased by Judge Palmer, who changed the name to The Stiletto. In the Spring of 1866, Judge Palmer's interest in the paper became the property of his son, W. L. Palmer, who removed the office to Shellrock. In the Fall of 1866 it was merged in The Clarksville Gazette.

The Clarksville Gazette was established in the Summer of 1866, by Van E. Butler. In the Fall of 1866 it was united with The Stiletto, then published at Shellrock, and the publication of the paper continued at Clarksville, by Butler & Palmer, under the title of The Star of the West. In the Winter of 1867-8, Frank C. Case became the proprietor. He changed the name to The Clarksville Star, which name it still retains. In April, 1872, Mr. Case was succeeded by Mr. James O. Stewart, present editor and proprietor, and a gentleman of decided journalistic ability.

The Parkersburg Times, started by W. L. Palmer, in the Spring of 1870, was sold about a year afterwards to C. G. Bundy, who removed it, in July, 1872, to Maudville, now Allison, and changed the name to The Butler County Times. It ceased to exist in September, 1873.

The Parkersburg Eclipse, started by Anyer & Edward, in September, 1872, was purchased by Dodge & Savage, present proprietors, in September, 1874.

The Shellrock Enterprise, started by J. H. Boomer & Co., in September, 1872, after a number of intermediate changes passed into the hands of Dr. E. A. Kittell, who now conducts it, in February, 1875.

The Butler County Press, published at Greene, was established in September, 1873. Its original publisher was H. C. Hammond. It is now conducted by Messrs. Wagner & Riner. All the existing newspapers in the county are of Republican politics.

BUTLER COUNTY PATRIOTISM.

The population of Butler County, by the Federal census of 1860, was in that year 3,724. The total number of volunteers enlisting in the service of the Union during the first two years of the great Rebellion, 1861-2, credited to the county, was 293. The quota of the county under the several calls for troops in the years named was 179. Number of volunteers furnished in excess of quota, 114. There were during "the war," additionally, about fifty veteran re-enlistments. A few persons were also drafted and furnished substitutes. Liberal bounties were given by the county to volunteers credited to its quota, and due provision made for the relief of the families of such as required material aid.

BUTLER COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Butler County Agricultural Society, first organized in 1856, was re-organized and incorporated June 2, 1866. The officers elected in the latter year were: James Collar, President; C. B. Simons, Vice President; Martin Bailey, Secretary; Sylvester Rice, Treasurer. The society fair ground, consisting of twenty acres leased for the purpose, is located just west of the village limits of Shellrock.

EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS.

The whole number of schools in the county, in 1874, was 229; of male teachers, 55; of female teachers, 173. The whole number of pupils enrolled was 3,552; total average attendance, 1,943; average cost of tuition per pupil per month, $1.94. The whole number of frame school houses in the county was 111; of brick school houses, 1; of stone school houses, 2. The total value of school buildings was $68,308; of school apparatus, $1,630. There are three graded schools in the county, one in Clarksville, one in Parkersburg, and one in New Hartford.

TOWNS.

CLARKSVILLE, the oldest and largest town in the county, is situated on the east side of the Shellrock River, eight miles south of the north line of the county, and six miles west of the east line. In this immediate vicinity were made the first settlements in the county. The town was laid out by D. C. Hilton and Thomas and Jeremiah Clark, on a forty-acre claim in which they were jointly interested, in August, 1853, and for several years thereafter grew rapidly. It contains three churches, of the Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Christian Union denominations respectively; one banking institution, the Butler County Bank, with a capital of $50,000; and the usual number and variety of business houses. The completion of the Iowa Pacific Railroad, which here intersects the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad, will constitute Clarksville the only railroad crossing in the county. The location of the town is decidedly pleasant, and its future promising. Population, 800.

SHELLROCK, eight miles south of Clarksville, is situated in a grove, on both sides of the Shellrock River. The Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad crosses its western border, and the Iowa Pacific Railroad passes a short distance east of the town, near which it enters the county. Shellrock contains two flouring mills, a number of general stores, various shops, and mechanical pursuits of the ordinary miscellaneous character. Population, 600.

PARKERSBURG, in the south part of the county, on the line of the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, was platted in 1865 on a forty-five acre tract, by the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company. It is the market for a large extent of country north in Butler County, and south in Grundy County, still destitute of railroad facilities. The town contains Methodist, Baptist, and Congregational Churches, two banking houses, a grist mill, dry goods, drug, hardware, and other stores, shops, etc. Population, 600.

NEW HARTFORD, on the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, nine miles east of Parkersburg, was laid out in 1855. Besides one Methodist Church, and one Baptist Church, it contains seven general stores, several shops, and a population of 300.

APLINGTON, on the Illinois Central Railroad, five miles west of Parkersburg, was laid out by O. Z. Aplington, in 1857, and now contains a church, three or four general business houses, a few shops, and 200 inhabitants.

GREENE, on both sides of Shell Rock River, in the extreme north part of the county, was laid out in 1871 by certain officials of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad, which runs through the town, and named in honor of Judge George Greene, then President of the company. It contains two banking institutions, a flour mill, two school houses, about twenty stores of various sorts, two lumber yards, shops, markets, etc. The Presbyterians and German Baptists have churches. The town has a large trade, and is growing with considerable rapidity. Population, 350.

WEST POINT, in the central west part of the county, contains a Presbyterian Church, and several general stores and shops. Population, 200.

BUTLER CENTER,

The county seat of the county, is situated a few miles south of the geographical center of the county. It was laid out in 1856, and, except as the capital of the county, is a place of no commercial or other importance. The village contains, besides the court house, so called, two general stores, and wagon and blacksmith shops. The best public structure in the place is a two-story frame school house, 20x40, capable of seating 160 pupils. The Presbyterians and Methodists have church organizations here, but no church building. Population, 150.

ALLISON, DUNOMT, and other towns heretofore platted in different parts of the county, exist as yet only on paper.

WM. H. BURDICK, Clerk of the Courts.	WILLIAM C. THOMPSON, Treasurer.
R. L. CHASE, Auditor.	ELWOOD WILSON, Recorder.
JOHN R. JONES, Sheriff.	J. W. STEWART, School Superintendent.
T. G. COPELAND, Coroner.	J. D. ROCKWELL, Surveyor.

E. D. BUTTON, Drainage Commissioner.

SUPERVISORS.

ALEX. CHRYSTIE,	H. C. BROWN,	N. H. LARKIN.

Honorables A. Converse, Senator, and C. A. L. Rosell, Representative, represent the county in the State Legislature.

The Clarksville Star and The Parkersburg Eclipse are the official newspapers of the county for 1875.

GUTHRIE COUNTY.

This is the fourth county, both from the southern and western boundary of the state; is twenty-four miles square, and contains a superficial area of little more than five hundred and seventy-six square miles.

SURFACE FEATURES AND STREAMS.

The surface drainage is excellent, as numerous streams meander throughout nearly every portion of the county, collecting the surplus water, and affording lasting supplies of stock-water at all seasons of the year. The principal streams are Middle and South Raccoon Rivers, with their affluents, the most important of which are Brushy Fork, Bear, Beaver and Mosquito Creeks, while the Middle River rises in this county and waters the southwestern portion. The larger streams all afford good water power, which in the future will become a source of much wealth to the county. The streams are generally clear and pellucid, being supported mainly by springs, which, however, instead of appearing at the surface, percolate through the loose deposits in the valleys, and reach the streams by subterranean channels, which render them not easily affected by extremes of wet or drouth. Excellent well water is usually obtained at a moderate depth in most localities, although in the uplands, in the southwest townships, the bluff deposit must be penetrated to the underlying gravel beds, before a permanent supply of water can be obtained.

The general surface of the county is high rolling prairie, gently sloping towards the valleys, with some ridges along the streams, which are considerably rough and broken as compared with most of the other portions of the county, but they are being occupied, and are considered desirable farming lands. There is very little land that is too wet for cultivation, nearly all that was reported as swamp land in the original surveys, having been taken up for agricultural purposes. The valley of the Middle River is well defined, and like all the streams which rise in the great divide in this region, the waters are collected by a system of numerous ravines which reach up to the very crest of the watershed, while in the western range or townships bordering on this divide, which separates the drainages of the Mississippi and Missouri, the prairies are undulating, presenting a wide contrast to the country to the eastward. Between the South Raccoon and Brushy Fork, as well as between the latter stream and Middle Raccoon, the same physical features are exhibited, being composed of symmetrical ridges, flanked by graceful declivities, and culminating in broad rounded summits, from one to two hundred feet above the valleys. While the valley of the Middle Raccoon is narrow, and usually bordered by more abrupt acclivities, to the eastward the country sweeps away in gentle undulations, which are only interrupted by the shallow prairie streams which water that section.

The soil includes two well marked varieties, which are found co-extensive with the two widely diverse deposits composing the superficial formations in this region. A larger portion of the uplands in the southwestern half of the county, afford a light, fine siliceous soil, which is derived from the bluff deposit, while in the eastern and northeastern townships is found the rich, black loam characteristic of the drift region. The native forests are mostly confined to the valleys and ravines, though there are now some large tracts covered with a vigorous growth of oak, hazel, etc., which were formerly swept by the fires of early Spring and late Autumn, so that not even a shrub was found on them at the time of the early settlement of the county. Although this is emphatically a prairie county, what timber does exist is so evenly distributed that no considerable portion of the county is more than five miles distant from a good supply. Planted groves mature so rapidly that but a few years are required until timber for ordinary purposes can be obtained from them in large quantities.

MATERIAL RESOURCES.

The agricultural resources of Guthrie are perhaps second to no other county in the state. Both the deep black soil of the uplands, and the light colored or mulatto soil peculiar to the bluff deposit, are alike noted for productiveness, and their warm forcing nature. Corn and wheat are the staple productions, while all the grains, grasses and vegetables common to central Iowa, are grown with a luxuriance unexcelled, amply rewarding the industry of the farmer. The natural advantages of Guthrie County for stock raising are unsurpassed by any county in Iowa, possessing as it does numerous beautiful valleys and arable tracts of land on which wild and tame grasses grow with all the exuberance of their native soil, while living streams and brooklets of sparkling water meander through nearly every section of the county. Before they were crushed out by the march of civilization, wild fruits in profuse varieties annually yielded rich harvests, showing that the more luscious and delicate cultivated fruits need only planting and judicious care and culture to richly repay the labors of the careful pomologist. Numerous orchards have been set out, and various other kinds of fruits cultivated, all of which have grown and produced with remarkable luxuriance. The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad passes through the southern tier of townships, while the Chicago & Northwestern is within convenient reach of the northern portion of the county, so that Guthrie possesses all the advantages to be derived from railway communication, which exerts such an undeniably important part in developing the resources of all interior counties.

Although the coal beds have not been so extensively worked in this as in some other counties, yet there is no doubt that the coal resources of Guthrie, in quantity and quality, are fully equal to any of the neighboring counties. There is no doubt but what the different strata of the coal-measures underly the entire county, though no exposures have been made in the western portions. The beds that have been worked are not so thick as those in the Des Moines valley, as the local demand has been supplied without deep mining, otherwise the more productive veins might have been reached by shafting. Stone for building purposes is obtained from the limestone beds of the middle coal-measure, though the supply of this material is not very abundant. That on Little Raccoon and Beaver Creek furnishes an excellent material for quick lime. Iron in the form of brown hematite ore is found in limited quantities in the coal-measure, is more largely disseminated through sand and gravel beds, and is not infrequently found in a purer condition, as nodules in other positions, yet it is the opinion of Doctor White, State Geologist, that the quantity is too small ever to become valuable for economic purposes. Good brick clay and sand are obtained in sufficient abundance to supply any possible demand of the future.

EARLY HISTORY.

Guthrie County was named by Theophilus Bryan, in honor of his friend, Captain Guthrie, who served in the Mexican War. The first white settler was John Nevins, who made a claim and built the first log cabin in Jackson Township, in the southeastern portion of the county, in 1848.

The county was organized July 8, 1851, by Theophilus Bryan, organizing Sheriff. He died October 8, 1856. At that time the county was divided into two civil townships, or voting precincts, the north half being called Cass, and the south half Jackson. The same territory is now divided into sixteen townships. The first election for county officers took place on the first Monday in August, 1851, the citizens of Cass Township voting at the house of Andrew Brumbaugh, while those of Jackson met at the house of Fredrick Fry. At this time the county had a total population of two hundred and twenty-two, and the number of votes cast was seventy-two. The following county officers were chosen at this election: Theophilus Bryan, County Judge; Silas G. Weeks, Clerk of the District Court; S. M. Bayles, Treasurer and Recorder; and M. Messenger, Sheriff.

The county seat was located on the southeast quarter of section 32, township 80, range 30, and the place named Panora. This being well toward the eastern boundary of the county, as settlements extended westward the question of removal soon began to be agitated, and a rival town was laid out in 1855, at the geographical center of the county, to which the name of Guthrie Center was given. In 1859 the friends of this point succeeded in obtaining a vote on removal, with successful results. They retained it only about two years, when it was returned to Panora. In 1873, the county seat was a second time removed to Guthrie Center.

SOME FIRST THINGS.

The first warrant on the county treasury, to the amount of three dollars, was issued to Theophilus Ryan, for pre-empting land for the county seat; and the first marriage license was issued by the county judge, to George Messenger and Lucinda Casteel, who were married by Judge Bryan. To show the extent of the finances of the county in 1852, the following record may be found: Mr. M. Linehart, who was appointed treasurer to fill a vacancy, received during his term of service the sum of five dollars, all of which the county voted him. Another instance: In September, 1862, Judge Bryan and Clerk Weeks gave to the county all the fees received by them in their several offices, amounting to some $50 or $60. The first warrants issued for jurors in the District Court, were for the May term in 1854. The first record of any court being held was in the Spring of 1855, though it is thought that a court was held previously, the records having been burned when the log building occupied by the clerk was consumed. The first seal used by the county is somewhat rude in its construction and lettering, and exhibits some hard usage, which is not surprising, when it is stated that impressions were required to be taken on a flat stick of wood, with a handspike for a lever and a maul to strike with. Among the first things, the following is remembered and published, being a charge of the notorious Judge McFarland, who was never known to hold a court or feel at home without having his skin full of whisky. It was delivered to the jury, at the Spring term of court in 1858, held in the old Presbyterian church, now used as a carpenter shop: "Gentlemen of the Jury, you will (hic) find the law of Iowa—in the laws—of Iowa. And it is your (hic) duty, gentlemen, to see that the said (hic) law is obeyed, and that it is not violated. You are made (hic) gentlemen, a body to inquire into every breach of the (hic) the law; and to do this it is your duty sworn, (hic) sworn—sworn. Mr. Roberts,—you will (hic) indict every man in the (hic) world, and Mr. Clerk, you will (hic) will let Mr. Roberts have all the (hic) books in the world. You will retire, gentlemen, to your (hic.) Adjourn the court, Mr. (hic, hic) Sheriff, to one o (hic) o'clock." It would be very difficult in these days to tolerate such a Judge in Guthrie County, or any other in the state. But such was the state of society in the newly settled counties, that but little could be done by moral portion to stop such farces. Judge McFarland ended his career as a Judge very soon thereafter; and thanks to him, he made drunken judges so unpopular, that there has none appeared on the bench since. A new resident of the county says: "There are fewer criminal cases in this county than in any place in which I have ever lived."

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper published in the county appeared early in the Winter of 1855, edited by William Tracy, a prominent citizen of the county, and called the Western Pioneer.

The Guthrie Vidette, published by L. Appie, at Panora, was established in 1865. It is the oldest paper now published in the county, and is a popular local sheet.

The Stuart Locomotive made its first appearance in 1868. It is a wide awake, well managed republican paper, under charge of J. J. Flynn, who is a wide awake, enthusiastic young writer.

The first number of the Guthrie Center Beacon Light appeared May 20, 1874, under the editorial management of Kantzman & Mann, who jointly continued its publication until March 30, 1875, when Kantzman retired, and P. A. Mann became sole proprietor. The Beacon Light is an eight column folio sheet, independent in politics, the only newspaper published at the county seat, is one of the official papers of the county, and has a large and growing circulation.

The Casey Clarion is a small wide awake local sheet published at Casey by L. H. Bovidston. It was established in 1872, and in politics is republican.

COUNTY OFFICIALS FOR 1875.

HENRY K. DEWEY, Auditor.

CHARLES W. HILL, Clerk of Courts. ELIJAH J. REYNOLDS Treasurer.
JAMES H. ROGERS, Recorder. MICHAEL MCDONALD, Sheriff.
GILES C. MILLER, Superintendent Common Schools.
DAVID L. CHANTRY, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

GUTHRIE CENTER.

As its name would indicate this town is situated in the geographical center of Guthrie County, of which it is the present seat of justice. It is handsomely located on a high rolling prairie, rising gently from the banks of the South Raccoon River, which flows past it on the west. It is surrounded by high ridges from half to one mile distant, presenting a beautiful panorama of gently rounded hills, finely cultivated farms and fruitful fields and orchards. It was laid out in 1855 by B. Newton, Thomas Suley and William Tracy on lands originally entered by Messrs. Tracy & Newton. The first dwelling was a log cabin, erected by Charles Huxley in March, 1856. There is an excellent water power on the Raccoon adjoining the town plat, sufficient, if well improved, to drive four run of burs. Good building stone are obtained within a mile and a half of town, while coal and timber are abundant and easily and conveniently secured. A spring of pure cold water, sufficient to supply the town, gushes out on the highest ground on the plat, which could be improved at a small expense. Altogether it is a good business point and a pleasant place to live.

STUART.

Although comparatively a new town, Stuart is probably the most important place in the county. It is situated on the line of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, near the southeast corner of the county, a portion of it extending over the line into Adair. Much importance has been added to the town by the railroad company establishing a division station here, and erecting extensive machine, locomotive and repair shops. It is the most considerable shipping point in the county, being surrounded by a rich, well improved farming country. It is settled by a wide awake, enterprising class of inhabitants, whose energies are fast making Stuart one of the most important places on the line of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad west of Des Moines.

PANORA.—This is the oldest town in the county, being laid out soon after its organization. It is on the Middle Raccoon River, in the eastern part of the county. There is plenty of timber and coal convenient, and the river here furnishes fine water power, which, with other advantages, will continue to make it a place of business and importance.

GUTHRIE.—This is the next station west of Stuart on the railroad, and was laid out in the Winter of 1868-'69. It is surrounded by a good agricultural region, with timber, coal and stone convenient. The town plat is on both sides of the railroad, on prairie land sufficiently rolling for drainage.

CASEY.—This is a shipping point on the railroad at the south line of the county, a portion of the town being in Adair County. It was laid out in October, 1868. Indian Branch, a tributary of the Middle Raccoon River, flows at the south border of the town, and is skirted by groves of timber. This is a point of considerable business, especially in the shipment of grain.

Among other villages in the county are MORRISBURG, near South Coon River, laid out in 1855 by J. J. Morris; DALE CITY, on South Coon River, eight miles southeast of Panora; and DALMANUTHA, laid out in 1855.

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

PIONEERS.

It is believed that the first white settler was Adam Ritchey. He came from Warren County, Illinois, in the Fall of 1835, accompanied by a friend, and explored the country from the Mississippi River to the western border of what is now Washington County. At that time the only white man in the county was an Indian trader known as "Joe Smart," who kept a trading house near the mouth of main Crooked Creek. After completing their exploring trip, Ritchey and his companion returned to Illinois. In February, 1836, Mr. Ritchey again came to Iowa, accompanied by two brothers and two or three other men, all of whom staked and "blazed" out their claims. The others then returned home, but Mr. Ritchey remained six weeks, to make rails and put up a shanty to live in. He then followed, but returned in May, bringing with him his oldest son, and daughter, Sarah, a girl of thirteen years. The daughter kept house, while father and son broke thirty acres of prairie and planted it with corn; then all returned to Illinois to prepare for a final move to their new home. On the 9th of October, 1836, Mr. Ritchey and his family arrived on their claim for permanent settlement. This was in the south part of what is now Crawford Township, near the Henry County line. During this season, David Goble, Sr., and his family, including two sons, Harrison and David, Jr., settled north of Mr. Ritchey, on Long Creek, in what is now Oregon Township. Isaac Pence and family settled near Ritchey, and two young men from New Jersey, Milo Holcomb, and John B. Bullock, located on Crooked Creek, within the present Township of Marion. In the Fall of 1836, Richard Moore and family, with three other families, located in what is now Washington Township, about three miles from the present county seat. On the way, one of their party, a Mrs. Mastellar, died at the cabin of Isaac Pence. Richard Moore and John Maulsbey made a coffin of "puncheons," or split logs, the best they could do, as no lumber could be obtained. Here ends the catalogue of white settlers in Washington County for the year 1836. In 1837 we find the names of William and Amos Moore added to the number near Crooked Creek; Lauman Harvey a little southwest of the site of Washington, and one or two families in the vicinity afterwards known as Brighton. In 1838 there was considerable increase of settlement, and about this time we find the names of Thomas Baker, Nelson Ball, Joseph Field, Dennis Marks, J. B. and G. W. Teas, Joseph Neil, John W. Neil, Joseph B. Davis, Thomas and Nathan Baker, Orson O. Kinsman, John B. Houston, Robert Risk, Almon Moore, Simon P. Teeple, John Crill, W. B. Thompson, Thomas Wilson, William Ayres, William Bassey, John Lyon, Matthew Morehead, Jesse Hiatt, Thomas Ritchey, Abraham and John Bullock, William L. Harvey, Nathan Griffin, George Parks, John Stout, John Grimsley, Daniel Powers, William M. Faucher, among the residents of the county.

ORGANIZATION.

The first legislative assembly which convened on Iowa soil met at Burlington, Nov. 10, 1837. Iowa was then known as Wisconsin Territory. This legislature passed an act for the organization of the County of Slaughter. The organization does not seem to have been perfected, however. There are no further records to tell of the existence of Slaughter County, save the minutes of one or two terms of court. On the 7th day of May, 1838, His Honor David Irvine, Judge of the Second Judicial District of Wisconsin, appeared on the scene, and proceeded to open court at a place said to be Astoria, under a large oak tree. Thomas Baker was appointed clerk. A United States Marshal was present, and summoned a grand jury, who deliberated in a neighboring slough. The officers and jury received an allowance of pay for one day's services, which was the only business transacted, and the court then adjourned until next term. The second term of court was held Oct. 22 of the same year, under proclamation of the Governor, by Judge Joseph Williams, and the record says: "No persons appearing, either as parties, attorneys, or jurors, the court was adjourned to the next term." There was neither sheriff nor clerk present, by virtue of election, and in the absence of any record of election, it is presumed that the county was still without officers.

The inhabitants did not like the name of Slaughter, and twice petitioned the legislature for a change, and on the 25th day of January, 1839, the first legislature of Iowa Territory passed an act establishing the County of Washington, changing the name from Slaughter, appointing John Gilliland, of Louisa, Thomas Ritchey, of Henry, and William Chambers, of Muscatine County, Commissioners to locate the seat of justice, locating the seat of justice temporarily at Astoria, and attaching to Washington County all the territory west of it for judicial purposes. Under this act there were elected, in April, Joseph Neil and Joseph B. Davis, Commissioners; Thomas Baker, Clerk; Nathan Baker, Judge of Probate, John B. Houston, Treasurer; Almon Moore, Recorder; Milo Holcomb, Sheriff; John Crill, Coroner.

The commissioners held their first meeting the 5th day of May, 1839, at the house of Richard Moore, a place now about four and a half miles southeast of Washington, and divided the county into six townships, or election precincts, as follows: East Fork, voting place, the house of John W. Neal; Crooked Creek, voting place, Milo Holcomb's house; Skunk River, mentions to be held at the house of Orson O. Kinsman; Walnut Creek, voting place, the house of Robert Risk; Washington Township, voting place at Washington, the seat of justice; and English River, place of holding elections, the house of Simon P. Teeple. All of the territory more recently known as Highland Township, and the greater portion of Jackson, was left unorganized, as it was then the popular opinion that these large prairies would never be inhabited. Could they behold this region to-day, converted into most productive farms and dotted with houses and barns, they would look upon the transformation as truly wonderful. The last ten years has wrought a great change in the mind of the western emigrant in relation to the practicability of utilizing the great prairies.

COUNTY SEAT.

How or when Astoria got the designation of the county seat has never been recorded in history, nor is it written among the records of Washington County. It passed away with the territory of Wisconsin, and Slaughter County, which gave it birth. Its location even is uncertain, except that it was within the present limits of Oregon Township. According to tradition, it was laid out in 1838, and one building of logs was erected, sixteen feet square, and designed for a court house, but never finished.

Thomas Ritchie and John Gilliland, two of the commissioners appointed to locate the seat of justice, selected the southwest quarter of section 17, township 75 north, of range 7 west, as the county seat. It was named Washington, and the board of commissioners at their second session, June 13th, 1839, formally adopted the name. This session was held at the house of Nathan Baker, and, like the previous one, was a special session, and its transactions completed the work of organization.

PROGRESS AT THE COUNTY SEAT.

The quarter section chosen for the seat of justice was entered by the county and surveyed into lots during the month of June, 1839. Here the board of commissioners held its first regular session on the first day of July, 1839. At this session the clerk was ordered to advertise a sale of lots in the town of Washington, on Monday, August 19. The commissioners placed a valuation upon each lot, to be considered the bid of the county. The terms of sale were one-eighth cash, the balance in equal payments—six, twelve, and eighteen months. Twenty-four lots were sold at an average price of $38.15 In April, 1840, the clerk was authorized to sell lots to any person who would erect thereon a good and substantial frame house not less than sixteen feet square. Another public sale was held on the 16th day of June, 1840, at which twenty-eight lots were sold, averaging $30.75 each. The highest price paid was $72.

September 7, 1839, an order was made for erecting a temporary court house. The contract was awarded at a public letting to Joseph Neil for $759, and July 8, 1841, the building was accepted, the board deducting $100 from the contract price for improper workmanship. The building stood on the southeast corner of the square. In 1842 a wooden jail was erected at a cost of $1020, and used until it became untenable. Feb. 18, 1845, a contract was made with Alex. Lee for the erection of a court house, which was completed on the 7th of July, 1847.

INCIDENTS OF EARLY HISTORY.

It is related that when Adam Ritchey, the pioneer settler of the county, announced his intention of crossing the Mississippi and seeking a home in Iowa among the Indians, the pastor of the church of which he was a member attempted earnestly to dissuade him from the rash act. Failing in his purpose, he delivered himself about as follows: "You may go, but I warn you that no good will ever come of it, and you will receive punishment for it, for you are deliberately leaving your church and communion, going away among the heathen, and the Gospel will never cross the Mississippi!" Coming from any other place than Illinois an Iowan of the present day would scarcely believe such an opinion possible even at so remote a date as 1836.

Milo Holcomb and John B. Bullock, immediately on their arrival, commenced erecting a saw mill, on Crooked Creek, which was completed in 1837. In 1839 it was furnished with burrs for grinding corn and buckwheat. This was certainly the first mill in the county.

During the early settlement of the county the Sacs and Foxes were quite numerous and had a village of nearly six hundred souls near the site of Washington. This they abandoned in 1838, and located near Skunk River, at a place afterward named Sandy Hook. The latest account of them is near Wassonville, where they occupied territory until 1843. The only incident that threatened a collision between them and the white settlers occurred in 1842. The settlers became excited by a report that the Indians encamped near Wassonville held a white woman in captivity. A company of about thirty men, tolerably well armed, proceeded to the spot. They were unable to decide among themselves whether the woman was white or a dusky daughter of the forest; they agreed, therefore, to take her to one side, away from the influence of the Indians, for her decision. Upon proceeding to carry out their purpose some of the Indians leveled their guns upon the intruders, who met the demonstration in the same manner. The woman was secured, but chose to return to the Indians, and the affair ended without bloodshed.

In early days the settlers received all their mail via Wapello, Louisa County. A Mr. Higbee was the first mail-carrier, and usually performed his trips semi-monthly, on foot, sometimes carrying the mail in his hat, until the increase made it necessary to carry a mail-sack.

Pottsville was the name of the first postoffice established in the county. Its euphonious name was given in honor of Mr. John B. Potts, for his activity in securing its location. David Goble, Sr., was postmaster, and kept the office at his house.

The first term of court held in the county after complete organization and under Iowa law, was June 17, 1839, by Judge Williams. A grand jury was empanneled, but found no indictments. The first case of record was an action for trespass. Three hundred dollars damages were claimed of Milo Holcomb by Joseph Field and Dennis Marks; but the case was settled at defendant's costs. J. B. and G. W. Teas and Isaac Van Allen are mentioned as attorneys present.

The majesty of justice was first represented in the county by Adam Ritchey, who held a commission from the Territorial Governor as Justice of the Peace. In the Summer of 1837 he performed the first marriage ceremony in the county for Harrison Goble and Lydia Osborn, who, with their friends, came to the "Squire's" on horseback.

The first child born in the county of white parents was Elizabeth Ritchey, daughter of Adam Ritchey and wife, born June 12, 1837.

The first store-room in the county was erected by Milo Holcomb, near Van Doren's mill.

The first preaching was by Rev. Samuel Douthet, a missionary of the Associate Presbyterians, in February, 1837, at the house of Mr. Ritchey. Meetings were continued two weeks.

In 1841 Mr. Pickerell established a ferry across Skunk River in the vicinity of his mill, where the Brighton Mills now stand. Here were erected the first flouring mill and the first woolen mill in the county.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

Washington is the second county west of the Mississippi in the third tier from the south line of Iowa. Its area is about 573 square miles, or 366,720 acres. Its drainage is thorough and complete, diverging from the watershed, which traverses it in a southeasterly direction near its center, to the important rivers having its northeast and southwest corners. The watershed has considerable elevation above the river beds, giving the uplands a rolling surface. A peculiarity in the drainage of the southwest part of the county is worthy of notice. One of the forks or confluents of Crooked Creek rises in the east part of Keokuk County and flows in a southeasterly course nearly parallel with the watershed, while the other rises in the northeast corner of Henry County and flows in a directly opposite course until they meet, the course of the stream is then very nearly west until it enters Skunk River near the southwest corner of the county.

The larger streams furnish many excellent mill sites, while their numerous small affluents supply the farming country. Well water is obtained nearly every where on the prairies at depths varying from twenty to forty feet. Some excellent springs are also found near the streams.

The principal bodies of timber are on Skunk and English Rivers, and Crooked Creek. Timber is sufficiently abundant for all practical uses, and consists of all the varieties common to that part of the state. A large proportion of the area of the county is prairie of great fertility, adapted to the production of all kinds of grain, vegetables, grasses, and fruits. Belts of rich alluvial bottom lands border all the principal streams. The uplands are undulating, with a dark, rich soil, capable of enduring the effects of protracted drought. The county is regarded as one of the best agricultural and stock-raising counties in the state.

Building stone is obtained in various places on Crooked Creek, and on Skunk and English Rivers. The best is the brown limestone of the Chemung group, which is exposed along English River in the northern part of the county and also on two small streams, called Davis and Goose Creeks, near the east line. The concretionary limestones, which underlie a great portion of the county, furnish an excellent material for the manufacture of quicklime. Sand and clay suitable for the manufacture of brick are found in the drift deposits in all parts of the county, the clay being obtained immediately below the subsoil.

COAL.

As Washington County lies almost or wholly within the subcarboniferous geological age, and extends only into the margin of the coal fields, the presence of coal in the county so far as is known, is limited to a local outlier near Brighton, and it is doubtful if any permanent, productive mines will be found in the county.

WASHINGTON.

In December, 1839, Joseph Adams built the first house in this town. It was a double log house; one part 14x16, for a dwelling, and the other part, 16x16, for a blacksmith shop. Both apartments were occupied before the close of the month. The next building was also a double log house, one story and a half high, erected for a hotel by Daniel Powers, and occupied as such by him in March, 1840. During the month of May, following, John Daugherty started a store in a part of the hotel building. In the same year came Almon Moore and family. He also engaged in mercantile business. Amos Emory came the same year, and went into the grocery and liquor trade. After this the growth of the town was gradual and slow for several years.

The first physician in Washington, was Doctor George H. Stone. William Case was the first lawyer; John Jackson the first justice of the peace, and Thomas Baker the first post master. The first child born in the town was Margaret Adams, daughter of Joseph Adams and wife, born September 23, 1840. A young man by the name of Everetts, was the first person interred in the Washington graveyard, in the Winter of 1839-40. The first religious services at or near the town, were conducted by Reverend J. L. Kirkpatrick, who organized a Methodist Society at the house of William L. Harvey, about one mile southwest of town, on the 20th day of October, 1839. At the date of organization it numbered about fifteen members.

The first newspaper established was the Washington Argus, Lewis F. Walden, proprietor, and J. F. Rice, editor. It was a respectable sheet in appearance, and edited with considerable ability. In politics it was Democratic. It was discontinued inside of two years. The next attempt to establish a newspaper, was in 1856, when the Washington Press was started by A. R. Wickersham as editor and proprietor. It was independent in politics, but of strong anti-slavery proclivities. It subsequently became a Republican paper, and has so continued.

In June, 1855, Honorable N. Everson opened an exchange and deposit bank, and in 1857, Shaw, Rigour & Co., opened a similar institution, which firm was shortly succeeded by William H. Jenkins & Co. Both institutions gave place to, and were succeeded by, the Washington Branch of the State Bank of Iowa, which began business April 19, 1859, with a capital stock of $50,000. George A. Green was President, and H. M. Holden, Cashier. The Directors were—James Dawson, Joseph Keck, John W. Quinn, G. A. Green, and George C. Stone.

Perhaps the most important event in the history of Washington, was the completion of the Mississippi & Missouri Railroad to the place, on the last of August, 1858. The event was celebrated on the 1st of September, of that year, by the largest gathering of people that had ever assembled in the place. Over one thousand visitors from eastern towns met the citizens on the public square and partook of a free entertainment. Between seven and eight hundred persons arrived on the first passenger train, many of them being distinguished railroad men, editors and politicians. The completion of the railroad gave a new impetus to business, especially in the town, which improved rapidly in buildings, and business of all kinds. The United States Express Company established an office in the place, November, 1857, with A. D. Mickael as Agent.

Several attempts were made to incorporate the Town of Washington. In 1855, the attempt was carried as far as the election of officers, but being irregular was abandoned. In 1857, the Legislature passed an act incorporating the City of Washington, but this was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. In September, 1858, an attempt to incorporate was voted down. In 1863-4, another effort was more fortunate, and on the 29th of September, 1864, the first town council who took their seats were elected, to-wit: Mayor, Ralph Dewey; Recorder, L. F. Sherman; Trustees, A. W. Chilcote, V. W. Andrus, James Dawson, Joseph R. Lewis, and William Wilson, Jr.

Washington has an excellent system of public schools, thoroughly graded, which employ ten teachers and a superintendent at good salaries, under an organization as an independent district. The town also has an academy with quite a large number of students.

The Washington County Press owned and edited by H. A. Burrell, who purchased the office of Mr. Wickersham in 1866, is the oldest paper in the place. It is Republican in politics; published every Wednesday, and enjoys a prosperous business. The Washington Gazette, edited by John Wiseman, is an independent journal published Fridays, and has a large circulation and good jobbing facilities. It was established in 1868.

Washington is one of the finest inland cities of Iowa, and enjoys a large and prosperous trade and shipping business.

BRIGHTON.—This is a thriving incorporated town in the southeastern part of the county, about eleven miles from Washington, and one mile south of Skunk River. It is on the Chicago & Southwestern Railroad, with good farming lands, timber and building stone convenient. The river here also furnishes good water-power for mills.

The other villages and post offices are: Ainsworth, Clay, Crawfordsville, Dairy, Dutch Creek, Lexington, Middleburgh, Richmond, Riverside, Valley, Wassonville, West Chester, White Ash, and Yatton.

CERRO GORDO COUNTY.

This county is situated in the second tier from the northern line of the state, and is the fifth west from the Mississippi. It is twenty-four miles square and contains an area of 368,640 acres. Like most portions of Northern Iowa, it has a very pleasing diversity of surface, particularly in the eastern portion, produced by the valleys of the numerous creeks and streams, by which the county is well drained, while the prairies, which form the greater portion of the area of the county, are not devoid of a good degree of diversity occasioned by their undulations. The prairies, except in the southwest, where a number of extensive marshes are found, are generally high, rolling and dry, though never being sufficiently broken or abrupt to render them unsuitable for pleasant and profitable cultivation.

STREAMS.

Nearly every portion of the county is well watered by clear and rapidly flowing streams, generally supported by springs. All the water courses in this part of the state flow more rapidly than in the west and southwest portions, affording better and more abundant water power for machinery. The east part of the county has larger and more numerous streams of running water than the west. Shellrock River flows from northwest to southeast, through the middle of the northeast corner township, watering portions of two other townships. It is a rapid stream, flowing through extensive beds of limestone, and presenting many superior mill privileges, but few of which are as yet improved. This stream has its source in Minnesota, and is a tributary to Cedar River. Lime Creek, sometimes called Lime River, is a tributary of the Shellrock, and to Cerro Gordo County, is the most important stream in it. It enters from Hancock County, nearly six miles south of the northwest corner of Cerro Gordo, and thence flows in a northeast course some six or eight miles, touching the south line of Worth County. Thence its course is in a southeast direction, leaving the county near the middle of the east line. It meanders through five different townships, affording the county at least thirty miles of water course, exclusive of its tributaries. This stream also flows through and over beds of limestone throughout nearly its entire length in this county. It has many tributaries, one of the most important being known as Willow Creek, having its rise in the west part of the county, and one branch of it being the outlet of Clear Lake. These streams abundantly water all the north half of the county, while in the southeast corner there is a stream known as Coldwater Creek, which with Beaver Dam Creek, and its several branches, water most of the south half of the county.

It may be hardly necessary to refer to an element so common throughout all parts of Iowa as water, yet it is well to state that the purest and best is easily obtained every where by digging from ten to thirty feet, and in many localities living springs are found bursting from the banks of the streams and along the rivers.

LAKES.

Clear Lake, the Saratoga of the West, is one of the largest and most beautiful in Iowa. It is situated in township 96 north, of range 22 west, is about six miles long east and west, by an average of two miles wide, the widest place being nearly three miles. The water in depth is from ten to twenty-five feet, and abounds in various kinds of fish, including pike, pickerel, bass, buffalo and other varieties. People resort here from great distances for the purpose of fishing, and at certain seasons of the year wagon loads of them are easily caught with spears, hooks, seins, and by the various other methods known to the piscatorial sportsman. On the south side and east end of the lake, are large bodies of timber, amounting in the aggregate to several thousand acres. The bottom of Clear Lake is pebbly, and the water pure and clear, as the name indicates. A line of rocks, or boulders, extends around the border, protecting the banks from washing, as the waves often beat against them with great force. At the east end of the lake there is an outlet leading into Willow, and thence into Lime Creek. This outlet has been turned to good account by the erection of a flouring mill for which it furnishes an excellent mill power, the supply of water being constant and easily controlled.

Clear Lake is the only one of considerable size in the county. The southwest corner township contains several small ones, none of which have names, not being considered of sufficient size or importance.

TIMBER.

The northern portion of the county is abundantly supplied with the various kinds of timber common to this portion of the state, which consists principally of burr, red and black oak, walnut, butternut, hickory, lime, and white elm. The most extensive bodies are found along the Shellrock River, Lime Creek and surrounding Clear Lake, and extending northward into Worth County. Owen's Grove, in the east, and Lime Grove in the south, furnish a good supply for fuel and other general purposes to the settlers around them. The southwest portion of the county has little or no good timber, but nature has abundantly supplied it with fuel in the extensive peat marshes which are among the best and most valuable in the state. It is estimated that there is over twenty thousand acres of native timber in the county, which will afford, if properly preserved, a supply for all purposes for which native timber is used for all time to come.

RESOURCES.

Like most portions of Iowa, the chief source of wealth for the future, as well as the sure support of the present inhabitants of Cerro Gordo County consists in its rich and fertile soil, which is peculiarly adapted to the growth of small grains, vegetables and esculent roots, though corn is grown with a good degree of success. Small fruits are raised in abundance, while the success with apples and pears has been such as to justify the cultivation of the hardier varieties only. There is a plentiful supply of stone, much of which is of excellent quality for building purposes. Much the greater part of it at every exposure is excellent material for the manufacture of lime, and all suitable for common building purposes. The magnesian strata being more uniformly bedded, of a more uniform texture, is admirable material for dressed stone, for bridge piers, or other heavy masonry. The whole county is thought to be underlaid by strata of the Devonian age immediately beneath the drift, which are freely exposed in the valleys along the Lime and Shellrock, and are not unfrequently found at the surface at a considerable distance from the streams in the northeastern part of the county. Some of the common limestone near Mason City is thinly and uniformly bedded, and, having a light gray color, looks well in business houses which have been constructed of it at that place. Many of the rocks are highly fossiliferous, and show the outlines of various kinds of shells, and being of the sub-carboniferous or kind which belongs below the coal measures, no discovery of coal may be expected in this region. The inhabitants must therefore depend upon the forest trees and the peat marshes for their supply of fuel, although their excellent railroad facilities give them an opportunity of securing coal from the southern part of the state or from Illinois, should these resources ever be exhausted.

On the banks of the lakes and streams an abundance of sand can be obtained, while clay suitable for the manufacture of brick is found in sufficient quantities to meet all future requirements, though it is nowhere so abundant as in the southern part of the state.

HISTORICAL.

The first white settlers in the county were Joseph Hewett and James Dickirson, who arrived at Clear Lake, July 14, 1851, where they constructed rude cabins. Their object in coming was to capture elk and buffalo calves, and they were accompanied by two young men, John Alloway and Henry Robinson, who came as teamsters, and remained one year. They did not expect to remain over winter, but this being the rainy season so well remembered by old settlers, they experienced so much difficulty in crossing the streams which so impeded their enterprise that they were necessarily obliged to remain, and sending for their families, they settled down at the southwest corner of the lake without any white neighbors nearer than Bradford, Chickasaw County, fifty miles distant, at which place there were only four families. As this was embraced in the neutral ground, and had been purchased from the Indians a year or two previous, they were little disturbed save by a few wandering Indians who occasionally came back to their old hunting and fishing grounds. They were principally occupied in trapping, hunting and fishing, and as game was plenty they led a wild, adventurous life during the years that they remained so far away from the borders of civilization.

The next settlement in the county was made on Lime Creek, in July, 1853, by two brothers, David and Edwin Wright. They located about three miles above where Mason City is now situated. In the Fall of the same year James and Robert Sirrine took claims at the east end of Clear Lake, where they still remain. In the Fall of the same year John B. Long and John L. McMillin settled where Mason City is now located, taking claims, as the land did not come into market until the 5th of September, 1854. For several years the two principal settlements of the county were at Clear Lake and Mason City. As early, however, as September, 1853, Anson C. Owen settled at Owen's Grove, in the east part of the county, where there is now a flourishing settlement. Among the first settlers at Shell Rock and vicinity were Richard Moore, H. I. Smith, Elijah Wiltfong, Richard Morris, G. L. Bunce and Chauncey Lugard all prior to 1855.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

As before stated, for the first two or three years the Indians gave the settlers no trouble. Captain Joseph Hewitt remained at Clear Lake some five or six years, when he removed to Algona, Kossuth County, where he lived several years, and he then returning to the Lake, lived there until his death, in May, 1865. Few men were better known among the early settlers of Northern Iowa. Before coming to Cerro Gordo County, he had been a trader among the Winnebago Indians, in the northeast part of the state. Learning of his location at Clear Lake, several families of the Winnebagoes followed him there in the Winter of 1853-4. The Sioux, who lived farther north in Minnesota, learning that some Winnebagoes had come upon the "neutral ground," determined to exterminate them. About five hundred of them came down during the Summer of 1854, and for some time feigned to be very friendly with the whites and Winnebagoes, eating and smoking the peace-pipe with them. A prominent Winnebago brave named To-Shan-e-ga (Otter, in their language), suspicioned their intentions, and wanted the white settlers to use their influence with the Sioux to protect them. It was not long until two Sioux, skulking around the camp of the Winnebagoes, waylaid and shot a boy about sixteen years of age, belonging to the latter tribe. Not content with killing him, they severed his head from the body, and carried it away with them. Hewitt and Dickirson then sent their teams and conveyed the Winnebagoes out of the country, they making their way back to the tribe in the vicinity of St. Paul. At this time Mr. Dickirson lived on the prairie a mile east of the lake, and the movements of the Sioux were such as to induce the settlers to take steps for their own protection. Mr. Dickirson's house was resorted to by all the settlers as the place of common defense. The Indians came in force within a quarter of a mile of the house, and made demonstrations which indicated hostile intentions, repeating their maneuvers at intervals for several days. At last, Captain Hewitt determined to know what their intentions were, and accordingly went to them. The Sioux informed him that they supposed the Winnebagoes were in the house, and that, if so, they were determined to fight them. Hewitt told them if they would leave their arms on the prairie they might proceed with him and search the house. They accepted the proposition on condition that the whites all come out of the house and leave their arms there. The stipulation was agreed to, and the Indians made a thorough search, twenty-one of their number being detailed for the purpose. After being satisfied that no Winnebagoes were about, each of the twenty-one warriors took out a revolver that he had concealed under his blanket, and exhibited it to the whites to show them what advantages they had, and made some sport over the fact that the whites had allowed them such a chance. Pending these difficulties the governor of the state sent a detachment of fifty soldiers to Clear Lake to preserve the peace and put down any disturbances that might arise. Before the arrival of the military, however, the Indians left for Minnesota, and thus ended the first Indian war of Cerro Gordo County.

The next Indian disturbance is familiarly known to the old settlers here as the "Grindstone War," and took place in the Summer of 1855. In this, our old pioneer friend, James Dickirson, figured prominently on one side, against twenty-one marauding, vagabond Sioux warriors on the other. The Indians came to the house of Mr. Dickirson and commenced showing their troublesome disposition by attempting to kill his chickens, break his grindstone, and in many other ugly ways. Finally, one of the swarthy rascals took up the grindstone and made off with it, whereupon Mr. Dickirson took a good-sized stone and followed him. At the entreaty of his wife and Mrs. Tuttle, he threw down his weapon, fearing that if he struck the Indian, the others might be so exasperated as to endanger all their lives. He forced the grindstone away from the Indian, and in doing so threw him several feet, sprawling on the ground. He recovered and followed Mr. Dickirson with a club, striking him slightly on the head. The latter then returned the blow with the grindstone, inflicting a wound which laid the Indian out on the ground for several minutes. The other Indians were up to this time, at the house, but went down and took up their wounded comrade. They then held a pow-wow over the affair, and decided that Mr. Dickirson should pay the wounded Indian $100, or give him a horse, either of which, the former positively refused to do. The Indians then threateningly surrounded him with their guns cocked, repeating the demand, and telling him that unless he complied they would shoot him. Mrs. D. begged her husband to pay the sum demanded, but he persistently refused. The wife had some five or six dollars in silver, which she gave the Indians, and they finally left the premises. Next day all the settlers at Clear Lake and Mason City, to the number of twenty-five, collected together, and went to the Indian camp, on Lime Creek, some seven miles north of the lake. They found about sixty of them there, and demanded that they should immediately leave the country. They also made them refund the money which Mrs. D. had given them. The Indians left in great haste, glad to get off so easily. Of this little expedition, John Long, then of Mason City, was captain. The Sioux never came into the county after this, but the Winnebagoes came in large numbers for the purpose of hunting and fishing. They always maintained friendly relations with the whites.

Among those who resided at Clear Lake at the time of this "Grindstone War," were James Dickirson, Joseph Hewitt, Robert O. Sirrine, William Wilson, Rowland Gardner and William Luce. The two last named, with their families, less than two years afterwards, were killed in the Spirit Lake massacre—Miss Abba Gardner, a young daughter of Mr. Gardner, being carried away a captive and subsequently purchased from her captors.

STOCK.

Stock raising and grazing has been, and still is, an important branch of the industrial interests of Cerro Gordo County. The adaptitude of the soil to the growth of grass, both tame and wild, combined with the excellent stock-water which is so generally distributed, render it peculiarly adapted for this purpose; the only draw-back being the long, severe winters, which necessitate such large amounts of winter feeding. The dairy business is receiving considerable attention, for which it is also well calculated. The butter and cheese from Northern Iowa rank among the best in the West.

RAILROADS.

The railroad facilities of this county are surpassed by few counties in Northern Iowa. The Iowa & Dakota Division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad passes through the county from east to west, a little north of the center, crossing the Central Railroad of Iowa at Mason City, from which place the Mason City & Minnesota runs in a northeast direction to Austin. The main line of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota also passes up the Shellrock River, in the two northeast townships.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper published in the county was the Cerro Gordo Press, which made its first appearance in the Summer of 1858, with D. E. Coon, subsequently a major in the 2d Iowa Cavalry, and brevet brigadier general, as editor. It was published at Mason City, and was discontinued after running about two years.

The second was the Cerro Gordo Republican, published at Mason City, by J. H. Aylesworth, who in about one year sold to H. G. Parker, who conducted it until September, 1866, when Silan Noyes became associate editor and publisher, and the following year took full charge, and has since alone and with different partners conducted the Republican. The present editors and proprietors are Noyes & Lanning.

The Mason City Express, by H. R. Spink, is a good local paper, and receives its share of patronage, while the Clear Lake Observer, established in 1871, by S. H. Brady, the present editor, is a deservingly well patronized local sheet.

D. J. FARRELL, Auditor. M. S. SCHREMERHON, Clerk.
JAMES RYAN, Treasurer. OWEN T. DENISON, Recorder.
H. H. SCHELL, Sheriff. MRS. J. B. DAKIN, Supt. of Common Schools.
THOMAS PARRERT, Chairman of Board of Supervisors.

MASON CITY.

This is the county seat, and is situated on Lime Creek, some four or five miles northeast of the center of the county. It was laid out in 1854, the locality being at first known as "Masonic Grove," most of the settlers being members of that Order. J. L. McMillan built the first store in 1854, and sold the first goods in the county. It has the advantages of timber, building stone, and good water power, and has also been favored with excellent railroad facilities.

There are few towns in Iowa of the size and wealth of Mason City that are as well built, and contain so many elegant, substantial and architecturally handsome business houses and residences. The town is settled largely from the Eastern and New England States, and contains but a small foreign element, as is indicated by the neat, tasty, and clean appearance of the streets, yards and public grounds. A large stone public school building, located in a commanding position, is one of the first objects that attracts the attention of strangers who visit the city for the first time, while a number of commodious, elegantly designed churches beautify the general appearance, and indicate that the religious and moral wants of the community are well cared for. Being surrounded on all sides by a rich, beautiful and well improved farming section, with no rival towns in the vicinity, it has secured an unusually large and desirable retail trade, which the generous, enterprising, and thoroughly honest business habits of its tradesmen will long retain. Having excellent hotel facilities, and being only nine miles from Clear Lake, it has become quite a Summer resort for pleasure seekers. Altogether it is quite a pleasant place to live, and is destined to become one of the most important places in Northern Iowa.

CLEAR LAKE.

This town is located at the east end of the lake of the same name, and was laid out by James Dickirson, in the Fall of 1856. James Crow built the first house soon after, and Thomas Palmer was the first to open a store. The Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad passes through the place. It has good hotel accommodations, and is fast becoming a fashionable summer resort.

PLYMOUTH.

This is a town pleasantly situated on Shellrock River, in the northeast part of the county. It was laid out in 1857, by C. W. Tenney and John Morgan.

ROCK FALLS.

This place is also on Shellrock River, about three miles below Plymouth. It was laid out in 1855, by Elijah Wiltfong. It has a fine water power, and there is an abundance of good building stone in the vicinity.

ROCKWELL.

This is a station on the Central Railroad of Iowa, in the southern part of the county, and has a fine grazing and agricultural country around it.

PORTLAND.

This is a station on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, in the eastern part of the county.

OSCEOLA COUNTY.

Osceola County is in the northern tier, and second from the western boundary of the state, and contains a superficial area of 392 square miles, or 250,880 acres. It is watered and drained by the east fork of Rock River, Ocheydan, Otter, and several smaller creeks. These streams meander through valleys of great fertility, producing luxuriant crops of excellent grass. Good well water is obtained at all points by digging from ten to twenty feet. The county is entirely destitute of native timber, being a broad expanse of gently rolling prairie, all of which is susceptible of cultivation. The soil is generally a dark loam, with a slight mixture of clay on the table lands, and a small quantity of sand and vegetable mold in the valleys. The Ocheydan Valley, which passes through the central and southeastern part of the county, is a broad belt of great fertility, bordered by high rolling prairie. There are no exposures of rocks in place in the county, but boulders are occasionally found scattered over the surface. The St. Paul & Sioux City Railroad crosses the county from northeast to southwest, and was completed in the Summer of 1872.

HISTORICAL.

Capt. E. Huff was the first white man who settled in the county, coming in the Fall of 1870, and locating in township 98, range 42, in the valley of Otter Creek, in the southwestern part of the county. He did not remain over winter, but returned to his claim in the Spring of 1871. Among others who settled in the Spring of this year, were D. L. McCausland, C. M. Brooks, W. W. Webb, F. M. Robinson, E. Morrison, M. A. Churchill, E. O. Manseu, A. M. Culver, and Frank Stiles, mostly from the eastern part of the state.

The county was organized January 1, 1872, having previously been attached to Woodbury County for revenue and judicial purposes. The county seat was located at Sibley, in March, 1872, by the following commissioners, appointed from adjoining counties, to wit: Orson Rice, of Dickinson; C. W. Inman, of O'Brien; and J. S. Howell, of Lyon. The town of Sibley was laid out in the Fall of 1871, and was named in honor of Gen. H. H. Sibley, of St. Paul. The first election for county officers was held October 10, 1871, at the house of A. M. Culver, when the following were elected: F. M. Robinson, Auditor; A. M. Culver, Treasurer; C. M. Brooks, Clerk of Courts; D. L. McCausland, Recorder; Frank Stiles, Sheriff; Dellia Stiles, Superintendent of Schools; John Beaumont, Drainage Commissioner, and J. H. Winspear, George Spaulding and H. E. Fenton, Board of Supervisors. The first court was held at Sibley, July 14 and 15, 1872, by Hon. Henry Ford, District Judge. The first religious meeting held in the county was in June, 1871, by Rev. S. Aldrich, a Methodist minister. The first school was taught by Mrs. Dillia Stiles, in the Fall of 1871, on section 12, township 99, range 42.

WALLACE M. MORE, Auditor. JOHN F. GLOVER, Clerk.
S. A. WRIGHT, Treasurer. D. L. MCCAUSLAND, Recorder.
JOHN H. DOUGLASS, Sheriff. J. M. JENKINS, Supt. Public Schools.
D. L. RILEY, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

SIBLEY.

This is the county seat, and was the first town laid out in the county. It is located on the northeast quarter of section 13, township 99, range 42, and was laid out by the Sioux City & St. Paul Railroad Company in October, 1872. The first building on the town site was erected and occupied by F. M. Robinson, in 1871. The Sibley Gazette was started in July, 1873, by L. A. Barker, being the first newspaper published in the county. The first business house was erected by H. K. Rodgers, soon after the town was laid out. A good court house was erected in 1873, at a cost of about $5,000, and is located on a block of ground donated for the purpose by the railroad company. The company also donated another block for a public school house, which was built in 1872 at a cost of $3,500, and also set apart a block, centrally located, for a public park. From Sibley to Sioux City the distance is seventy-four miles, and from St. Paul, one hundred and ninety-five miles. The place is situated to command the trade of an extensive region of country.

ST. GILMAN.

This is a railroad station seven miles southwest of Sibley, and when the rich farming region which surrounds it is developed, will doubtless become an important shipping point.

ADAIR COUNTY.

This county is in the third tier from the south line of the state and the third east from the Missouri River, and is twenty-four miles square, containing 368,640 acres.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

The great water shed, separating the waters which flow into the Mississippi from those of the Missouri, passes through this county, entering it from the north, a little east of its northwest corner, and leaving it a little southward of the middle of its eastern boundary. The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad crosses the great water shed almost exactly at the point where it enters Adair County, which point, according to their levelings, is nine hundred and seventeen feet above low water in the Mississippi River at Davenport, or fourteen hundred and forty-five feet above the level of the sea. After passing in a southeast direction nearly as far as the center of the county, the water shed sweeps abruptly to the eastward, between the upper branches of the Grand and Middle Rivers, and continues thus until it crosses the eastern boundary. A broad strip of upland that constitutes the great water shed where it enters the county, runs southward between the East Nodaway and Grand Rivers, both of which are tributary to the Missouri, and although thus made a secondary water shed, it has a higher elevation than the great water shed that passes further eastward. The surface of the county, although almost all prairie, is very undulatory, and in many parts is quite broken by deep, grassy ravines, some of which reach a depth of one hundred and fifty feet from the general level of the uplands. This unevenness of surface renders a small portion of the county untillable by the ordinary methods of cultivation now in use, yet as these declivities possess a soil nearly as fertile as the more level land, they will at no distant day be cultivated with profit. Many of these slopes are so gentle that they form excellent farms, while the bottoms along the streams are usually narrow, dry, and susceptible of easy tillage. The divides are either level or undulating, and finely situated for all farming purposes. Unlike many similar summit regions, it is so perfectly drained that ponds and marshes are nowhere to be found, while there is really very little or no waste land in the county. The soil is chiefly black loam, containing some sand, and is deep and fertile, being from two and a half to four feet in thickness, and resting on a bed of clay. The finest crops of grain and vegetables are easily raised. Such is the character of the sub-soil, that it receives and retains moisture to supply the wants of vegetation during the dryest seasons. The same characteristic, also, after heavy rains, prevents the surface soil from retaining for any considerable length of time, an undue proportion of water. Farming operations are soon resumed after the heaviest rains, as the processes of evaporation and absorption soon restore to the ground the proper degree of moisture. For the same reasons, the roads do not long remain heavy or impassable. Even the most broken lands usually have a deep, rich soil, and some such now in cultivation produce excellent crops. There are but few thin gravel points, and but little of the land will ever require any process of drainage other than that which nature has provided. Considering the character of surface and soil, combined with an excellent supply of stock water, it will be seen that this county is well adapted to grazing purposes.

STREAMS AND TIMBER.

This county has no large water courses, but is blessed with numerous small streams which afford a sufficient supply of never-failing stock water to nearly every portion. These streams are supplied during the dryest seasons by springs, some of which are large, and all clear and cold. The principal streams are: North River, which rises in Guthrie County and enters Adair about the middle of the north line of Jefferson Township, passing through the northeast part of that township and across the south part of Lincoln Township into Madison County. This stream, with several small branches, affords a plentiful supply of stock water to these two townships. Middle River also rises in Guthrie County, and, entering Adair, crosses portions of Walnut, Jefferson, Grove and Harrison Townships, flowing in a southeasterly direction. It receives several tributaries, draining portions of the same townships. The next stream to the west is Grand River, which rises in Grove Township, a little northeast of the center of the county, and flows in a southeast course through Grand River Township into Madison County. The above streams are all in the east half of the county, and flow in a southeast course. In the west portion of the county are the two branches of the Middle Nodaway, both flowing across the county from north to south, and forming a junction in Washington Township, and thence passing into Adams County. These streams water the townships of Walnut, Jackson, Summerset, Washington and Richland. The above streams, with their numerous branches, drain every portion of Adair County, as well as supply it with living stock water at all seasons. There is some water power on the Nodaway, but at present it is used only to a limited extent.

Good well water is obtained on the prairies at from eighteen to twenty-five feet deep. In Fontanelle the wells vary from twenty-two to twenty-four feet. In the timber, and along the edges of the same, it is usually necessary to dig from thirty to fifty feet. The well water is generally of the quality termed "hard." Springs are numerous along the streams, and at the heads of the ravines. There is one three miles northwest of Fontanelle, near what is known as "Vawter's Grove," on the Middle Nodaway, which furnishes at all times water enough to supply hundreds of cattle. The water flowing from the springs is generally "soft."

A description of the streams naturally suggests reference to the timber, as this is only found here along the water courses. In this article the county is somewhat deficient, but there are some fine groves in various places. There are three bodies of timber of considerable extent, one on Middle River in the northeast part of the county, one on Grand River in the southeast, and one on the Nodaway in the west and southwest. That along the two branches of the Nodaway is the best in the county. A branch of Middle River, along the north line, is skirted by several excellent groves. The central and northwest portions of the county are the least favored in respect to timber, while the western, eastern, northern and southeastern have good bodies of oak, hickory, walnut and lime. Among the other kinds of timber in the county may be mentioned elm, maple, hackberry, cottonwood, ash, box-elder, buckeye and wild cherry. Sugar, or hard maple, is also found in several places.

STONE AND COAL.

A very good quality of limestone is found in sufficient abundance along North and Middle Rivers, both for building purposes and for the manufacture of quick lime. Stone is also found in limited quantities in other parts of the county. Boulders are quite common, scattered in various localities, and are used to some extent for walling wells, and for other purposes. Several of these "lost rocks" are of immense proportions, the most noted in this respect being on Grand River in Harrison Township. A noticeable feature is the fact that these rocks all lie at about the same relative altitude in respect to the elevations and depressions of the surface. Their situation is invariably on the sides of slopes of the ridges, about equidistant between the summit and base. These boulders are of the granite species so common in many other places.

As yet, no coal bank has been opened in Adair County. There are numerous indications of its existence on Middle and Nodaway Rivers, and in other places. Doctor White, State Geologist, is of opinion that a dark carbonaceous matter found on a branch of Middle Nodaway, may be the northern extension of the coal bed worked at Quincy in Adams County. He also thinks that if in the future coal should be obtained in Madison County by deep mining, it may be also expected by similar mining in Adair.

Good brick clay is found in some places, although it is not very general over the county.

HISTORY.

There seems to be some conflict of opinion as to who was the first white settler in Adair County. It was probably Thomas N. Johnson, who came as early as 1849. The next was William Alcorn, who settled at the upper crossing of Middle River in 1850. This was in what is now Jefferson Township, in the north part of the county. Perhaps about the same time a man named Lyon erected a cabin near the large spring at Vawter's Grove, in Jackson Township, in 1851. Lyon sold his claim to one Taylor, who was on his way to California with a drove of some four or five hundred head of cattle. Taylor, after wintering his cattle, sold out to J. G. Vawter. Lyon and Taylor were but temporary residents, and left as soon as permanent settlers began to come in. Among the first permanent settlers were William McDonald, who located at the lower crossing of Middle River; Alfred Jones, in Jackson Township; Robert Wilson, in Grand River Township; George M. Holaday, in Jefferson Township; Joshua Chapman, in Richland Township; and Jacob Bruce, in Grove Township, near the head of Grand River. John A. Gilman, John Ireland, James Campbell and John Gilson were also among the early settlers.

Walnut Township, in the northwest part of the county, was settled in the Spring and Fall of 1855 by several families from South Carolina. Those who came in the Spring were James Thompson and Isaac S. Arledge; and in the Fall, Charles Smith and Lewis Underwood.

Jeremiah Rinard and Stover Rinard settled in Jefferson Township, adjoining Walnut on the east, in the Summer of 1855. Most of the early settlers in this part of the county were from South Carolina and Indiana. Settlements were made this year in various parts of the county.

The first white child, Margaret Johnson, was born in 1850. The first death was that of a child of John Gilson in the same year. The first marriage was that of William Stinson and Elizabeth Crow, the license being issued May 6, 1854, and the marriage solemnized the next day by George M. Holaday, County Judge.

ORGANIZATION, ELECTIONS AND COURTS.

By an act of the General Assembly, approved January 12, 1853, Adair was attached to Cass County for revenue, election and judicial purposes, and constituted a civil township. It was ordered that the first election be held at the house of Alfred Jones in Adair Township. Of this election there is no record, either in Adair or Cass County. In April, 1854, the election was held for the first county officers, and for the organization of the county. At this election George M. Holaday was elected County Judge, and John Gilson, Clerk.

The first record made by Judge Holaday is dated May 1, 1854, and was an order that the County Court be held at the house of George M. Holaday. On the 3d of July of the same year, the county was divided into two election precincts by a line running north and south, dividing it equally. The east half was called Harrison, and the west half Washington Township.

By an act approved January 15, 1855, the General Assembly authorized the location of the county seat, and appointed as commissioners for that purpose George B. Hitchcock, of Cass County; Elias Stratford, of Madison County; and John Buckingham, of Page County. On the 27th of April of that year, the first named two commissioners reported to the county judge that they had, on the 24th of the same month, met at "Adair Post Office" and located the seat of justice on the southwest quarter of section seventeen, township seventy-five, range 32, and that they had given to the place the name of Summerset. The land was soon entered by Judge Holaday for the county, the money being furnished for that purpose by Enos Lowe. On the 30th of August of the same year, an order was made that the County Court be held at the house of J. J. Leeper until the necessary offices were built at Summerset.

The first proceedings of the District Court appearing of record, took place at Fontanelle in March, 1857, but the first court really convened was in March, 1855. The only mention of this court in any of the records of the county, is in connection with compensation allowed the sheriff and jurors for services. The first grand jury were as follows: William Thomas, James Roberts, William Stinson, J. T. Ewing, John Ammon, Manning Drake, Charles Friend, Titus Sullivan, John Ireland, James Ray, Abram Rutt, Alfred Jones and Thomas Hodson. Judge E. H. Sears presided at this term. Very little business was transacted.

The next term was held at Fontanelle, commencing March 30, 1857, Judge E. H. Sears presiding. Theodore Smith being Clerk and Abner Root, Sheriff. But little business was done at this term. Another term was held, commencing October, 1857, Judge Sears presiding, Colonel Ballard acting as Clerk, and L. C. Elliott as Sheriff. John H. Cooper, an attorney from Kentucky, was admitted to practice law. The first case was a suit for divorce, and the prayer of the petitioner was granted.

AN INCIDENT.

Many amusing incidents transpired in connection with the early law suits of most of the counties, and Adair is not an exception. One of the settlers brought suit against another for the recovery of a balance on a certain note. The case was adjudicated before the only justice of the peace in the county. The defendant claimed credit of a certain book account, but the court ruled that an account could not be admitted as a set-off against a note. The defendant demanded a jury, whereupon three by-standers were summoned by Sheriff Root. The defendant had also provided himself with an attorney in the person of Boyd J. Stickle, afterwards prosecuting attorney of the county. The case proceeded, the court interrogating the witnesses in relation to the various matters touching the same. Our young legal friend, Stickle, defendant's counsel, in accordance with what he deemed to be his prerogative, undertook to question the witness. The gravity of the court was shocked at what he considered an unwarrantable interference. He promptly called the lawyer to order, informing him that he was not interested, and that he had better attend to his own business. At this junction the better half of the court exclaimed: "That's so! What is it his business?" Our legal friend of course subsided. When the evidence closed, the attorney timidly ventured to address a few words to the jury. The court again peremptorily demanded his silence, reminding him that he was not interested in the case. Again, up spoke the other half of the court: "That's so! Let him mind his own business!" The lawyer, with a proper appreciation of the majesty and dignity of the tribunal in whose presence he stood, modestly and gracefully withdrew.

In due time, the sheriff and jury retired to a log stable to consider the verdict. The result was a judgment for a small amount in favor of the defendant, an equal division of the costs, and a recommendation that the defendant treat the crowd. He promptly complied, and sent for the whisky, which was served with sugar in a large tin pan! And so ended one of the early law suits of Adair County.

THE PRESS.

The first paper published in the county was the Adair County Register, started as a Republican organ in the Summer of 1863, by James C. Gibbs. It was published a little over one year, and was suspended until the Summer of 1865, when it was again revived by the same man, who, after running it some three months, sold to Perry Wallace, who removed the material to Winterset. Two years later Mr. Gibbs bought another office and commenced the publication of a paper of the same name, which has been continuously published until the present time, although passing through several changes of proprietorships, and is now under the able management of J. C. Naylor, who is making it a spicy, reliable paper.

The Adair County Reporter, a Republican sheet of considerable merit, was established in 1870, and is now ably conducted by the Gow Bros., who have made it one of the permanent institutions of the county.

GREENFIELD.

This village, the present county seat of Adair, is situated about a mile and a half south of the geographical center of the county, in the township of the same name. It was laid out in September, 1856, by Milton C. Munger. Mathew Clark built the first house in the place, and W. H. Blakely, I. S. Bragg, and A. P. Littleton were among the first settlers. In March, 1858, a petition was presented to the county judge, asking that the question of removal of the county seat from Fontanelle to Greenfield be submitted to a vote of the people. At the same time a remonstrance against such submission was also presented, and the judge at that time declined to make the order; but the question has been subsequently several times submitted, and in the Winter of 1874 or '5, in accordance with a decision of the Supreme Court, the records and other property pertaining to the county seat were removed from Fontanelle to Greenfield.

FONTANELLE.

This place, originally called Sommerset, was changed to its present name by act of the General Assembly, approved December 22, 1856. The survey of the town was completed in May, 1855, the first lot being sold to Elvira Collins July 27, of that year, and the price paid was $50. The location of the town is about six miles southwest of the center of the county, on a fine dry prairie, and it is a place of considerable business.

NEVIN, or NEVINSVILLE, is located partly in Adams and partly in Adair County, but mainly in the former. It was laid out on a magnificent scale in May, 1857, by Roswell W. Turner and Richard B. Smith, of Roxbury, Mass. It is the nucleus of a fine settlement of intelligent New England people.

CASEY.—This town is situated on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, on the north line of the county, but mostly in Guthrie County. It is the shipping point for a large part of Adair County. The original proprietors were W. B. Hall, J. H. Bailey, R. H. Marshall, and A. G. Weeks. It has become one of the prosperous towns on the railroad. It was named in honor of the contractor who built that portion of the road.

GRUNDY COUNTY.

In the heart of that magnificent belt of country which lies between the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, and the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central, having for its eastern boundary the Cedar River and for its western the Iowa, is Grundy County, which, though comparatively little known, is yet wealthy. Without having its praises extolled, it has quietly worked its way forward, and without noise or parade has opened wide its arms to a small, but loyal, enterprising and wealthy population. With its surface of high rolling prairie, without swamps, with an exhaustless soil, with a healthy, bracing air that makes the blood leap with a new vigor of health, no county in the state can outrank it in agricultural capabilities, resources or advantages. The face of the land is of that gently undulating character which breaks away from the view in an unending roll and wave of blight hills and shallow valleys. No place in the county—with the slight exception of a basin marked out by the sluggish Black Hawk as it leaves the county at the eastern boundary—is there any variation from the rolling surface. The land is well watered. Creeks, brooks and spring branches traverse its surface as regularly as if they had been marked out by a shepherd's hand; and the great Drainage Commissioner has furnished natural ditches in the sloughs that carry the water from every farm out to the receiving tributaries of larger size. The greater portion of the county lies in the Cedar Valley—the divide between that stream and the Iowa being within from one to eight miles of the western line. The water is of most excellent quality and taste, and without any ague-breeding or disease-fetching faults.

SOIL.

The soil is of that rich black loam found in all the fertile districts of Iowa, and has the peculiar virtue of alike standing the ravages of drought, or the continuous floods that fall in wet seasons. Since the plow first furrowed its surface, it has never failed to bring forth in abundance, and yearly has blessed the husbandman with harvests that sent the cart "groaning beneath its sheaves" to the granary. While the soil has such a preponderating element of sand in its composition that the plowman never has to wait for it to dry after the heaviest shower of rain that comes with the most terrific thunder storms of the season, it also has the desirable mixture of clayey substance which makes the wheat field as fruitful as the corn, and oats more bountiful than either. It is no uncommon thing for the good farmers to raise a corn crop of eighty and ninety bushels to the acre, wheat crops of twenty-five to thirty, and oats to the almost marvelous amount of sixty and seventy, and even eighty bushels. What is true of all the better portions of Iowa prairie, is eminently true in regard to Grundy County, which has neither the vexatious stone of smaller size, or the large lost rocks which are found in some parts.

TIMBER AND STREAMS.

This is emphatically a prairie county, the government surveys only returning three thousand six hundred acres of timber on its borders. The best portion of this is Fifteen Mile Grove in the southeast, and Hickory Grove, on the Black Hawk Creek, near the center, all of which were formerly good timber, but the main portion is now of that stunted and scattered character of the hazel or oak barren kind. Fine groves of maple, cottonwood, willow and other fast growing varieties have been planted throughout the county, dotting its broad expanse of undulating prairie. The Black Hawk Creek, rising near the center of the western boundary, passes through Grundy Center, and leaves the county in the southeast township. By a series of dams, good water power could be obtained at any point below Grundy Center. Small bodies of timber skirt this stream, and are also found along the Beaver in the northwest, and on the Wolf in the southeast. The Bear Creek, in the southwest, and some others, are destitute of timber. While this almost total absence of timber was of course a severe drawback to its early settlement, and is in a great measure answerable for the slow progress it made, many of its most intelligent citizens now claim that it was a special advantage. No one of sound judgment can deny the vast benefits which must eventually result from having a county which nature has prepared as one great plow field, unincumbered with the breaks of forest bluffs, or the stumps and debris of wood lands. It is thus unrolled as a great scroll, whose every section is ready for the pencil of agriculture to mark it out into valuable and productive farms. Its broad fields are now being well occupied with thrifty, enterprising, wealthy agriculturists, who are rapidly transforming its unproductive fields into such farms as the Garden State of Iowa alone can produce. The coal beds which are mined in the adjoining county of Hardin, on the west, are supposed to extend into Grundy, but the coal doubtless lies deep. No exposures of rock are found in any part of the county.

HISTORICAL.

William D. Peck was the first white man who erected a cabin within the limits of Grundy County, the date of that event being October 4, 1853, and the location section 6, township 89, and range 15, in what is now called Franklin Township, in the northeast part of the county. The same month, but some two weeks later, John Freal built a cabin on Black Hawk Creek, in the eastern part of the county, where he afterward kept a sort of a tavern, it being on the main road from Grundy Center to Waterloo, which, owing to his slothful appearance, was called by the expressive name of "The Unwashed Man's House." Thomas G. Hoxie was the first to settle in the middle portion of the county, locating in the vicinity of Grundy Center, in the Summer of 1855. The fifth settler in the county was Hon. C. F. Clarkson, who was the pioneer of the western part, where he pitched his tent May 1, 1855, and set his plow to work on what has since blossomed into the widely celebrated "Melrose Farm," a handsome view of which is shown in this work.

ORGANIZATIONS AND ELECTIONS.

The county was organized in 1856. The first officers were: Thomas G. Copp, Treasurer; Elias Marble, Clerk; A. W. Lawrence, County Judge; T. G. Hoxie, Sheriff; and C. F. Clarkson, Prosecuting Attorney. At this first election there were one hundred votes cast, of which John C. Fremont received ninety-nine and James Buchanan one. This one vote was cast by John Freal, of the Unwashed Man's House, but as he could not write he had to depend upon the honesty of the Republicans to write out his vote for him. When the ballot was given him with the electors names at the head of the ticket in the usual form, he was afraid that it was some "black Republican chemneyan," and so tore them off, and would have nothing on his ticket whatever but James Buchanan's name. Thus it will be seen that the pioneer Democrat of Grundy County was true to his instincts and party.

FIRST COURT.

The county seat was located at Grundy Center in the Winter of 1856-7, and the first district court was held there in a log house in 1857, by Hon. J. D. Thompson, of Eldora.

RAILROADS.

Although there has as yet been no railroads constructed within the limits of Grundy County, yet it enjoys advantages for communicating with the outer world equal to many counties that can boast of their railroad facilities. The Iowa division of the Illinois Central runs the whole length of the northern border, while the Chicago and Northwestern rolls along only ten miles away on the south, and the Central, of Iowa, which crosses the I. C. R. R. at Ackley, near the northwest corner of the county, runs south at an average distance of three miles from the western boundary line. The great trading places are Cedar Falls and Waterloo, in Black Hawk; Ackley, in Hardin; and Marshalltown, in Marshall County.

WAR RECORD.

During the war the county furnished about one hundred and thirty soldiers—but sent no company to the field. Situated as it was, Black Hawk, Marshall, Hardin, and Butler county organizations drew in Grundy by piece-meal and left it without even an organized squad of its own. The soldiers of this county, like their heroic compatriots in every part of the state, fought their battles well; and many of them to-day sleep on the same fields where they proved their heroism.

WILLIAM C. WILLIAMS, Auditor.	FRANK G MOFFETT, Clerk of Courts.
EMILE H. BECKMAN, Treasurer.	S. IRA RAYMOND, Recorder.
LEVI DILLY, Sheriff.	GEORGE R. STODDARD, Supt. of Com. School

GRUNDY CENTER.

This place is located on Blackhawk Creek, near the geographical center of the county. It is situated on a high rolling prairie, with a beautiful and fertile region stretching around it in all directions as far as the eye can reach. The first settlement was made here in 1855, and at the close of this year there were several houses in the village. The name of the place was once changed to Orion, but for some reason the new name seems not to have been recognized, as that of Grundy Center has always been used in all official papers and documents. In 1861, a newspaper was started here, called The Pioneer, but was continued only about one year. This was the first paper in the county. Mr. Hartman was the publisher and J. M. Chaffer, editor. The Grundy County Atlas was established April 17, 1868, by Hon. L. D. Tracy, who, after running it one year, sold to E. C. Peckham, who conducted the establishment until February 8, 1870, when it passed into the hands of George K. Shaw, and on the 14th of the following June, L. D. Tracy again took control, which he only continued a short time when he sold, October 4, 1870, to the present proprietors, Rea & Moffett. The Atlas is a neat eight-column paper, Republican in politics, has a good circulation, and is the only newspaper published in the county. Several years ago a good court house was erected, the contract price for which was $10,000.

MITCHELL COUNTY.

At the session of the Iowa State Legislature in the Winter of 1850-1, this county was formed and bounded, and named Mitchell, in honor of that noble Irish patriot, John Mitchell. Its territory is divided into fifteen townships, viz.: Burr Oak, Cedar, Douglass, Jenkins, Liberty, Lincoln, Mitchell, Newburg, Osage, Otranto, Rock, Stacyville, St. Ansgar, Wayne, and Union. This county contains an area of 504 square miles. It is one of the northern tier of counties of Iowa, and fourth in number from the Mississippi River. It is bounded on the north by the State of Minnesota, east by Howard, south by Floyd, and west by Cerro Gordo and Worth Counties.

SURFACE.

The surface between the streams is a gently rolling prairie, almost destitute of timber, and presents, by the fairness of its surface, an amount of tillable land surpassed by but very few counties of the state.

SOIL AND PRODUCTIONS.

The soil is very fertile; is a rich loam, well adapted to a bountiful production of all cereals common to this latitude. The soil is also particularly well adapted to the production of tame and native grasses, and grazing; and the raising of blooded stock attracts the general attention of the intelligent class of farmers that have settled here.

STREAMS.

Mitchell County is well watered, not only by numerous streams of larger size, but by small brooks and never-failing springs. The larger streams are the Wapsipinicon, which flows through the northeast portion of the county; the Little Cedar, which rises above the north line, flowing in a southeasterly direction the entire length of the county; while the Red Cedar, coming in from the northwest takes a southeasterly course, skirting the south center line of the county the entire length of its townships. Some of the streams afford excellent water-power privileges, many of which are successfully improved. Rock Creek heads in the northwest corner of the county, passes through the county and becomes tributary to the Red Cedar after passing into Floyd County; Deer Creek heads in Minnesota, passes between Rock Creek and Red Cedar, taking nearly an easterly course, and unites with the Red Cedar at Newburg.

MILLS.

There are in the county nine flouring mills, six saw mills, and one woolen mill, the motive power of which is water.

TIMBER.

The streams are densely lined with heavy growths of the most valuable timber, among which can be mentioned oak in every variety, butternut, walnut, hickory, hard and soft maple, elm, basswood and poplar, furnishing an abundant supply for fuel, building, manufacturing and other purposes.

GEOLOGY.

Nothing can be said of Mitchell County geologically more than in every part of the county the limestone predominates over all other formations. In fact it is really the only one ever discovered. The large quarries afford the best quality of building stone, and are considerably worked. Also the clay found in many parts of the county produce a class of brick superior in strength, durability, color and finish. Any amount of lime can be produced here of excellent grade.

STATISTICS.

Reports for 1874 show the number of bushels of wheat raised 708,978; corn, 227,074; oats, 395,345; barley, 141,296; wool shorn, 8,817 pounds.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

Prominent among the institutions of Mitchell County appears the agricultural society. It was organized in 1859. This organization was not successful, and after a three years' trial the organization was abandoned. The first officers were: President, Thomas Wardell; Secretary, S. B. Chase; Treasurer, Amos S. Faville. In 1871, the society was re-organized, and twenty acres of land purchased adjoining the flourishing City of Osage, at a cost of about $2,000. Commodious and necessary buildings were erected for the purposes of exhibition, and also a building for the officers. A half-mile track was laid out and put in such order that no track of the same length in the state surpasses it. The grounds were enclosed. The society is now in a flourishing condition, and the interest is increasing among the farmers and citizens of the county, who have a fixed determination to make it a most complete success. The present officers are as follows: President, F. B. Stacy; Vice President, Daniel Sheehan; Secretary, E. S. Fonda; Treasurer, M. Loomis.

MITCHELL COUNTY FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.—This organization takes its individuality as the name implies. Its capital is to the amount of property insured as to valuation, and is on the mutual plan. Its assets are over $200,000, and the organization is said to be a success.

EDUCATIONAL.—The educational statistics of the county for the year 1874 are as follows: School tax, $31,860; number of pupils, 4,248; number of teachers, 146; number of districts, 54; number of school houses, 87, of which latter 67 are frame, 12 brick, 6 stone and 2 log. All are comfortable and commodious.

COUNTY POOR FARM.—The county has a poor farm, situated two miles north from Osage, the county seat. It consists of eighty acres of excellent farming land, which was purchased in 1873, at a cost of $1,200. In 1873 a house was constructed thereon at a cost of $2,500. Levi Gray is steward of the farm, yet it is under direct control of the board of county supervisors.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The court house is of red brick, well finished and furnished. It was erected in the Fall of 1858, at a cost of $25,000. The county jail was built in 1859. It is constructed of plank spiked together, making a wall twelve inches in thickness, the inside lined with sheet iron, and a brick wall around the outside. The foundation is of stone and cement, not less than two feet in thickness in any part under the whole surface of the jail. Cost of jail, $13,500.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The officers of Mitchell County for 1875 are the following:

NELSON PEIRCE, Auditor.

M. H. WHITE, Clerk of Courts.	E. P. SHIPHERD, Treasurer.
E. L. SAWYER, Recorder.	L. D. PIPER, Sheriff.
I. F. WINNEK, Superintendent of Schools.	E. HUNTINGTON, Surveyor.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In the Fall of 1851, Leonard Cutler and his son J. B. passed through Mitchell County prospecting, and were the first to observe its beauty with an idea to a commencement of a permanent settlement. In the Spring of 1852 the first land claims were made, the claimants being David B. Cutler and William Ramsdell. They commenced the settlement by the erection of the first cabin, which was of logs, on what is now known as "Doran's Farm," about one mile north from Osage. But the first family in the county was that of L. S. Hart, senior, who with his son Orrin came here in the Summer of 1852, and stuck a stake about two miles below what is now Osage, at what was then known as Spring Grove. L. S. Hart, junior, came on in the year 1853 and settled on the place where he now resides. This is where the first family lived. Their first house was covered with new mown grass, but soon after a log cabin was erected.

In the year 1852, Reverend C. L. Clausen, a Norwegian minister, arrived with some of his countrymen from Wisconsin and made claims where St. Ansgar now stands, on the Red Cedar River; they then returned to Wisconsin, but came back and became actual and permanent settlers on their claims June 23, 1853. In April, 1853, Lorenzo Merry settled on the Cedar, at a point since known as "Merry's Ford"; and also came that year a number of settlers to make permanent homes in the Hart Settlement, and others were added to Clausen's Settlement. In September, 1853, Josiah Cummings and his son Wm. E. commenced the settlement at Mitchell. He was followed in the Spring of '54 by C. C. Prime, John Adams and A. T. Cady, and in August of the same year by Doctor D. G. Frisbie, who was for many years a prominent citizen of the county. Thus began the early settlement of the county, started by a pioneer band that has opened up one of the richest agricultural counties of Iowa.

Prior to 1854, this county had been attached to Chickasaw for county purposes, but in this year it was organized by the election of the following officers: A. H. Moore, County Judge; Amos Cummings, Clerk; B. C. Whittaker, Treasurer and Recorder; L. S. Hart, Jr., Sheriff; Rev. C. L. Clausen, School Fund Commissioner.

COUNTY SEAT.

Three commissioners were appointed from Howard, Bremer and Floyd Counties respectively by the Iowa Legislature in January, 1855, to locate the seat of justice for the county; and on the first day of March, 1855, the same was located at Mitchell. An election between Mitchell and Osage, in April, 1856, was ordered by the county court, and resulted in favor of Osage. Mitchell contested the election, however, on the ground that the court had illegally granted the election, the remonstrance outnumbering the petition, and gained a decision in the District Court. Osage appealed to the Supreme Court, but pending the decision a second commission was appointed by the Legislature in 1857, to settle the matter. It consisted of one member each from Chickasaw, Floyd and Cerro Gordo counties—met first in May and again in June, 1857, when it located the county seat at Osage. Another election on the question was held in April, 1860, and resulted in favor of Mitchell by 69 majority. A third and last vote was taken in April, 1861, which, as counted by the board of supervisors, despite an injunction forbidding the canvass from the district judge, resulted in a majority of 19 in favor of Osage. Mitchell then retained the records by an injunction suit, which carried the case a second time to the courts, where it was not finally settled until the Fall of 1870, when a decision was made in favor of Osage. Thereupon the records were removed thither and it has since peaceably enjoyed the possession of the seat of justice of Mitchell County.

FIRST THINGS.

The first term of the Mitchell County Court was held by Judge Moore, October, 1854.

The first election was held in August, 1854, and the following were the places for voting: At the house of Benj. Whittaker in Osage; at a school house in Mitchell, and at the house of Rev. C. G. Clasen in St. Ansgar.

The first prosecuting attorney was under appointment, J. M. Bennett, in 1855.

The first declaration of citizenship was filed by Alof Anderson, in 1855.

The first marriage license was issued to Madison Rice and Emeline Knapp, April 7th, 1856.

The first term of the district court was held June, 1857, by Judge Samuel Murdock. Previously Mitchell had been attached to Floyd County for judicial purposes.

The first death in the county was of Orrin Hart, October 12, 1854.

The first estate administered upon was that of Nels Johnson, deceased, March 22, 1856.

The first bill against the county was audited July 2, 1856, and warrant issued to A. S. Faville for $50.75 for services as road commissioner.

The first case docketed was O. P. Harwood as plaintiff and D. W. Poindexter, defendant.

The first saw mill in the county was built at Newburg in 1854.

The first newspaper in the county was the Osage Democrat, which made its appearance in the Spring of 1856, D. E. Coon, editor and publisher. The first number was printed under the shade of a tree in the vicinity of where the Dunton House now stands on Main Street.

The first white child born in the county was Major W. Hart, son of L. S. Hart, Jr. December 13, 1853.

The first judgment in the district court was entered June 6, 1857, for $149.50 in favor of S. B. Scott, and against J. S. Woodward.

During the Winter of 1855 two post offices were established in the county. One at Osage, the other at Mitchell. Philo Cady was employed to carry the mail once a week from Charles City at three dollars a trip. This expense was paid by the citizens. Previous to establishing these offices, the nearest post office accommodation was first Independence, 100 miles distant; next West Union, 70 miles away; afterward Bradford, only 40 miles distant, and gradually the offices approached until the final establishment of the two mentioned, which were the first in the county.

The first school house was at Mitchell in 1854.

OSAGE.

This thriving town is the seat of justice for Mitchell County; is beautifully situated on a graceful rise of prairie a little over a mile from the Red Cedar River, and the space between the town and the river is covered with a dense belt of forest which protects it on the west and southwest. It is afforded railroad communication by the Illinois Central Railroad. The town is well laid out, the streets following the cardinal points of the compass. Main Street follows a section line running east and west, while Seventh Street, which crosses Main at right angles, runs north and south on another section line. Main Street is one hundred feet wide, and the other streets four rods wide. The principal business street is Main, at the foot of which stands the Illinois Central Railroad depot. The business blocks are nearly all very fine, and would do credit to a much larger and older town than Osage. They are constructed principally of brick, nicely arranged, well filled with goods, and everything shows an excellent business, well conducted. Many fine shade trees are being cultivated in the town, and ornamental shrubbery is being neatly arranged on many of the fine lawns, to decorate the palatial homes of the successful business men here. There seems to be a spirit of energy prevalent in Osage, engendered by the knowledge of its fine location, its natural beauty, its great educational, religious and business advantages, backed by the unsurpassed fertility of the farming districts about it, and the independent and liberal condition of its citizens.

Osage was incorporated as a town by an election held in April, 1871, at which the following were the officers chosen: Mayor, W. I. Belding; Recorder, N. L. Rood; Trustees, Cyrus Foreman, W. H. Bishop, D. B. Cotton, G. W. Furgason and Charles Sweney. M. Loomis was appointed Marshal, and Cyrus Foreman, Treasurer.

The officers for 1875 are: Mayor, H. W. McNabb; Clerk, I. F. Winnek; Treasurer, Jesse Brush; Marshal, William B. Cutler; Trustees, W. H. H. Gable, J. H. Agen, D. Mandigo, S. B. Chase and Joseph Kelly.

Shipments.—During the year 1874, there were shipped over the Illinois Central Railroad from Osage, the following amounts of freight: Wheat, 289,000 bushels; barley, 18,000 bushels; potatoes, 9,600 bushels; dressed pork, 20 car loads; live stock, 70 car loads; flour, 30 car loads; butter, eggs, etc., 20 car loads. Total number cars shipped, 1,055. Receipts for 1874 over same lines as follows: Merchandise, car loads, 150; lumber, 130; coal, 30; agricultural implements, 60. Total cars received, 370.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The town was first laid out in 1853, when Doctor A. H. Moore and B. C. Whitaker, platted the new city and named it "Cora," which plat was never recorded. In 1854, Messrs. Downs, Gibbs and Boardman, purchased the interest of Moore & Whitaker, and changed the name of the town to "Osage" (O-Sage), in honor of Orrin Sage, of Ware, Massachusetts. Afterwards additions were made, and in February, 1856, Doctor S. B. Chase for himself, and agent for other interested parties, had the present Town of Osage surveyed, platted and recorded. In July of this year the United States Land Office was moved to Osage from Decorah, which brought hundreds of strangers to the place, and millions of dollars were handled or in possession of strangers or residents during the continuance of the land office here, till the lands were sold and the records removed to Des Moines in September, 1859.

In May, 1857, four townships of land in the county were brought into market, and during the sale it was estimated that Osage contained 2,500 people, four-fifths of whom were strangers, and $1,000,000 in gold.

The early settlers of Osage, the men who nursed it through the early stages of its business life, and gave it the credit, character and enterprise it is possessed of, are many of them now here reaping the reward of well-spent lives by the result of the enterprise in starting a town that has grown to a flourishing young city.

INSTITUTIONS OF OSAGE.

Cedar Valley Seminary.—This institution, so beautifully located in the northwest portion of the city, reflects credit upon its projectors and sustainers, by the high reputation it enjoys as a college for moral, mental and useful training of the mind. No educational institution is more favorably known, and none by reason of its efficient superintendence, merits greater favor, or is more successful in performing the work indicated by its name.

This school was first opened on the 10th of January, 1863, under the direct personal superintendence of its present honored principal, Professor A. Bush, than whom there is no more thorough or accomplished educator in the state. In September, 1864, this seminary passed under the control of the Cedar Valley Baptist Association. At the next annual meeting of the association, articles of incorporation were adopted and a board of trustees elected. In 1867 the board placed it on a college basis, and provisions were made for teachers in the classics, modern languages and natural sciences, since which time it has met with great success.

The building is of brick, 72x36 feet, two stories high, besides basement; cost about $20,000. It is well supplied with all the latest improvements in educational apparatus for the convenience of teachers and students. The average attendance is about eighty-five. The present officers are: President, Joseph Kelly; Vice President, Judge Arad Hitchcock; Secretary, Doctor S. B. Chase; Treasurer, Alva Bush.

Library Building.—Here is a most worthy enterprise started which can not terminate otherwise than in most gratifying success. A library building has been erected at a cost of about $6,000. The principal donor to this was the namesake of the city, Orrin Sage, who gave $2,000 and 800 acres of land. The balance, $4,000, was raised by special tax of the city, and the land remains unsold, to be used for the purchase of books, etc. The building has just been completed, and when stocked with necessary reading matter will be an institution of which Osage may well be proud.

Independent District Graded School.—This is another educational institution which reflects credit to Osage and the worthiness of its citizens. It was built in 1872 at a cost of $20,000. It has an attendance of 350 pupils, employs Professor W. R. Edwards as Principal, and a corps of five assistants. Under their supervision the school is justly popular.

First National Bank of Osage.—This bank was organized in 1866, with a capital of $50,000, and has a surplus of $25,000. It is well conducted and officered as follows: President, J. H. Brush; Cashier, J. P. Brush.

Sweney Bros.' Bank.—This is a private banking institution, established in 1874. It is one of the leading private banking houses of Northern Iowa.

Osage Steam Elevator Company.—This is a co-operative institution, under control of the order of Patrons of Husbandry. The elevator has a storing capacity of 25,000 bushels of grain. It was erected in 1874 at a cost of $6,000. President, W. G. Frazer; Secretary, D. L. Talcott; Treasurer, Theo. Wilson.

THE PRESS HISTORY.

The Osage Democrat was the first newspaper printed in the county, appearing in the Spring of 1856. It survived a little over a year. In the Fall of 1857 The North Iowan was issued from the late Democrat office, by Hutchins & Snow. In 1859, J. H. Brush bought the establishment and continued its publication until the Fall of 1860 as a Republican paper, when A. G. Owen bought it and removed it to St. Ansgar, where it appeared as The St. Ansgar Journal, a neutral paper, and it there died, after having been continued about six months. Mr. Brush again bought the office and brought it back to Osage. In November, 1861, R. K. Crum purchased the material and issued and continued The North Iowa Standard until March, 1865, when William Toman purchased it from him and changed it back to The North Iowan, and made it a success. This he continued until November, 1868, when he sold out to Crum & Rood, who changed the name to The Osage Tribune. Six months later Mr. Rood retired; the Tribune was merged with The Mitchell County Press, then published at West Mitchell, and the publication of the Press continued at Osage for three months, when Mr. Crum retired, and since which time the Press has continued under the entire control of T. M. Atherton, who, on the 1st day of March, 1865, first issued The Mitchell County Press at West Mitchell, and on May 20, 1869, moved the office to Osage, when it was consolidated with the Tribune. Since this consolidation the Press has been regular in its appearance, and met with a degree of prosperity worthy the well directed and able efforts of its editor and proprietor. It is Republican in politics, in size a nine-column sheet, printed on a Potter power press, and has a circulation of 1,300 copies. A good book and job printing office is in connection with the newspaper office.

The Mitchell County News.—Shortly after the consolidation of the Press and Tribune, Doctor S. A. Cravath and D. G. Frisbie purchased the material on which the Press had been printed, and issued the first number of the News at Mitchell. It was moved to Osage in June, 1871, and went under the control of Clyde & Stradley, who established it as a weekly Republican journal. On February 1, 1872, it was completely destroyed by fire with no insurance. Material for another office was purchased, and on April 1, following, A. W. Clyde and A. A. McEwen re-issued the paper, Stradley having retired. Since November, 1873, A. W. Clyde has been sole publisher. The News is an eight-column sheet, and Independent Republican in politics. It is well conducted and has a circulation of about 1,000 copies. A good job office is in connection.

RELIGIOUS.

Methodist Episcopal Denomination.—The first Methodist Episcopal Church Society of Osage, was organized in 1857, by Reverend Mr. Holbrook, and consisted of twelve members. In 1869, the society commenced the erection of a fine brick edifice, which was completed and dedicated as a house of worship in 1874. The building is 38x70 feet, and cost $14,000. The membership now numbers about 150. Present pastor, Reverend R. N. Earhart.

Congregational.—The first Congregational Church Society of Osage, was organized in December, 1858, Reverend W. J. Smith, pastor. At the time of organization the membership was eighteen. For a number of years this society received aid from the Home Missionary Society, but in 1869, became self-sustaining. In 1868, the society erected a brick church building at a cost of $6,000. In 1874, a new and handsome building was erected in a more central part of the town. It is built of wood, and cost $8,000. Since 1868 the pastorate has been filled by Reverend T. O. Douglass, and under his management the society has been successful. He is still retained as pastor. Membership 135.

Baptist.—This religious society was organized in 1862, with nine members. Since the building of the Cedar Valley Seminary, this denomination has held religious service in the chapel: Under the pastorate charge of Reverend A. Bush, the society is in a flourishing condition.

Christian Church.—This church was organized in 1871, with sixteen members—membership now about 80. First pastor, Reverend Melvin Nichols. This society holds worship every Sabbath in McNabb's Hall.

Universalist.—Organized September 1, 1869, by about twenty families. First officers: Judge Arad Hitchcock, President; H. I. Smith, Secretary; H. Huntington, S. W. Hastings, G. M. Stoughton, William Button, and H. L. Knowlton, Trustees. First pastor, Reverend Newmarch P. Smith. Present membership thirty families, and pastor, Reverend J. H. Ballou.

MITCHELL.

The Village of Mitchell, properly speaking, is divided into three distinct villages, Mitchell, West Mitchell, and Mitchell Station, where the railroad passes between the former two. West Mitchell is situated on the east bank of the Red Cedar River, which affords it one of the finest water privileges in Northern Iowa. The first settlement of this place was begun in 1853, and among the early settlers may be mentioned Messrs. Prime, Abbott, J. F. English, and Stacy. In the early settlement the Villages of Mitchell and West Mitchell grew up almost as rivals, when some years after the Cedar Falls and Minnesota Railway was constructed, it chose to run directly between the two towns, and thus the third town, or station, sprang up. This drew the business from the eastern town, and its business men followed and transferred their trade and wares to the station, while the West Mitchell people continue to carry on business successfully where they originally started.

EDUCATIONAL.

At Mitchell is located the Independent Graded School, an institution that reflects credit to the three villages. It is a wooden structure built in Gothic style of architecture, well located, and cost including grounds $4,500. It has an average attendance of 150 pupils. The principal of the school is G. W. Smith. He has two assistants.

The Methodist Episcopal denomination has a church erected in 1873, at a cost of $3,000. Reverend S. L. Garrison is the present pastor.

The Catholics have a church edifice built in 1873 at a cost of $3,000. These churches and the high school are located at Mitchell. There is also here, now used as a town hall, the old court house built in 1855 of stone, which cost $4,000.

The West Mitchell flouring mills were erected at an early day by Chambers & English. They are now the property of Messrs. English & Glover. Besides a large custom work they are manufacturing and shipping 300 barrels of flour per week. Their superior "Diamond A" brand, made by a new patent process, is universally popular.

A large woolen factory where cloths of the finest grade are largely manufactured, is located here, and propelled by the same water-power.

RICEVILLE.

The settlement of Riceville was begun in the year 1855, by three brothers, Dennis, Franklin C., and Gilbert H. Rice, and for them it was named. During the year 1855, nothing but a mere hut had been erected, but in the Fall of 1856, among other things newly begun, a steam saw mill was built and put in operation by these brothers, and continued until destroyed by fire in the Spring of 1858. The same season they improved a water-power, and completed for the same a grist mill which is in operation at the present day, which, since 1866 has been owned by Nelson Pierce. This mill was the second built in Mitchell County. The town is well situated and steadily improving.

The first school taught here was in the Winter 1859-60, by Miss Emma Seeley. The first religious service was held in the Spring of 1856, by Reverend A. Loomis. The first church society organized was the Baptist in 1858. Its nearest railroad point is Le Roy, Minnesota, ten miles distant.

SHELBY COUNTY.

This county is situated on the Missouri slope, in the fourth tier from the southern boundary line of the state, and is the second east from the Missouri River, is twenty-four miles square, and contains about five hundred and seventy-six square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

The general surface is rolling, with deeply excavated valleys along the larger streams, while in some portions of the county it is quite rough and broken, with steep precipitous hills and deeply cut valleys. Like in many other portions of the Missouri slope, the universally conceived idea of a prairie is not wholly realized here. If the imagination of the reader will enable him to conceive what a tract of land would be that had been in a liquid state, and had been so violently agitated that high waves ran from east to west, and these had suddenly received a tranverse motion and solidified while the breakers were dashing in ponderous masses towards the skies, he will have a tolerable correct idea of the appearance of a large portion of the prairie in the northwestern portion of this county. Although rough, this is a very valuable agricultural section, as the hill sides have an excellent soil, and are peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of fruit of all kinds, and is considered by many as a decided advantage rather than a detriment to the prosperity of Shelby County. The bottom lands usually slope towards the streams, and along the West Nishnabotany, which is one of the finest and most beautiful valleys in the state, average more than one mile in width, and are lined by narrow belts or clumps of timber. Not only this, but all the valleys of the county, possess a soil unsurpassed for fertility, which, like most other portions of the county, is composed of a fine material known as the bluff deposit. The soil of the whole northwestern slope differs from that of the central and eastern portion of the state in this: It has not the heavy sub-soil and under stratum of clay. This peculiarity is quite noticeable in Shelby County, where, after a heavy shower, or a series of rain storms, plowing may be immediately resumed, because the water which falls is soon absorbed by the earth, and sinks rapidly away on account of the absence of clay to stop or impede its progress. The soil here is a rich siliceous loam, well adapted to the production of the usual western crops, with the single exception of the tame grasses. Corn, for which there is no better or more favorable soil than is found in these valleys, is probably the staple, while wheat, oats and other kinds of grains, as well as the different grasses and vegetables, grow to great perfection.

The county is throughout well watered, the West Nishnabotany River, which flows southward nearly through the middle of the county, receiving from the east the waters of the Middle Nishnabotany, Whitted's and Indian Creeks, while the western part of the county is drained by the affluents of the Missouri and Boyer Rivers, the most important of which are Silver, Mosquito, Pigeon and Picayune Creeks. Mills Creek is a small creek in the northwest which flows into the Boyer in Harrison County, and on which is Garland's Grove, a fine body of native timber embracing nearly one thousand acres. Besides this there are several fine groves bordering some of the other streams, which embrace the varieties commonly found throughout this section of the state, such as burr and red oak, white and red elm, butternut, hackberry, black walnut, ash, linn and ironwood, while there is often found a heavy growth of sumach, hazel, thornapple, blackberry, gooseberry and grape. Where now may be observed a little outlying thicket of hazel and sumach -the pioneers of forest increase—a few years hence, unless arrested by the devastating fires, a grove of thrifty saplings will have sprung up, and thus in a few years, by the repetition of this process, the beautiful prairie slopes will be converted into forest clad ridges and sombre thicket's dells, as wild and unInviting to the agriculturist as the native forests of the Middle States. The apparent scarcity of timber in this county is no real drawback to its rapid settlement, as building lumber can now easily be obtained from the pineries of the north, and as these vast meadows of unbounded fertility hold out inducements to the settler such as no forest clad region can boast.

The entire county is supposed to be underlaid by the upper coal measure, as the strata is known to exist in counties to the south and west, but is here concealed under the post-tertiary deposit not less than two hundred and fifty feet beneath the surface. The supply of building material is limited, yet a fair quality of brick is made of the material of the bluff deposit. The only stone obtained for building are the boulders of the drift formation found scattered in various places.

It is related that several years ago a settler, in going from Audubon County to Shelbyville, got lost on the prairie; that in wandering about he accidentally crossed a ravine at a point where a vein of coal was laid bare by the action of the waters of the brook which ran by; that he picked up a specimen of the coal and carried it with him till he reached the settlement, where he showed it to parties who immediately started in search of the "valuable land," taking with them the original "wanderer" as a guide. The exact spot where the treasure lay had not been marked, and the exploring party, after dilligent search, were obliged to return without any coal in their pockets!

EARLY HISTORY.

Long before any permanent settlements were made in Shelby County it was frequently visited by trappers and hunters, among whom were two men named Bowman and Beery. In 1852 Nicholas Beery was robbed by the Indians of a large number of pelts which he had collected, and in his attempt to defend his property he was overpowered by the Indians, who kicked and beat him so violently that he soon after died from the effects of wounds received. His remains were buried in the cemetery at Des Moines, and some years after when his friends wished to mark the grave with a stone the spot could not be identified.

Shelby County was organized in 1853, the following being the first who held the county offices mentioned in connection with their names: James M. Butler, County Judge; V. Perkins, Clerk of the District Court; and Andrew Fonts, Sheriff. At that time the Counties of Crawford and Carroll were attached to Shelby for political, judicial and revenue purposes. Judge Samuel H. Riddle held the first session of the District Court for the three counties in the grocery of Solomon Hancock, at Galland's Grove. The judge charged the grand jury and then sent them into a smoke house to deliberate, and while they were absent it is reported that the lawyers joined with the judge in a social game of cards "for the drinks." In the mean time the grand jury issued subpœnas for witnesses as to the selling of intoxicating liquors by Solomon Hancock. One witness testified that that he drank something in Solomon's grocery, but did not know whether it was really liquor or not; it did not intoxicate him, but made him "awful sick." He said water had sometimes served him the same way. "That will do," said the foreman, "pass around the jug." A two-gallon jug was immediately produced from a corner of the smoke house. After it had been passed around the grand jury returned to the grocery, reported that there was nothing before them, and they were thereupon discharged. At this first session of the District Court, the following attorneys were present: H. P. Bennett, of Glenwood; L. M. Cline, A. C. Ford and David Price, of Council Bluffs.

When it is stated that at the election which made choice of the first set of county officers, only thirteen votes were polled, it may readily be inferred that it was scarcely practicable to fill all the offices with persons of either legal or literary attainments. It so happened that the education of the sheriff had been sadly neglected, and moreover, he was in the habit of visiting Solomon Hancock's grocery too often to maintain the reputation of a strict temperance man. Some time before the first court convened, as a county official, he received a copy of the code of 1851. He could not read it, but had the good fortune of being the husband of a wife who could. When he would return home under the influence of Solomon Hancock's whisky, she would read to him that section which makes habitual drunkenness a sufficient cause for divorce. His attention was so frequently called to this provision of the Code that it became monotonous to him, and having the impression that Judge Riddell had sent the volume, when he came round to hold court the "High Sheriff" seized the statute and carried it back to the judge, and throwing the book down before him, he exclaimed: "There, now; don't you dare send any more such nonsense to my house!"

About the time of the organization of the county, atown was laid out in the northwest corner township, to which the name of Shelbyville was given, and in 1854 this place was designated as the county seat, but the County Judge being opposed to it, procured Hancock's grocery for holding the first court. The next term of the District Court, however, was held at Shelbyville. This was the first town laid out in the county, but is now known only in history, as the houses have all been removed to Harlan, and to the neighboring farms.

RAILROADS.

Although there are but a few miles of railroad within the limits of Shelby County, yet it possesses very good facilities for shipping and receiving freights. The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, which runs for some eight miles in the county, passing through the town of Shelby, skirts the southern boundary, affording the southern portion of the county several convenient shipping points, while on the north is the Chicago and Northwestern, which furnishes those in that part with equal advantages, while the inhabitants of the central portion, though not being quite so convenient, can have their choice of routes.

Shelby County sent forty-seven soldiers into the war of the rebellion, though it had no organized company, the volunteers all joining organizations in the neighboring counties.

JOHN H. LOUIS, Auditor. GEO. D. ROSS, Clerk of Courts.
CHRIS. J. WYLAND, Treasurer. A. F. HOLCOMB, Recorder.
LYSANDER SWEAT, Sheriff. AARON N. BUCKMAN, Sup. Com. Schools.
WILLIAM ASKINTLE, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

HARLAN.

This is the county seat, and is situated a little south of the geographical center of the county, within half a mile of the Nishnabotany, and just below the confiux of the middle and west branches of that river. The town stands on the second bottom, which gradually rises from the river, affording a fine view up and down the valley, while the hills of the high rolling prairie rise above each other until they seem to blend with the distant sky. On the north and west the hills protect the town to some extent from the fury of the prevailing winds of Autumn and Winter, rendering the site a desirable one. The town contains several churches, good schools, a number of business houses, and is destined to become a place of some importance. It has one newspaper, the Shelby County Record, owned and edited by H. L. Wood, who is making it a lively local sheet. It was established in 1870, and has a good circulation in the county.

LOUISA COUNTY.

This county lies on the Mississippi River, which forms its eastern boundary, is in the third tier north from the Missouri line, is of a somewhat irregular shape, and contains an area of about 380 square miles. The principal interior water course is the Iowa River, which is swelled by the influx of the Cedar in the northern part of the county. There are many smaller streams, among which may be mentioned Goose, Short and Crooked Creeks in the northwestern, Long Creek in the center, and Otter in the southern—all on the west side of the Iowa River, while on the east the Indian is the principal stream, being in the central and northern part. There are several bayous, the largest of which is Muscatine Slough, which has a course of about fifteen miles in the county. These creeks are all small, but being, with the rivers and sloughs, skirted with bodies of timber of various extent, this county is one of the best timbered portions of the state, being nearly equally divided between prairie and timber. That in the bottoms is principally cottonwood, maple, walnut, hackberry, hickory, birch, and some kinds of oak, while the upland timber consists largely of white oak and hickory. The general character of the surface is rolling, with bluffs bordering the Mississippi and Iowa River bottoms. The soil is generally a deep loam, not easily exhausted by tillage, and is well adapted to corn and other kinds of grain, as well as root crops, grass and fruits. In the southeast portion of the county there is a plentiful supply of limestone, of excellent quality for ordinary building purposes and for the manufacture of quicklime. There is no difficulty in obtaining good clay for brick. Some of the streams afford good water-power. The bottoms afford excellent range for cattle, rendering stock raising a lucrative branch of business. As an agricultural county it ranks among the first in the state. Near the mouth of Iowa River are the remains of an ancient fortification, and also mounds, which are objects that have excited the interest of the curious.

HISTORY.

The celebrated aboriginal chiefs Black Hawk, Wapello, Keokuk, and Poweshiek lived in this county, which was considered by them as among their best hunting grounds. As to when and by whom the first white settlement was made there seems to be some disagreement, although it is generally conceded that Christopher Shuck, who located near Toolsborough, was the first permanent settler, although the following persons all located here as early as 1835: Wm. L. Toole, P. Harrison, W. Crayton, S. Smith and L. Thornton, near the mouth of the Iowa; John Ronald, at Fort Louisa; William Kennedy at Harrison, where he built the first mill. The following season they were followed by Benson, Hooker, McCleary, Childers, Storms, and Robert Williams—who was the first to build a cabin in the Indian reserve west of Wapello—Irwin, Marshall, Parsons, Delhi, Hook, Hale, Guest, Crow, Isett, and others.

In common with the other early settled counties of the state, and up to the time of the first sale of land by the United States, the people had their frequent claim difficulties, some of them serious and others quite amusing. Organizations were formed for mutual protection up to the time of the first public land sales, when the settlers secured their claims and held them undisturbed. Soon after that event the pioneers and old settlers of the county met and organized an Old Settlers' Association. At the first meeting Jacob Minton was made the President, and William L. Toole, Secretary; The following persons, with their families, located in different parts of the county early in its history—most of them prior to 1840: Francis Springer, Colonel Garner, A. Gamble, N. M. Letts, Henry Rockafellow, Judge Coe, John Drake, Jacob Minton, M. Jamison, David Hurley, William Brown, Reverend Josiah Vertrees, Joseph Marshall, John Marshall, James Gamble, Abraham Hill, and the Jarvises.

Louisa County was named, at the instance of the representative of this district in the Legislature, after Louisa Massey, who had about that time made herself notoriously popular by shooting a villian to save the life of her brother.* It was organized in 1837, and the first District Court held the same year, Judge David Irving presiding, with W. W. Chapman as United States District Attorney, and Zadoc C. Ingham, Clerk. David Irwin was the first judge who held courts within the jurisdiction of Iowa. He was a native of Albemarle County, Virginia, and commenced his legal career in that state at Harrisonburg. In 1834 he was appointed by President Jackson judge of that portion of what was then Michigan Territory lying west of the lakes. His district embraced all the country from the lakes west to the Missouri and White Earth Rivers, and north to the British possessions. When the Territory of Wisconsin was organized in 1836, Irwin became one of the three judges, and was assigned to the district west of the Mississippi River, and until the Territory of Iowa was organized, made his home in Burlington. He then returned to Wisconsin, and retained position as judge until 1848. When Wisconsin became a state, and his term of office expired, he removed to Texas, where his death occurred at Victoria, in the Spring of 1872. At the time of his death he was seventy-four years of age.

The room in which Judge Irwin held his first court in Louisa County was a log cabin, while the shade of an adjacent grove furnished a retreat for the jury. There was but little business for the first term.

The following were the first county officers: William L. Toole, L. Thornton and Robert Williams, Commissioners; Z. C. Ingham, Clerk of the District Court; C. McDaniel, Sheriff; John Gilliland, Treasurer and Recorder, and also Surveyor.

The county was represented in the first Territorial Legislature, which convened at Burlington on the twelfth day of November, 1838, by Levi Thornton and William L. Toole, in the House, and J. M. Clark in the Council. The first Legislature divided the territory into three judicial districts, Louisa County being in the second district, with Hon. Joseph Williams as Judge.

The first newspaper published in the county was The Wapello Intelligencer, commenced at Wapello, in 1841, by Clark & Noffinger. The first regular minister of the gospel who officiated was Rev. C. R. Fiske, and the first school was taught by John Ferguson. The first marriage was that of H. Long and Nancy Lacey; the first birth that of John McCleary, and the first death that of E. Shuck.

THE PRESS.

The Columbus Safeguard, published at Columbus Junction, was established in 1870 by R. H. Moore, the present editor and proprietor. It is an intensely local paper, Republican in politics, and ably edited and managed, having a wide and growing influence in Louisa and adjoining counties.

The Morning Sun Reporter made its appearance November 18, 1874, under the management of its present accomplished and experienced editor and publisher, T. N. Ives. It is a well-conducted local paper, with a good circulation, and is growing in favor and influence.

The Wapello Republican, established in 1860, is a wide-awake, ably-conducted and edited Republican paper, owned and published by L. W. Myers, an accomplished and experienced newspaper man, who thoroughly understands what is necessary to make a good readable local paper.

The Louisa County Record, by Burr & Brown, first made its appearance in 1870. It is a good advertising sheet, and receives a large amount of local patronage.

WAPELLO.

This was the first town laid out in the county, and was surveyed and platted by John Gilliland in 1838 by order of the County Commissioners, Toole, Thornton and Williams. Among the earliest settlers of the place were John Drake, Jacob Minton, John Gilliland, E. Isett, C. McDaniel, S. Townsend and William Thomas. Among the first attorneys were James Clark, E. Thomas and Francis Springer. By an act of the Territorial Legislature, approved January 12, 1839, the people of the county were authorized to make permanent location of the county seat, by a vote to be taken on the first Monday of March of that year. The election resulted in favor of Wapello.

It is situated on the west bank of the Iowa River, some eighteen miles from its mouth, and about six from the nearest landing on the Mississippi. It is located on the site of an Indian village of the Musquakas, where their Chief, Wapello, resided for some time and for whom the town was named. It was incorporated under a special act of the Legislature, passed in 1855, is on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad, has a good water power, which by improving might be made one of the best in the state, and is a good business town.

COLUMBUS JUNCTION.

This is a thriving shipping and business point at the junction of the Chicago & Southwestern and the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroads.

The other villages and post offices are CAIRO, CLIFTON, COLUMBUS CITY, FREDONIA, GRAND VIEW, LETTS, MID PRAIRIE, MORNING SUN, PORT ALLEN, PORT LOUISA, TOOLSBOROUGH and TWIN OAK.

STORY COUNTY.

This county, which occupies a position very near the geographical center of the state, is twenty-four miles square, and embraces an area of five hundred and seventy-six square miles.

WATER COURSES.

The largest stream is the Skunk River, which enters about six miles east of the northwest corner, and passing in a southeast direction across the county, leaving it near the middle of the southern boundary line, and in its course waters some seven townships. Its principal tributaries on the west are Keagley's and Ballard's Branches, Squaw and Walnut Creeks, while it receives from the east the waters of Wowall, Clear, and several smaller creeks. The stream next in size to Skunk River is Indian Creek, which has two branches known as east and west Indian, both of which rise in the northern part of the county. These streams have a number of small tributaries, while the two branches of the Minerva in the east, and Woolf in the southeast, with many other smaller streams not named, together with a number of clear, pure cold water ponds, or small lakes, afford fine stock water to nearly every portion of the county. There are also many excellent springs in various localities. Most of these streams retain a plentiful supply of water the year round, while Skunk River has a sufficient volume to afford many fine water powers, only a portion of which have been improved. Pure lasting well water is generally obtained at a depth of from sixteen to thirty feet.

TIMBER.

It is estimated that about one-fifth of the surface of the county is covered with native timber, which is largely in the south and western part of the county, yet there is a fair supply in nearly every part except the central northern. The principal varieties are the different kinds of oak, walnut, ash, maple, linn, hickory, elm, and cottonwood. Considerable attention has been given to the cultivation of timber, which has been uniformly successful so that the traveler in passing through the county finds the monotonous sameness of the native prairie agreeably broken and beautified by luxuriant groves of silver leaf maple, cottonwood, and other rapidly growing varieties. As in many other portions of the state since the fires have been restrained from sweeping over the prairies, the native groves are extending, so that with an economical use there will be sufficient for all future demands.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

The surface of the county is a gently undulating prairie, interspersed with groves and diversified with streams, mounds, lowlands and ponds, and is susceptible of easy cultivation, except in a few places along the streams where it is too broken and uneven to be worth much for plowland. The valleys along the water courses are not so deep as in the counties in the southern part of the state, and owing to this fact the timber bordering the streams may be seen at a great distance. There are but few places, if any, in the county where groves of timber are not plainly visible, and in some places a succession of groves, one beyond another, may be seen as far as the eye can reach. These alternate stretches of forest and prairie present a variety of scenery not ungrateful to the eye, especially in the summer season, when the trees have on their "green coronal of leaves," and the prairies are covered with their green carpets, decked with gorgeous and many-hued flowers.

The soil is generally a dark, sandy loam of great fertility, and is well adapted to the production of cereals, and the different grasses. In its native state the wild grass is said to have been of a superior growth and quality. Although the county has but little that may be termed poor soil, yet it presents a great variety, there being on the agricultural college farm alone some six or more different kinds. These different varieties of soil are adapted to the production of wheat, corn, oats, rye, and all kinds of esculent roots and vegetables grown in any other part of the state. The fine pasturage and water render this also an excellent stock-raising county, which natural advantages are being improved by many of the farmers who are devoting considerable attention to the breeding of thoroughbred and fine imported stock of all kinds. Sheep have been introduced and raised with success, while like most corn counties in Iowa, hogs are the most extensively raised and are the greatest source of revenue to the farmers of the county. In the early settlement of the county, wild fruits, so common throughout the state, were found in great profusion, but they have gradually given place to cultivated orchards and vineyards, which grow and produce with all the luxuriance of their native soil, while small fruits and berries of the most delicious varieties grow almost spontaneously.

BUILDING MATERIAL.

Several fine quarries of lime and sandstone have been opened both on Skunk River and Indian Creek. Along the former stream good building stone is found in great abundance, and a large portion of the stone used in the construction of the Agricultural College at Ames was obtained from quarries along this stream. In the northern part of the county there is a ledge of a peculiar looking reddish limestone, unlike any other found in this part of the state, and is exposed on the north side of a ravine, the nearest timber being four miles distant, at the head of Indian Creek. A portion of the county is doubtless within the limits of the Iowa coal fields, small quantities having been found in various places, though not as yet in sufficient quantities to justify mining. Excellent brick are manufactured in the county, from extensive beds of clay that are found in almost every part. Good sand is found on the streams. It is said that peat exists, but there is no certainty that it may be found in sufficient quantities to be of any practical utility as an article of fuel.

RAILROADS.

The Chicago & Northwestern Railroad passes through the center of the county from east to west, bringing every portion within some twelve or fifteen miles of railroad advantages, while the Des Moines & Minnesota—narrow gauge—Railroad runs from Ames south to Des Moines, passes through the two southwest townships, and affording the county an excellent outlet to the state capital on the south.

HISTORY.

The first white settler of Story County seems to have been William Parker, who pitched his tent in the southeast part of what is now Collins Towship, April 14, 1848; and was assessed and enumerated as a citizen of Marshal County in the census of 1850, during which year James C. Smith located, bringing with him from Southern Indiana a family of five sons. The following Spring quite a number of families came in, among whom were Mormon and D. W. Ballard, William Brezley and Isaac Atkinson, at Ballard's Grove; J. K. Keigley and Squire M. Cary, on Skunk River; and George N. Kirkman, on Indian Creek. The following are among the early settlers in different parts of the county, most of whom located prior to 1853-4: D. M. Brown, G. S. Pring, G. W. Sowars, Henry C. Cameron, John Hussong, Joseph Bronhard, Wesley Eagleburger, Solomon Young, Alexander Snelling, B. J. Dunning, P. Pool, W. C. Murphy, John Caughnahan, C. P. Page, Barnet Bronhard, Ephraim Bowen, W. W. Utterback, Robert McCartney, George and S. H. Dye, R. J. Harmon, Jonathan Lee, Joseph P. Robison, T. E. Alderman, John and Russell McLain, Shelby Baker, Alexander Dinsmore, W. C. Shockey, J. Marks, James Mathews, George Wheeler, George Green, Nathaniel Applegate, J. J. Cole, W. C. Tickenor, Joseph Seal, Joseph Chandler, T. J. Grasslose, T. Lowe, J. Warren, K. Robyns, J. Corey, G. Kirkman, James Sellers, Joseph Brukaker, H. Vincent, J. K. Wood, S. D. Davis, W. B. Hand, N. Webb, J. Sellers, Thomas Dunlap, J. K. Wood, L. and A. Deter, B. Shinkle, —— Crouch, Daniel Swarm, C. P. McCord, E. Guy, Z. Elliott.

ORGANIZATION AND ELECTIONS.

Joseph Thrift, of Boone County, Johnson Edgar, of Jasper, and Thomas Mitchel, of Polk, were appointed by the Legislature, in the Winter of 1853, commissioners to locate the county seat of Story County. The two first named commissioners met on the 27th day of the following June, and after due examination and deliberation fixed upon the present site; and Joseph Thrift, who was a returned Californian, with the consent of his associate, Johnson Edgar, named it Nevada, after the Eldorado of the Rocky Mountains. On the same day, the land on which they made the location was entered at the land office in Des Moines by Jenkin W. Morris. Judge Evans compromised with Mr. Morris by receiving from him in the name of the county a title to the land, and reconveying to Morris each alternate lot.

The first election in the county was held April 4, 1853, at which sixty-three votes were cast. The vote was canvassed at Boonsboro on the 9th of April. This election was for county organization, and the following officers were elected: E. C. Evans, County Judge; Franklin Thompson, Clerk; John Zenor, Treasurer and Recorder; Eli Deal, Sheriff; John Keagley, School Fund Commissioner; Otho French, Surveyor; and Shadrack Worrell, Coroner.

COURTS.

The first session of the District Court was held August 14, 1854, in a small unfinished log cabin, which stood just east of the site of the Alderman Block, by the eccentric judge of the fifth judicial district, Honorable J. C. McFarland. The cabin was about twenty feet square, one story high, and built of round logs, with a chimney made of mud and sticks, with a puncheon floor. The jury retired to the stable of John McClain to make up their verdicts; and it is among the traditions that one of the jurors was kicked by a horse in the jury room. The grand jury were conducted to a retired spot upon the prairie, where they are said to have gravely discussed the contents of a jug of corn whisky, occasionally assisted in disposing of the subject by his honor, whose ability in that direction was never questioned. Among the attorneys present were D.

O. Finch, William L. Burge and Cornelius Beal, while those admitted to practice at this term were William H. Davidson, James Davidson, Franklin Thompson, Eli H. French, John J. Zenor and Stephen P. O'Brien.

The next term of the District Court was convened at the house of Judge E. C. Evans, in Nevada, August 15, 1855, William H. McKay being the Presiding Judge, and F. Thompson, Clerk. W. W. Williamson was appointed Prosecuting Attorney. At this term the grand jury found an indictment against one Barnabas Lowell for the murder of his wife. This man was one of the earliest settlers of New Albany Township. At the preliminary examination of the criminal before a justice of the peace, it is said that he was sentenced to be hung until he was dead, dead, dead! It seems, however, that the sentence was not carried into execution, as a change of venue was subsequently taken from the District Court of Story to the District Court of Polk, where he had his trial, and was sentenced by Judge McKay to the penitentiary for life. This was the first murder known to have been committed in the county.

SOME FIRST THINGS.

The first entry made in the minute book is as follows: "Story County—County Court, November 15, 1853. Ordered, that Stephen P. O'Brien receive the sum of thirty dollars for services rendered as Assessor of Story County. E. C. Evans, Judge."

The first transfer of real estate recorded is a deed from Jenkin W. Morris to Story County, for the land on which the commissioners had previously located the county seat, where is now the Town of Nevada.

The first marriage was that of Noah Hand and Sarah Sellers, consummated May 24, 1854, by N. B. Tucker, a justice of the peace.

T. E. Alderman sold the first goods, and was the first post master in the county, the mail being carried from Des Moines to Nevada by J. P. Robison.

The first court house was erected in 1856, and was burned down on the night of December 31, 1863, and a new court house was built on the same site in the following Summer. It was a two-story frame building, rather too small for convenience in transacting the accumulating business of the county.

THE PRESS.

The Nevada Republican was established in 1857, by R. R. Shrall, who continued its publication until June, 1862, when he sold to George F. Schoonover, and he, in October, 1863, to J. M. Brainard, who, in 1864, enlarged it from a six-column to a seven-column folio, and, in November, 1868, disposed of the establishment to V. A. Ballou, and he, in May, 1870, to the present able editor, W. A. Gullup, who, in June, 1871, enlarged it to an eight-column folio. The Republican is a good paper, thoroughly devoted to the local interests of its town and county, and is well supported and patronized.

The Nevada Watchman, a wide-awake local sheet, was established in 1874, by Vaughn & Stoddard, and has since rapidly grown into favor.

The Ames Intelligencer was established in 1869, and is now under the editorial management of A. McFadde, a good practical printer and experienced newspaper man. The Intelligencer is a good local paper, and well represents the interests of Ames and the surrounding country.

STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

One of the important events in the history of Story County was the location within its limits of the State Agricultural College and Model Farm. In 1858 the Legislature appropriated $10,000 for the purchase of a farm on which to locate the college; and, in 1859, a tract of land containing 648 acres was purchased. It is situated on the waters of Squaw Creek, ten miles west of Nevada, and one mile west of Ames, on the line of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. On this farm the state has erected fine and commodious buildings. Under an act of Congress, passed in July, 1862, the state became the recipient of a munificent grant of land from the General Government, amounting to 240,000 acres, for use in the endowment of the college. As an inducement for the location, Story County donated $10,000 in the bonds of the county, bearing 7 per cent. interest.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

The officials for 1875 are:

JOHN R. HAYS, Auditor.
SAMUEL S. STATLER, Treasurer.
CHARLES CHRISTIAN, Sheriff.
J. A. FITCHPATRICK, Clerk of Courts.
OLE K. HILL, Recorder.
J. H. FRANKS, Supt. of Common Schools.
WALTER EVANS, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

NEVADA.

This town, which is the county seat of Story County, is an incorporated city, and has a present population of some twelve hundred. It is pleasantly located on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, 318 miles from Chicago. It is surrounded by a rich, gently rolling prairie, near the head of the grove which borders West Indian Creek. The first settler on the town site was Theodore E. Alderman, who located in October 14, 1853, and was alone until the following August, when he was reinforced by John H. McClain, and, in October, George Childs, T. J. Adamson, Jonathan Harris, A. P. Fitch, and Isaac Romane, who, with their families, became residents. During the same Autumn and the succeeding year, an accession of more than two hundred persons were received, and the settlement became quite a village. During 1855-6 the population increased to about 400, and many neat and substantial buildings were erected. The hard times of 1857 put a stop to improvement, so that the growth was very slow for a number of years. The completion of the railroad, which was opened to Nevada in the Summer of 1864, gave the town a new impetus, and it has since had a substantial growth.

The first child born in the village was Mary Nevada, daughter of T. E. and Hannah Alderman, who was born January 13, 1854, and died the following December, that being the first death in the county, while the oldest native of the town is Miss Ida C. Alderman, daughter of the same parties, and born August 8, 1857. The different religious denominations of Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopal, Cumberland Presbyterian and Baptists have organizations and are in a flourishing condition. A good graded school was established many years ago, which is kept up to the state standard, which is justly considered high.

AMES.—This is a thriving town on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, about nine miles west of Nevada. It was laid out in February, 1865. In 1874 the Des Moines & Minnesota Railroad was completed from Des Moines to Ames. With its railroad advantages and the prestige of being the seat of the State Agricultural College, added to the advantages of a naturally fine location, Ames must become a point of considerable importance.

COLO.—This is a station in the eastern part of the county, on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway. It was laid out in 1867.

ONTARIO.—This is a station on the line of the same railway, in the western part of the county, and was laid out in 1868.

IOWA CENTER.—This is a village seven miles southeast of Nevada, in Indian Creek Township. It was laid out in 1854.

CAMBRIDGE.—This is a village on the west bank of Skunk River, nine miles southwest of Nevada. It is on the old road from Des Moines to Nevada, twenty-two miles from the former place.

BOONE COUNTY.

This county is in the middle tier a little west of the center of the state, is twenty-four miles square, and contains five hundred and seventy-six square miles. The principal stream is the Des Moines River, which entering the county a little west of the middle of the northern line, flows in a southeasterly direction, dividing the county nearly equally, and passes out some three miles east of the center of the southern boundary line. It has an average width of over one hundred yards, receiving several small tributaries, the largest of which are Bluff Creek on the west, and Honey Creek on the east. Squaw Creek, from the Sioux word E-qui-wa, meaning Woman's Creek, waters the northeast, while Beaver—or, as the Indians called it, Am-a-qua Creek—rises in the north part of the county, and running south admirably waters and drains the western portion of the county. These, with other smaller streams and branches, distribute a plentiful supply of never failing stock water to nearly every portion of the county. Springs are found in many places along the streams, and good well water is easily obtained on the prairies.

TIMBER.

A fine body of timber from four to five miles wide extends along the Des Moines River, entirely across the county, while some fine groves are found on Squaw Creek in the northeast, and on Beaver in the southwest, which embraces most of the varieties indigenous to this state, among which are white, black and burr oak, white and black walnut, hard and soft maple, linn, elm, ash, hackberry, honey locust, cottonwood, etc., etc. The hard maple, or sugar tree, is quite abundant along the Des Moines River, and large quantities of maple sugar were formerly made, but many of the groves have been cut to supply cord wood for Boone and Boonsboro markets, and for the railroad. As Boone County was included in what was called the "neutral grounds," and was seldom ventured upon by the Indians, it was a paradise of all kinds of wild game for several years before its settlement by whites.

The great belt of Des Moines timber extending across the county from north to south, nearly dividing it equally, is a peculiar advantage that Boone possesses over many others. In the south part of the county, where the Des Moines with its heavy timber bears somewhat eastward, the deficiency in the southwest part is compensated by some fine groves along Beaver Creek. In the north part, where the Des Moines timber is nearest the west, the deficiency is supplied by groves along Squaw Creek.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

The general character of the surface is rolling or undulating, and in some parts, especially along the Des Moines River, is somewhat rough and broken. Most of this broken ground is, however, covered with a heavy growth of hard timber. A singular chain of hills, called Mineral Ridge, extends across the north part of the county from west to east, and is so called from the fact that the early surveyors discovered that in crossing the ridge the magnetic needle always became deranged and refused to settle truly. On the west side of the Des Moines there is a prominent spur called Pilot Mound, the summit of which overlooks the surrounding country for many miles in every direction. There is a tradition of a great Indian battle having been fought near Pilot Mound, and the plowshare of the farmer frequently turns up bones of the slain in that vicinity, while a large number of skeletons have been exhumed on the top of the mound. Opposite the mouth of Honey Creek there is a chain of artificial mounds, nine in number, the largest one being fifteen feet high. They have the same general appearance and characteristics as other mounds scattered throughout the West, and were doubtless burial places of the dead.

The soil of the Des Moines River bottoms is a deep, rich alluvial deposit, and in its natural condition is generally covered with a heavy growth of timber. In this timber the early settlers have made many fine farms. This land produces the most luxuriant crops of corn. Though the soil is not so deep on the prairies, it produces excellent crops, and is well adapted to farming purposes.

COAL, STONE, ETC.

According to the authority of the State Geology, the whole of Boone County lies within the recognized limits of the coal fields, yet as far as known coal has only been discovered at a few points near the center, which is doubtless in a great measure due to the great depth of the drift which covers the strata of the county, and also in part to a supposed general depression of all the strata, so that the sub-carboniferous as well as the lower strata of the lower coal-measures are brought somewhat beneath the level of the bed of the Des Moines River along the whole length of the county. Banks have been extensively worked near Boonsboro and Moingona upon the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, and large quantities of coal have been shipped by this road to Council Bluffs and Omaha, to supply local demands and for the use of the Union Pacific Railroad. There are two distinct beds, the principal being the lowest and is some four feet thick, while the upper one is from two and a half to three feet thick, the quality of the coal in both veins being the same, though the lower one is most extensively worked. Being the only mines yet opened on the line of this road in Iowa, they are of great value and importance both to the county and the railroad company. There is no reasonable doubt but that there are other beds equally valuable, that may yet be reached by sinking shafts from the prairie surface in different parts of the county.

There is good building stone in the south part of the county at Elk Rapids, from which some of the stone used in the foundation of the court house at Des Moines were taken. Stone is also found in other places, though a larger portion of the county is destitute. Good lime can be manufactured from most of this stone. Excellent brick clay is found in many places, and brick have been extensively manufactured in the vicinity of Boone and Boonsboro. Underlying the vein of coal now being worked, is a bed of good fine brick clay, which is inexhaustible in quantity. There is another bed of the same material, but containing less sulphur, above the coal. Some iron ore has been discovered, but not in sufficient quantities to be made available. Mineral ridge, in the north part of the county, is supposed from various indications to contain a deposit of iron ore.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first settlement was made in May, 1846, at a place known as "Peas' Point," a neck of prairie extending into the timber on the east side of the Des Moines River, just south of where Boonsboro is located. The pioneers who composed the little band were John Pea, James Hull, jr., John M. Crooks, S. H. Bowers and Thomas Sparks. About the same time, or a little later, C. W. Gaston, Montgomery McCall, S. Clark, and several families of Swedes settled near a place called Elk Rapids, in the south part of the county. In the Spring of 1847, McCall and Clark removed and settled near the present site of Boonsboro. For several years, as usual, the early settlers had to undergo many privations, often being obliged to go fifty miles to mill. The nearest post office was Fort Des Moines, forty miles distant. About 700 Indians spent the Winter of 1846-7 in the county, but maintained amicable terms with their pale-faced neighbors. The first birth of a white child was that of a son of John Hull, Sr. The first death was that of a boy named Milton Lott, who was frozen to death about the 18th of December, 1846. He was buried on the Des Moines River, near where Myer's mill now stands. The second death was that of John McCall, who died at the house of his uncle, Montgomery McCall, in the Spring of 1848, from the effects of some poisonous substance which he drank from a newly opened spring of water. The lad Milton Lott, whose death is mentioned as the first in the county, was the son of a man named Henry Lott, who, after stopping a short time in Boone County, had moved up and settled at the mouth of Boone River, in what is now Webster County, his object being to trade with the Indians. They, however, regarded him as an intruder, and gave him a certain time to leave their hunting ground. Failing to comply, at the expiration of the time the Indians returned and commenced the destruction of his property. At this time Lott and his step-son were some distance from the cabin, but could see the Indians killing cattle, and also fancied that they were tomahawking the family and setting fire to the cabin. Being unarmed, they started for "Peas Point" for assistance, that being the nearest settlement, where they reported that the Sioux had murdered the family. The settlers at "Peas Point" and Elk Rapids, with some friendly Indians who were hostile to the Sioux, immediately organized an expedition, and started for the scene of the supposed massacre. When they arrived there they were agreeably disappointed to find that Lotts' family had not been massacred, although left by the Indians in a destitute condition. But the most melancholy part of the affair is this: After the departure of Lott and his step-son for the settlement, a younger lad, Milton Lott, made his escape from the cabin, and attempted to follow his father and half-brother. He followed down the Des Moines River on the ice, crossing the points where there were bends, as shown by his tracks in the light snow which covered the ground. He was found about three miles from where Boonsboro is now located, where, unable to proceed any further, he had frozen to death. He was about twelve years of age.

The circumstances related above have the greater importance from the fact that out of them probably grew the Spirit Lake Massacre of 1857. In the Winter of 1852-3, Lott and his son having removed to what is now Humboldt County, in retaliation inhumanly butchered Sim-an-e-do-kah, the old chief of the Sioux, with his family of women and children. It was undoubtedly to revenge this act that Ink-pa-du-ta, who was a brother of the old chief killed, perpetrated the massacre at Spirit Lake.

The first marriage in the county was Henry Holcomb to Mary Jane Hull, January 17, 1850, by Pembroke Gault, a justice of the peace for Boone County.

ORGANIZATION.

Boone County was formed by the first State Legislature, during the session of 1846-7, and was so named in honor of Captain Nathan Boone, of the First Regiment United States Dragoons. He was a relative of Daniel Boone, of Kentucky fame, and before any settlement was made in the county by the whites, with a company of dragoons, explored this portion of Iowa, and obtained a correct knowledge of its topography. Up to 1849 the county remained attached to Polk for election, judicial, and revenue purposes. By authority of an act of the Legislature, Samuel B. McCall was appointed Organizing Sheriff, by Honorable William McKay, Judge of the Fifth Judicial District. The act provided for the organization of Pottawattamie and other counties, including Boone. The necessary steps for the new order of things were taken at the August election of 1849. The County Commissioners elected were Jesse Hull, Jonathan Boles, and John Boyles. The other county officers elected at the same time were: Reuben S. Clark, Commissioners' Clerk; John M. Wayne, Clerk of the District Court; John M. Crooks, Recorder and Treasurer; Samuel H. Bowers, Sheriff; Thomas Sparks, Surveyor; and W. C. Hull, Prosecuting Attorney. There were ninety votes cast at this election, the county being divided into three civil townships or voting precincts—Pleasant, Boone and Boone River, each comprising a strip eight miles across the county from east to west. At this time there was not a town or village in the county, and the commissioners fixed upon the house of John Bayles, in Boone Township, as the place of their first meeting. Their first order was that Reuben S. Clark purchase two dollars worth of writing paper for the use of the county officers, to be paid out of the first county funds not otherwise appropriated. The next business was an allowance of seventy-five cents to S. B. McCall for an order book. The eagle side of an American half dollar was made the temporary county seal. The commissioners ordered that their next meeting be at the house of John M. Wayne, in Boone Township, October 13, 1849. At this second meeting they fixed upon the house of John M. Crooks, where they continued to hold their meetings until April, 1851, when they met in the school house. At the same time the county was divided into school districts. The first road was located in March, 1850; the commissioners appointed to locate the same being Mathias White, Colonel John Rose, and Vickers Preston; S. C. Wood was the surveyor. It was located from Fisher's Point to intersect the road leading from Panoach to Dallas County, near Boles' mill.

A legislative enactment for the location of the county seat was approved January 18, 1851, which was the "rainy season," so that with great difficulty and many adventures in swimming rivers and swollen streams, two of the commissioners, David Sweem, of Marion County, and S. K. Scovell, of Dallas, came together about the 1st of July, and proceeded to discharge their duty, and on the 5th of the same month drove a stake about where the court house now stands in Boonsboro, and informed the citizens that there should be their county seat, which they named Boonsboro at the suggestion of S. B. McCall. By an order of the county commissioners, Thomas Sparks, County Surveyor, proceeded to lay off the town into lots, a sale of which was ordered to take place on the first Monday in October, 1851, notice being given in the Fort Des Moines and Oskaloosa papers.

The first term of the District Court convened in Boonsboro, October 6, 1851, Judge William McKay presiding, the county being embraced in the Fifth Judicial District, James Lacy was the Sheriff. Madison Young was appointed Prosecuting Attorney; James Corbin, Bailiff; and Wesley C. Hull was admitted to practice law.

COUNTY OFFICIALS FOR 1875.

LUKE L. SAWYER, Auditor.
GEORGE K. JONES, Treasurer.
JEHILE B. HURLBURT, Sheriff.
PHIL. LIVINGSTON, Clerk of Courts.
JOHN F. BRETT, Recorder.
THOMAS P. COIN, Supt. Common Schools.
CHARLES WESTON, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper ever published in the county was the Boone County News, established in July, 1856, at Boonsboro, by Capron & Sanders. It was a neat paper, Republican in politics, and was conducted by them some four years. It has since passed through many changes in proprietorship and name, having been called the Times, Advocate, Herald, and was changed back to nearly its original name by its present proprietors, Evans & Rickard, who are making it a paper well worthy of being the descendant of the first paper issued in the county.

The Boone Standard is a handsome nine column sheet, Republican in politics, and was established by William H. Gullup, in the Spring of 1865, who managed it for some two years, and then sold the establishment to Holt & Ballou; re-purchased it in 1868, and in September, 1869, sold to the present proprietor, J. M. Brainard, who has since conducted it in such a manner as to secure a liberal patronage, and wield a wide and powerful influence in the county.

The Boone County Democrat made its appearance in 1868, with L. Ragent as editor and publisher. It is a reliable and spicy local sheet, independent in politics, ably edited and managed by J. Hornstein, and has been adopted as the organ of the Grangers of Boone County.

The Boone County Republican was established in 1865, by O. C. Bates, and having passed through several changes in proprietorship, is now successfully conducted by Means & Downing, who, with new presses and material, are publishing a handsome, readable paper, that is constantly and steadily growing in influence and patronage.

The Ogden Reporter, established in 1874, is a neat, local newspaper published at Ogden, by Earl Billings.

BOONSBORO.

This place is pleasantly situated east of the Des Moines River, with a fine timber protection on the north, west, and south. The location is rolling and well drained, and there is an abundance of coal and timber in the immediate vicinity. The first house was erected by W. C. Hull, and was built of hewed logs, two stories high, and was located on the lot now occupied by the Park House, on the east side of the public square. Among the first settlers of the town were—W. P. Hull, J. A. McFarland, John Houser, William and Wesley Carroll, S. B. McCall, Doctors J. F. Rice and D. S. Holton. The town contains good schools, while the leading religious denominations have organizations and handsome churches.

BOONE.

This is an enterprising, driving business town, containing a population of about twenty-five hundred, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, immediately east of Boonsboro, of which it might almost be considered a part. It was laid out and the first sale of lots took place in 1865, being originally called Montana. The first business house was a building removed from Boonsboro, May 3, 1865, by C. V. Nelson. In it he opened a stock of groceries two days later. The first residence was built by —— Craft, and the second by J. E. Evans early the same spring. About the first of July building commenced in earnest, and from that time forward its growth has been steady and substantial. It is at the end of the eastern and western divisions of the Iowa portion of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, which company have erected expensive improvements, consisting of a large round house, machine, engine, and blacksmith shops, and a large freight house which contains the telegraph and division offices of the company.

MOINGONA is located on the railroad just west of the Des Moines River, and about five miles southwest of Boone. It is noted as a coal mining town, and large shipments are made both East and West. It was laid out in July, 1866.

OGDEN is an important shipping point on the railroad, some five miles west of Moingona.

DALLAS COUNTY.

This, one of the central counties of the state, is the fifth east of the Missouri River, and in the fourth tier from the southern boundary line, is twenty-four miles square, and contains an area of five hundred and seventy-six square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES, STREAMS, ETC.

The Des Moines River crosses the northeast corner of the county, and with Beaver Creek, one of its affluents, affords drainage and some excellent timber in that portion, while the Raccoon River, and its branches and tributaries, drains the larger part of the county. The principal branches are known as the North, Middle and South Raccoon, which, with their tributaries, Panther, Mosquito and Bulgar creeks, and the Des Moines and its tributaries, pass through some portions of nearly one-half of the sections of the county. It will thus be seen that the county is admirably well watered, there being scarcely a square mile that has not a living stream passing through it. There are a number of small lakes in the northwest, the largest of which is Pilot Lake, in Lincoln Township. The Raccoon River as it meanders through this county affords some of the best mill sites in the state, the supply of water being constant and reliable the year round, as it is supported largely by living springs, the main branch having its source away to the northwest, in the region of Storm Lake. The North Branch, running the entire extent of the county from northwest to southeast, passes through some fifty sections of land, on nearly every one of which a head of six feet could be obtained. The Middle Branch also affords some excellent powers, while only a small portion of those on either stream have as yet been utilized. To the enthusiast, the beauty and picturesqueness of these streams and their surroundings occasions a lively interest, but by the practical man they are viewed in the light of their value as water powers. Being so evenly distributed over the county, the distance to timber and mills from the center of the largest prairies is comparatively insignificant, and when in addition to all this it is considered that the nearness together of the streams renders the divides between them short, and thereby occasions the absence of the extensive and unapproachable sloughs and ponds which are often found in extensive prairies. Springs issue from the gravel beds along the bluffs, and in the ravines, at frequent intervals, while well water is easily obtained at a moderate depth beneath the surface. Near the southwest corner of the county is a spring which is strongly impregnated with salt. It rises near the head of a ravine, but there is a level space of nearly an acre around it, supposed to have been worn down by the numerous buffalo, deer and cattle, which have so long been attracted to the spot. A little more than a mile east of Wiscotta there is a spring strongly tinctured with sulphur, while in the vicinity are a large number of soft water springs, some of which are quite large. Near the northwest corner of the county is a spring which has some curious and peculiar characteristics. It is designated on the plats of original surveys as "Curiosity Spring." The trickling and flowing of the water has formed around it a porous limestone incrustation through which the water sometimes passes, and at others flows over.

The surface configuration of Dallas County presents a somewhat varied aspect in its different parts, which is due in a great measure to the nature of the underlying coal-measure formation. The larger streams have eroded their beds to a depth of from one hundred to two hundred feet below the general level of the upland, producing narrow valleys bordered by declivities more or less abrupt. The northern portion is gently undulating and well drained, while west of the North Raccoon the surface descends into a broad, shallow depression, which corresponds to the synclinal basin that exists in the coal-measure strata in that section. East of the same river the country is high and level, and mainly watered by streams that flow directly into the Raccoon and Des Moines rivers, and whose valleys are cut deep into the deposits which belong to the middle coal-measure; while the narrow strip lying on the south of the Raccoon and South Fork rapidly rises, forming the divide between this stream and North River, which has its culmination in Madison County but a little south of the border of Dallas, and embracing a tract much more broken and hilly than is found further northward.

Although prairie is the prevailing characteristic of the county, it has a good supply of timber, which, in the judgment of the most observing and best informed citizens, is about one acre of timber to ten of prairie, which well informed citizens claim is growing more every year than the annual consumption for all purposes.

The soil of the uplands is usually a rich black loam, while in the valleys there is a greater proportion of sand, and upon the terraces or second bottoms, has the warm gravelly soil usually found in similar sections. While wheat and corn are the staple crops, all the cereals, vegetables and grasses usually found in Central Iowa are grown with success. Fruit culture has hardly received that attention which its promises of remuneration would seem to have justified. The cultivation of grapes, so far as has been experimented upon, also gives every indication of proving a success. There is no reason why fruit growing will not soon become an important source of wealth to the county.

COAL, STONE, ETC.

A number of coal banks have been opened in different parts of the county, and there is no reason to doubt that coal abounds in at least fourteen of the sixteen Congressional townships, as indications are visible along all the principal streams of the existence of workable beds. So far as the banks have been opened, the veins are found to be from three to five feet in thickness, and the product equal in quality to the average coal of the state. The coal used at Adel is principally obtained from mines which have been opened on North and South Raccoon, and it is hauled a distance of about five miles. The best coal, however, is that mined on Middle Raccoon, near Redfield, while in the northeast township, along the Des Moines River, coal also abounds, but is yet mined only in limited quantities.

Next to a coal mine, as an essential element in the improvement and development of a county, is the article of good building stone. Indeed, where timber is plenty, the former may be the most conveniently dispensed with. In having an abundance of good building stone distributed in quarries throughout the country, along nearly all the streams, Dallas County is highly favored. Both sandstone and limestone are found, though the former is principally used for building purposes. It is easily quarried, readily dressed, and found to be durable. The foundation and caps and sills of the Court House in Adel, and other buildings, are tests of the superior quality of this stone. On Bridger Creek, near De Soto, the same quality of stone is found which has acquired so high a reputation in Madison County. Quick-lime is manufactured in many places, but the best is obtained from a species of limestone found scattered over the surface of some portions of the county, entirely detached from any quarry or regular strata, and termed here "lost rocks." The lime made from them is of a very superior quality. Good brick are manufactured in different localities, for which suitable clay and sand exist in sufficient abundance. The rivers afford an abundance of excellent gravel. One who is curious in such matters, may in a short time, on any one of the gravel bars along North Raccoon River, collect a geological cabinet embracing a large variety of stones, shells and pebbles, many of which are very beautiful. Near Adel, on Miller's Branch of North Raccoon, is a two-foot vein of a species of pipe-stone of beautiful and variegated appearance. When first exposed to the air it is soft and easily cut to any shape, but hardens when dried. It is also susceptible of a fine polish, and is of a lead color, with reddish streaks passing through it.

EARLY HISTORY.

The right of the Indians to occupy the territory embraced within this county did not cease until the Fall of 1845. It is not strange, however, that before the Indians had all left, the fine groves of timber along the Raccoon Rivers, with the rich, rolling intervening prairies, should have attracted the adventurous pioneer.

In January, 1846, Samuel Miller came to look at the country. He had, in October, 1845, removed from Gibson County, Indiana, to Jefferson County in this state. On the 12th day of March, 1846, about 12 o'clock M., he arrived with his family and settled in Adel Township, on a claim, his being the first white family that settled in Dallas County. Others came with their families a few days later, and some without families came at the same time, among whom were Wilson Miller, John Longmeyer, Tristram Davis, Henry Stump, John Wright, Noah Staggs, Levi A. Davis, George Hills, Archibald Crowl, and Mrs. Sarah Ellis. Most of these families were from Vermillion County, Illinois. This was the first settlement made in the county. In the Fall of 1846 George P. Garoutte took a claim on North Raccoon, on what proved, when the land was sectionized, to be section 6, township 79, range 27, and about the geographical center of the county. Others very soon settled in the same vicinity, among whom were Z. Babcock, Adam Vinage and Harvey Adams.

In the year 1846 Elijah Miller, a son of Wilson Miller, made a claim on what is now the town site of Adel. Subsequently, when the commissioners came to locate the county seat, he relinquished a portion of his claim, and sold the remainder to a man named Thomas Butler. A branch near the northwest part of the town is now known as Butler's Branch.

During the Spring of 1846 the first settlement was also made in Boone Township, in the southeast corner of the county, by George and Shubal Hayworth. They were soon followed by William D. Boone, J. C. Goodson, Richard Golden, Daniel Filan, and a family named Neal. Among the early settlers were also the Huston Brothers, George Knight and a Mr. Lane.

Walnut Township, north of Boone, was first settled by C. B. Snow, and Messrs. Hoff, Schnell, Duncan and Cutler, also in 1846.

O. D. Smalley was the first to settle in Des Moines, the northeast corner township of the county. He was from Missouri, and came in the Spring of 1847. The next settler in that township was Judah Leming, Jr., from Jefferson County in this state, who came the same year. He died about eighteen years ago in Warren County. Among those who followed soon and took up claims in Des Moines Township were Messrs. Rhoads, Snyder, Harlow and Robbins.

Union Township, in the southwest corner of the county, began to settle in 1847. The first who erected his claim cabin there, was David Daily, and it stood on the land now embraced in the town plat of Wiscotta. He sold his claim to Thomas Cavenaugh & Brothers, who settled on it, and subsequently laid out the town of New Ireland, now called Redfield. About the same time, or shortly after, the following settlers came in: Colonel Owen, Humphrey Smith, Leroy Lambert, L. D. Hewit, George W. Noel, John Hays, Peter and John Cook, John Fee, Thomas Elliott, George B. Warden, and John, Adam, Nelson and William Caves. The above list embraces most of the pioneers of this township—those who were obliged to live on boiled corn. At this time the nearest mill was at Oskaloosa, and to make a trip there and back with an ox-team, required from ten days to two weeks. Oskaloosa was the nearest point to a mill, except the "Stump Mill," run by horse power, started on the 24th of December, 1846, by Samuel Miller, or "Uncle Samuty," as every body familiarly called him. This was the pioneer mill of Dallas County, and had one small set of burrs, and was what is generally termed a "corn-cracker." Its completion was made the occasion of a grand Christmas jollification among the settlers.

The first death that occurred in Union Township, was a child of David Daily, in 1848. Thomas Elliott was the post master of the settlement, and kept the mail matter deposited in a clock case of antique fashion.

Linn Township, in the west part of the county, and immediately north of Union, was settled early by persons principally from Wayne and Randolph Counties, Indiana. John F. Willis was the first permanent settler, but was soon followed by Isaac Fee, John Jehu, Josiah Lamb, Hiram Rosecranz, John Maulsby, William Thornburgh, R. W. Lumpkin, James Harper, and George Bailey. "Uncle George" will be remembered as the attentive and popular door-keeper of the House of Representatives, of the twelfth session of the General Assembly. The first settlement in this township commenced in 1847.

Among the first settlers in the two townships of Sugar Grove and Washington, immediately north of Adel Township, were the following: In Sugar Grove—Isaac Warford, Simmons Taylor, Thomas Storms, Andrew Rinehart, and John Temple. In Washington—David Starbuck, John Beaver, J. T. Roush, William Smith, and Benson Yard. These townships are now dotted with fine farms, good buildings, and artificial groves.

Beaver Township is north of Sugar Grove, and west of Des Moines, adjoining Boone County. Seth H. Dayton was the first settler. Among the early settlers were J. M. Townsend, C. G. Burdick, Mr. McConnell, and Mrs. Gardner and family. This township was organized with seven voters, all Democratic, and of course was the banner Democratic township of Dallas County. It is now Republican.

Immediately west of Beaver, on the north side of the county, is Spring Valley Township. Its early settlers were Nathaniel McKean, Judge Thornburgh, Harvey Willis, John McMillen, Michael Shively, Wilson Minor, and Jesse Bramfield. This is one of the fairest townships in the county. The farmers are largely engaged in raising stock, for which it is well adapted.

Dallas Township is west of Spring Valley, and is the northwest corner township of the county. Mr. Henderson was the first settler. He was soon followed by Hooper Morrain, J. V. Brock, William Gilliland, John Morriston, Tilman Chance, William E. Tolle, and A. L. Towne.

South of Dallas, on the west side of the county, is Lincoln, the last organized and one of the best growing townships in the county. J. R. Powell was for several years the only settler in it, but it is now well filling up.

Among the early settlers of the central and south portions of the county, were also Mathew Boyd, J. V. Pierce, L. D. Burns, S. C. Taylor, S. Boyd, and Taylor Bolls.

ORGANIZATION.

Dallas County was organized in pursuance of an act of the Legislature approved February 16, 1847. Eli Smithson was named as the organizing sheriff, and the commissioners to locate the county seat were William Wear and William Canfield, of Polk County, and Lysander W. Babbitt, now of Council Bluffs. They were directed to meet at Hickory, in Dallas County, on the first Monday in May, 1847, for the purpose of entering upon the discharge of their duties. The place called Hickory, is said to have been at the geographical center of the county, though few, except the older settlers, know any thing about it. Suffice it to say, that it was an early aspirant for county seat honors.

The commissioners, in due time, made selection of the present site of Adel, and in the same month, May, 1847, the town was surveyed. The name which the commissioners applied to the new town was Panouch—an Indian word, signifying far away. It was called by this name for several years before it was changed to Adel. The town was surveyed by Martin W. Miller, County Surveyor, and on the 5th of July, 1847, the streets and alleys were conveyed for public use by the officiating county commissioners, Tristram Davis and William W. Miller.

SOME FIRST THINGS.

The first county commissioners were Tristram Davis, Oscar D. Smalley, and William W. Miller, and the first probate judge was Joseph D. Goodson. The first county judge, after the change of the system in 1851, was Lloyd D. Burns.

The first marriage was that of George Hayworth and Mary Stump, September 2, 1847, by S. C. Corbell, a justice of the peace. The parties were of even age—twenty-four years.

One of the first justices of the peace, was Judah Leming, Sr.

The first legally established highway through the county, was part of a road from the west line of Johnson County via Newton, Des Moines and Adel, to the west line of Dallas County, in the direction of Council Bluffs. Its location was authorized by an act of the Legislature, approved January 15, 1849. The commissioners appointed to locate it were John Wright, Jesse Richman, and John Wykoff, who finished their work in June of that year.

The first conveyance of real estate on record bears date February 13, 1850, and was acknowledged before Judah Leming, Sr., a justice of the peace. The grantors were Judah Leming, Jr. and wife, and the grantee was Martin Tucker, of Polk County. The property conveyed was the southwest quarter of section twenty-three, township eighty-one, range twenty-six, 160 acres, for the consideration of $100.00.

The first district court convened at Panouch, (now Adel), September 6, 1847, Honorable James P. Carlton, then judge of the 4th Judicial District, presiding; Steven R. Scovell, clerk, and Eli Smithson, sheriff.

The following is a list of the first grand jurors: John Longmire, Levi Wright, Uriah Stotts, Archibald Crowl, Henry Stump, David Spear, Oscar D. Smalley, John Spear, John Wright, Greenberry Coffin, Henry Garner, Lewis Stump, John Miller, Subal Hayworth, George Hayworth, James Black, and Eli Miller. David Spear was appointed foreman, and Martin W. Miller bailiff. The court appointed William McKay special prosecuting attorney for Dallas County.

The court ordered that the "eagle side of a twenty-five cent piece of American coin be the temporary seal of the county." The grand jury, after retiring a short time to the shade of a tree, returned into court and reported that they had no "bills or presentments to make," and were thereupon duly discharged. There seems to have been no further business transacted at this term.

The next court convened at Panouch, June 4, 1849, Judge William McKay presiding, Dallas County then being in the Fifth Judicial District. There seems to have been but one case, and the following is the record, showing the disposition made of that:

"William D. Boone vs. John Wright. The parties now come, and thereupon the said defendant files his motion for a continuance, and also a motion to dismiss the case from the docket; and thereupon, by agreement of said parties, a change of venue is granted to the County of Polk in this Judicial District."

The first probate business on record, was the appointment of William W. Miller as the guardian of the minor children of Eli Smithson, deceased, by L. D. Burns, County Judge, September 12, 1851. Rice R. Turner was appointed administrator of the same estate, while the first will admitted to probate was that of Masson Bilderback, November 17, 1851.

Such is a glance at the early days of Dallas County. Many who have been mentioned as pioneers and prominent actors have passed away, leaving but a few now remaining to contrast the present development and conveniences with the hardships and deprivations of the past.

RAILROADS

Dallas County has good railroad facilities, the main line of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific passing through the southern tier of townships, while the Des Moines & Fort Dodge enters the county near the southeast corner, and runs in a northwest direction between Beaver Creek and Raccoon River.

THE PRESS.

Dallas, in common with most Iowa counties, also has its newspaper history. The first enterprise of this kind was commenced in 1856, by Rippey & Reed. Their paper was a Democratic organ, and was called The Ship of State. For a single year it tossed about upon the uncertain waves of public patronage, and then disappeared, master and mate managing by some means to get safely into port.

Then came the Prairie Flower, in 1857, which bloomed but a few brief months, and then withered and died for the want of proper nourishment. This was a neutral paper, and its publishers a joint stock company.

Next, in the Summer of 1860, appeared a Republican organ called the Dallas County Union, published by E. W. Fuller, which was discontinued in the Fall of 1861, when Mr. Fuller went into the army as a sutler in the 39th Iowa Infantry.

The Western Journal, published by Harmon Cook, was the next journalistic offering to the people of Dallas County, which was also Republican in politics, but only continued for a short time.

Next in order comes the Dallas County Gazette, established in May, 1866, by L. M. Holt, who, August 1, 1867, sold to G. A. Atwood. He continued to conduct the establishment in an able manner for some three years, when, in 1870, he sold to J. E. Williams, who has, by his able and efficient management greatly increased the popularity and usefulness of the paper. In politics it is Republican, holding and expressing a decided opinion upon all the great public questions of the day.

The Dallas County News, a neatly printed local sheet, holding the anti-monopoly belief in politics, was established in 1872, by A. Dilley, who, in October, 1873, sold to the present owner, J. M. Landis, who has since devoted himself to the local interests of Adel and Dallas County.

L. W. KELLY, Auditor.	A. C. HOTCHKISS, Clerk of Courts.
T. C. WALSH, Treasurer.	J. W. MATTOX, Recorder.
A. W. HAINES, Sheriff.	J. M. CROCKER, Supt. of Common Schools.

LEM WARFORD, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

ADEL.

This town, the county seat of Dallas County, is delightfully situated on the west bank of North Raccoon River, partly on a dry, rolling second-bottom, extending from the bank of the river westward, and embracing a semi-circular plateau. Fine residence lots and blocks extend back upon the higher slopes. From these elevations there are many delightful views of the romantic valley, with the fine bodies of timber stretching out from the river on either side, and well cultivated farms on the adjacent prairie slopes. One peculiarity of the location is, that no abrupt ravines or really broken lands are to be found in the vicinity. On the town plat of Adel the prairie comes down gently sloping, for complete drainage, to the bank of the river. One may not find in a long journey a dell (Adel) more beautiful. It is said that the peculiar situation of the place suggested the name. In the early records of the county it is spelled Adell, but the faster age saw proper to abbreviate it by dropping the last "l."

The town was laid out in May, 1847, and the first building, a log cabin, about fourteen feet square, was put up the same season by Stephen K. Scovell, the first clerk. He erected it for an office, and being unmarried, he kept "bachelor's hall," and transacted the business of the county. Once he had occasion to visit a distant part of the county, and for safe keeping put the county records in his pocket. Becoming weary, he sat down on a log to rest, and report says he fell asleep. In due time he awoke and pursued his journey. After traveling some miles, he discovered that he had lost the county records. They have not been found to this day. Benjamin Green kept the first store in Adel, about the year 1849. The first hotel was kept by Isaac Davis.

Adel contains a population of about 1,000, and is a neat, well built, pleasant village. The public schools are well graded, and in charge of a corps of accomplished and experienced teachers, while the principal religious denominations, such as Presbyterian, Methodist, Christian, Baptist, and Catholic, all have church organizations and good houses of worship. The several benevolent orders, Masons, Odd Fellows, etc., have organizations in good working order, with large and growing memberships.

The other villages and towns in the county are: Perry, Minburn, Dallas Center, Waukee, Booneville, Van Meter, De Soto, Dexter, Wiscotta, and Redfield.

AUDUBON COUNTY.

This county is the third east from the Missouri River, and in the fourth tier from the southern boundary line of the state. It contains twelve congressional townships—the three southern ones being fractional—or a superficial area of about 446 square miles.

SURFACE FEATURES.

The surface is generally rolling and almost entirely free from ponds or marshes. The East Nishnabotany River rises in Carroll County and flows south through the entire length of Audubon, through a wide valley of unsurpassed fertility, that rises by gentle slopes from the streams to the upland prairies, which stretch away in undulating swells, rising and falling, one beyond another, until they are lost in the lights and shades of the distant horizon. The valleys of the other streams, though less in extent, present the same characteristics, while the high prairie lands between the streams are beautiful and well defined divides, with slight depressions, sloping down to the ravines which carry away the surplus water. The soil in the valley is a dark loam, somewhat mixed with sand, and exceedingly fertile; while on the divides and high prairies the soil is mainly composed of what the geologists term bluff deposit, a light mulatto-colored fine material, containing more or less calcareous matter and a small percentage of clay, which has proved to be a very productive soil.

The largest stream is East Nishnabotany River, which flows from north to south, dividing the county nearly equally, and presenting a valley of unsurpassed beauty and fertility. It has a number of valuable tributaries among which are David's, Troublesome, Blue Grass and Gifford Creeks. The south-east townships are watered and drained by Crooked, Hamlin's and Frost Creeks, all tributaries of Troublesome Creek. South Raccoon River has its source in the northeast part of this county; while among other streams of sufficient importance to have received names are Whitted, Indian and Buck Creeks. The streams mentioned pass through and drain every township in the county, and, with other branches not mentioned, form an admirable system of natural drainage, and afford pure living water for stock at all seasons of the year. The county is also noted for the excellent character of its springs, which are found along all the valleys. Wells are every where easily obtained. The Nishnabotany River affords some good water powers.

The main bodies of timber are along the Nishnabotany River, and mostly in the south half of the county. The largest body is what is known as Ballard's Grove, and contains about 2,000 acres. The timber is chiefly oak, walnut, maple, ihm, hickory, elm, hackberry, cottonwood and cherry. The various wild fruits common in other parts of the state are found.

HISTORICAL.

The first persons who came to Audubon County with the intention of becoming permanent settlers were, Nathaniel Hamlin, Wm. P. Hamlin, Arthur Decker and John S. Jenkins and family. They all arrived at what is known as Hamlin's Grove, on the 9th day of May, 1851, a day memorable in the east part of the state as that on which occurred one of the most terrific tornadoes that ever visited Iowa. This was before any surveys were made in the county, except the lines of the east range of townships. John S. Jenkins took a claim near where Oakfield is now located, and Wm. P. Hamlin went down and took a claim across the line, in Cass County, but subsequently returned to Audubon. In the Autumn of the same year Dr. S. M. Ballard and B. M. Hyatt took claims in Big Grove (now Ballard's Grove), and William Powell located where Exira is now situated. In the Spring of 1853 a settlement was commenced at the upper end of Big Grove, by Alvin Herrick and his son Urbane. The first death in the county was the wife of Arthur Decker, in the Fall of 1852, while the first marriage took place April 16, 1856, the parties being George L. Kellogg and Susannah Kinyon—Urbane Herrick, a justice of the peace, officiating.

In accordance with a petition of the citizens of Audubon the County Judge of Cass County issued an order authorizing a separate county organization, by the election of the necessary officers, on the 6th of April, 1855. Prior to this time the county had been attached to Cass for civil, judicial and election purposes. This first election was held in the cabin of John S. Jenkins, at Big Grove, forty-five votes were cast, and the following officers were elected: T. S. Lewis, Judge; John W. Beers, Clerk; Miles Beers, Treasurer and Recorder; Benjamin M. Hyatt, Sheriff; David Atkins, Prosecuting Attorney; Alvin Herrick, School Fund Commissioner; John W. Beers, Surveyor; and Wm. H. H. Bowen, Assessor. Most of the foregoing were re-elected at the succeeding August election. David L. Anderson was the next Prosecuting Attorney.

On the 22d of May, 1855, Judge E. H. Sears appointed the following persons as Commissioners to locate the county seat, to wit: T. N. Johnson, of Adair County; T. Bryan, of Guthrie County, and C. E. Woodard, of Cass County. Two of them—Theophilus Bryan and C. E. Woodard—were duly qualified and discharged the duty assigned them. On the 20th of June they reported that they had selected the east half of the northwest quarter of section 32, township 78, range 35, calling the place Dayton. The tract selected was accordingly surveyed, and the first public sale of lots advertised to take place on the 22d of November, D. M. Harris at this time being the County Judge. At this sale only one lot was sold, and that brought fifty cents. J. L. Frost being the unlucky purchaser. Judge Harris, finding business rather dull, adjourned the sale to June 3, 1856, at which time some eighty-five lots were sold, at prices ranging from $1.50 to $9.00 each. This was the last county business ever transacted at Dayton, and the town site is a blank to this day, although there are parties in various parts of the United States who are in possession of the fee simple to corner lots here, and annually remit funds to pay their taxes thereon. R. C. Meek was the original proprietor of the land on which Dayton was located.

On the 3d of March, 1856, many of the citizens petitioned the County Judge to submit to the electors of the county the question of the removal of the county seat from Dayton to a place then known by the name of Viola, but now called Exira. The prayer of the petition was granted, and on the 7th of April the election was held at the house of John S. Jenkins, but the proposition was defeated. The next effort to remove the county seat was made at the April election of 1861, and at this time carried in favor of Exira. The first county business was transacted at Hamlin's Grove, and the first term of the District Court was also held there in a school house, in the Fall of 1855, by Judge E. H. Sears.

The first public religious service was in the log school house at Hamlin's Grove, by the Methodists. The first school was also taught there, by Miss Northgrove, and the next by Miss Beers.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper ever published in the county was the Audubon County Pioneer, which was commenced at Audubon City in December, 1860, and continued three months by John C. Brown, who was subsequently Captain Company I, Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and was killed at Milliken's Bend.

The Audubon County Defender is a neat five-column quarto published at Exira by E. H. Kimball. It was established in 1873, is the official organ, and the only paper published in the county.

The county officers for 1875 are as follows:

HUBERT S. WATTLES, Auditor.	A. LORENZO CAMPBELL, Clerk of Courts.
WILLIAM F. STOTTS, Treasurer.	JOHN S. TOFT, Recorder.
JOHN B. CONNRARDY, Sheriff.	HARMON G. SMITH, Supt. Common Schools.

ARTHUR L. SANBORN, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

EXIRA.

This town is located on the east side of David's Creek, a short distance above its junction with the Nishnabotany River, and about five miles from the south line of the county. The situation is pleasantly rolling prairie with some groves of timber adjoining, and fine farming lands extending in all directions. The original proprietors were David Edgerton and D. M. Harris. P. I. Whitted surveyed the town in April, 1857. As before stated, the original name was Viola, but there being another post office in the state of that name, the appellation Exira was adopted—the latter name being chosen in compliment to a lady.

OAKFIELD.

This place is five miles southwest of Exira, on the east side of the Nishnabotany River. It is located in a grove, a large proportion of which consists of oak timber, and hence the name. The town was laid out in the latter part of the year 1857 by Erasmus

D. Bradley, who opened here the first store in the county. Nearly at the same time, however, N. Hamlin and H. M. Beck opened a store at Hamlin's Grove. Judge Isaac P. Hallock and Miles Beers settled where Oakfield is located in April, 1854.

LOUISVILLE.—This is a small village about two and a half miles southwest of Extra. It was laid out by Nathaniel Hamlin in October, 1866.

AUDUBON CITY.—This was a village on Troublesome Creek in the south part of the county, and was laid out by Nathaniel Hamlin and Thomas S. Lewis in September, 1855. As we have seen, a newspaper was once published here, but it has not prospered as a town.

MARION COUNTY.

Marion is the fifth county from the Mississippi, in the third tier from the south line of the state, and corners with Polk County, lying southeast.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

Des Moines River traverses the county from corner to corner nearly. A portion of the northeastern township is drained by Skunk River, but the county is nearly all drained by the Des Moines and its tributaries. Several of the latter are streams of considerable volume. Stock water and drainage is thus profusely supplied, and an abundance of valuable water power is afforded for mills and manufactories. Along all the streams are large bodies of timber, affording a plentiful supply to the whole county. The timber occupies the land which, on account of its roughness, is least valuable for farming purposes. In this respect nature has provided just that distribution which is most convenient and desirable; the hills bordering the streams being clothed with timber, while the open prairie can, every foot of it, be cultivated to advantage. The surface of the prairie is generally undulating or rolling. The soil is deep and rich, being a dark sandy loam from one to three feet deep. In the river bottoms it is usually from three to six feet deep. It is well adapted to the production of the cereals, grass, vegetables and fruits. Stock raising, for which the county is admirably adapted, is a remunerative business.

COAL.

Marion County is regarded as one of the very best coal counties in the state. Indeed, nearly the entire area is underlaid by profitable coal-beds. The principal veins are from five to seven feet thick, and the coal is of good quality.

Both lime and sandstone, suitable for building purposes, are obtained in many places. There are some good quarries of limestone near Pella and in many other parts of the county, known among geologists as the St. Louis limestone.

This rock, in other localities, is usually very compact and brittle, breaking in such an irregular manner that it is dressed with great difficulty, yet in all cases furnishing a superior quality of lime. That of the Pella quarries, however, is regularly bedded, and is not only wrought with great facility, being free from flinty material, but is evidently very durable as well as of a pleasing appearance when hewn. The quarries have a thickness of from eight to ten feet.

Overlying the limestone formation just described is one of variable character and composition, usually a sandstone, or sandy shale, and which forms the base of the coal measure. Just above the town of Red Rock, in Marion County, and on the left bank of the Des Moines River, this formation assumes the character of a clear grit sandstone, forming a bluff some sixty feet in height. The color of the stone is generally a bright brick-red, but a considerable portion of it is of a light yellow, and some of a grayish color. In some places this rock is too soft for building purposes, but half a mile above Red Rock it is of excellent quality, very uniform in texture, withstanding the action of the atmosphere and frost, and is being extensively quarried for home and distant demand.

With its excellent soil, adapted to diversified farming, with its abundance of timber, coal, water power, and other advantages, Marion has the elements for becoming a very wealthy and prosperous county.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The "New Purchase" made by treaty with the Sacs and Foxes in the Autumn of 1842, at Agency, included the territory of Marion County. The right of occupation of the territory as far west as Red Rock was given to white settlers May 1, 1843; but they were not permitted to occupy the remainder until October 10, 1845. Prior to May 1, 1843, there were, however, several trading posts within the limits of Marion County. One known as "Phelps' Trading House" was near the eastern border, and was kept by William Phelps. Others were established at Red Rock, or in the vicinity, by John Jordan, Gaddis & Nye, Turner, and Shaw. One of these trading posts, near that of Phelps, was probably the first habitation occupied by white people in the county. They were located temporarily, following the Indians as they receded from the advancing settlements.

The last day of April, 1843, found here encamped at different places persons who, having chosen their locations, awaited the day on which they could occupy them and commence improvements; for the garrison, whose duty it was to keep them off the territory until the first day of May, did not exercise much vigilance. Accordingly, the moment the prohibition expired these persons were ready to commence "staking and blazing" their chosen claims, which they were obliged to do to define their boundaries, as the land was not surveyed. The following named persons settled at that time in what is now Lake Prairie Township: John B. Hamilton, Ose Mattheus, Sr., Doctors Reuben and Homer Mattheus, Simpson B. Warren, Ose Mattheus, Jr., George Reynolds, Ray Alfrey, Green T. Clark, Robert Hamilton, Henry McPherson and George Gillaspy. In what is now Red Rock Township were John D. Bedell, Amos Shaw, John H. Mikesell, Joel Worth, David B. Worth, James Scott, Israel Nichols, John W. Alley, Elihu Alley, Chilborn Hall, S. B. Mattheus, Nathan Tallman, Drulliard Shoemaker, William Williams and his sons—John, George, Joshua and James.

Among others who also located claims at or about the same time, were Lysander W. Babbitt, Andrew Foster, Matthew Ruple, David Durham, Francis A. Barker, Thomas Long, John Wise, James Price, David Tice, Allen Tice, Andrew Metz and the Wilsons.

Lysander W. Babbitt, who afterwards became prominent in the early history of the county, in company with two others, came down the Des Moines River in a canoe, in the Spring of 1843, having been on a trapping expedition to its head waters, where they passed the previous Winter. They reached Coalport on the first day of May, where Mr. Babbitt remained long enough to make a claim upon the present site of the village, and then repaired to Burlington for his wife, returning soon afterwards to his claim.

During the first year about seventy families settled in the county. They came mostly in companies, and settled in neighborhoods, which were usually designated by the name of some leading member, or from their locality, as the English settlement, the Tong, the Bluffington, the White Breast, the Red Rock settlement. The subsequent division of the county into election precincts seems to have been made to accommodate these settlements, which have long since expanded and united with others.

The first improvements were necessarily very limited. The immigrants were usually poor people; and had they been otherwise, lumber and other necessaries were to be found only at almost inaccessible distances. Half faced structures, known as "cat faced" sheds or "wickeups," were frequently met with, while a dwelling fourteen feet square, made of round logs, roofed with bark or clapboards, and floored with puncheons, was a pretentious residence. The single wagon brought, in many cases, besides the family, their entire stock of household furniture, provisions to last until a fresh supply could be obtained, and the few tools indispensable in making the first improvements—generally an ax, auger and plow—so the furnishing was in keeping with the dwelling. The crop of the first year usually comprised only a few acres of corn, planted on newly broken prairie, and hence denominated sod corn, and a few potatoes and turnips. The only man who is known to have raised enough corn in the first year of the settlement of Marion County for his own consumption until another crop was James Price, who broke and planted nine acres.

During the season of 1844 the population of the county was materially increased in numbers by fresh immigration; but a partial failure of crops that season obliged many to procure the grain necessary for their subsistence nearly a hundred miles eastward, and occasioned considerable privation. At first there were no mills nearer than Brighton and Keosauqua, whither they had to take their grain for grinding, over roads often flooded and extremely difficult of travel. But soon there was a mill erected near Oskaloosa, and then Andrew Foster, who erected a saw mill on English Creek in 1844, added to it an apparatus for grinding corn. Other rudely constructed contrivances, both for sawing and grinding, were erected at various places, and, for the want of better, served a good purpose for the time being.

The pioneers were at first beyond the administration and jurisdiction of civil law, but they found it necessary to adopt some regulations among themselves to avoid disputes and settle difficulties in relation to the area and location of their claims, but more particularly to defend their possessions against the rapacity of sharpers unscrupulous enough to enter their lands as soon as they should be brought into market. This was done by means of associations known as claim associations, each governed by a written constitution and by-laws. These associations, which were really the first form of civil law and order established among the pioneers, have sometimes been represented as inimical or hostile to the civil law, but this opinion arises from ignorance of the real position which they occupied. They were designed to exist only until the protection of ordinary law could be extended to the country, and then passed away without any conflict whatever with, or show of resistance to, lawful authority, except in very rare cases, when the arm of the law was invoked, for some technical reason, in behalf of injustice. Such an exception was that of the disturbance created by Jacob H. Majors, who, although himself a member of an association, in 1847, when the land was brought into market, having money at his disposal, first entered his own claim, and afterwards several tracts claimed by others, in defiance of the rules of the club. Several clubs convened and compelled him to make restitution. Majors, highly incensed, procured indictments against several of the parties for this coercion, but a coat of tar and feathers, administered by colored persons, led him to desist in the prosecution.

ORGANIZATION.

Prior to its organization Marion was attached to Washington, and subsequently to Mahaska County. In 1843 several election precincts were formed by Washington County in the sparsely settled district attached to it. One of them, called Lake Precinct, included a large portion of Marion, and an election was held in the Fall. In 1844, on the occasion of the organization of Mahaska County, several precincts were formed within the limits of Marion, and Stephen Drulliard, who lived on White Breast prairie, was chosen one of the commissioners of Mahaska, at the April election of that year. At the same election each precinct chose justices and constables. The last election held in connection with Mahaska County was in August, 1845.

The first movement to secure a separate county organization was made in the Spring of 1845. A meeting was held at the house of Nathan Bass, on Lake Prairie (in nw. cor. sec. 19, tp. 76, range 18,) by prominent citizens of the county, who, after considerable debate, selected the name of MARION and recommended Joseph Drulliard for organizing sheriff. An act for the organization of the county was accordingly passed by the Territorial Legislature and received the approval of the Governor June 10, 1845. The act provided for an election of county officers on the first Monday in September following, assigned the Sheriff of Mahaska County—Mr. Edmonson—the duties of organizing officer to give the proper notices of election, and appointed Ezra M. Jones, of Van Buren County; Joseph Robinson, of Scott; and James Montgomery, of Wapello, commissioners to locate the seat of justice, and assigned the county to the second judicial district.

Two of the commissioners—Robinson and Montgomery—met and selected the northwest quarter of section seven, township seventy-five, range nineteen, as their location of the seat of justice, and suggested the name of Knoxville, in honor of Gen. Knox, of Revolutionary fame. Their report is dated August 25, 1845.

At the election in September about two hundred votes were cast. Choice was made of Conrad Walters, Wm. Welch, and David Durham, as County Commissioners; Sanford Doud, Commissioners' Clerk; Francis A. Barker, Probate Judge; James Walters, Sheriff; James T. Durham, Treasurer; Reuben Lowry, Recorder; Isaac B. Power, Surveyor; Green T. Clark, Assessor; Wellington Nassaman, Coroner.

The Board of Commissioners met on the 12th day of September, at the place designated as the county seat. The room in which they met is described as a "claim pen made of linn poles, about twelve by sixteen feet square, chinked and daubed, covered with clapboards, and a hole cut in the side wall for a window." The clerk elect being absent, Lysander W. Babbitt was appointed in his stead and the first records of the county are in his handwriting. The commissioners had their session duly opened as a court by Deputy Sheriff L. C. Conray. The name of Knoxville was duly adopted for the county seat, and the county surveyor was directed to survey and plat it into lots.

On the second Monday in October the Board again met and directed a sale of lots, which took place on the 21st of the month. A second sale was held in April, 1846. The proceeds of these sales were absorbed by the expenses of location and survey, and some necessary conveniences for the offices, and as no taxes were collected until the Winter of 1846-7, the county finances were very low. L. C. Conray held the site of the county seat prior to its location, but gratuitously yielded it to the county. It was supposed that considerable revenue would be secured from the sale of lots to purchase the land of the government as soon as it should be subject to entry, but such was the prevailing poverty that two hundred dollars could not be raised. In January, 1847, Thos. Pollock was appointed agent to borrow the money, but failed to obtain it. In this emergency Dr. Weir, of Fairfield, entered it, giving the county time to raise the money.

In the Spring of 1846 was begun the erection of a two-story frame building, 24x30 feet, for a court house. Lewis M. Pearce was the contractor. The building was not finished until some time in 1848. A substantial court house was erected in 1858. It is a commodious brick building 48x70. The ground floor is divided into offices. The upper story is devoted to court and jury rooms. The cost of the building was $19,000; it stands in the center of a well enclosed square, surrounded by a fine growth of forest trees.

On the 12th of March, 1846, Judge Williams arrived for the purpose of holding court. The court was held in a small log building temporarily provided for the purpose, the jury occupying an adjacent lumber pile, where they retired to deliberate. Edward H. Thomas was prosecuting attorney. The first case was one which came up on an appeal from a justice court. It was entitled "United States vs. Henry Hall." The complaint was assault and battery. The case was dismissed and defendant discharged. "United States vs. F. M. Clipton," and "Edward H. Thomas vs. Mahaska County," appear of record at this term, which lasted three days.

On the second day of March, 1846, the county was divided into eight election precincts, as follows: Lake, Red Rock, Coalport, Prairie, Pleasant Grove, Knoxville, English, Round Grove, and Cedar. Judges were appointed for each precinct.

The first assessment was made in the Spring of 1846, by George Gillaspy. As all the land still belonged to the government of course none but personal property was assessed. The first taxes were collected the following Winter.

The township and range lines had been run prior to the organization of the county, but the survey of the townships into sections and quarters was not commenced until the Winter of 1846-7, and was not completed until some time thereafter. The south side of the county was assigned to the Fairfield Land District, and the north half to the Iowa City Land District. The first entry was made by Josiah Brobst, in May, 1847, but it was not until 1848 that any great amount was entered. The greater part of the land was taken up between the years 1850 and 1855. In 1860 there was no government land remaining.

A weekly mail route was established between Oskaloosa and Knoxville July 1, 1846. David T. Durham was the carrier, and gratuitously performed two trips in the month of June before the commencement of his contract. About the time this contract was let a post office was established at Knoxville, of which Lysander W. Babbitt was post master until 1849. The office was at his house, where the first mail arrived in June. A post office had been previously established on Lake Prairie by that name, and Augustus Blair was appointed post master, but failing to qualify, William Stanley was appointed. The last appointment, however, was after the one at Knoxville. Mr. Stanley was succeeded by A. B. Miller, who took charge of the office until its removal to Pella in the Winter of 1847-8. Prior to the location of these offices the nearest post office was Oskaloosa.

In 1846 John Conroy, of Knoxville, was chosen delegate to the convention which met at Iowa City to frame a state constitution, representing besides Marion the Counties of Jasper, Iowa, Poweshiek, Warren, Polk, and all the territory attached to them within the bounds of the "New Purchase." Mr. Conrey was the candidate of the Democratic Party.

In August, 1846, Hugh Glen and Samuel Tibbett were elected in place of Walters and Welch on the board of commissioners, and prior to 1851, when the office was abolished and that of county judge substituted, the following persons were elected: Thomas Pollock, in 1847; Martin Neel, 1848; Miles Jordan, 1849; James M. Brous 1850. Joseph Probst was first county judge. He was elected in 1851, and re-elected in 1853. F. M. Frush was elected as his successor in 1855, and held the office by re-election until January 1, 1861, when the functions of the office were transferred to a board of supervisors by a second change in the law.

On the night of February 9, 1867, the safe in the treasurer's office was broken open and robbed of $32,471.81 public funds. No important clue to the robbers was ever discovered, although suspicion attached for a time to the treasurer, whose name was Cunningham, and also to a man by the name of D'Armond, but legal proceedings were futile for want of evidence. The loss was severely felt by the county for a time.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Marion County Agricultural Society was organized in the year 1856, and its first fair was held on the public square in Knoxville in October. The old court room was used for a floral hall. The exhibition was light, and but few premiums were awarded. The society continued with very scanty accommodations until 1858, when a joint stock company was formed which purchased a beautiful plat of ground one mile north of Knoxville, and provided sufficient accommodations for a fair the same season. The grounds are well shaded by a natural grove, enclosed by a high board fence, and provided with a commodious hall, pens, and stalls, and a good well of water. The finances of the society are now in excellent condition, and its affairs prosperous.

POOR HOUSE AND FARM.

In December, 1865, the county purchased a tract of 120 acres, two and a half miles southwest of Knoxville, for a poor farm, for the sum of $1,200, and commenced improvements. A large three-story frame house was erected thereon in 1866 at a cost of $4,450. Stables, out-buildings, and other improvements have since been added.

KNOXVILLE.

The first settlers here were Luther C. Conrey, Lysander W. Babbitt, Lewis Pierce, and George Gillaspy. Dr. L. C. Conrey erected the first dwelling house.

The citizens began early to display taste and care in planting trees and ornamenting their grounds. The town therefore presents a cheerful and attractive appearance often wanting in western cities and villages. It has many and great natural advantages, being located very near the geographical center of the county. In the midst of a densely populated and rapidly improving agricultural district unsurpassed in beauty and fertility, convenient to coal, timber, and building material of every description. Its inhabitants as a class are moral and enterprising, and promote good order, temperance and education. It has the advantages of the public business of the county, and the only serious disadvantage from which it has suffered is the absence of railroad communication. This now promises to be speedily overcome by a railroad in process of construction between Albia and Des Moines, making excellent connections with all the important north and south, east and west lines, in this part of the state.

The business of the town is arranged about the beautiful court house square in the center. It comprises the usual variety of business to be found in prosperous interior towns, including bank, hotels, mercantile houses, and shops of all descriptions. The professions are well represented. The Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Christian, Baptist, and Advent denominations, and perhaps others, have organizations, and most of them good church edifices. Masonic and Odd Fellows' societies are maintained, and the people manifest considerable interest in literary pursuits.

The public school building is a substantial brick edifice very creditable to the town. It is located upon a large lot, and is surrounded by an abundance of shade trees. Here, amid pleasant surroundings and provided with all the modern appliances, the youth of Knoxville are educated to be intelligent men and women. This service employs six teachers whose several departments are under the general supervision of an efficient principal upon a thorough system of gradation. The Latin and German languages and several other academical branches are included in the course of study.

The Knoxville Journal made its appearance as the first newspaper in the place, on the 1st of October, 1855. It was established by William M. Stone, afterwards Governor of Iowa. The office was entirely destroyed by fire on the night of March 4, 1856, and was not renovated until the next Fall or Winter, when George W. Edwards, who owned a press and type, came to the place in quest of a location and formed a partnership with Mr. Stone. Mr. Edwards soon became sole proprietor, and after him John M. Bailey, E. G. Stanfield, L. D. Ingersol, and Bigelow & Co., successively. In 1860 it was purchased by Horner & Hannold, who made it The Marion County Republican. In 1861 it passed into the hands of B. F. Williams, and in August, 1866, to William G. Cambridge. The material was sold and the paper discontinued in March, 1867. In June, 1856, Chilborn Hall commenced the publication of The Democratic Standard. It passed from him to a company, and then to different individuals successively, among them S. M. Hammond and M. V. B. Bennett, and finally suspended in 1864 or '65. September 19, 1865, the first issue of The Marion County Democrat appeared; J. L. McCormack, editor and proprietor. Mr. McCormack has continued as editor and proprietor ever since. The Democrat is a large and well conducted journal, issued weekly, and all printed at home. It has a large circulation and a liberal share of public patronage. In March, 1867, Messrs. Sperry and Barker purchased the Republican office, and on the 20th of June issued the first number of The Iowa Voter as a Republican newspaper. The Voter soon established for itself a good reputation and a profitable business which it has maintained ever since. In August, 1872, F. C. Barker became sole editor and proprietor, and in 1874 he changed the name back to the original Knoxville Journal. It is a forty-eight column quarto.

PELLA.

In 1846 an association was formed in Holland for the purpose of seeking homes in the new world for a colony made up from the middle and poorer classes of that country. The enterprise originated in the mind of Mr. Henry P. Scholte, an educated gentleman of liberal opinions and benevolent impulses, and a seceder from the established church of that country, born at Amsterdam in 1805. It was designed for the purpose of bettering the condition of those who might choose to avail themselves of the opportunity by emigration, as well as to secure greater social equality and religious freedom. The organization was arranged by meetings at Leersdam in July, and at Utricht in December, 1846, consisting of Mr. Scholte as President; A. J. Betten, Vice President; Isaac Overcamp, Secretary; and a Board or Committee of Arrangements, composed of G. H. Overcamp, G. F. Lecoque, John Reedfeld, and A. Wigny. No profane, immoral or intemperate person, nor any avowed atheist, skeptic or Roman Catholic could become a member of the colony; and all members with sufficient means were required to take charge of one or more poor persons or families. In the Spring of 1847, the association numbered about 1,300 persons, of whom nearly 800 were ready for the journey. They embarked in sailing vessels and landed at Baltimore in June, whence they proceeded to St. Louis by rail and steamer. From this point Messrs. Scholte, Reedfeldt, and Isaac Overcamp were sent forward to select a location. At Fairfield, Iowa, these gentlemen were met by Rev. J. M. Post, who being well acquainted with the country guided them to Lake Prairie, Marion County, where they decided to locate. There were some sixty settlers on the tract, and it required some tact to secure all the claims without paying an extravagant price, but the agents succeeded in a few days in buying them all out, when they entered all the land in Jefferson and Grandview Townships on the "divide" between the Des Moines and Skunk Rivers. About 13,000 acres of this land were divided among the settlers, and as they did not take the rest off Mr. Scholte's hands it remained with him. A large temporary shed was put up for shelter until other dwelling places could be provided. A majority of the dwellings first made were constructed of prairie sod covered with thatching of long grass. A town was laid out by Mr. Scholte and others near the place where their first shed was erected, in the Spring of 1848, and named Pella, the City of Refuge. Others continued to follow the first company, and the colonists have scattered over the country more and more, while Americans have gone in until the population is quite mixed. The colonists are an honest and industrious class of people and they have been rewarded with abundant prosperity. Mr. Scholte, their honored patron, died August 25, 1868.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY OF IOWA.

In 1853 the Baptist Church at Pella took the first steps toward the establishment of the above named institution. The advantages of location and the orderly, moral and religious character of the people of the town induced the Baptist State Convention to approve the project and take the institution under its patronage. The University grounds, a beautiful park of eight acres, was donated by Mr. Scholte. The building was erected by subscriptions in Pella and elsewhere. Its dimensions are 50x70 feet, three stories high, with a basement. It contains fourteen rooms, including a large chapel, library, and museum, and is capable of accommodating 300 students. The institution has a liberal endowment, is out of debt, and prosperous.

NEWSPAPERS.

The first number of The Pella Gazette, the first newspaper printed in the county, was issued February 1, 1855, by Henry P. Scholte and Edwin H. Grant. It suspended after about two years, but was revived in 1859 by S. M. Hammond, with Mr. Scholte as editor, and after the campaign was continued by Hammond & Hannold until March, 1860, when it was discontinued. Henry Haspers, having purchased the office, commenced the publication of The Week Blad in September, 1861, in the Dutch language. It was formerly Democratic, and is now Independent in politics. In 1874 the paper passed into the hands of H. Neyenesh, the present editor and proprietor. It is a very neat paper, with a large circulation. The Pella Blade was established February 3, 1865, by C. S. Wilson, but a year afterward the office was sold and removed from the county. A paper was soon afterward issued under the same name by E. Crosby and Joseph H. Betzer. Crosby sold to H. G. Curtis in December, 1867, and he to A. T. Betzer in December, 1869, and the firm became Betzer Brothers until 1871, then Betzer Brothers & Cox until February, 1875, when it passed into the hands of Mastellar & Co., the present publishers. It is a large nine-column folio sheet, issued Tuesdays, Republican, and is in a flourishing condition.

Pella is an important station on the Des Moines Valley Railroad, and enjoys a large shipping and mercantile trade. It is duly incorporated, and has a large and prosperous graded school.

The other villages and post offices are: Attica, Bennington, Colonia, Columbia, Cooper Springs, Dallas, English Settlement, Gosport, Hamilton, Isla, Lucas Grove, Marysville, Newbern, Oak, Otley, Pleasantville, Red Rock, Roseau, Star and Wheeling.

JOHNSON COUNTY.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The area of Johnson County is about 618 square miles, or 395,520 acres. Its surface is undulating and diversified by numerous water courses and timber tracts belting the streams, and, in groves, dotting the prairies like islands in the sea. Iowa River here makes a great bend or elbow, passing through no less than eight congressional townships ere it leaves the borders of the county, furnishing most valuable water-power and numerous sites for mills and manufactories. Peculiarly sharp angles and sweeping curves in the form of a horse shoe here mark its course. Around one of these bends, in the north part of the county, and again just below Iowa City, the high banks approach on either side contracting the stream and causing it to rise very high in time of flood. About a mile above the place where the river leaves the county, at a point called Buttermilk Falls, it rushes foaming over a remarkable bed of boulders here accumulated in great numbers. Numerous springs of pure water rise among the uplands and find their way to the Iowa River from every direction, in unfailing streams, among which may be named Old Man's, Clear, Single, Sell's or Mill, and Rapid Creeks, as furnishing good water-power. A very small area in the northeast corner is drained by Cedar River. Iowa River was once looked upon as of some importance for navigation as an outlet to the rest of the world. Light draught Mississippi boats have passed up its waters as far as Iowa City, but railway communication has long since superseded all efforts in this direction for commercial purposes.

The face of the country presents some variety though not in a remarkable degree. The broad, level valleys of the rivers rise gently into undulating uplands save where the rock formations jut forth in frowning low bluffs and crags against the encroaching waters. These exposures are found along Iowa River, but principally along Turkey and Rapid Creeks. They are not numerous, and consist of Devonian limestone varying considerably in lithological character from soft sandy shales to specimens capable of receiving a fine polish, a rather brittle common limestone predominating. Fossils occur frequently, especially coral, which occurs near Iowa City in considerable abundance, solidified with pure calcareous material and consolidated in the rocky strata. These masses to which the names of "Iowa City Marble" and Bird's Eye Marble" have been given, receive a fine po ish, and make beautiful cabinet specimens. About eight miles above Iowa City, on the right bank of the river, are the quarries known as the Johnson County quarries. According to the Geology of Iowa they are the best ever opened in a strata of the Devonian age in Iowa; the color of the stone a uniform light gray, its texture tough, and quality such that it has stood the severest test for thirty years unchanged. It is particularly valuable for dressing and use in massive structures.

Below Iowa City, on the west side of the river, is a peculiar "knob," or high hill, overlooking the surrounding country, and known as "Indian Lookout" from its having been a favorite resort of the savages of a neighboring Indian village, when the country first became known to the pale faces. Along the river bluffs are frequent those mysterious tokens of a pre-historic race, rounded mounds of earth arranged in curious groups, but for what purpose can only be vaguely conjectured. The southwestern portion of the county is the most rolling, the northern part has the largest proportion of timber.

The surface of the county is, with slight exception, composed of excellent soil and deep sub-soil derived from the "drift" which profusely covers the whole region. It is very productive, and exceedingly adapted to the production of grain, grass, fruit, and vegetables.

POPULATION—RESOURCES—EDUCATION.

The region thus favored by nature, and known upon the map as Johnson County, is the home of a prosperous and intelligent population, who have developed its vast material resources into fruitful sources of never failing profit and wealth. About 230,000 acres of its soil are annually tilled by their plows. Some definite idea of the vast amount of grain produced annually, the extent and importance of its stock-raising and fruit culture, and the progress and improvement of its manufacturing interests may be gained from the statistical tables in another part of this work; but in order to be fully appreciated, they require to be seen during the Summer and Fall months.

The extent and importance of the railroad communications of the county may be seen by a glance at the map. Intellectual progress, and moral and religious culture are maintained in a degree fully equal to this material prosperity, and Iowa City is the acknowledged educational center of the state. To say nothing of the State University and several other institutions of learning, which will be referred to more particularly hereafter, it may be stated that the county maintains 160 public schools, for which there are provided 158 school houses, valued at $130,000, furnishing instruction to nearly 7,000 pupils. To maintain these schools, furnish them suitable buildings and other requirements, and pay their teachers, the people contribute from $70,000-to $75,000 annually.

THE VIEW CHANGED.

Let us remove this picture from the camera and replace it with a view of the same scene forty years ago. It is a brief space of time to retrace, but now not a vestige of this state of civilization is in view. The prairies are wild, unbroken wastes without a field or fence or dwelling to enliven their loneliness. The forests are deep, dark recreats of skulking beasts of prey. The hum of industry is an unknown sound. The busy, noisy town could scarce be pictured in imagination amid the thicket and underbrush. The steam whistle has never startled the echoes of the river banks, nor the thunder of the iron horse alarmed the lone deer on the prairie.

There are, indeed, a few signs of habitation, but these even are in unison with the spirit of the scene—nay, even more weird and wild. Occasionally a few half naked human forms glide silently in view for a moment, and then as stealthily disappear in the forest or ravine. Following the trail of their footsteps, a cluster of smoky tents may be discovered concealed from observation, and inhabited by a few hundred savages who maintain a precarious existence by the chase, by a small trade in furs and trinkets, and perhaps some rude attempt at agriculture.

Several of these Indian towns were then located upon Iowa River within the limits of this county, the largest of which was that of Poweshiek, about two miles below where Iowa City now stands. The agencies which have accomplished the great change from this scene of savagery to that first described, within so brief a time, can be regarded as little less than wonderful, yet they may be named in two very common words, intelligence and enterprise. In tracing their footsteps we must here introduce the

EARLY SETTLERS.

In 1836 an Indian trader by the name of John Gilbert had a rude hut or trading house in what is now Pleasant Valley Township. Although the honor of keeping the first store in Johnson County is claimed by others, it undoubtedly belongs to Gilbert as his stock in trade was certainly as much entitled to that name as the basket of groceries usually designated as the pioneer store. In the Fall of that year Gilbert met at Rock Island Philip Clarke and John Myers, from Northern Indiana, traveling westward on horse-back in search of a location, and obligingly offered to show them one having all the advantages they could desire. They accepted his invitation, and proceeding to his trading house, selected claims in the vicinity, built the body of a cabin on each, then leaving them in Gilbert's care returned home. They arrived again in May, 1837, accompanied by several others, bringing teams and a few indispensable tools, and commenced improvements. The season of 1837 brought considerable many accessions to the settlement, among whom were Samuel and Joseph Walker, William Wilson, S. C. Trowbridge, Henry Felkner, Pleasant Harris, William Sturgis, George W. Hawkins, John Henry, Jacob Earhart, John Cane, S. B. Mulholland, A. D. Stephens, Samuel Bumgardner, Jonathan Harris, and S. H. McCrory. In 1838 immigration increased; it could scarcely be called a tide, however. The pioneers came solitary and alone, or by twos and threes, and each located as it suited his fancy, without regard to the proximity of others. It so happened that settlements were made in differents parts of the county, often distant from each other, almost simultaneously. Convenience to timber was of first importance, as the only means of supplying those prime necessities, shelter and fuel. Convenience to water was of next importance. Less attention was given to the nature of the soil and beauty of the surroundings, for the soil was every where fertile and nature lavish of her attractions. Markets and ways of communication were things of the future altogether, and were scarcely considered at all; that they must follow his steps was enough for the pioneer to know concerning them. A location chosen, a rude habitation was next provided by "raising" a few logs and filling the crevices with mud. A few rude plank or "puncheons," fashioned with an ax, served for floor, benches, and door, and if a roof was provided of "shukes" split with a "fro," it was considered an excellent dwelling. The household furniture usually consisted of a cast iron bake oven, a water bucket, coffee pot, frying pan, two or three tin cups, and as many plates, knives, and forks. A sack of meal, a side or shoulder of bacon, and a little salt, were the principal contents of the larder. The proprietor of this scanty store was usually generous and free hearted, and on leaving his cabin in the morning would generally leave a baked "pone" and other provisions cooked for the refreshment of any hungry wayfarer who might chance to call during the day. He was a law unto himself, and without any of the restraints and conventionalities of more advanced society. When any considerable number had settled in a locality, their first effort toward the organization of civil society was the formation of a "claim association," for mutual protection in possession of their homes from the "land sharks" who immediately followed them, until they had an opportunity of purchasing from the government. For this purpose they drew up a constitution and by-laws, elected a president, secretary, and treasurer, and woe to the luckless adventurer who had the temérity to trespass on their sacred rights. Disputes between themselves in relation to claims were also settled by the association.

The typical pioneer was a hardy, frank, honest, and generous person, by no means unsociable or indifferent to civilization. On the contrary he was generally as intelligent as his tastes and habits were simple, and actuated by a desire of laying the foundation for the enjoyment of better advantages for himself and his children, in the higher walks of life, than his humble circumstances permitted in the thickly settled districts where the way upward was slow and painful to his enterprising spirit. How well he has accomplished his desire let the picture of to-day answer. As a class he is now no more, but his blood, his spirit, and his enterprise animate the scene now so strikingly in contrast with its humble beginning.

In the Annals of Iowa, Captain F. M. Irish, of Iowa City, gives the following record of the first settlements of the county: In Pleasant Valley and Tremont Townships, William Kelso, Mr. Sweet, Robert, Samuel, and Joseph Walker; in Scott Township, John Parrott, Mr. Teneick, Charles Jones, John Mathews, Isaac Bowen, Dr. Jesse Bowen, and Green Hill; in Graham Township, Nathaniel and E. K. Morse, and James Nolan; in Cedar, James Buchanan, Allen Sutliff, and James Cavanaugh; in Big Grove Township, Mr. Pratt, Mrs. Lyon, W. Stiles, W. Spurrier, and Mr. Lingle; in Monroe, Martin Harless, George Wein, E. Dollarhide, John Azlein, and David Crozier; in Clear Creek Township, N. Fellows, John Hawkins, B. and I. Dennis, J. and R. Douglass; in Union and Washington, James Seahorn, A. Davis, Mr. Fry and his family of sons, William Ford, and S. H. Bonham; in Liberty, P. Harris, Jacob, Henry, and John Earhart, Jacob and Joel Overholtzer, J. and C. Hartman. By the close of the year 1840, the county numbered 1,504 inhabitants, and the wide spaces between settlements were rapidly receiving immigrants.

JOHN GILBERT,

The first settler of Johnson County, was a somewhat remarkable character, of whom a short sketch may not be amiss. The facts are drawn mostly from the Annals of Iowa, of 1868. His real name was John W. Prentice, and he was a cousin of the celebrated George D. Prentice, of Louisville, Ky. He was originally from the State of New York, where a train of serious troubles, among them heavy losses in canal contracts, induced him to abandon his home at Lockport and change his name and business. He entered the service of the Green Bay Trading Company in Michigan, learned the Indian language, secured their confidence by his faithfulness and capacity, and was sent to various points among the Indians to establish trading posts. In this capacity he came among the Foxes on the Iowa. Here he died in March, 1839, and was buried near his old trading house. His remains were afterward removed to the Iowa City Cemetery by the old settlers, who cherished a grateful remembrance of many valuable services he rendered them during their first years in the county.

INDIANS.

As the white settlements increased the Indians south of Iowa City removed some sixteen miles north, and were soon afterward removed to a reservation further west by the general government.

ORGANIZATION.

During the Autumn of 1838 Samuel C. Trowbridge received a sheriff's commission, from Governor Lucas, of the newly organized Territory of Iowa, authorizing him to organize Johnson County. He thereupon called an election at Gilbert's trading house on the 10th day of September, at which Henry Felkner, Abner Wolcott and Samuel Sturgis were elected commissioners. The names of the other officers have not been handed down to us. Robert Walker held also a commission from the Governor as first justice of the peace for the county. The commissioners held their first meeting at Phelps' trading house. Soon afterward Gilbert and Clarke laid off a town called Napoleon, which became the county seat, remaining such until after the location of the Territorial Capital at Iowa City, whereupon it was removed to Iowa City, and Napoleon became a farm. The first court was held at Gilbert's trading house by Judge Williams, and the grand jury in attendance had the broad prairie for a jury room. The second election for county officers took place at Napoleon in 1839.

IOWA CITY.

The first session of the Territorial Legislature of Iowa, which convened at Burlington November 1, 1838, appointed Robert Ralston, of Des Moines County, John Rounds, of Louisa, and O. Swan, of Dubuque, commissioners, with instructions to locate the Territorial Capital in Johnson County, and in May, 1839, they selected the present site of Iowa City. Mr. Swan was then chosen by his colleagues as Acting Commissioner to proceed with work on the grounds and Capitol. A section of land was donated for a site and $20,000 in money appropriated for building purposes by act of Congress. Mr. Swan came on the ground in June, with Thomas Cox and John Frierson, surveyors, and a corps of workmen. Between the heavy timber northward and southward was a dense growth of hazel brush and scrub oaks. The work of clearing this away was begun and prosecuted as far as the Capitol site by the Fourth of July, and then the proceedings were varied by a celebration. The customary dinner was prepared at the place of Jonathan Harris, four miles below, and brought to the ground on wagons.

The location of the capital and the commencement of work at once made Iowa City a center of attraction, and inhabitants flocked in rapidly. Now, indeed, immigration became a "tidal wave." Being intent on other things, they neglected to register the date of their arrival, which became the occasion of much dispute in after times when it became a point of distinction. Samuel B. Mulholland, Mathew Teneick, Andrew Stein, George T. Andrews, Walter Butler, and Charles Pinney were some of the first permanent settlers. It is stated that Mathew Teneick's was the first family that located here, Doctor Henry Murray the first physician, William L. Gilbert the first attorney, and Mr. Fenn the first preacher of the gospel. Mr. Teneick brought a herd of cattle and a supply of provisions, and boarded the commissioners and surveyors. He built a block house on the corner of Iowa Avenue and Dubuque Street. The first frame building was a store erected by Wesley Jones, south of University Square. The first hotel was erected in the Fall of 1839, by Walter Butler. Previous to this there was a boarding house known as "Leanback Hall," built for a sudden emergency, and containing one bed said to accommodate thirty-six men. Lumber was scarce, and several of the first houses were sided with boards split from oak trees and afterwards shaved. Pine lumber could be obtained at Muscatine, but as it came down the Ohio River and up the Mississippi, it was expensive. Henry Felkner erected a saw mill upon Rapid Creek, but could not supply the demand. In the Spring of 1840 Mr. Sylvanus Johnson opened a brick yard, which furnished an important supply of building material, of which the first brick building was erected for William Bostwick, by George T. Andrews. About this time Edward Foster and son, who, the year previous, had opened a small stock of goods at Napoleon, removed hither, and opened store on Capitol Street. Up to this time the hats of persons going to and fro between this point and Muscatine, were the principal postal facilities, but now a weekly mail route from that town, and a post office were secured, with Samuel H. McCrory for post master.

THE CAPITOL.

Returning now to the work of Commissioner Swan, we find that the surveys were so far advanced that the first sale of lots came off on the 18th of August, 1839, and among the bidders were many eastern capitalists. The proceeds amounted to about $75,000. A second sale took place in October, amounting to $30,000. These sums, the Congressional appropriation of $20,000, and one of $40,000 by the Territorial Legislature, comprised the building fund. Skean and McDonald, of the firm of Rague & Co., the contractors, came on and broke ground for the building in April, 1840, and in June the foundation was ready to receive the water-table. Here the contractors abandoned the work in consequence of the poor quality of stone furnished. It was continued, however, under charge of Mr. Swan, but made slow progress. Excepting the water-table, which was brought from Cedar County, twenty miles away, the stone for the first story was obtained within the city limits, and the Fall of 1841 found the walls only to the second floor. Meanwhile Mr. Butler and others of Iowa City tendered the Legislature the use of a temporary building, in which that body convened December 6, 1841. During the ensuing session Mr. Swan's office was abolished, and Honorable John M. Coleman appointed Superintendent of Public Buildings. Under his able supervision the work was begun with energy early in 1842. Excellent stone was found on the bank of the Iowa, several miles above the city, and brought down on flat-boats, and the work proceeded rapidly to its completion. In this building the furniture and effects of the capitol were kept until 1857, when they were removed to Des Moines.

In the Autumn of 1839 two incidents occurred which curiously illustrated the state of the country at that time. Robert Lucas, Governor of the Territory, accompanied by his two daughters, visited Iowa City, traveling on horseback, and accompanied by a guide from Muscatine. There was only one cabin in the place which could boast of an attic where the ladies could find lodgings, and this was reached by means of a ladder. Travelers often lost their way on the prairies, especially between here and Dubuque, and to remedy this a furrow was plowed on the nearest practicable route to Dubuque to mark the way.

EDUCATION.

In 1840, Jesse Berry erected a small frame building on Cottage Street, in which he opened a private school, the first in the county of which we have any record. The Mechanics' Mutual Aid Association erected an academy building, which was opened for the reception of students June 4, 1842, by William and Hugh Hamilton, and flourished for some time. Two or three years after this event the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Protestant Methodist Church each obtained the donation of a block of ground for college purposes, organized educational institutions, and undertook to erect buildings, but after awhile abandoned their undertakings, which resulted chiefly in crippling the Mechanics' Academy. After this private schools were maintained until the Iowa system of free schools at public expense went into operation. In 1847 the State University was established, and the capitol buildings and grounds were donated for its use. Of this institution a detailed account is given elsewhere. Besides this and the city schools, there are now in operation McClain's Academy, with 120 pupils, three Catholic schools, named respectively St. Joseph's Institute, St. Ugotha's Seminary, and the Free School Primary, numbering in the aggregate 350 students and pupils, and a small school of the Lutheran denomination.

Iowa City has excellent public schools. A commodious school building is located in each of the four wards of the city. In each the classes are admirably graded, and employ altogether eighteen teachers and a general superintendent.

The city maintains numerous church organizations, and church edifices of various degrees of elegance adorn its precincts. Religious privileges are no where in the state of a better character.

The beautiful plat of the Johnson County Agricultural Society is located one-half mile southwest of the city. Here the State Fair of 1860 and 1861 were held.

CITY GOVERNMENT.

The present city government of Iowa City was established by act of the General Assembly, approved January 25, 1853, and went into operation on the 6th day of April following with Jacob P. De Forrest, Mayor; Anson Hart, Recorder; C. H. Buck, Treasurer; R. Hutchinson, Marshal; and nine aldermen, three from each ward. A fourth ward was created in 1857, and since 1863 the title of trustees has superseded that of aldermen.

NEWSPAPERS.

The first paper printed and published at Iowa City was the Iowa Standard, June 10, 1841, by William Crum, Esq. A. F. Wood became editor in April, 1842, and half owner soon after, then sole owner, which he remained until the Spring of 1846, when Silas Foster became publisher. It was an organ of the whig party. It afterwards passed into the hands of Doctor S. M. Ballard, Esq., who changed its name to the Republican. Since him it has had several proprietors, among them N. H. Brainard, Esq., from whom it passed to the present editors and proprietors, Messrs. Royce & Wilson. It is an able paper, published every Wednesday, and has a large circulation.

The Iowa Capitol Reporter made its appearance December 4, 1841, Van Antwerp & Hughes, editors and proprietors; politics democratic. It passed through several hands and finally passed away, and upon its rufins the present Iowa State Press was established August 15, 1850. It is a very popular organ of the democratic party of which John P. Irish is editor and proprietor; published Wednesdays. In 1871 Mr. Irish commenced the issue of the Daily State Press, which is the only daily paper between Davenport and Des Moines.

In 1869 the Sloven Amerieky was established by J. B. Lelovsky. It is printed in the Bohemian language, and has a large circulation.

IOWA COUNTY.

Iowa is the fourth county from the Mississippi River, in the fourth tier of counties from the south line of the state, and contains a superficial area of 576 square miles, or 368,640 acres. It is more heavily timbered than the generality of counties in the state, the northern and southern parts having considerable surplus over the local demands. It is traversed, both in the north and south, by numerous well wooded streams. In some parts the country near the streams is quite uneven, the hills being covered with light growth of timber. Some of the bottom land, also, is too low and level, but with these slight exceptions, no better farming country can be found. The river and table lands in the vicinity of Marengo, Kosta and Genoa Bluffs are of unsurpassed fertility. The southern portion, which is traversed by the North English River and its tributaries, presents a fine alternation of timber and prairie, pleasing to the eye, and gratifying to the husbandman. The "divide," or plateau between the streams in the northern and southern parts of the county, is one of the choicest prairie sections in the State, consisting of a belt from twelve to fifteen miles wide, running east and west across the country, and dotted with occasional groves.

The soil on the prairies and in the valleys is deep, rich, and exceedingly productive. All the cereals yield large crops, and all vegetable and root crops common to the state are successfully raised. Fruits of various kinds, including apples, cherries, pears, and the smaller fruits, have succeeded well. The county is likewise well adapted to stock raising; the tame grasses are successfully produced, and the numerous small streams afford constant supplies of living water.

According to the census returns of 1873 there were 151,536 acres of land in cultivation, and the amount of grain produced the previous year was 610,718 bushels of wheat, 2,333,814 bushels of corn, 470,748 of oats, and 126,801 of barley.

EDUCATIONAL.

Iowa County maintains 126 public schools, provided with school houses valued at nearly $90,000. It has the largest permanent school fund of any county in the state, with the single exception of Allamakee, viz.: $81,422.90. It expends annually in support of public schools from $55,000 to $60,000. These figures are gathered from the reports of 1873.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Iowa River furnishes excellent water power; Rear Creek and North English River also furnish available mill privileges.

Good quarries of lime and sandstone are found near Amana, along Iowa River, and the stone is used quite extensively for building purposes by the German "Colonists." The sandstone is quite soft when first quarried, and may be dressed with little labor then, but it becomes very hard on exposure to the atmosphere. The limestone makes a very strong though dark lime.

Clay, suitable for the manufacture of brick, is found in all parts of the county.

EARLY HISTORY.

The Pottawattamie and Musquaka tribes of Indians occupied the lands in the northern part of the county when the "pale faces" first came here, but were generally peaceful and well disposed.

The first settlement was made prior to 1844, at or near what is known as Homestead, by Lineas Niles, John Burget and a man named Cleveland. Very soon after, a settlement was commenced at and near where Marengo is now located, and among the earliest settlers here, were Robert McKee, Amos Crocker, Absalom Washington, Charles Kitchen, William Downard, and Ransom F. Mason.

The first house built in the county was by Edward Ricord, in what is now Green Township.

The first blacksmith was John Hill, and the first mill was erected by the Kitchen Bros., on Bear Creek. The first tavern was built by a man named Kirkpatrick, at Marengo. William Downard and H. H. Hull brought the first stock of goods to the county, and sold them at the same place.

The first white child was born to Robert McKee and wife.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized in 1847; the commissioners appointed to locate the county seat choosing the present location, and naming it Marengo, because, as they looked down upon the site from the bluffs, they imagined a resemblance to Napoleon's Marengo. Robert McKee was the first treasurer, recorder and clerk, these offices being then combined.

THE AMANA SOCIETY.

This society consists of a large number of Germans, who occupy all of Amana Township, except a few farms, and part of Iowa Township. They are colonized in seven settlements. Their towns are well built, the houses being mostly large, and many of them being built of brick and stone. The society has good saw mills, flour mills, and two woolen factories. The machinery in the last costing about $40,000. These factories are in excellent condition, and well managed, and turn out all the woolens needed in the colony, besides some first-class goods for shipment. These go to Chicago and other points further east, where the Amana goods have been long known, and have a good reputation. These people also have an establishment for manufacturing the Indigo prints, so popular among the German women every where, and which find a ready sale both here and at the east. In this matter the society has reversed the general order of things. We send the crude material east, and have it returned to us manufactured into any desired article or form, but in this case the cotton is brought from the east, printed and returned. To do this they must not only possess good facilities for manufacturing, but their prints must have an established reputation.

The colonists hold peculiar religious views. They call themselves the Church of the True Inspiration, believing that men may be, and are inspired to speak now, as they were of old; that the spirit of prophecy is confined to no age, but belongs to all time. In this respect they differ little from the Quakers. They have no pastors or preachers, their churches being managed by elders who conduct the religious exercises, and read and expound the Scriptures. The elders take turns in conducting the meetings, and when the leader has finished, he calls upon his associates to know if they have anything to say. They have but one prophet now, as they call their inspired men. The Bible is their guide, and if a man, claiming to be inspired, should proclaim anything inconsistent or in conflict with its precepts, they would deny the validity of his claim, and attach no importance to his words. These people also agree with the Quakers in being non-resistants. Some doubts existed in the minds of many during the war as to the truth of this, but they have certainly stood as firmly and consistently by their views in this respect as any other society. They furnished no troops during the war, though they filled their quota by sending substitutes, and manifested their humanity by contributing largely to the sanitary commission. They have the reputation of being good citizens, and a kind and peaceable people.

They have formed a community, but in so doing, have endeavored to preserve individual and family rights. When a man joins the society he pays his capital into the common fund, and if at any time he desires to leave, he withdraws his capital, but without interest. The affairs of the community are managed by thirteen elders, chosen annually, on the afternoon of the general election. These choose a president and secretary of their own number, and to this body of men, thus constituted, and representing all the colonies, are entrusted all the business affairs of the society. The trustees assign to each family a whole house, or a part, as the size of the family would seem to require. The houses are generally large enough for several families, especially as several eat at one common table, thus making one kitchen answer for all in the house. Each family, and each man, has certain personal rights which are not interfered with. For instance, if a man is assigned to a home with a little garden attached, and he plants vegetables or fruit trees, or vines, it is expected that he will reap the fruit of this special labor, without molestation from individuals or the corporation. Each man votes as he chooses, and most of them vote the Democratic ticket. The elders advise them not to vote at all, and they do not vote on the state ticket. The family relation is as distinct and sacred in this community as among other Christian people.

There is one store in each colony, and each man has an account there for himself, if single, for his family, if married. He is allowed to draw a given amount annually. What he shall draw is left to his own discretion. The kind or quality is not dictated, but only the gross amount, and every thing is furnished to him at the actual cost. But one kind of business is needed in each colony.

All are industrious, each contributing his daily labor to the common stock, and each laboring where his own choice, or qualifications, or the necessities of the community shall dictate. If a member is sick, he is cared for, and whatever attendant expense there may be falls upon the whole, the same as though he were one of a large family. The medicine is drawn from the common store, and the doctor labors the same as others, without drawing pay therefor.

This sect originated in Germany about the year 1714. It was started by several religious persons, feeling the need of a religion less formal, but purer and more spiritual than that which prevailed about them, were naturally drawn together, and finally organized, but not on the community plan. This was not adopted until they reached this country. In 1842 they began to come over to this country, and soon established themselves near Buffalo, N. Y. But that city became so large, and property around it so valuable, that they could not well extend their domain. Then their attention was directed to the West, and in 1843 they selected their present site, and began to move out. But this migration was gradual. It took ten years to make the transfer of persons and property to this locality.

MARENGO.

Marengo, the county seat, and the principal town in Iowa County, is located in the northern part, on the Iowa River, and on the line of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, thirty miles west of Iowa City. The town is built around a public square, three hundred feet on each side, which is enclosed with a good fence, and set with a variety of shade trees, including numerous evergreens. Nearly all the business houses front upon this square, and all the business is done around it, except the lumber, grain, and general commission business, which is transacted at the depot, one-third of a mile directly south of the square.

The Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroads approach, at this point, to within eight miles of each other, which circumstance causes considerable travel between Marengo and Blairstown. The merchandizing done here amounts annually to a large sum. Besides this, the manufacturing business is rapidly increasing in importance and value, and the lumber and grain trade is heavy.

The first settler within the town limits was William Downard, who located here in 1848, and erected the first dwelling house and store room in the place. At that time H. H. Hull was living on a farm about a mile from town, where, in addition to his agricultural duties, he sold goods, and officiated as justice of the peace. Robert McKee was the only other person living in this vicinity, though outside of the corporation. He was the first post master at this office. A few more settlers came in and erected cabins during the year, and in 1849 quite a number arrived, among whom was R. B. Groff, the Free Soil candidate for Secretary of State in 1848, on the ticket headed by W. Penn Clark. In the same year the Methodists formed an organization here, though but three members lived in this immediate neighborhood. The members came from a distance of ten miles around to attend the meetings. During that year, Judge W. H. Wallace arrived and settled on a farm near town. He was the first judge of the county.

The town grew gradually until 1859, when its quietude was disturbed by the whistle of the locomotive which proclaimed the completion of the railroad. Though this remained for some time the terminus of the road, the effect upon the place was inconsiderable, most people arguing that when the railroad should be completed beyond here, leaving this a mere way-station, it would lose life. So Marengo sat drowsily looking on, having experienced very little of the quickening influence of railroad enterprise. But all at once, her citizens discovered that the country around had outstripped the town, and required more business enterprise, more capital, and, in fact, a larger town to supply its wants. This discovery infused new life into the place; the population rapidly increased; and business enterprises were projected on a large scale. To meet the wants of the new residents, fifty dwellings were erected in 1865, and one hundred in 1866. The population having increased in those two years one hundred per cent. This renewal of life after the cars had passed by, and all the excitement incident to the advent of a railroad had been forgotten, affords the very best of evidence that the town possesses excellent business advantages.

It is now a live town, enjoying a prosperous business. It is well laid out, its streets and sidewalks are in good repair, and it is the only town in Iowa except Davenport and Des Moines that boasts of water works. These were constructed last year, and enough pipe laid to supply the business portion of the town, with hydrants every three hundred feet.

Marengo was incorporated in 1859, and the election of the officers took place November 12th of that year. They were E. E. Hendershott, Mayor; Robt. McKee, Recorder; H. M. Martin, L. Reno, E. L. Ogle, D. Stanlevant, and J. R. Serrin, Trustees. The officers of 1875 are: T. P. Murphy, Mayor; A. J. Morrison, Recorder; O. Dillin, N. B. Holbrook, W. P. Ketchum, A. B. Eshelman and James S. Shaw, Trustees.

NEWSPAPERS.

In 1856, Clinton Edwards started a neutral paper called the Marengo Visitor, which he conducted till the Fall of 1859, when he died. His widow continued it thereafter for eighteen months. It was purchased by E. J. Teagarden, January 1, 1861, and continued by him under the name of Iowa Valley Review, until September, 1864, when he died, and the paper was conducted by J. R. Serrin, until January 1, 1865, when it passed into the hands of F. A. C. Foreman, and the name was changed to Progressive Republican. In the September following, Mr. Foreman died, and was succeeded by F. M. Connelly & J. C. Remedlet, who were subsequently succeeded by Connelly & Crenshaw. In March, 1867, Mr. Connelly sold to F. E. Sperling, and since that time it has been published by Sperling & Crenshaw. In 1871 it was enlarged from seven to nine columns to the page. It is a large folio sheet, republican in politics, and published Wednesdays.

A democratic paper was first established here in 1860, by Sargent & Van Meter. At the end of the year Van Meter left the firm, and for some time the paper was published by Sargent & Connelly. In 1862 the office was sold and removed to another county. In the Spring of 1864, F. M. Linnehan started the Iowa County Gazette, and continued its publication through the campaign of that year, closing with the election of Mr. Lincoln. The material of the office was purchased in May, 1866, by Connelly & Crenshaw. In the following August, Barnhart Bros., of Muscatine, commenced the publication of the Marengo Citizen.

In September, 1873, the Victor Index was established at Victor, by W. B. Clapp, who died in July, 1874, and was succeeded by his widow, Mrs. H. M. Clapp, who continued its publication until June 24, 1875, when the office was purchased by Ed. E. Merrill, the present editor and publisher. It is published weekly, and advocates the principles of the republican party.

VICTOR.

This is a town of about 500 inhabitants, built up by the railroad, and has grown to be a busy place. It is located on the west side of the county, on the C., R. I. and P. Railroad, and does a heavy shipping business. It enjoys considerable mercantile trade, and maintains good schools and several religious societies. The town is well located for business, and surrounded by a fine farming country.

MILLERSBURG

was laid out by Reuben Miller in 1852-3. It is located in the southwestern part of the county, surrounded by good farming lands and plenty of timber, and has considerable local trade, as it is surrounded by a well settled country.

CHESTER.

This is a fine little town, situated on Old Man's Creek, near the center of the county, and about ten miles S. S. E. from Marengo. It is surrounded by a fine country. The town was laid out by Rev. C. S. Jennis, who named the place Williamsburg, which name it bore until it assumed its present name. The post office is called Stellapolis. Chester at one time aspired to the county seat.

The other towns are Kostza, Genoa Bluffs, North English, Lytle City and Nevada, most of which are pleasant little towns, in fine sections of country, and surrounded by a thrifty farming population.

A. J. MORRISON, Auditor.	CHAS. BAUMER, Treasurer.
A. B. ESHELMAN, Clerk of Courts.	LEMUEL PATTERSON, Recorder.
J. M. GARDNER, Sheriff.	H. A. SHELDON, Superintendent.

ROBERT GRIMES, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

JASPER COUNTY.

Jasper is one of the larger counties, containing an area of 730 square miles, or 460,800 acres; length, thirty miles east and west; breadth, twenty-four miles. It is near the center of the state, lying within twenty miles of the capital, and is crossed by several of the leading railroad thoroughfares. The county is traversed by numerous water courses in a southeasterly direction, affording excellent drainage. South Skunk and its principal tributary, North Skunk, afford good water power. The surface of the county is generally high and rolling. The streams usually have level valleys of considerable extent, but neither swampy nor liable to overflow, because the streams have cut far into the very deep deposit of drift for which this region is noted. The soil is therefore very deep and fertile, and resists admirably the unfavorable extremes of wet weather and dry. All the productions common in this latitude succeed well here, and few, if any, localities in the West are better adapted to diversified farming purposes. Corn and tame grasses flourish, the various small grains produce good crops; apples, grapes, pears, cherries, plums and all the small fruits do well. A failure in crops is rare. According to the census of 1875 there were 278,881 acres of land under cultivation, or nearly three-fifths the area of the county, and there were, in 1874, 4,525,829 bushels of corn, 1,107,170 bushels of wheat, and 532,239 bushels of oats harvested in the county, which will give some idea of its productiveness. There were, by the same census report, 13,618 horses, 1,040 mules, 39,604 head of cattle, 75,513 hogs, and 16,300 sheep in the county; 38,024 bearing fruit trees were reported, and 158,923 rods of hedge—almost 500 miles. The area of native timber land is reported at 29,223 acres. The timber is tolerably well distributed in different portions of the county, chiefly along the streams.

The leading exports are corn, cattle and hogs, which are a source of a large revenue annually, and

COAL.

The area of the productive coal field of Iowa embraces half or more of Jasper County. A peculiar sandstone, which forms a part of the rocks of the coal measures, is found as far eastward as Kellogg and along the banks of Rock Creek, and is extensively used for foundations to buildings, as it is easily dressed and quite durable. A good quality of carboniferous limestone, of the same system, is found in the beds of the streams in different parts of the county, and is considerably used for building purposes. The most easterly deposit of coal in paying quantities is found in Richland Township. The following is a list of the townships in which mines are now worked, and the reported product of each in the year 1874: Palo Alto, 22,280 tons; Fairview, 6,880; Richland, 3,600; Mound Prairie, 372. A glance at the map will show their relative position. A railway is now in operation between Newton and the Palo Alto mines, five and a half miles south. The mines of Jasper County, being those of the lower coal measures, are among the most productive in the state, and a very important element of its wealth and prosperity.

RAILROADS.

There are now 59¼ miles of railway in Jasper County, to wit: Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, 34.13 miles; Des Moines Valley Railroad, 17.4 miles; Central Railway of Iowa, 3.98 miles; Chicago, Newton & Southwestern, 3.75 miles. Ten years ago there was not a foot of railway within its borders. In 1866 work commenced on the Mississippi & Missouri River Road (construction company of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad), west of Grinnell, and the track reached Kellogg Station in September, and in 1867 the cars came rushing into Newton, after fourteen years of waiting.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

By the last report of the Superintendent of Common Schools for Jasper County (1873) there were 173 common schools in the county, of which seven were graded. The compensation of teachers averaged $45.57 per month for males, $29.36 for females, and reaches in the aggregate an average of $40,000 a year. The number of school houses was 164—161 frame and 3 brick—valued at $165,000. In relation to public schools, it will thus be seen, Jasper County is entitled to the front rank, even in a state so noted as Iowa for liberality in fostering and encouraging education.

EARLY HISTORY.

At the time of first settlement the county was full of Indians. Poweshiek, Chief of the Musquakas, had his principal village on Indian Creek, and a smaller village one mile west of the present site of Newton. A part of the county was open for settlement by the whites on the 1st of May, 1843. It was a part of the new purchase made in 1842, and the occupancy of the western part was reserved to the Indians until October 11, 1845, after which they were removed to a reservation in Kansas. The white man could scarcely wait for the departure of the red. Following up the "divide" to the point where Monroe now stands Wm. Highland selected this grove as his future home, in May, 1843, and built a log cabin for himself and family. It is said that the stars and stripes of the steamer Iowa, pushing its way up the Des Moines River with the first detachment of soldiers for the fort of that name, was in view from this spot as Highland halted his wagon. About the same time Adam Toole, John Frost, and John Vance made claims in the vicinity, and the place became known as Toole's Point. These settlers were soon joined by Newton Wright, Washington Fleenor, D. Tice, Joel Worth, and others who located in their vicinity.

The early settlers were partial to the groves of timber scattered over the county, and no wonder; the native forest trees furnished their only means of obtaining shelter, fuel and fencing materials. They little dreamed that the discovery of coal and the advent of railroads would soon be the means of converting the broad prairie acres, that to them seemed a useless waste, into the best farms in the world. These groves are, many of them, known by the names of the first settlers. In 1845 settlements were begun on Clear Creek, by Mr. Kuhl; at Hiver's Grove, by Josh Bennett; at Adamson's Grove, by James Pearson, John Franklin and Moses Lacy; at Vowell's Grove, by Thos. J. Adamson; and on the site of Newton, by Ballinger Adelovte and Wm. Springer; at Hammer's Grove, by Seth Hammer, the Hinshaws and others. In 1846 at Wild Cat Grove, by Jesse Rickman and David Edmundson; near the site of Vandalia, by John Q. Deakin; at Slaughter's Grove, by Joseph Slaughter; on the North Skunk, a little below Kellogg, by Martin and John Adkins and Job M. Peck; and at Adamson's Grove by Evan Adamson. In the latter year Anderson Vowell purchased Thos. J. Adamson's claim at Vowell's Grove. John R. Sparks, Jonathan Swann and Mathew T. Mathews became residents of the county in 1845; Manly Gifford, John M. Kinsman and Tandy Mansfield either that or the following year. Sparks located first at Newton, but removed to Lynn Grove or Lynnville, in 1847, where he built a large mill.

ORGANIZATION.

The territory of Jasper was originally attached to Mahaska County. On the 11th of March, 1845, the Mahaska Board of Commissioners made it a township by the name of Washington, and designated Adam Toole's house as the place of holding elections. A county organization was perfected in April, 1846, under an enabling act of the territorial legislature, by the election of county officers and the location of the seat of justice. The officers elected were John R. Sparks, Manly Gifford and Joab Bennett, Commissioners; John H. Franklin, Clerk; J. W. Swann, Treasurer; David Edmundson, Sheriff; Seth Hammer, Recorder; and Washington Fleenor, Probate Judge. Thos. Henderson and Richard Fisher, of Wapello County, were the commissioners who, by appointment of the Legislature, located the county seat, and they selected the N.W. 34, 80, 19 as the location. This quarter section was then Government land. It was forthwith secured in behalf of the county by the County Commissioners, and platted July 6, 1846, by the name of Newton City. It is said that the county was named Jasper, and the seat of justice Newton, in honor of those two gallant sergeants under General Marion.

COURT HOUSE.

A rude and decidedly primitive structure, of a style of architecture which has not yet received an appropriate name among the distinguished orders, constructed of hickory poles, and provided with a chimney of mud and sticks, by Aydelotte and Springer, during March, 1846, in Adam's Grove, was the historic edifice first used as a county building, and in it the first court was held by Judge Joseph Williams, of Muscatine. Afterwards a small frame building was erected for this purpose on the northwest corner of the public square in Newton, and was used also for a while for a school house and a place of public worship. The present court house, standing in the center of the public square, in the heart of the town, surrounded by tall forest trees, was completed in 1858 at a cost of about $27,000. It is fifty feet wide by sixty-two feet long, with portico projecting from each front twelve feet, supported by massive columns. It is a handsome Ionic structure, surmounted by a central dome, substantially built, consisting of a basement story of seven feet in the clear, and two principal stories for offices and court room, 14 and 19 feet high respectively. The basement walls are sandstone, the upper walls brick, faced with limestone.

COUNTY OFFICERS FOR 1875.

G. R. LEDYARD, Auditor.	E. H. BARTOW, Treasurer.
W. W. MCCLLEY, Clerk.	W. B. HOUGH, Recorder.
J. R. ZOLLINGER, Sheriff.	C. D. HIRSLEY, Superintendent.

W. G. ROMANS, JOHN BURTON, and JESSE SLAVENS.

The county was originally organized into three civil townships in 1846, Elk Creek, Fairview and Lynnville. There are now nineteen.

INCIDENTS.

The first post office in the county was at Jesse Rickman's house, on the Iowa City and Fort Des Moines route; it was established in 1846. The first school was taught in the Elk Creek Settlement, by William E. Smith, in 1848. The first preaching was by Reverend Mr. Hitchcock, a Congregational minister of Eddyville, in 1846. The first wedding was that of Corporal Hill, United States Army, and a daughter of Adam Toole, in 1845. The first death was that of Mary, daughter of Joseph Slaughter, in July, 1846. The first physician in the county was Doctor Spring, who came in 1847. The first attorney was Johnson Edgar, 1849. The first store of which we have any record was opened by Daniel Hiskey, at Toole's Point, in 1851.

In the Spring of 1847 a report that the Indians were gathering hostile forces caused great excitement in the county, and many of the settlers fled for a time. A fort was built in the Clear Creek Settlement. The expected invasion did not occur, however, and in a short time quiet was restored.

The Legislature of 1850 appointed a Commission from the Society of Friends to select a site for a new state capital. They selected a tract of land four miles northwest of Toole's Point—now Monroe—but whether or not their good intentions were appropriated as paving stones for a certain historic locality, they certainly never resulted in drawing the state capital to Jasper County.

The increase of population in Jasper County has been considerably more steady and rapid than the average of Iowa counties. When organized, in 1846, it numbered scarcely 200; in 1850, 1,280; in 1860, 9,882; in 1870, 22,594, and in 1875, 24,128. Of the number last given, only 1,620 are foreign born, scarcely 7 per cent; 9,760, a little more than 40 per cent, were born in Iowa. From a population of about 10,000 at the beginning of the war, the county sent 1,500 men to the Union army.

MANUFACTURES.

An extensive foundry and machine shop, at Newton, is the only establishment of the kind in the county. There are five good brick yards, three at Newton, one at Monroe, and one in Palo Alto Township. There are seven flour mills run by water power at Kellogg and Lynnville, and in Clear Creek, Malaka and Sherman Townships. Monroe and Prairie City have steam flour mills, so also has Poweshiek Township, and Newton has three, one of which cost $31,000 in construction. The total value of manufactures in the county for the year 1875 is estimated at $507,000.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

The Jasper County Agricultural Society was organized, in 1855, at Newton. Reverend Thomas P. Newell was its first President, A. Carrier now holds that office. Its present Secretary, A. Fallor, has been such from the beginning, twenty years. Its first fair was held on Judge Edmundson's premises in October, 1855, and a fair has been held annually ever since. In 1860 the society purchased ten acres of land in a good locality, a half mile southwest of the business portion of Newton, at a cost of $250, for fair ground. An adjoining tract of ten acres was purchased in 1870 at a cost of $1,000. These grounds have been well fenced, and furnished with a hall, stalls, sheds, wells, a good half mile track, etc., at a cost of about $2,000. The exhibitions have been very successful, and the society is in a prosperous condition.

Besides this there is another prosperous society which has fair grounds at Prairie City.

GRANGES.

No. 1 of Iowa Granges was organized at Newton, May 24, 1868, by the name of Newton Grange, with A. Fallor, Master; S. H. Wright, Overseer, and Charles Fish, Secretary. It is still in good condition, numbering thirty-three members. The county had at one time as many as forty-three working Granges, which have an active and efficient county organization. They maintain an agricultural implement and grocery store on the co-operative plan, and have a well organized fire insurance company in prosperous and successful operation.

NEWTON.

Newton is an important town of 2,350 inhabitants, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, thirty-five miles from Des Moines, in the midst of a rich agricultural region, and convenient to productive coal mines. It occupies a handsome site upon high, gently undulating ground, and the inhabitants have done their utmost to improve the natural beauty of the location by profusely ornamenting their spacious grounds and broad, handsome streets with shade trees and shrubbery. Surrounding the public square, with the court house in the center, are large and substantial business blocks, many of them three stories, built principally of brick, with stone facings. Well graded streets lead in every direction to elegant residences and comfortable homes in the midst of rural beauty. The effect is in pleasing contrast with that of too many bleak and barren Western towns. It is a town of flourishing schools and churches, and there is not a single saloon for the sale of wine, beer, or other liquors within its limits. Building and other improvements are going on rapidly. Its trade is extensive and its business firms are proportionally strong and employ large capital. It contains at the present time four grain elevators, four lumber yards, two large agricultural implement establishments, two flouring mills, and four carriage and wagon factories. Mercantile trade is represented by six general stores, five dry goods, nine grocery, three clothing, three drug, three boot and shoe, three hardware, and three millinery houses, two book stores, one national and two private banks, besides many establishments and shops of less importance. There are four hotels. The professions are represented by nine law firms and four physicians. Among the fine residences which adorn the town may be mentioned those of S. G. Smith, John Myer, D. L. Clark, A. P. Hanson and Thomas Arthur. These were erected at a cost ranging from $5,000 to $12,000 each.

INCORPORATION.

Newtown was incorporated in 1857. The first council consisted of Hugh Newell, Mayor; S. H. Galusha, Recorder; Elzy Hiatt, C. Seymour, T. H. Miller, Thomas Allum, D. L. Clark, Trustees. D. D. Piper is Mayor at the present time; John C. Wilson, Recorder; George T. Anderson, D. L. Stover, James Herrou, C. Howard and R. A. Rhoads, Trustees.

SCHOOLS.

The town was organized as an Independent District in 1867. S. N. Lindley, Esq., President; Jesse Rickman, Secretary. At the present time A. P. Hanson is President, and W. G. Work, Secretary. The magnificent building used for public school purposes, standing two or three blocks north of the public square, is the pride of the town. It was erected in the year 1871, in the most approved modern style of architecture, and substantially finished in every particular. The walls are of Milwaukee brick, resting upon excellent foundations of limestone. The interior contains eleven apartments for school rooms, an office for the superintendent, besides which there are four good rooms in the basement. The school rooms are seated almost entirely with single desks and heated by means of four large brick furnaces in the basement. The entire cost of the building, furniture and heating apparatus was $39,864.60. The schools are organized in three principal departments, primary, grammar and high school, employing a superintendent and eleven teachers, at a total salary of $5,500 per annum. Besides the common school branches the course of instruction includes algebra, geometry, plane trigonometry, physical geography, general history, American literature, rhetoric, moral philosophy, Latin to Virgil, botany, natural philosophy, astronomy, chemistry and geology. William Hoy is superintendent. The number of pupils enrolled at the last term (Summer of 1875) was 616.

CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

There are twelve religious societies organized in Newton, to wit: Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, O. S., Baptist, Universalist, Evangelical, Lutheran, Christian, Catholic, German Methodist, German Lutheran and Mormon. With the exception of the German Lutheran and Mormon societies, all have good houses of worship, some of them fine edifices.

Of secret societies, the Masons, Odd Fellows and Good Templars maintain organizations. The Masonic fraternity have a Blue Lodge Chapter and Commandery, and own a hall worth $2,000. They are building a new and more commodious hall at a cost of about $4,000, and intend to apply the proceeds of the sale of their old hall to furnish the new one.

MONROE.

Monroe is a thriving, wide-awake young city in the south part of the county, situated on high ground, about midway between the Des Moines and Skunk Rivers, and upon the line of the Keokuk and Des Moines Railroad, being the most important station between Des Moines and Pella. The country surrounding it is one of the richest tracts in the state—the celebrated prairie divide between the two rivers just named—and of course is well settled. Monroe therefore enjoys an extensive mercantile trade and shipping business, and is steadily rising in importance. It is the second town in the county in population and commercial importance.

Monroe was platted October 25, 1856, by David Hiskey, but the area of the town plat has since been considerably extended by additions, and now covers about eight hundred acres. It was incorporated as a city of the second class in 1867. The first council was elected in December, 1868, and consisted of W. L. Le Fever, Mayor; M. K. Campbell, Recorder; L. M. Shaw, Seth Dixon, J. H. Bennington, John Morrison and A. S. Elwood, Trustees. The present council consists of L. M. Shaw, Mayor; John A. Ehrhardt, Recorder; Daniel Hiskey, M. L. Card, A. J. Mitchell, Sailuda, and Robert Stewett, Trustees.

The public schools of Monroe are furnished with a commodious edifice, and are well classified and graded, employing a principal and three assistant teachers at good salaries. Latin and other studies, besides the common school branches, are taught.

The present business of the town comprises three grain elevators and two warehouses, three dry goods stores, five grocery stores, three hardware stores, three clothing stores, and the usual complement of shops, hotels, a bank, three establishments for the sale of agricultural implements, one lumber yard, one first-class insurance agency. The professions are represented by seven lawyers and seven physicians. Nor is the town behind in organizations designed to secure its social, moral and religious welfare.

PRAIRIE CITY.

This is a flourishing town on the Keokuk and Des Moines Railroad, eight or nine miles above Monroe. What has been said about the surroundings of the latter will apply equally to Prairie City. It was platted June 7, 1856, by the name of Elliott, by James Elliott, Esq., but was subsequently incorporated by the name it now bears. This was in 1868, and in October of that year were elected as first town council: Sidney Williams, Mayor; C. Head, Recorder; J. W. Hammond, C. Dustin, E. Adkins, A. H. Kirtland, and A. B. Duncan, Trustees. The present town council consists of: Carey Smith, Mayor; J. F. Williams, Recorder; H. C. DeWolf, George Brockhagen, R. McKnight, E. C. Warner, and S. F. Miller, Trustees.

The independent district of Prairie City erected, in 1868, a school house which does honor to the town, at a cost of $7,000. The schools are graded in four departments, with a teacher each, and a principal, who has general supervision. The citizens believe in liberal education, and several branches have been added to the course of study in addition to those usually required in common schools.

The Methodist, Congregational, Christian, Catholic, and United Brethren church denominations have active organizations here. The three former have good church buildings. Other church edifices are in contemplation.

The business of the town comprises five general stores, one dry goods, four groceries, one clothing, two hardware, and three drug stores, three hotels, four grain dealers, two agricultural implement stores, and various other branches of trade, shops, etc. The professions are represented by five lawyers and a like number of physicians.

KELLOGG.

This town, formerly known as Jasper City, is a station on the C. R. I. and P. R. R., about midway between Newton and Grinnell. It is pleasantly situated on the gentle slope rising from the left bank of the North Fork of Skunk River, platted by Enos Blair and A. W. Adair, in September, 1865. It has a large shipping business and a fair retail mercantile trade, and an extensive pump factory. A good graded school, several churches, Masonic and Odd Fellows societies, are among its institutions. It was incorporated in 1874, by the election of a town council, of which J. H. F. Balderson was (and is) Mayor.

COLFAX.—This is the name of a prosperous little town, the next station on the C. R. I. and P. Railroad west of Newton. It is a shipping point of considerable importance, and has a fair amount of mercantile trade.

LYNNVILLE.—Is situated in the southeast part of the county, and is one of its oldest towns. It has a good milling business and a reasonable mercantile trade, and maintains a good graded school.

The other villages and post offices are as follows: Amboy, Baxter, Clyde, Galesburgh, Greencastle, Horn and Vandalia.

NEWSPAPERS.

Jasper County maintains eight newspapers, of which four are at Newton, two at Prairie City, one at Monroe, and one at Kellogg. The Newton Free Press is the oldest newspaper in the county. It was established in 1859 by the Campbell Brothers. W. S. Benham is the present editor and proprietor. It is a large six-column quarto sheet, Republican in politics, published every Wednesday at $1.50 a year. It has a power press and a valuable job office. The Jasper County Head-Light is a large nine-column folio, published by Frank T. Campbell & T. M. Rodgers. It was established May 22, 1874, and is printed on the type and material of the former Jasper County Republican, of which Mr. Rodgers was one of the proprietors. It is Republican in politics, has a good job office and an extensive circulation. The Jasper County Independent was established as the Democratic Sentinel by Henry A. Hanson, in 1868. It was bought by C. A. Clark, the present editor and proprietor, in 1872, and by him named the Liberal, and afterward the name above given. It is a wide-awake, eight-column-to-the-page folio sheet, published weekly. Besides the above-named there is another paper at Newton published in the German language. The Kellogg Reporter is a spicy little paper, independent in politics, published weekly by N. C. McBeth, by whom it was founded July 21, 1872.

WINNEBAGO COUNTY.

Winnebago County is the middle one of the northern tier of counties in the state. It contains a superficial area of about 400 square miles, equal to 256,000 acres. The largest and most important stream of water flowing through the county is Lime Creek, a tributary of Shellrock River. It is from sixty to one hundred feet in width, of good depth, and affords good water power for mills. There are several small but very pretty lakes. Two of these, located near together, are called Twin Lakes. Rice Lake embraces an area of about one square mile. The water in these little lakes is always clear and pure. Good well water is obtained by digging from ten to twenty-five feet, and springs are found along all the streams.

The greater portion of the county is undulating or rolling prairie. The southeast part is somewhat broken, but is well timbered. The west half is rolling prairie, with very little timber, but excellent soil. The soil is a dark loam, with some sand, rendering it very productive. The county contains considerable timber land, mostly in the eastern half, bordering on Lime Creek. Near the center of the county there is a fine body of timber called "Coon Grove," a considerable proportion of which is black walnut.

No stone quarries have been opened, the stone used for foundations being the boulders found on the prairies, along the streams and about the borders of the lakes. Among them are found limestones which are used in the manufacture of quicklime. Good material for brick is obtained in sufficient abundance. The county contains at least two thousand acres of good peat land, some of the beds being at least six feet in depth. These beds of peat are mostly situated in the parts of the county least favored with timber. The dry rolling prairie usually comes up to the very borders of the peat marshes, so that they are in no way prejudicial to the health of the region where they are situated.

HISTORICAL.

The earliest white settler of Winnebago County was George W. Thomas, who located on the north side of Rice Lake, in 1855. John Maben with his family moved into the county September 27, 1855, taking a claim on the east side of Lime Creek, near where Forest City is now located. J. Gilchrist, J. C. Bonar and P. Tennis came the same season. Thomas Bearas took a claim near that of Mr. Maben the same Fall, but did not remain a permanent settler. John T. McMillan came also and took a claim, but soon returned to Mason City. During the Summer of 1856, the following with their families also settled, in the southeast part of the county: Robert Clark, John S. Blowers, A. T. Cole, Henry Allen, James L. Hitt, Robert Stephens, Ira Plummer and Daniel Martin. Cole, Clark and Blowers still reside in the county. In the Fall of 1856, a settlement was commenced in the northern part of the county, by Samuel Tennis, Archibald Murray and William Gilbert. Somewhat later came Charles D. Smith, William Porter, John and Lewis S. Anderson. In 1857, the nucleus was formed of the large settlement of Norwegians now in the county by the following persons with their families: Oliver Peterson, Colburn Larson, John Johnson, H. J. Knudson, John Iverson, Christian Anderson, Louis Nelson, and perhaps two or three other families. This Norwegian settlement received no further accessions until 1865, after which it increased very rapidly. A settlement at "Coon Grove" was commenced in 1867, by John Millington. Previous to this time, the settlements were confined to the vicinity of the groves along Lime Creek. They now extend to nearly all parts of the county.

GAME.

The heavy groves bordering Lime Creek at the time of the early settlement of the county were prolific in game of different kinds, and many a fine deer from time to time replenished the larder of the pioneer. One evening in January, 1856, Thomas Bearas, was returning home after an unsuccessful chase after a fat buck, when within a mile of his cabin, and not exceeding a mile and a half from the place where Forest City is now located, his attention was attracted by a rustling of the dry leaves and bushes near him. He raised his gun in readiness for a shot, when an enormous black bear presented himself in full view. In the excitement of the moment he fired wide of the mark, while bruin made a charge upon him. Dropping his gun, Mr. Bearas seized his knife and prepared for the contest. The fierce animal sprang at him with open jaws, crushing him to the earth and rolling completely over him. As the hunter fell, he plunged the knife to the hilt into the body of the bear. This only enraged the animal more, and the contest continued, until at last the knife did its fatal work, and the bear rolled over dead, after twenty-four wounds had been inflicted. Mr. Bearas was fearfully lacerated and fainted from exhaustion, but in a short time recovered sufficient strength to crawl to the edge of the timber, where he was found by one of his neighbors and taken home. In due time he recovered from his wounds.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized in the Fall of 1857, the following being the first county officers elected: Robert Clark, County Judge; C. H. Day, Treasurer and Recorder; B. F. Denslow, Clerk of the District Court; John S. Blowers, Sheriff; and C. W. Scott, Superintendent of Schools and Surveyor. The county seat was located in October, 1858, by the following Commissioners appointed by the Legislature: T. E. Brown, of Polk County; Dr. William Church, of Webster County; and Dr. William Farmer, of Boone County. The commissioners, after making examination of the different localities proposed, finally made selection of the east half of the northeast quarter of section 35, township 98, range 24, where in the Fall of 1857, Robert Clark had laid out the town of Forest City.

The first newspaper in the county was the Winnebago Press, the initial number of which appeared June 14, 1867, at Forest City, with J. W. Kelly as editor and proprietor. In September of the same year, he sold out to Arthur Linn and J. C. Harwood, since which time it has passed through various changes of ownership. The press on which this paper was first printed, has an eventful history. It was first used at Belmont, Wisconsin, when Iowa was known as the Territory of Wisconsin, and afterwards at Burlington, and was used for printing the second paper within the limits of Iowa, in the Spring of 1837. Afterwards this venerable "Foster Patent" started on a tour of service through the eastern and northern portions of the state, and we hear of it at Osage, at Mason City, and at Ellington, Hancock County, before it reached Forest City.

FOREST CITY.

This is the county seat of Winnebago County, and is located on the west bank of Lime Creek, a half mile from the southern boundary of the county. It is on high and rolling ground, mostly prairie, but protected on the east and northeast by extensive groves of timber. Towards the west and south the broad prairie stretches its undulating surface as far as the eye can reach.

The town was laid out by Judge Robert Clark in the Fall of 1856. Mr. Clark erected a saw mill, the first in the county, in the Fall of 1856, and about the same time opened the first store in the county. A post office was established here in 1857, with Mr. Clark as post master. In 1861 the original court house building was erected, which was subsequently improved. In the Summer of 1873 the graded school building (three stories high) was erected. It is a good substantial structure, and is ornamental as well as indicative of the intellectual taste of the citizens. The Norwegian Methodist Church, built about the same time, is a neat and substantial edifice. Forest City has now some good business houses, and a fair local trade.

The Winnebago Press was first established by Will Kelly, June 14, 1867. It is now under the editorial management of Colonel A. H. Chase, and is issued weekly, being now called The Winnebago Summit.

Forest City has a prosperous lodge of Masons.

LAKE MILLS.—This place is located about fifteen miles northeast of Forest City near the north end of Rice Lake. It is situated in a grove of timber, and surrounded by a region well adapted to farming and stock raising. The village was laid out in the Fall of 1869, by Charles D. Smith. A post office was established here in the Spring of 1867, with S. D. Wadsworth as post master. The same year S. D. Wadsworth and C. D. Smith erected a steam grist mill, and connected with it a saw mill and wool carding machine. On the 31st of August, 1871, the buildings were burned, the loss being estimated at $15,000. A new and larger steam grist mill was soon erected. A store was opened by Mr. Wadsworth in the Fall of 1867. A fine two-story school house was burned, but the people of the village had the energy to recover from their misfortunes. Lake Mills has several stores and a weekly newspaper, the Independent Herald, ably conducted by M. Halvorsen, at this time the youngest journalist in Iowa.

BENSON GROVE.—This village is located in township 99, range 24. It is on the east side of Lime Creek, about six miles north of Forest City. A body of timber adjoins the town. It was laid out by J. B. Hill in the Summer of 1867, and a post office established the same year, with Mr. Hill as post master.

The line of railroad from Fort Dodge, Iowa, to Wells, Minnesota, was surveyed and partly graded some three years since. When completed it will open up direct communication with the coal-fields of Central Iowa on the south, and the pineries of the north.

The former saw mill of Robert Clark is now being converted into a flouring mill with three run of burrs, which will add materially to the manufacturing interests of the county. The moral and intelligent citizens of this county have made provision for the wants of the present population by the erection of good comfortable school buildings and church edifices. Of these the public school and the Norwegian Methodist Church in Forest City compare favorably with any of the newly settled counties of the state.

HANCOCK COUNTY.

Hancock County is in the second tier from the northern line of the state, and about midway between the east and west boundaries. It contains 576 square miles, equal to 368,640 acres.

It is watered by many small streams, the largest being Lime Creek, which crosses the northeast corner. Several tributaries of the Iowa River rise in the county. There are also several small lakes—the largest being Eagle Lake, near the center of the county. These lakes abound in fish of several kinds.

The surface of the county is generally undulating, and nearly all adapted to cultivation, though a small portion is somewhat broken. An eminence in the northeast corner, partly in Winnebago County, called "Pilot Mound," is the highest point of land in this part of the state. From the summit of this elevation the eye may take in the greater portion of the four Counties of Hancock, Winnebago, Worth, and Cerro Gordo, with their prairies, groves, lakes, streams, farms, and villages.

The northeast part of the county has a good supply of timber skirting "Pilot Mound," and the borders of Lime Creek. Some fine groves are also found on the Iowa River, in the southeast part, and on the borders of several of the lakes.

The county also contains about four thousand acres of peat deposits, a fuel resource that may be resorted to if necessary. The deposits are from four to ten feet in depth, and are principally in the central and western portion of the county.

There are no exposures of stratified rocks. The only stone to be obtained are the drift boulders, which are used for foundations of buildings. Good brick are made in various places.

The soil is generally a rich dark loam, adapted to the various cereals, grasses, and root crops. The county is well suited for stock raising and the dairy.

HISTORICAL.

The first white settlement in Hancock County was at Upper Grove, on the Iowa River, by Anson Avery, September 9, 1854. He now resides near where he first located. George Nelson settled in October of the same year. These were the only families who spent the Winter of 1854-'55 in the county. In the Summer of 1855, Orick and Reuben Church, Thomas Magill, Sr., and Malcolm Magill, and Benoni Haskins joined the settlement. Among the early settlers in the vicinity were, William Gilpin and Charles Church, who still reside in the county.

The next settlement was started at Ellington, on Lime Creek, the pioneers were John Maben and Jacob Ward, and the date of their location, September 27, 1855. In December of the same year, Barnard and Andrew Balsinger, and Joseph and Lewis Barth, settled in the same vicinity. Francis and Richard Colburn, J. and H. Rice, O. R. and J. J. Wright, and others came in 1856. The settlements at Upper Grove and Ellington embraced nearly all the inhabitants of the county up to 1865, when a settlement was commenced at Crystal Lake, by Edwin Trumbull and Myron Booth.

The first death which occurred was that of Mrs. Richard Coleman, in May, 1857. The next was that of C. R. Wright, in September, 1859. He was the first county surveyor, and held the office up to the time of his death.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized in 1857-8, the following being the first county officers who were chosen at an election held June 28, 1858, per order of Judge Clark of Winnebago county: M. P. Rosecrans, Judge; George Louppee, Clerk; Reuben Church, Treasurer and Recorder; Benoni Haskins, Sheriff; Charles R. Wright, Surveyor; G. R. Mabin, Superintendent; and James C. Boner, Drainage Commissioner.

COUNTY SEAT.

Before the location of the county seat at Concord the public business was transacted at Ellington, Upper Grove, or wherever the county officials happened to reside. On the 4th of November, 1865, John I. Popejoy and James Goodwin, commissioners appointed for the purpose, made selection of a location for the county seat. They selected the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 31, township 96, range 23. The land was donated to the county by Thomas Seymour, of the state of New York. In May, 1867, the land was surveyed into town lots, and the place named Concord. The next year a good brick court house was erected on the public square set apart for that purpose, at a cost of $10,000.

The first newspaper issued in the county was the Hancock Sentinel, commenced in 1860, by D. E. Coon at Ellington. It was continued by him up to 1868.

CONCORD.—This is the county seat, and is located in the eastern part of the county on the headwaters of Iowa River. It is on a gently rolling prairie, surrounded by a fertile farming and grazing country.

GARNER.—This is the chief railroad town in the county, and is immediately north of Concord. It is a trading and shipping point for a large extent of country, and is fast growing into importance. It was platted July 30, 1870, by John Mabin. It contains several stores and mechanic shops, two hotels, one public school building, and has one weekly paper, the Signal, which was established in April, 1871; it is now under the editorial management of W. C. Hayward. Garner is about one mile north of the county seat, Concord, and is the point where the commercial interests of the county center. It has, with its neighboring town, Concord, an enterprising, intelligent and moral population, leading traits of the citizens generally of Hancock County.

UPPER GROVE.—This is the name of a post office on Iowa River in the southeast part of the county. The village laid out at this point was called Amsterdam. In 1861, a newspaper called the Independent, was published here a few months by Brainard & Noyes.

BRITT.—This is a station and post office in the western part of the county, on the line of the Iowa division of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad.

ELLINGTON.—This is a post office in the Lime Creek Settlement in the northeast part of the county. It is in the midst of a thriving farming community.

CRYSTAL LAKE.—This is a post office in the northwest part of the county. There is now a thriving settlement of farmers here around the borders of the beautiful little lake for which the post office is named.

MARSHALL COUNTY.

This county is situated very near the center of the state, being in the fifth tier from the north and south boundaries, the sixth west from the Mississippi and the seventh east from the Missouri River. In size it is twenty-four miles square, embracing sixteen congressional or land survey townships, equal to 368,640 acres. The forty-second parallel of latitude passes through the middle of the county. Being thus situated, it possesses natural advantages superior to many and surpassed by no county in the fair, populous and rapidly growing Empire State of the West.

STREAMS.

The principal stream is the Iowa River, which enters the county near the center of its northern boundary, and, taking a southeasterly course, passes out near the middle of the east line, leaving about one-quarter of the area of the county on its north and and east, while the remainder lies on its south and west. It is a pure, clear and rapid stream, preserving a good volume of water through the year, and affords many excellent water powers, only part of which have been improved and compelled to labor in the interests of civilization. Its average width in an ordinary stage of water is about forty yards. Its tributaries water nearly every portion of the county, the principal ones being as follows: From the north and east side, Asher Creek, rising at the north line of the county and discharging its waters nearly opposite Marshalltown, is eleven miles in length; Burnett Creek, rising in the northeast township, flowing southward, enters the river a little below Marshalltown; while Rock Creek, supplied by fine springs, runs but a short distance and joins the Iowa some four or five miles east of Marshalltown. The tributaries from the west and south are Honey Creek, which, rising in Hardin County and running southeasterly, is composed of two branches which unite about one mile from its mouth, the main stream being some ten miles in length. Minerva Creek is made up of numerous small branches, some of which rise in Story County, and all afford fine stock water to several townships in the northwest part of the county. The length of this stream, with its principal branch, is twenty miles. The longest creek in the county is the Lime, which rises in the middle of the western line, meanders eastward a distance of twenty-six miles to its conflux with the Iowa, two miles east of Marshalltown. The largest and most important creek is Timber, which is made up of a large number of branches which traverse the whole southern part of the county, and empties into the Iowa some two and a half miles from the eastern boundary, the entire length of the main stream being twenty-three miles. The southwestern portion of the county is well watered by the North Skunk and some of its branches. It will thus be seen that the county is abundantly watered in every part, nature having done her work most admirably. All the streams mentioned, and many more not named, are living, running streams at all seasons, being supplied in a great measure by springs.

TIMBER.

The county contains an aggregate of about 33,000 acres of woodland, the greater portion of which is in heavy bodies along the Iowa River. There are several detached groves, the largest being on Timber Creek, which contains some five thousand acres of the best timber in the county. The leading varieties are the different kinds of oak, black walnut, hickory, butternut, cottonwood, soft and hard maple, locust, sycamore, hackberry, ash and elm. It is said that the natural groves are extending rather than otherwise, while the prairies are rapidly becoming dotted with cultivated groves of cottonwood, silver-leaf maple and other fast-growing varieties.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

Almost the entire length of the county, except immediately along the principal streams, is gently and beautifully undulating, with but few hills, and no rocky glens or deep valleys. Along the streams there are some prairie bottoms, which in places on the Iowa reach nearly two miles in width. These bottoms make excellent meadow lands, and in their native state afford superior early pasture. The greater portion of the surface is, however, the high rolling prairie, which, rising gradually from fifty to a hundred feet above the bed of the streams, stretch away in gentle swells of fine table-lands, intersected occasionally by streams which thread their courses onward through its living verdure to the Iowa River. The soil of the upland prairies is deep and rich, composed of a black, alluvial loam, with a small admixture of sand, is free from gravel or stone, and adapted in every respect to the growth of all cereals, vegetables and grasses common to this latitude. In its natural state it was covered with a fine short grass and an infinite variety of the floral tribe, from the stately rosin weed down to the bright-eyed, lowly violet. No sight is more beautiful than the emerald-clothed prairies of summer, with their garniture of flowers, stretching away mile after mile, undulation after undulation, till the eye wearies and the hazy horizon shuts down the vista.

PRODUCTIONS, FRUIT AND STOCK.

The productions are as various and as valuable as can be raised any where in the same climate, while corn is the decided staple and yields from fifty to eighty bushels to the acre, and that with the indifferent Western cultivation. Wheat is second in importance, while oats, barley, rye, flax and hemp grow luxuriantly and are raised with profit. Tobacco has been grown, and produces well both in quantity and quality, while the culture of broom corn has been a decided success. Melons, squashes, and all kinds of esculent roots and vegetables grow with great luxuriance, and are of excellent quality.

Considerable attention has been paid to fruit culture by the farmers of the county, particularly to the apple, which has usually been attended with success. All that is necessary is to exercise a reasonable care in the selection of the hardier varieties, and to cultivate them with the care their importance demands. Dwarf pears and cherries are raised to some extent, while grapes are raised in abundance, of superior size and flavor. Small fruits of all kinds grow with the natural luxuriance of their native soil, and produce in unexcelled quantities and flavor. Wild fruits were formerly abundant, but have gradually disappeared before the steady march of civilization, which no longer needs them.

In the way of fine live stock, Marshall can make as good a showing as almost any county in the state. Some of the best short horn cattle on the continent were introduced a number of years ago, which greatly improved the grades and have been added to from time to time by new importations, so that poor stock is the exception rather than the rule. In horses there is some good stock of Morgan and Messenger blood, while the recent introduction of the Norman and other heavy draft horses has greatly increased the size as well as the value of this class of stock. Sheep do well, and never deteriorate, while, in common with most other portions of Iowa where corn is the staple, hogs are the most generally raised by the farmers, and are their greatest source of revenue.

COAL AND BUILDING MATERIAL.

More than half the county lies within the coal fields, as shown by geological research. But no extensive mining has yet been done. Mines have been opened in the county adjoining on the south, and doubtless coal can be found in Marshall in sufficient quantities to pay for mining were the effort to be made.

Building stone is abundant and of excellent quality. There are many fine quarries in the eastern part of the county, including the Le Grand marble, properly the Kinderhook beds of limestone, which is highly prized for its beautiful and variegated appearance and for the fine polish of which it is susceptible. In this part of the county is a carboniferous limestone, which is not only excellent for purposes of masonry, but is valued for the fine white article of quicklime that is manufactured from it. Three miles southwest of Marshalltown is an inexhaustible supply of a dark red conglomerate rock, containing a mixture of iron ore. It is easily worked, hardens on exposure to the air, and is valuable for foundations. The finest bricks are made from clay found in various places, and sand is also sufficiently abundant. With her timber clay and sand, this county is not deficient in the building material found in any other county in the state.

CLIMATE AND HEALTH.

No bluer skies or brighter sunshine are known in Italy or any other land on the globe than the summers and autumns of Iowa present, and no where in Iowa are they bluer and brighter than in Marshall County. Iowa is proverbial for health, and with her fine breezes, pure streams, draining a rolling surface, and the absence of all miasmatic influences, it is perhaps not strange that the health of her people is generally good. In point of health, this county, from the best information that can be obtained, is no exception to the general character of the other counties of the state.

MORMONS AND INDIANS.

A body of Mormon Pilgrims in their hegira from Nauvoo, spent the Winter of 1847 in this county, having their encampment in the timber just north of where Marshalltown now stands. Many of them died from starvation and exposure, being so destitute of the means of subsistence that they peeled the bark from the red elm trees for food. In the Spring those who survived folded their tents and journeyed westward to assist in establishing the Earthly Paradise of Latter Day Saints in Utah.

Prior to the settlement of this county by whites it was inhabited by the Sacs and Foxes, now called Musquakas, remnants of the once powerful nations presided over by the warlike Black Hawk. They were generally friendly to the white settlers, but in May, 1850, some trouble occurred with them, which resulted in no little excitement and alarm in the infant settlement. The difficulty, it appears, commenced between Samuel Davison, a son of William Davison, and the Musquakas, growing out of some alleged depredations upon stock belonging to the whites, they having killed some hogs and driven off some cattle belonging to John Campbell, one of the settlers, and made some unpleasant threats. By way of retaliation the whites went to the Indian village on the river, while they were absent on a hunting excursion, and burnt their wigwams, corn and other effects. This deed, perpetrated by a portion of the whites, caused the settlers generally to entertain serious apprehensions that the Indians on their return would wreak their vengeance indiscriminately on the whites. The Chief of the Musquakas was at that time absent at Washington. So great was the apprehension of danger upon the return of the chief that the settlers, after consultation, deemed it prudent to prepare for any emergency that might arise. They sent messengers for arms and ammunition, while the rest set about the erection of a stockade fort. It was built of split timbers, or puncheons, and was called Fort Robinson. It was commenced June 11, and as soon as finished twenty-four families took refuge in it. At this time Major Wood was stationed at Fort Dodge with a force of United States troops. The settlers petitioned him for assistance, but he could spare no troops at the time, leaving to the settlers the alternative of helping themselves or removing from the country.

Before the completion of Fort Robinson, it is stated that a few of the Indians returned from their hunting party and finding their village burned, went to the white settlement to find out if their suspicions were correct as to who committed the act. The whites told them they were building the fort as a protection against the Sioux, of whom the Musquakas were the hereditary enemies. Upon hearing this the latter offered their services to assist in defense of the whites. This offer, so generously made, was declined, as the whites feared treachery. The Indians, however, instructed the whites how to make loop-holes and then went away.

Among those who took refuge in Fort Robinson were the following: W. C. Smith, John Campbell, A. J. Smith, John Braddy, William Ralls, G. S. Ralls, James A. Logan, Thomas Pearson, James Pearson, Blakely Brush, Joseph Cooper, J. M. Ferguson, S. Myers, Carpenter Geer, Thomas Sherman, William Asher, Washington Asher, John Duck, Riley Majors, Samuel Bowman, and two men named Clifton and Crowder. Perhaps these embraced most of the settlers of the county at that time. James A. Logan was selected as captain of the garrison. After occupying the fort about a month a battalion of United States Dragoons relieved them by removing the Indians west of the Missouri River, after which the heroes of Fort Robinson returned to their farms.

FIRST THINGS.

The first permanent white settler in Marshall County was Jos. Davison, who located in what is now Le Grand Township in the east part of the county, in 1847. He was soon followed by his brother, William, who settled in the same vicinity. In 1848 a number of persons erected their pioneer cabins in what is now Timber Creek Township on the south side of the large grove. Among these settlers were Joseph M. Ferguson and Josiah Cooper. During this and the next year, small settlements were made in various parts of the county.

In 1851 Wm. Dishon brought a small stock of goods to Marietta, which had been located that year, and commenced business as the first merchant. He was also the first post master. Mahlon Collins followed soon after with a lot of Yankee notions; and then a merchant by the name of Darlington opened a small store. Doctors Wheelen and Nixon located at Marietta, and were the first physicians in the county.

A county organization was effected in 1849, J. M. Ferguson actiug as Organizing Sheriff; J. Hobbs was the first Probate Judge; Jacob Hauser, first Clerk; Zeno Freeman, first Treasurer; and John Amos, Greenburg Ralls, and William Ballard, first County Commissioners.

In the Fall of 1851, the first District Court was held in the county by Judge William H. McKay. Among the attorneys present were Enoch Eastman, Judge Seevers, of Oskaloosa, and Judge Casady, of Des Moines, all of whom have since ranked high in the profession. This court was held in a little log cabin that stood at the edge of the timber just north of the site of the present city of Marshalltown, and was owned by William Ralls. The grand jury met over the slough from the cabin, and were only in session about five minutes. No bill of indictment was found, and only one case tried, which was a divorce suit, and resulted in making William Davison and his wife twain.

Some amusing anecdotes are related concerning Judge McFarland, who succeeded McKay in 1853, and was said to be a very strange and excentric man and judge. He once had a divorce suit on the docket where both parties were anxious for a separation. The court was opened in due form, the case called, and the first witness being asked what he knew about the parties, said: "Oh! not much; they are always a fuddling around." At this Judge McFarland half aroused himself from a sleepy stupor, and, with emphasis, exclaimed: "Fuddling around, and around! Clerk, I grant a decree for divorce. Call the next case."

In another common court at the same term was a lawyer from Burlington, who was facetiously named by his professional brethren, "Old Timber." This lawyer was submitting a cause to the jury with fine rhetoric and forensic eloquence, when a large mule, thrusting his head through the court house window, brayed loudly. The judge cried out: "Hold on, Old Timber; this honorable court can not entertain both of your opinions on this question at the same time." The effect was such on the jury that "Old Timber" lost his case, to his infinite disgust and chagrin. Another day the judge came in so drunk he could scarcely sit on the bench. The court was called in due form, when his honor, staring vacantly around, exclaimed: "Well, gentlemen, (hic) adjourn this court till to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock," and walked out.

In September, 1855, an attorney in arguing a demurrer, made frequent use of the Latin quotation, "Ad quod dammum," was stopped by the judge who vehemently exclaimed: "I am going to knock your case higher than a liberty pole. Get out of court with your ad God damn 'em, and don't you ever use so much profanity in my presence again." The attorney attempted to sustain his point by a decision of the Supreme Court, when he was summarily stopped by the judge, who said "he did not care a d——n for the Supreme Court," and ordered the Clerk to call the next case.

The county seat was located at Marietta in 1851, by commissioners appointed by the Legislature for that purpose. It was surveyed the same year by Hobbs & Dawson, and receiving numerous accessions from the East was for some time the most important place in the county. Two years had, however, scarcely passed before it was drawn into one of the most fierce and bitter county seat fights that the historian of Iowa has been called upon to relate, which was waged with a determination worthy of a better cause, until December 31, 1859, when, in accordance with a decision of the Supreme Court, the records and county property were removed to Marshalltown, where they have since quietly remained. Arguments more forcible than words were often used, and at one time hundreds of armed men, with an order they had forcibly exacted from the county judge for the removal of the records, went to Marietta with the intention of taking forcible possession of the county property. The Marietta people, not to be outdone, had placed a keg of gunpowder under the safe containing the county records, and would have fired it had not the Marshalltown forces been stopped at the critical moment by an injunction from Judge Thompson, of the District Court, restraining the removal of the records.

RAILROADS.

Few counties in Iowa have superior railroad advantages, situated as it is on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern, which passes from east to west through the middle of the county. It was completed to Marshalltown in 1863, where it crosses the Central Railroad of Iowa, which enters the county near the southeast corner, and running in a northwesterly direction passes out a little west of the middle of the north boundary line.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper that made its appearance in Marshall County was the Iowa Central Journal, established in 1855 at Lafayette—now Albion—by T. J. Wilson, who conducted it about one year when he sold to E. N. Chapin & R. N. Barnhart. Barnhart afterwards became sold proprietor, and removing the office to Marshalltown in 1857, issued the first number of the Marshall County Times. After running it some two years he sold to W. H. Gullup, who conducted it for about one year, when it passed into the hands of E. N. Chapin, who had it about one year when he sold back to W. H. Gallup, who conducted it another year, when J. S. Britton became publisher, and Thomas Clark editor. They changed the name to the Union, and ran it only a short time, when it was merged with the Marshall County Express, and again passed into the control of E. N. Chapin, who changed the name back to Times, and associated George Barnhart with him as publisher. They afterwards sold to H. C. Henderson, and he in 1866 to Charles Aldrich, who very successfully managed it for several years. The present publishers are Chapin & Lower.

The Marshall Republican was established in July, 1871, by Mercer & McCracken, who in the Fall of 1873 sold to T. E. McCracken & Co., the company consisting of M. Waterman. In April, 1874, A. H. Neidig purchased McCracken's interest, and the name of the firm was changed to A. H. Neidig & Co., who are the present editors and publishers. In the Spring of 1875 they commenced the issue of a semi-weekly edition, which they have since continued with good success.

The State Center Enterprise first appeared in October, 1871, with E. A. Lacey as editor and publisher, who conducted it one year, when it passed into the hands of the present editor, J. W. Merrill, who in November, 1874, enlarged it from a six-column folio to a five-column quarto.

MARSHALLTOWN.

This city is situated on a high rolling prairie, on the east side of the Iowa River, and near the center of Marshall County, of which it is the seat of justice. The general appearance of the town is fine, being regularly laid out in handsome, wide, and well-graded streets, and for natural beauty of location, character of improvements, and attractiveness of appearance, it is not surpassed by any other city in Central Iowa.

It was surveyed and laid out in the Summer of 1853 by —— Risdue, of Iowa City, under the direction of Henry Anson and John Childs. It was named after Marshall, Michigan, by Henry Anson, who had some pleasant memories of that place. The terminus "town" was afterwards affixed in order to remedy difficulties which sometimes occurred in securing mail matter, as there was a post office of the same name in Henry County.

The first settlement was made in the Spring of 1851 by Henry Anson, who built a small log cabin, made a claim, and afterward, the same year, entered the land at the land office in Des Moines. There had been, however, previous to this, a squatter who had made a claim and erected a rude cabin near the south side of the town, which claim Anson had purchased, paying for it $50. The land on the north side of what is now Main Street, was first owned by William Ralls, who sold to John Kelley, and he in turn to John Childs, who, as before stated, with H. Anson laid out the original town. It is reported that he arrived here after traveling over a considerable portion of Iowa, and was so pleased with the natural beauty of the spot, that, in a fit of enthusiasm, he caught his hat from his head, and throwing it high in the air, exclaimed: "I've found the prettiest place in Iowa, and here I'll live and lay my bones."

A post office was established in the Fall of 1854, and Wells Rice was the first post master. The first white child born in Marshalltown was Adrian, a son of Henry Anson in 1851; while the first death was a daughter of Silas Shorn, who passed away August 10, 1853. The first wedding was a double one, the happy parties being Miles Rice and Miss Anson, and Horace Anson and Miss E. Smith. They took a short bridal tour in a two-horse open buggy, which was considered very stylish at that time. That same Fall W. Rice started a couple of deer near Lime Creek, which, turning westward, galloped down Main Street, now the busy mart of a city of some six thousand inhabitants. Little more than a score of years have passed, and yet how changed. Where then stood the traditional log cabin, with its puncheon floor and glassless windows, now stands the palatial residence, the home of wealth and refinement; where then roamed with unrestrained liberty those wild animals that habitually shun the habitations of men; where the painted warriors performed the wildly savage and weird war dance, and where the young braves wooed and won the dusky maidens of the forest, now stand in architectural beauty massive stone and brick blocks, crowded with costly merchandise from all parts of the known world.

Marshalltown is settled by a class of liberal spirited, enterprising men, who always "go in to win," never recognizing such a word as fail in their public enterprises or private undertakings. Elegant and commodious school buildings have been erected, while teachers of acknowledged ability and experience render the schools of this city equal to any in the state. The leading religious denominations all have organizations, and many of them large memberships, while a number of handsome church edifices adorn and beautify the city. They have just secured the location of the machine shops of the Central Railroad of Iowa, for which the city gave $75,000 in bonds. There are a number of expensive buildings among which may be mentioned the Boardman House, which cost $80,000, and is one of the finest hotels in the state, the post office block, and many others.

A severe fire occurred May 4, 1872, which burned over about fifteen acres, consuming five elevators, three lumber yards, two hotels, and a large number of stores and dwellings, causing a total loss of nearly $200,000. Most of the buildings have been re-built, so that the city is really handsomer now than before the fire. Situated near the center of the state, surrounded by an agricultural region unsurpassed in the West, having good railroad communication, and possessing a class of business men who have no superiors, the future of Marshalltown, as one of the principal cities of Iowa, is assured certainty.

STATE CENTER.—This is a thriving town and good shipping point on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, in the western part of the county.

The other villages and post offices are: Albion, Bangor, Bivins' Grove, Edenville, Gilman, Green Mountain, Illinois Grove, Lamoille, Laurel, Le Grand, Liscomb, Marietta, Minerva, Quarry, Stanford, Timber Creek, and Vienna.

CEDAR COUNTY.

This is one of the eastern counties of the state—Clinton and Scott, which bound it on the east, being counties which lie on the Mississippi River. It is twenty-four miles square, being divided into sixteen congressional or land survey townships, and containing an area of 368,640 acres.

SURFACE AND SOIL.

The general surface of the county is a high undulatory or rolling prairie, which, though not sufficiently broken—except in a few places along the bluffs of the Cedar and to the east—to interfere with agricultural purposes, is hilly and uneven enough to break the tedious monotony of view often found in prairie counties, and to preclude the necessity of making use of artificial means of drainage. Comparatively small tracts are too level, and probably still less too precipitous for pleasant and easy cultivation. The soil like that of most counties lying in the justly noted valley of the Cedar, is excellent and well adapted to easy and profitable cultivation, rendering it one of the best counties in the state for agricultural purposes. It presents considerable variety, that in the bottoms, which is composed of a rich dark sandy loam of great depth and fertility, being the best. The upland prairies, which comprise much the larger portion of the area of the county, have much the same soil, though it contains less sand and is not generally quite so deep, is the next, while a few broken oak openings and sandy knolls comprise the poorest class. The subsoil is generally clay, with no hard pan, so that it is equally excellent to withstand the extremes of wet and dry seasons, uniformly remunerating the cares and toils of the careful husbandman with a bountiful crop. All the cereals, fruits, grasses, and vegetables common to this part of the temperate zone are produced in great abundance and of excellent quality; while many others, such as grapes, sorghum, tobacco, sweet potatoes, melons, etc., etc., are grown as easily as almost any other corresponding latitude. As a stock breeding and grazing county it has natural advantages of soil, water and climate unsurpassed by few portions of the state, and the farmers have quite generally turned their attention to securing improved breeds of stock, and putting in practice the advanced theories of progressive farming.

STREAMS, TIMBER, ETC.

The county is well watered by the beautiful Cedar, which, next to the Des Moines, is the largest and most important river passing through the state. It enters a little north of the middle of the western boundary, runs diagonally across the southwestern portion of the county, and passes out near the center of the southern boundary line. It is increased by Rock and Sugar Creeks and a number of smaller streams which enter from the east, while several spring branches and runs joint it from the west. The Wapsipinicon River passes for a few miles through the northeastern township, and receives several tributaries, which water and drain that portion of the county. There is a fine water power at Cedar Bluffs which has never been improved, but is estimated by competent engineers to be unexcelled in the state, and if properly utilized by a substantial dam and modern wheels, to be capable of operating one hundred and sixty runs of mill stones, or their equivalent in other machinery. As the value of water power and home manufacturing establishments in the West is becoming better understood than formerly, it is not improbable that this truly valuable power with which nature has so richly endowed this county will remain many years longer unimproved.

Though this is essentially a prairie county, and in many parts has but a limited supply of native timber, yet along the Cedar and its tributaries, and in the northeast near the Wapsipinicon some very excellent groves are found which consist of various varieties, although the oak family are predominant. Along the streams there is an inexhaustible supply of stone suitable for ordinary building purposes, and from which good quality of quick-lime is manufactured. There are some quarries in the neighborhood of Cedar Bluffs, from which a fine texture of light colored magnesian limestone have been taken, which will eventually be of value when the completion of the Chicago Omaha and St. Joseph, or some other projected railroad, furnishes facilities for transporting it to market. A good quality of clay, suitable for the manufacture of brick, is found in abundance, while there is an inexhaustible supply of sand easily accessible from different parts of the county.

The pellucid character of the waters, the freedom from local causes of disease, the purity of the atmosphere, the general evenness of temperature, combined, have long made this part of Iowa justly noted for health and longevity. Agues and fevers are almost unknown, epidemics are rare, and malignant diseases uncommon. The statistics of the United States census have placed this county in the foremost rank in point of salubrity in a state that stands second in the Union.

RAILROADS.

The means of public transportation are the Chicago and Northwestern, which passes east and west through the northern tier of townships, and from which a branch runs to Tipton, the county seat, leaving the main line at Beanwood. The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific strikes this county at Durant in the southeast, and at Downey in the southwest, thus giving it the advantage of an east and west connection by two of the great trunk lines which, passing through the heart of the state from east to west, connect the undeveloped resources of the West with the civilization of the East. The Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota, the best north and south line in the state, passes through Springdale and a portion of Gower Townships, affording an easy outlet to the pine forests of Minnesota, and the grain markets of St. Louis and the Lower Mississippi, while the Davenport and St. Paul passes through the northeast corner township. A line has been projected passing through Tipton and east and west through the county which will probably be built as soon as the present unfavorable policy of the state towards new railroads is changed, or the steady growth and progress of the county demand it.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND SCHOOLS.

The principal public building is the court house, which is a substantial two story brick structure, centrally located in a handsomely shaded park in the very heart of the enterprising Town of Tipton. It was erected in 1860, at a cost of $45,000, and was at that time considered one of the best in the state.

The public schools of the county are in a healthy condition, gradually approaching that higher standard of excellence which is being sought by the more intelligent and efficient teachers in the state. Institutes are frequently held, which have been well attended and have been productive of much good in harmonizing the system of instruction, and in generally elevating the standard sought to be attained by the county teachers. While the school buildings in the rural districts are not costly edifices, they are generally neat and substantial, and the grounds are frequently handsomely adorned with shade and ornamental trees.

EARLY HISTORY.

In ascertaining facts and data in regard to the early settlement of Cedar County, the historian experienced the same difficulty met with in many other places, where so thirty or forty years have elapsed since the Indian was driven westward by the onward march of civilization. It is impossible to learn with certainty at this time whether Andrew Crawford or Robert G. Roberts, first entered Cedar County as a permanent settler, as they both arrived during the month of June, 1836, yet it is generally conceded that the latter gentleman was the first to make a claim, and erect improvements which he did immediately after his arrival. Others came in later during the same Summer, and pitched their tents in the luxuriant prairie grass, which had never before felt the tread of white men, among which were Walter Freaman, Hector Sterrett, Henry Hardman, W. A. Rigby, Martin Baker, Stephen Toney, George McCoy, William Green, John Jones, Solomon Knott, J. M. Oakes, William Baker, and William Posten and brother. Five of these are still living and residents of the county, viz.: W. A. Rigby, Henry Hardman, Robert G. Roberts, H. Sterrett, and William Baker. The first white child born in the county was a daughter of Hector Sterrett, in the Winter of 1836-7, while the first marriage was W. A. Rigby and Miss Lydia, daughter of William Baker, the ceremony being celebrated May 19, 1837. This venerable couple are still living and reside at Stanwood.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

The county was organized in the Spring of 1838, in accordance with an act of the Territorial Council, approved December 31, 1837. The first election was held on the first day of March, 1838, at which time the following county officers were elected: Geo.

oy, Sheriff; J. W. Tollman, Assessor; William K. Whittlesey, Clerk of the District t and Recorder. Robert G. Roberts was the first representative to the Legislature, ted from the county. The first district court was held at Rochester, on the 26th of May, 1868, by Honorable David Irwin, one of the judges of the Territory of onsin, and the clerk not being present, Robert G. Roberts was appointed by the rt to that position. The first probate court was held in 1839, by Judge J. W. Toll-, who was succeeded in 1840 by S. A. Bissell. By special act of the Territorial ncil, approved December 31, 1839, Henry W. Higgins, of Scott County, J. J. Mc-aid, of Jackson, and John Eagan of Johnson, were appointed commissioners to ge the county seat. They met in the following March, and after due deliberation ted it in the geographical center of the county, where a town was immediately laid which they named Tipton, in honor of General Tipton, of Indiana, a relative of one e commissioners.

Some singular specimens of illiterate preachers have from time to time appeared in n County, who would somewhat shock the Orthodox churches of the present day by e crude and often absurd views, and yet would prove quite amusing if their dis-ses could be reproduced in their original and peculiar phraseology. One of these wn as Brother Hinckle, strongly suspected of being a renegade Mormon, succeeded ganizing a church in the south part of the county, to which he gave the extraor-ry appellation of "The Bride of the Lamb's Wife," and in securing a few converts, ng whom was a well known resident of the county named Harvey Hatton, who was rally considered an idle, whisky-drinking, Ishmaelitish personage, abounding in cunning. As his character for honesty and sobriety stood low in the community, sudden conversion could hardly be accounted for, unless he had determined that religion would assist him before the grand jury, as he was bound over to court for ding and violently beating an officer who was attempting to arrest him. But be as it may, on the evening of the first day on which court met, and the grand jury e impaneled, and before they had fairly entered upon the discharge of their official es, Harvey was announced to preach to the people of Tipton. When the time ved Harvey appeared promptly at the appointed hour, and was greeted by a large ence, among whom were many of the grand jury, who had been attracted by the lity of hearing a sermon from such a man as Harvey. He made a preliminary er, characterized by vehement fervency—reading a portion of Scripture being ted for obvious reasons—gave out his text, the conversion of St. Paul, and some-t sarcastically intimating that the illustrious apostle was a type and forerunner of his . Of all the sermons ever delivered in this Christian land, this one may well be sidered as truly original in style, delivery and subject matter. He was exceedingly nt and energetic, and his illiterate, backwoods hoosier dialect, coupled with his crous misquotations from sacred Scripture, were fully appreciated by his attentive ience. One of his unique renderings will long be remembered, when with peculiar s he exclaimed, "Paul! Paul! it is hard for you to kick agin natur."

This remarkable discourse produced its desired effect. The grand jury, sapient in r wisdom, determined that it would be highly improper to indict a preacher who ressed so much earnestness in the cause of Christianity, and thus allowed him to pe the clutches of the law. This was, however, his last sermon, and it is supposed he expended his entire stock of religion in that one effort.

THE PRESS.

The Tipton Advertiser was established in 1853 by Charles Swetland, H. C. Pratt and ls Spicer, and has since gone through the following changes of proprietorship: ls Spicer followed the founders, then Spicer & Dewall, then Spicer again, followed . S. Daniels, who sold to Clark & Mueferd. Clark afterwards retired, having sold nterest to C. L. Longley, and the firm became Mueferd & Longley, who are the pres-editors and proprietors. The Advertiser is a well-conducted paper, Republican in tics, has a large and increasing circulation, is the official paper of the county, and is of the most readable and enterprising newspapers in the State.

The Mechanicville Press is a neat appearing, well edited, and popular local news-er that made its appearance in 1865, and is now owned and managed by F. H. Wil-s, an experienced newspaper man, a royal "good fellow," and one upon whom re has set her signet of the true gentleman.

The Cedar County Farmer is a good local paper devoted to the interests of Tipton Cedar Counties, and was established by the Rabet Bros. in 1874. They are also edi-and proprietors of the West Branch Times, which made its appearance soon after Farmer. Both papers are well managed, and will undoubtedly become popular in r localities.

TIPTON.

The county seat and principal town in Cedar County, is situated in the geographical re of the county, and was originally laid out on the northwest quarter of section six, nship eighty north, of range two west, of the fifth principal meridian, but has since n enlarged by the addition of other tracts to the north and west, so that it now com-es over four hundred acres.

The location is a very handsome and advantageous one, being upon a high, gently ling prairie, surrounded by a tract of excellent farming lands which have been well roved, and now presents as beautiful and attractive an agricultural scene as can ound in the state. The town was laid out in March, 1840, by John J. Tollman, who the first county surveyor. Settlement began in the place immediately after its loca-, slow at first, but gradually increasing with the growth and improvement of the ounding country. Among its first settlers were John P. Cook, William K. Whittel-John Culbertson, William Cummins, Charles M. Jennings, Daniel Davis, and lan G. Walker, who were followed a little later by Preston J. Friend, John B. Cursly, William R. Rankin, Jacob A. Haight, David Lee, William H. Tuthill, and irs. The first white child born in the town of Tipton was Jacob Tipton, a son of ob A. Haight, who was born in the Spring or Summer of 1841, and the first death occurred was Mrs. Elizabeth Lett, October 9, 1841.

The town is handsomely laid out with regular blocks and wide, well-graded streets, contains a number of elegant business blocks, handsome residences, good school dings, and eight churches, as follows: Congregational, Reverend G. S. Biscoe, tor; Methodist, Reverend R. Swearingen, pastor; Episcopal, Reverend Joseph gen, rector; Presbyterian, Reverend Charles Axtell, pastor; Universalist, under rge of Reverend G. Odeorne; Lutheran, Reverend J. K. Bloom; Reformed Church, erend —— Schultz; Catholic, Father Eugene Sullivan.

The city officers for 1875 are: S. Yates, Mayor; R. H. Kirk, Recorder; J. O. West-, Assessor; while the Council is composed of: H. S. Platt, J. D. Shearer, W. ver, A. Bagley, and Charles Hammond.

CLARENCE.—This is a thriving town on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, in north part of the county, forty-seven miles west of Clinton. It has been incorpor-l, is a place of considerable importance, and a good shipping point for grain and k.

MECHANICSVILLE.—This is also a town of considerable size and importance on the icago & Northwestern Railroad, in the northwest part of the county. It is incorpor-l, and has one of the best kept hotels in the West.

LONDON.—This is an incorporated town on the railroad near the east line of the nty, forty miles west of Clinton.

STANWOOD.—Is a thriving new town on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, t eight miles north of Tipton, and nearly midway between Clarence and Mechan-sville.

DURANT.—This is a growing town and good shipping point on the Chicago, Rock nd & Pacific Railroad, in the southeast corner of the county, twenty miles west of venport. It has been incorporated, and is a place of considerable business.

DOWNEY.—Situated almost in the extreme southwest corner of the county, on the icago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, about forty-four miles west of Davenport.

CENTERDALE.—A station on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad, the southwest part of the county.

WEST BRANCH.—This is also a station on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minne-a Railroad, near the west line of the county, has a good retail trade, and is a town of nsiderable importance.

MARSILLON.—This is a station on the Davenport & St. Paul Railroad, in the north-t part of the county.

ROCHESTER.—This is one of the older towns of the county, and at one time engaged a contest for the honors of the county seat. It is located on Cedar River, eight miles thwest of Tipton. There is a good supply of stone and timber in the vicinity.

The other post offices and villages in the county are Cedar Bluffs, Gower's Ferry, and, and Springdale.

FRANKLIN COUNTY.

Franklin is the fifth county west of the Mississippi River in the third tier from the th line of the state. It is twenty-four miles square, having an area of 576 square es or 368,640 acres. The county is well watered, most of the streams being tribu-ies of Cedar River, several of them rising within the limits of the county. The Iowa River crosses the southwest corner, watering portions of two townships. The West Fork of Cedar River crosses the northeast corner. The streams afford excellent drainage to all parts of the county, and some of them furnish excellent water power for machinery. Good well water is found at depths varying from ten to thirty feet.

The east half of the county has some fine groves of native timber, and there are also some groves on Iowa River in the southwest part. The northwestern portion of the county is least favored with timber, but is unsurpassed in the fertility of its prairies.

This county has good building stone, including both lime and sand rock. Clay suitable for making brick is obtained in many places. There are also some extensive beds of peat, which may be used for fuel if needed.

The soil is generally of a dark, rich loam, with a small proportion of sand. It produces the finest crops of grain and grass. The county is well adapted to agriculture and grazing. The surface is generally rolling, with rich valley or bottom lands along the streams.

RAILROADS.

The Central Railroad of Iowa runs north and south through the county, leaving it near the southeast corner. Its stations in the county are Faulkner, Geneva, Hampton, Chapin and Sheffield. The Iowa Pacific Railroad Company have their line graded and bridged through the county from east to west. Hampton is the only station located on this road as yet. The Illinois Central Railroad cuts off a few hundred acres from the southeastern portion of the county, the nearest station being at Ackley, just over the line in Hardin County.

HISTORICAL.

The first white settlers of Franklin County were James B. Reeve, John Mayne and a man named Phelps, who all came in October, 1852. Mr. Reeve was from Ashtabula County, Ohio, and remained to become a permanent settler. He settled at the east end of Mayne's Grove. Mr. Mayne was a trapper and hunter, and only tarried in the county a couple of years, but his name is perpetuated in that of the creek and grove where he settled. His cabin was at the west end of the grove that bears his name. Mr. Phelps settled in the same grove, but remained only a few months. During the Spring or Summer of the next year one Dr. Aldred made a claim and built his cabin in what is known as Downs' Grove, in the southeast part of the county, near Ackley. He remained but a short time, and sold his claim to Thomas Downs. In March, 1855, Mr. Downs was frozen to death between his home and Hardin City, then a small village just starting on Iowa River, in Hardin County. During the Summer and Fall of 1853 a few families located in different places along Mayne's Creek, and in the southeast part of the county. In 1854 settlers began to come in more rapidly, and the following located in different parts of the county: John I. Popejoy, from Fayette County, Ohio; Amon Rice, John Shobe, Lyman W. Bailey and George W. Eckley, from Cedar County, Iowa; A. T. Reeve, from Ashtabula County, Ohio; C. M. Leggett, from Geauga County, Ohio; and Richard Blake and Patrick McCann, from Cook County, Illinois. Among the early settlers in the southwest part of the county were Lewis H. Morgan, D. D. Otis, and a man named Weaver, who all located on Iowa River, in the vicinity of Otisville, about the year 1855. Further south Mr. Popejoy settled in the vicinity of Oakland, and Levi Bigelow and Jesse R. Dodd were likewise among the early settlers here.

INCIDENTS.

In April, 1854, occurred the first death, that of Mr. Webb, at Mayne's Grove. The first school was taught by Miss Octavia Smith in the Summer of 1854, the school house being a log cabin in Mayne's Grove. The teacher of that pioneer school subsequently became Mrs. H. J. Mitchell. The first marriage license issued was to Daniel B. Martin and Nancy Garner, August 9, 1855.

On the 9th of July, 1854, a report reached the little settlement at Mayne's Grove that three hundred hostile Indians were on the war path, and marching directly for the settlement. At that time there were a few families at Beaver Grove, in Butler County. It was deemed best not to attempt a defense against so formidable a force of savages, so it was determined that the whole population of the county should retreat to Beaver Grove. On the morning of the 10th all were en route, and the utmost confusion prevailed. In about three weeks they returned to their homes, finding nothing to indicate that any Indians had been there.

ORGANIZATION.

Prior to its organization the county had been attached to Chickasaw, and afterward to Hardin County, for judicial purposes. It was organized by the election of officers at the August election of 1855, at which fifty-two votes were cast in the county. The following county officers were elected: James B. Reeve, County Judge; S. R. Mitchell, Clerk of the District Court; Isaac Miller, Treasurer and Recorder; Solomon Staley, Sheriff; Henry Shroyer, School Fund Commissioner; Q. A. Jordan, Coroner; and C. M. Leggett, Justice of the Peace.

COUNTY SEAT.

The commissioners to locate the county seat made selection of a place about two miles south of the present town of Hampton, but the location did not give general satisfaction, and the people asked the privilege of voting on the question of removal to the then new town of Benjamin—the name being subsequently changed to Hampton. On the 7th of April, 1856, a vote was taken, resulting in favor of removal.

TOWNSHIPS.

The county was divided into three civil townships in March, 1856. New townships have repeatedly been set off from them, however, until the number has been increased to fourteen, diminishing the original townships to a small fraction of the area they at first contained. A brief mention of each will be given as nearly as practicable in the order of their organization.

The three original townships are Washington, Morgan and Reeve.

WASHINGTON is near the center of the county. The earliest settler who is here now is probably Amon Rice. He came in 1854. Job Garner, George Ryan, James Van Horn, and Thomas Beed were pioneers. The former three have removed from the county, and the latter is dead.

HAMPTON.

The county seat was laid out in the south part of this township in June, 1856. It was first called Benjamin, as a prefix to the name of the county, but this was soon changed. It is an incorporated town, very favorably situated, receiving the trade of a large and fertile district, and is a shipping point for a large amount of farm produce.

To Hon. James Thompson is ascribed the honor of being the "oldest inhabitant," having removed to Hampton from Vinton, Benton County, in 1856, and although now doing business at Sheffield, claims his residence in Hampton. A. J. Cannam, landlord of the Cannam House, is next. He also came here in 1856; so also did Obadiah Smith, and James T. McCormick. George Beed came in 1857. Among the early settlers here were Job Garner and George Ryan, who each gave to the county the undivided half of eighty acres of land, as a consideration for the location of the county seat thereon. The following may also be considered among the pioneer settlers of the place: Dr. J. A. Guthrie, R. F. Pratt, Chauncey Gillett, S. M. Jones, and the Reed brothers.

The growth of the place was very slow until 1868-9, when the near approach of the Central Railroad gave it an impetus, and its growth since that time has been regular and constant. The county seat was located here in 1856, after considerable trouble and litigation between it and Maysville.

The first newspaper published in Franklin County was the Franklin Record, started in 1859, by Stephen M. Jones, now post master. It was a four page (six columns to the page) sheet, Republican in politics, and considering the difficulties under which it was published, a very creditable paper. In 1863 it was discontinued, and in 1866 the material was purchased by J. Cheston Whitney, who revived it under the name of the Franklin Reporter, and it was known as such until 1872, when it and the Hampton Free Press were consolidated under the name of the Franklin Recorder, which is published at the present time by the firm of Whitney & Harwood. Its growth has kept pace with the town and it is a sheet that would make a respectable appearance in a place of six to ten thousand inhabitants. It is Republican in politics. In October, 1869, the Hampton Free Press was started by L. B. Raymond, and run until April, 1872, when it was consolidated with the Reporter, as above stated. It was a seven column to the page (four page) sheet, and Republican in politics. The Hampton Magnet was started in July, 1873, by W. C. Eaton, and is still published by him. A. M. Allen was a partner with him in its publication for a few months in 1873-4. It is a six-column quarto, same size as the Recorder, and also Republican in politics. The Magnet is an enterprising, pushing, newsy sheet, and evidently on the high road to prosperity.

Hampton has three churches, with fine church edifices, and strong societies. Baptist, Rev. L. N. Call, pastor; Methodist, Rev. J. B. Taylor, and Congregationalist, Rev. W. H. Barrows. The usual number of benevolent and secret societies flourish; Masonic, Anchor Chapter No. 61, C. W. Bontin, H. P., and Anchor Lodge No. 191 A. F. & A. M., C. W. Bontin, W. M.; also, Hampton Encampment I. O. O. F. No. 78, Robert Jeffers, C. P.; Hampton Lodge No. 218 I. O. O. F., A. A. Gillett, N. G. An excellent graded school is in operation, Prof. L. B. Cary, principal, with an able corps of assistants. Hampton has four dry goods stores, two clothing stores, three drug stores, four grocery stores (exclusively), three hardware stores, three restaurants, two harness shops, two banks, one book and music store, three hotels, two shoe stores, three shoe shops, one butcher shop, two wagon shops, five blacksmith shops, three elevators, one warehouse, two lumber yards, three agricultural implement establishments, two livery stables, bakery, picture gallery, one gun shop, two jewelry stores, and the usual proportion of minor establishments. There are five physicians, four law firms, four real estate agencies and several insurance agents. There is not, nor ever has been a saloon within the corporate limits of Hampton. The business of the town is prospering, and is in a healthy condition. There have been but two failures of business men in the place since it had an existence. Hampton is mostly settled by eastern people, and is admitted on all hands to be a town of good manners and morals, and a desirable place to live in. Although its growth has never been rapid, it has always been regular and sure, and gives promise of the same healthful increase for years to come.

REEVE TOWNSHIP has the honor of having the earliest settlement in Franklin County made within its limits. Here Mayne erected his trading hut and here Judge Reeve, from whom it is named, made his permanent home. He died in 1863, while captain in the 32d Iowa volunteer infantry, at Columbus, Tenn. The Village of Maysville was laid out in 1856 in this township, and immediately became a competitor with Hampton for the county seat. The contest lasted through a series of years, and was not regarded as definitely settled until the tax was voted to build the court house in Hampton in 1865. Maysville was formerly a town of considerable importance, but its business has nearly all gone to the railroad station of Geneva, three miles to the eastward. It has, however, the finest school edifice in the county. Mayne's Grove, the largest body of timber in Franklin County, occupies about one-third of Reeve Township.

MORGAN TOWNSHIP was named from one of its early settlers, Lewis H. Morgan, now a resident of Oregon. B. F. White is probably the first settler of Morgan Township, having come there in 1853, and still resides there. All the other settlers who have been there over a dozen years have gone and their places are filled by others. Otis Grove is in the northwestern corner of Morgan Township, and the balance is all prairie. The Iowa River runs through the corner of the township cutting off probably a thousand acres. The little village of Otisville is situated on the west side of the river on the Wright County line. It contains a store and post office and country hotel.

INGHAM TOWNSHIP was detached from Washington at an early day. The first settlement was made in 1854, by David Allen and sons, who settled on the West Fork in the body of timber now known as Allen's Grove. John R. Hartgraves settled soon after at the grove and on the stream that now bears his name. George H. Ingham, from Granville, Ohio, was one of the early settlers. To him the township is indebted for its name. The only post office in Ingham Township is Menzie, situated near its center.

GENEVA TOWNSHIP was detached from Reeve in 1856 or '57. Martin Boots, Peter C. Berry, D. G. Carbaugh and Jabish Jones were among the earliest settlers. Mayne's Creek runs from west to east, nearly through the center of the township, and with its lesser tributaries serves to water nearly all the territory contained within its limits. Timber is found in Four-Mile-Grove and in Highland Grove. Geneva Station is a thriving village in this township, on the Central Railroad of Iowa. It was laid out about four years since, and contains a large dry goods and grocery store, lumber yard, grain warehouse, wagon and blacksmith's shops, etc., etc. Capt. H. C. Clock is the most prominent citizen of the place. The village is in the midst of a splendid agricultural region, and must at some future day become a town of no mean importance.

OSCEOLA TOWNSHIP was given a separate organization in 1857. It is the southeastern township of the county. Its first settlement dates from 1853, and was made by Thomas Downs and Dr. Aldrege. Patrick McCann, Richard Blake and John Fahey, and the Richardson family, are among the oldest settlers. Osceola is all prairie excepting three small groves: Downs', Blake's and Towhead. Faulkner is a station on the Central Railroad of Iowa, near the north line of the township, consisting of a grain warehouse, depot building and post office. Much of the trade of Osceola Township goes to Ackley, in Hardin County, just across the line.

CLINTON was detached from Washington Township in 1857. It was named from the town in the State of New York, whence some of its early settlers came. The first settlement in the township was made by Elihu Tharp early in the Spring of 1854, and also in May of the same year by John Shobe and Lyman W. Bailey. Each settled near the groves to which they have given their names, and Bailey on the creek that bears his name. Mr. Tharp left the county many years since, and his present whereabouts is unknown. Mr. Bailey resides where he settled, and Mr. Shobe in Hampton. Among the other early settlers of the township may be mentioned Wm. Benham and J. E. Calman, now both dead, and A. S. Ross, T. C. Riddle, E. D. Wright, and Wm. Ellis, all living in the township at the present date. The stations of Chapin and Sheffield are both within Clinton Township. Chapin is really the old town of Chapin moved two miles to the eastward. Old Chapin, as it is now familiarly termed, was laid out in 1857 by Hon. J. B. Grinnell, and flourished in a quiet way until after the advent of the railroad, when, in about 1871, the town of New Chapin was started. New Chapin, as it is called to distinguish it from the old town, contains an elevator, two stores, a lumber yard, hotel, blacksmith's shop, etc., is in a thriving condition, and promises well for the future. Sheffield is situated on Bailey's Creek, near the northern line of the township, and was laid out in December, 1873, but no building was done until the Spring and Summer of 1874. Its growth since that time has been very rapid, and it is now the second town in size and importance in the county. Its business is divided up among a large dry goods store, two grocery stores, a drug store, furniture store, two agricultural implement firms, two hotels, a hardware store, lumber yard, grain warehouse, and a plentiful sprinkling of minor establishments.

OAKLAND TOWNSHIP was detached from Morgan in 1867. The Iowa River runs through it from northwest to southeast, and is timbered all along its course. The first settlers of Oakland were John I. Popejoy, J. R. Dodd, Levi Bigelow and the Osborn brothers. Mr. Popejoy came in 1854, and still resides where he settled, on one of the largest and finest farms in Franklin County. Oakland Valley is in a beautiful location on the west side of the Iowa River, but is now a place of but little importance. It has a store, post office and hotel.

WEST FORK was detached from Ingham Township in 1868. So far as is known the first settlement was made in 1855, by Henry Meyer, Sr., from Wisconsin, who still resides in the county. The post offices are Cold Water and Ingham.

GRANT TOWNSHIP was organized in 1870. Its surface is all prairie. The Murray brothers, John Griggs, Humphrey Talheim, Jas. Sayre, and James Dayton, are among the earlier settlers.

LEE TOWNSHIP is also a prairie township. It was organized in 1870. Messrs. Lee, Jones, Slocum, Norman, and Fitch, were among the earlier settlers. Much of the trade of this township goes to Iowa Falls, Hardin County.

HAMILTON TOWNSHIP was detached from Reeve in 1871. The Hamilton brothers, from whom it was named, were the first settlers. The township is all prairie. It contains a post office by the name of Congress.

RICHLAND was cut off from Clinton in 1872, and received its name from Richland County, Ohio, from whence some of the residents of the township came. Its early history is identical with Clinton, the old "Tharp place," where Elihu Tharp settled in 1854, and the "Shobe farm," where John Shobe settled the same year, being contained within the present limits of Richland. The town plat of Old Chapin is about half of it contained in Richland Township, and Rev. Wm. Avery, a Congregationalist minister, and Deacon J. W. Avery, his brother, are among the oldest residents. They were from Connecticut, and came to Chapin in 1857.

MARION, the youngest township in the county, was detached from Washington Township in 1874. The township has no early history, as there were no settlers to speak of within its borders until within two or three years. Marion is all prairie except the small portion in the northeast corner covered by Tharp's Grove.

LEE COUNTY.

Lee County is in the southeast corner of the state. It has an area of about 500 square miles, or 320,000 acres. In population it was the third county in the state in 1870, and in its agricultural and commercial facilities it has few superiors in Iowa.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement by a white man was six miles above Keokuk, by a French trader named Lemoliese, in 1820. Soon afterwards Doctor Samuel Muir, a surgeon of the United States army, made a settlement at Keokuk. In 1829, Doctor Isaac Garland settled at Nashville, where he was joined by Isaac R. Campbell the next year. Captain James White made a claim on the present site of Montrose. In the Fall of 1832, Peter Williams made a settlement on the present site of the City of Fort Madison. In the Fall of 1833, John M. Forest made a claim at the point now known as South Augusta. Wm. Skinner settled in Jefferson Township in 1834. Alexander Cruikshank became identified with Lee County on the 4th of March, 1834. He settled on the farm where he now resides in 1836. J. C. Parrott, present post master of the City of Keokuk, came to the county the same year. From this time settlements were made more rapidly, as 1838 shows a population of 2,838, which was increased in 1840 to 6,095, as shown by the United States census of that year.

ORGANIZATION.

As will be seen from the history of the state, the Territory of Iowa was, in 1834, attached to Michigan, and at that time consisted of two judicial divisions, or counties, Des Moines and Dubuque. Burlington was the seat of justice for the Des Moines district. Iowa was more generally organized into counties in 1836, and Lee County was then formed. The survey was commenced in this county the same year, and completed the following year. This became part of Wisconsin Territory in 1836, and in the first territorial legislature John Box was the representative from Lee County. The courts were held at Fort Madison until 1843, when, by special act of the Legislature, the seat of justice was transferred to West Point, where the first court was held in April, 1843. In the Fall of 1845, by vote of the citizens, the county seat was restored to Fort Madison, its present location. By an act of the Legislature of 1839-40, two commissioners had been appointed to select a site near the geographical center of the county. They located it at Franklin, but no improvements were made or courts held at that point. By a special act of the Legislature of 1855, a court with concurrent jurisdiction was established at Keokuk. The officers of Keokuk are deputies, that being considered a branch office; separate juries being chosen for each district.

THE HALF-BREED TRACT.

The Sac and Fox Indians had been in possession of the soil now included in Lee County long before it was opened to settlement in 1833 by the ratification of the Black Hawk treaty of 1832. Prior to this time many of the agents and employes of the American Fur Company and others intermarried with these tribes, producing a race of half-breeds. Some of these half-breeds adopted the habits of civilization, others retained the manners of the Indians. On the 4th of August, 1824, a treaty was made at Washington in which 119,000 acres situated in the south part of the present County of Lee was reserved to the half-breeds, investing them with a right to the soil, but without the power of transferring it. By an act passed by Congress, January 30, 1834, a title was made to the half-breeds in fee simple. The law poorly defined the boundaries of the tract, and the personal rights of the owners in relation to partition. Hence conflicts and quarrels arose on all sides. To decide the validity of adverse claims, and to partition them among the claimants or sell them for the benefit of the actual owners, the Legislature of Wisconsin Territory passed an act on the 16th of January, 1838, appointing Edward Johnston, Thomas S. Wilson, and David Brigham commissioners to settle these difficulties in accordance with the intention of the law. The commissioners met at Montrose and summoned the claimants to appear before them and prove their claims. The session continued until the next session of the Legislature, when the act under which they labored was repealed. It gave authority to the commissioners to collect from the owners of said lands the amount of their just bill for services, and their claim, by the repealing clause, was made a lien on the lands. At the August term of the District Court of Lee County two judgments were obtained, and in due time the entire tract was sold at sheriff's sale to Hugh T. Reid. Reid sold more or less at different times, and his title was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States in December, 1850. Previous to this decision another class of titles arose, based upon the "Decree of Partition" issued by the United States District Court for the Territory of Iowa on the 8th of May, 1841. This provided for the partition of one hundred and one shares, and that each claimant should be content with his lot. These lots were drawn and the plats of, the same filed in the recorder's office, October 6, 1841. These titles are now generally secure, either upon their legal merits or by compromises effected prior to the decision of the Supreme Court. The state laws of 1841 in relation to these lands was sustained by the United States Supreme Court in 1854.

COUNTY OFFICERS, 1875.

WILLIAM P. STAUB, Clerk of District and Circuit Courts.
C. L. ALLEN and J. D. HUFF, Deputies of District and Circuit Courts.
JOSEPH A. PEASE, Sheriff.
JAMES POLLARD and J. G. ROURKE, Deputy Sheriffs.
A. L. COURTRIGHT, Treasurer.
THOMAS ALLEN and T. W. LOWRY, Deputy Treasurers.
J. C. BLACKBURN, Auditor.
HENRY BANK, Jr., Recorder.
V. BUECHEL, Deputy Recorder.
WESLEY C. HOBBS, Superintendent of Public Schools.
T. GOODENOUGH, Coroner.
WM. A. DONNEL, ELIAS OVERTON, and A. L. CONABLE, Board of Supervisors.

KEOKUK

Is situated on the Mississippi River, at the foot of the rapids, two hundred and twelve miles above St. Louis. Its commercial facilities are equal to those of any other city of the state. In addition to its water navigation it has several lines of railroad diverging from it in various directions. Its substantial railroad bridge across the Mississippi was completed in 1871. This is a combined railroad, carriage and foot bridge. "The Des Moines Rapids Improvement" on the Mississippi River is a canal, about nine miles in length, for steamboats to pass through, thus obviating the dangers of navigation heretofore existing during low water. This work of the General Government will be completed the present year.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Doctor Samuel C. Muir erected the first cabin in 1820. Moses Stillwell, with his family, settled in 1828; also, at the same time, Amos and Valencourt Van Ansdal. Margaret Stillwell wife of E. R. Ford, of Keokuk, was the first white child born here. This birth occurred in 1831. About this time the American Fur Company had a trading post here, but they soon removed to other headquarters. Doctor Muir and Isaac R. Campbell became their successors. Campbell, in addition to his merchandising, kept the first "tavern" in Keokuk. About this time, 1831, John Gaines, William Price, Alexander Hood, William McBride, and Thomas W. Taylor were added to the population.

The first death was Doctor S. C. Muir, of cholera, in 1832. The town was laid out in 1837.

INCORPORATION.

On December 13, 1847, it was first incorporated as a city. The first officers installed, January 10, 1848, were: Mayor, W. A. Clark; Aldermen—James Macklay, W. C. Read, Wm. Holliday, H. Bassett, John W. Ogden, and J. M. Houston. Since that time it has made a fair and substantial growth. It has a population of nearly 15,000. It contains four banks, several wholesale jobbing houses, good hotels, and is well represented in the various manufacturing and mercantile interests. It does a large business in pork packing, and in the lumber trade.

The present Mayor of Keokuk is Ed. Jaeger; S. S. Curtis, Clerk; J. F. Bower, Treasurer; A. J. Hardin, Marshall; John Gibbons, City Attorney; and Charles W. Taylor, Recorder.

EDUCATION, ETC.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Keokuk is one of the oldest and best conducted institutions in the state. It was established in 1850, and is now under the efficient management of Professor J. C. Hughes, M.D., Dean of the Institute, who is assisted by an able corps of professors. A large number of medical practitioners have graduated from this college. The capacious college building is one of the most substantial edifices of the city. A good collection is found in the college museum.

The city has six public school buildings, well finished and furnished with the modern improvements for the comfort and convenience of their numerous pupils. Keokuk may with propriety feel proud of her public schools.

The present public school Board of Education consists of some of the most substantial citizens of Keokuk. By a judicial and careful selection of teachers the schools of the city are rendered highly prosperous, and are well attended.

Keokuk has a variety of churches numbering over a score and containing some elegant as well as substantial edifices.

The Keokuk Library Association (J. Henry Westcott, Secretary) was established in 1863, and now numbers 7,200 volumes. As it contains a large number of standard works it is a popular resort, as well as a source of great intellectual value to its numerous visitors. The St. Peter's Catholic Library (Reverend A. Trevis, President; R. P. Miller, Secretary) was established in 1874. Although comparatively in its infancy it bids fair to be of lasting benefit to the community.

THE PRESS.

There are at this time three papers published in Keokuk. The Gate City is published by Howell & Clark. Its predecessor, The Des Moines Whig, was established in 1846. The Keokuk Constitution is published by Thomas W. Claggett. These publish both daily and weekly issues, and are both among the pioneer journals of the state.

The Keokuk Post (German) is conducted by Charles Norman.

Keokuk has a good representation in the various societies, as there are several lodges of both Masons and Odd Fellows, well represented by the character of their membership as well as by their numbers.

The post office is centrally located on the corner of Main and Sixth Streets, and the old pioneer, General J. C. Parrott, who has been a citizen of Lee County for forty-one years, is the present post master. The city is lighted with gas, and has several efficient fire companies.

FORT MADISON.

The county seat of Lee County, is pleasantly situated on the western bank of the Mississippi River. The town derives its name from a military post established here in 1808. This was evacuated in 1813, and the buildings were burned by the hostile Indians.

The first settlement was made in 1832. Among the early settlers were Peter Williams, Peter Miller, Jacob Cutler, John Atlee, John Kenedy, James Snull, John Walch, Joseph Webster, and Philip Viele, with others who settled prior to 1838.

The town was incorporated by act of Congress of July 2, 1836. William M. Corrieli and George Cubbage were the commissioners. The Legislature of Wisconsin made it the county seat the same year.

The penitentiary buildings located here were erected by the General Government before Iowa was admitted as a state. This work was contracted for in 1838, and completed in the Fall of 1841. It is now a state institution, is ably conducted by S. H. Craig, Warden, assisted by James H. Reynolds and others, with H. Clay Stuart, Clerk. Reverend James Sunderland is the present Chaplain.

ORGANIZATION.

By a special act of the Legislature, approved January 28, 1848, Fort Madison received a charter, with corporate privileges as a city. The present official list is: A. C. Roberts, Mayor; Ekin Smith, Clerk; B. Rephohl, Treasurer; J. C. Henderson, Marshal; John Huff, City Attorney; and R. H. Heath, Engineer.

SCHOOLS.

The Fort Madison Academy is one of the best institutions of its class in the state. Besides its primary and academic departments, it gives a classical course, preparatory for college. Reverend C. F. Williams is the present principal, who has the assistance of an able and efficient corps of teachers. The present Board of Trustees are: Jno. Van Valkenburg, John C. Atlee, J. C. Blackburn, E. G. Wilson, Isaac Hale, J. G. Wilson, and R. Crepps. The public schools are conducted by able teachers.

THE PRESS.

The Plaindealer (J. G. Wilson, proprietor, established in 1851), and The Democrat (Roberts & Schroeder, proprietors, established in 1865), are both ably conducted weekly journals.

MANUFACTURES.

The most prominent manufacturing interest in Fort Madison is that of lumber. The firm of S. & J. C. Atlee, manufacture yearly about 9,000,000 feet of pine lumber, 3,000,000 lath, and about 24,000,000 shingles. Weston & Co. manufacture about the same amount of lumber and lath.

There are three planing mills in Fort Madison, having a capacity in the aggregate of 9,000,000 feet per annum. The Iowa Farming Tool Co. (W. H. Kretsinger, Supt.), is one of the large manufactories of Fort Madison.

With its present commercial facilities, Fort Madison has a fair local trade, all departments being well represented by men mostly of energy and capital.

WEST POINT was laid out by William Patterson, A. H. Walker, and A. Hunsaker, June 11, 1840. It is a pleasant, thriving village, situated in a rich agricultural district.

FRANKLIN was laid out March 21, 1840. It was selected by Commissioners J. L. Scott and S. C. Reed, who were appointed by the Legislature to select a site for the county seat of Lee County. The land upon which the town is situated was donated by J. Chapman, John Brown, and Thomas Douglas.

DENMARK was laid off January 17, 1840, by T. Fox, L. Repps, Curtis Shedd, and William Brown. Here is located Denmark Academy, which, under the supervision of Professor H. K. Edson, has acquired a prominence and popularity highly creditable to its friends and patrons.

MONTROSE was laid out November 10, 1853, by Ed. Brooks, F. E. Billon, D. C. and W. J. Riddick. It possesses many commercial advantages, and now having a fair trade, its growth in the future will be quickened.

The other townships and villages of the county are usually quiet centers of trade situated in good agricultural districts.

KOSSUTH COUNTY.

Kossuth County comprises a section of the two most northern tier of counties, and is the seventh county west of the Mississippi River. In extent it is twenty-four miles east and west, by forty and one-third north and south, and therefore contains 968 square miles, or 619,520 acres.

The south two-thirds of the county is well watered and drained by the east fork of Des Moines River and its tributaries.

Blue Earth River rises in the northern part of the county, and flows north into Minnesota, watering several of the northern townships.

There are some valuable groves of native timber on the Des Moines River and other streams, probably an aggregate of ten thousand acres in the county. The northern portion of the county has but a limited supply.

The general character of the surface is rolling. Along the Des Moines River are some exceedingly rich bottom lands. The soil is generally, both on the higher prairies and in the bottoms, slightly mixed with sand, but with a larger proportion of vegetable loam. In many places this soil is several feet deep, resting on a clay sub-soil, below which a stratum of gravel is usually found.

There are no exposures of rock "in place," but in some localities the boulders of the glacial period are found upon the surface in sufficient quantities to supply the wants of the people in the way of ordinary masonry.

Wheat, oats, and potatoes are staple crops, but corn and most kinds of vegetables yield well. The county is well adapted to stock-raising and the dairy, as there is an abundance of excellent wild grass.

EARLY HISTORY.

On the 9th day of July, 1854, Asa C. Call and Ambrose A. Call, two brothers, the former just then from California, and the latter from Illinois, located on the ground where the Town of Algona is now situated. At that time the land was in the possession of the Government, and only partially surveyed. In June of that year, Colonel Leach was engaged in surveying township ninety-five, of range twenty-nine, but he and his party were driven out by the Indians. Cyrus C. Carpenter (subsequently governor of the state), afterwards finished the work. At this time the two Call brothers were the only white settlers on the Des Moines River north of Fort Dodge, and there were none eastward within fifty miles, nor westward nearer than the Missouri River. For years "Calls' Grove" was spoken of as away on the Upper Des Moines, among the Indians. The Call brothers, however, soon had followers, for in the Fall of the same year came Malachi Clark, Levi Maxwell, William Hill and Solomon Hand, with their families. They took claims on the west side of the river, below Algona. January 25, 1855, William H. Ingham and Andrew L. Seely took claims about four miles above the present town of Algona. J. W. Moore came in May. In the Summer of 1855, the first settlement was made at Irvington, about five miles below Algona, by Jacob Wright. Thomas and John Robinson, William G. Clark, Benjamin Hensley, George Smith, L. L. Treat and Kendall Young. August Zahlten and Christian Hackman came in February; A. Brown, A. Brown, Jr., L. Payne, F. C. Rist and J. Richmond came in April; D. W. King in June; L. H. Smith and others in July. All the settlements mentioned, extending for ten miles up and down the river, were then known by the general name of "Calls' Grove."

In the Fall of 1854, a minister of the Christian denomination by the name of Maduren, went up with his family from Des Moines, and made their home at the cabin of Ambrose A. Call, on the west side of the river, one mile below Algona. Mr. Maduren died in about two weeks after his arrival, and this was the first death among the white settlers in the county.

ORGANIZATION.

In the Fall of 1855, a county organization took place, the county, at this time including the northern half of the present county of Humboldt. It was detached in 1857. The following were the first county officers elected: Asa C. Call, Judge; R. Cogley, Clerk; J. W. Moore, Treasurer and Recorder; H. F. Watson, Sheriff; and Washington Hand, School Fund Commissioner.

By an act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1854-5, the county seat had been located on the southwest quarter of section 2, township 95 north, range 29 west. In the Spring of 1856, a town was laid out here, the original proprietors being Asa C. Call, Ambrose A. Call, and J. W. Moore. Judge Call had built a cabin on the town plat before it was surveyed. The name of the new town—Algona—was suggested by Mrs. Asa C. Call, the first lady resident of the county. The first child born here, and the first in the county, was Ella Algona Blackford, daughter of Honorable J. E. Blackford.

The first goods that were sold in Algona, were sent up from Fort Dodge, by Major Williams, in 1856, and sold by H. F. Watson as Agent.

The first marriage in the county took place April 22, 1857, being that of William Moore and Sarah Wright. The next, and the first in Algona, was that of Hurlbut W. Lake and Rachel N. Eggers, July 21, 1857.

The first newspaper in the county was the Algona Pioneer Press, started in September, 1861, by Ambrose A. Call. He continued it up to 1863, when after suspension, the press and material passed into the hands of Mrs. Lizzie B. Read, who started the paper called the Upper Des Moines.

INDIAN FIGHT.

About six miles above Algona, on the west side of the river, in April, 1852, a conflict took place between the Musquaka band of the Sacs and Foxes and a band of Sioux Indians. The incidents of the fight were given to the early white settlers by William Burgart, a trapper, who subsequently lived at Northwood, Worth County. The Musquakas were under the leadership of a subordinate chief named Ko-ko-wah, who when up with his party by way of Clear Lake to what was then "neutral ground." At Clear Lake they received information that the Sioux were encamped on the west side of the East Fork of the Des Moines River, Ko-ko-wah, with sixty of his warriors, determined to attack them. They arrived in the night, and concealed themselves in the grove on the east side of the river about one mile above the Sioux encampment, where unperceived, they learned the exact position of the enemy. In the morning, after many of the Sioux warriors had gone away to hunt, Ko-ko-wah and his men crossed over the river and attacked the Sioux, before they were prepared to make a successful resistance. For a short time the conflict was desperate, but the advantage was all on the side of the attacking party, and the Sioux were completely vanquished. Sixteen of them were killed, including some of their women and children. A number of their horses were also killed, and a boy fourteen years of age taken prisoner. The Musquakas lost four braves among whom were Kear-kurk and Pa-tuk-a-py, both distinguished warriors. As the Musquakas rushed into the camp of the Sioux, a squaw shot Pa-tuk-a-py in the breast. He started to run away, and the same squaw, at a distance of twenty rods, shot him through the body with an arrow, when he fell and expired. But few of the Sioux made their escape, and all their dead were left on the ground unburied. The Musquakas hastily buried their own dead, and with their prisoner, returned as rapidly as possible to their home in Tama County, and when they arrived spent six or seven days and nights fortifying their village, and in the meantime burned the young Sioux prisoner. The scene of this conflict is on section 8, township 96, range 28.

ALGONA.

This town is situated mainly on a high and well drained prairie, on the east side of the east fork of the Des Moines River. There are beautiful groves of timber immediately adjoining on the north, west and south. The river here affords good water power. The town has a beautiful and picturesque location, with a rich agricultural region tributary to it. It was originally platted in April, 1856. The Iowa and Dakota Division of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway was completed to Algona, in the Fall of 1870, and has assisted materially in the development of the town and county. A substantial and commodious court house was erected in 1872, being one of the finest in northern Iowa.

The Kossuth County Bank is located here; capital, $50,000; Wm. H. Ingham, President, and L. H. Smith, Cashier. Its proprietors are early settlers of the county.

The Algona Flouring Mill was erected in 1867, by J. E. Stacy, one of the pioneer citizens of the county.

Algona College was established in the Fall of 1872, under the auspices of the N. W. Conference of the M. E. Church. The board of trustees are prominent citizens of the place; Reverend B. Mitchell is president; Professors A. N. Bushnell and A. L. Day have the educational management. This institution is seconded by the well conducted graded schools of the city.

Several churches of different denominations are maintained, and most of them are in a prosperous condition. Reverend C. Taylor, the Congregational pastor, has been identified with the religious welfare of the town for nearly a score of years.

Algona has many substantial residences and a liberal number of good business houses, and is the center of trade for a large district of country. It is incorporated as a city of the second class; D. S. Ford, Mayor; H. M. Tait, Recorder.

There are two newspapers in the place; the Upper Des Moines, established as before stated, is now under the control of J. H. Warren; the Republican was established in 1871. Horton, Jones & Co. are the proprietors, A. M. Horton editor. Both papers have a good circulation and convenient job offices.

WESLEY.—This is a station on the railroad, in the eastern part of the county. It is surrounded by a fertile prairie region. The post office here is called Wesley Station.

The other post offices in the county are: BUFFALO FORK, DARIEN, GREENWOOD CENTER, HALE, IRVINGTON, KOSSUTH CENTER, SENECA, and SIVEA.

COUNTY OFFICERS, 1875.

H. S. VAUGHN, Auditor.
JOHN WALLACE, Clerk of Courts.
JOHN M. PINKERTON, Sheriff.
M. W. SLOUGH, Treasurer.
A. M. HORTON, Recorder.
A. A. BRONSON, Superintendent.
M. TAYLOR, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

TAMA COUNTY.

This county is the fifth west from the Mississippi River, in the center of the state north and south, and contains twenty congressional townships, or an area of seven hundred and twenty square miles. The general surface of the county is undulating or gently rolling, except in some places along the streams. Along the Iowa River in the northwest, and also in the southeast, there are some high bluffs, which are quite abrupt and precipitous on the side facing the river, and rise to the height of one or two hundred feet. There are quite a large number of low bluffs, or a series of low hills, in the eastern part of the county west of Salt Creek, and in the southern part south of the Iowa River, and some in the west, while a few of this class are also found in the northern part. They are all susceptible of cultivation, and many of them have been converted into finely improved farms, which, though not containing quite as rich soil as the more even portions, are, however, better adapted to the multifarious wants of agriculture, being more suitable for stock raising and not so easily affected by the extremes of wet or drought. The principal streams are lined with beautiful, gentle sloping bottom lands, from one-eighth of a mile to two miles in width, the greater part of which are susceptible of the very highest cultivation, only a small portion being too wet or marshy. The remainder of the surface may be termed slightly undulating, sufficient to afford good drainage to almost every eighty acres in the county, and yet but little of it is so steep as to wash or wear away when visited by heavy rains.

STREAMS.

The most important stream is the Iowa River, which enters the county on the west side and flows in a southeasterly direction across it, and in its various meanderings affords a river line of at least thirty-five miles. This river and its various tributaries drain nearly four-fifths of the county and afford many excellent water powers, only a portion of which have as yet been improved. The principal tributary from the south is Richland Creek, which rises in Marshall County, and entering on the west passes in a easterly direction nearly three-fourths across the county to its junction in Richland Township. Beaver and Raven Creeks are also tributaries from the south, and drain a portion of the southwest. Several large tributaries flow in on the north, the most important of which are Salt, Otter, Deer and Sugar Creeks, all flowing in a southeast direction. The northern portion of the county is watered by Wolf Creek, which is quite a stream running entirely across the county, in a winding course, from west to east, emptying into the Cedar River in Benton County. Besides these principal streams there are a great many others of considerable size and importance emptying into them, which are in many cases fed by living springs and afford excellent water for stock at all seasons. While these streams do not flow with the rapidity which is usual with streams in a mountainous country, they can by no means be denominated sluggish, as the current are quite swift and the waters clear and pellucid, except in time of freshets. Perhaps few counties in the state are so well watered, in proportion to the large amount of good prairie lands. Although there are a great many fine springs in the county, the greater portion of water for domestic and household purposes is obtained from wells at a depth varying from twelve to thirty feet, which is of a good quality and sufficiently soft but not be in the least objectionable for drinking or culinary purposes.

TIMBER.

There is a plentiful supply of excellent timber well distributed over most parts of the county, but especially so in the southern townships along the Iowa and its tributaries. Many of the bluffs are covered with a heavy growth of timber. One mile west and northwest of Toledo is the eastern boundary of a large body, which is of good quality and extends, with but few openings, to the western boundary of the county, containing at least ten square miles. There is some timber in the north along Wolf Creek, while probably seven-eighths of the native timber is in the southern portion. The leading varieties are white, black and burr oak, black walnut, hickory, cotton wood, linn and white elm, while, less plenty, may be found soft and hard maple, honey locust, ash, umberry, red elm and butternut. The natural fruit-bearing trees are shrubs are thorn apple, crab apple, choke cherry, plum, grape and hazelnut. In addition to the native timber, which can not be estimated at less than 75,000 acres, the prairies in the northern part are dotted with numerous groves of silvereaf maple, cottonwood and other fast-growing woods, which not only lend great additional beauty to the landscape, but materially increase the wealth and resources of the county.

RESOURCES.

The soil is purely western, of almost inexhaustible fertility, especially in the prairies and bottom lands, which are evidently of alluvial formation, except perhaps the higher points of the former. Clay predominates to quite a large extent in the bluff lands, and the quality of the soil is not quite as good as in the prairies and bottoms, but cannot by any means be called poor. The county has an abundant supply of good building stone, and also stone suitable for the manufacture of lime. Good deposits of building stone are found in various places, but in the vicinity of Orford and Indian Village there are extensive quarries of oolitic limestone possessing peculiar compactness of formation, and is so easily quarried in any shape required as to render it of great value. It is entirely free from sand or quartz, which render it easily dressed, while it is at the same time susceptible of a high polish, and when so finished is equal in beauty to the finest foreign marble. It is found of a variety of colors and shades in the same quarry, and will eventually be a source of great wealth to the county. Occasional boulders are found, the remains of some anterior glacial period or some other commotion that has brought them from the mountain ranges away to the northwest.

The county is well adapted, both by the nature of its soil and climate, to raising all kinds of grain usually grown in this latitude. Wheat and corn are the staples, which are usually grown in large quantities, while oats, barley and rye do well, but are considered less remunerative. Much of the corn is fed to hogs and cattle, which, with sheep, are extensively bred, the county having few superiors for stock grazing.

Fruit trees, which are cultivated on nearly every farm, grow with thrift and exuberance, and when of proper age yield abundantly. Some care is, however, required in selecting the hardier varieties and in giving them the proper culture.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first entry of land within the limits of the County of Tama was made by Horace N. Atkinson, May 18, 1848, and was in section thirty, township eighty-three, range fifteen. A few more entries were made in 1849-'50, but the greater portion of the land was entered subsequently to that date.

The first death in the county, of which we have any account, was that of Miss Mariah Blodgett, at Indiantown, in the Fall of 1852.

From the best information that can now be obtained, it appears that Isaac Asher and family were the first white persons who permanently settled in Tama County. They had been living in Marshall County, near the line of Tama, and, in the Fall of 1849, moved over into the latter county and settled in Indian Village Township. Just about the same time—in October, 1849—a settlement was commenced in what is now Richland Township, by three brothers named Anthony, William and Robert Wilkinson, from Coshocton County, Ohio. They were accompanied by their mother and three sisters. Anthony and William had been soldiers in the Mexican war, and had just received their land warrants for that service. They located their warrants on land in Richland Township, while Robert also purchased land in the same vicinity. There were but few, if any, more settlers until 1851. In the Summer of this year John Duly, Eli Daily and Anthony Brisher settled in Indian Village Township, and David D. Jacob and Levi Applegate, a little further north in what is now Carlton Township. During the Fall of the same year, N. L. Osborn settled on Wolf Creek, in the present Township of Perry, and David Dean in the present Township of Buckingham. During the same Fall a settlement was commenced on Deer Creek, in the present Township of Howard, by Christian Bruner. In the Spring of 1852, Col. John Connell and William Hitchner settled in Perry Township. Among the early settlers of Indian Village Township may be mentioned the names of William Taylor, N. J. Blodgett, William Houston, J. H. Voorhees, Isaac Butler, and Washington Abbott. Among the early settlers in the vicinity of Toledo and Tama City, were John C. Vermilya, J. H. Hollen, George Carter, R. A. Redman, Myron Blodgett, B. A. Hall, John Ross, Judge Graham, and Dr. Wesley Daniel. After 1852, settlements were made in various other parts of the county, and those already commenced continued to grow and prosper.

FIRST ELECTION AND ORGANIZATION.

Previous to the organization of Tama County it was attached to Benton County for revenue, election and judicial purposes, and while thus attached the first election was held at the house of R. A. Redman, near Iowa River, on the first Monday in August, 1852, at which time the three civil townships of Howard, Indian Village and Buckingham were organized. Since then, however, their boundaries have been greatly reduced. A temporary organization was effected on the first Monday in May, 1853, at which time an election was held for county officers, with the following result: John C. Vermilya, County Judge; John Ross, Treasurer and Recorder; David D. Applegate, Clerk; Myron Blodgett, Sheriff. These were the first county officers, but in conformity with the statute they could only hold their offices until the next general election, which took place on the first Monday of the following August, at which time there were seventy-two votes polled in the county. At this general election there were three voting precincts, to-wit: Howard, Indian Village and Buckingham. The electors in Howard Township met at the house of R. A. Redman; those in Indian Village at the house of Eli W. Baily; and those of Buckingham at the house of N. L. Osborn.

In the Summer or early Fall of 1853, Hon. James P. Carlton, then district judge of the 4th judicial district, appointed Joseph M. Ferguson, of Marshall County, and R. B. Ogden, of Poweshiek, commissioners to locate the county seat of Tama County. Accordingly, on the 20th day of the following October, they met at the house of County Judge John C. Vermilya, and, being duly qualified, proceeded to the discharge of their duty. They spent some time in making examinations of the different points suggested, going first to an elevated quarter-section about one mile north of Christian Bruner's mill, which they concluded was entirely too far northwest. The second point examined was near the residence of David Bruner, and was objected to on the same ground. They then went to the present site of Toledo, in township eighty-three of range fifteen, where they determined to locate the permanent seat of justice, and called the place Toledo. The first county business after the location of Toledo seems to have been transacted at the house of the county judge, John C. Vermilya, and September 15, 1854, the first district court was convened in the same place by Judge James P. Carlton.

INDIANS.

Before the settlement of this county by the whites, the Musquaka band of the Sac and Fox Indians lived on the south bank of the Iowa River, near the western boundary of the county, where bluff, bottom, river, and timber land all blend in one beautiful landscape. They were removed with the rest of their tribe in 1845-'6 to their reservation in Kansas beyond the Mississippi River, but many of them wandered back to their old hunting grounds. For a time the government declined to allow them a prorata share of the annuity, unless they would return to their reservation. They, however, persisted in remaining, and from time to time acquired the title to several tracts of land now amounting to 419 acres, when the government finally changed its policy towards them, appointed an agent, and now pays them their equal proportion of the annuity, and allows them to remain in Iowa so long as they may demean themselves properly and are permitted by the state authorities. They cultivate a portion of their lands, and give their white neighbors no trouble, as during the winter season most of them go off to different parts of the state hunting and trapping, and return home again in the Spring. They are not numerous, and are fast passing away; the braves that Black Hawk led on to battle have disappeared, and their number has diminished more than half in the last fifteen years, and but few years will pass before the whole tribe will be extinct, the last warrior having gone to the hunting grounds of the Great Spirit.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper started in Tama County was the Toledo Tribune, which made its appearance in the Spring of 1856, with M. V. B. Kenton as editor. In the following Fall he sold to H. T. Baldy and T. W. Jackson, who run it some two months, when Jackson's interest passed into the hands of Joshua Burley. This firm continued until February, 1857, when I. L. Allen bought Burley's interest, and a few weeks later the whole establishment passed into the hands of Boleus & Sowers, who continued its publication until the Fall of 1858, when N. C. Welting purchased the office and changed the name of the paper to the Iowa Transcript, which he continued for eight years, when in 1866 the office was removed to Belle Plaine.

A Democratic paper called Tama County Farmer was published at Toledo during the political campaign of 1860 by A. J. Kenney, but was discontinued soon after the Fall election. A number of other papers have been published in the county, in regard to which the historian is unable to obtain any satisfactory information.

There are at the present time five newspapers published in the county, as follows: At Tama City, the Tama Citizen, established in 1866, and now ably conducted by W. G. Cambridge, and the Tama Press, which first appeared in 1873, and is now under the editorial management of Chapman & Grove; at Toledo, the Toledo Chronicle, first issued in 1867, and now successfully managed and ably edited by J. B. Hedge, a young, forcible, and spicy writer, and the Tama County Independent, which appeared in 1874, and is in the hands of an experienced and popular newspaper man, R. Reichman, who is making it a success; while at Chelsea the Bugle first sounded its clarion notes in 1874, and is now piped by an experienced quill-driver, L. A. Barker, who is making it a wide awake local sheet.

RAILROADS.

The county has very good railroad facilities, the Chicago & Northwestern passing through the southern portion. Toledo, the county seat, is connected with this road at Tama City, by a short line called the Toledo & Northwestern, which is operated by the Chicago & Northwestern Company. Traer, in the northeast part of the county, is the terminus of the Pacific Division of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota, which, running some eight or nine miles in this county, gives that portion excellent advantages.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

When Toledo was laid out a beautiful block 312 feet square was reserved, on which in 1869 a fine court house was erected at a cost of $25,000. It is of brick, two stories high, and 40x70 feet on the ground. There is a stone basement used for storage, while the first or ground floor is divided into spacious and comfortable offices for the use of the county officials, and the upper floor into court and jury rooms. The whole building is a model of neatness and taste, both in architectural design and beauty of finish. Except an appropriation of $5,000, the county is indebted to the liberality of the citizens of Toledo and other private contributions for this fine structure, of which the citizens of the county may feel justly proud. The grounds that surround it have been ornamented by the planting of various kinds of ornamental trees and shrubs.

JOSEPH A. BOWDLE, Auditor.	C. J. STEVENS, Clerk.
DANIEL FORKER, Treasurer.	JOHN B. M. BISHOP, Recorder.
ROBERT E. AUSTIN, Sheriff.	ALBERT H. STERRETT, Supt. Com. Schools.

GAMALIA JAQUA, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

TOLEDO.

This is an incorporated town, the county seat of Tama County, and is beautifully situated on high rolling ground, some two miles north of the main line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, with which it is connected by a branch road. It is surrounded by a good farming country, which is well improved, and presents to the eye of the beholder an agricultural scene of great beauty and attractiveness. It contains several good business houses which do an extensive retail trade, three large elevators, several handsome churches, a fine school building, good residences, etc., etc.

TAMA CITY.

This is a thriving town, containing some fifteen hundred inhabitants, and well located on the main line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 133 miles west of Clinton. It is handsomely situated on the north side of the Iowa River, the business portion of the town being about half a mile from that stream. A portion of the plat is on high bottom land, extending northward upon a fine elevation overlooking the valley, and is surrounded by a rich, well improved agricultural country. There are some valuable groves of timber on the river easy of access to the town.

It was laid out in the Summer of 1862, just previous to the completion of the railroad, and was at first called Iuka. The original plat embraced land owned by J. H. Hollen, but purchased by John I. Blair, of New York, for the purpose of laying out a town. A number of additions have since been made, so that the town plat now embraces several hundred acres. The name was changed to Tama City some two or three years after it was first laid out. The town contains a large public school building, a handsome hotel, several fine business blocks, and a number of elegant residences, that of J. H. Brooks costing $25,000. The improvements are all substantial and superior in character to most towns of its size in the West.

Early in 1874 a corporation was formed with a capital of $100,000, called the Tama Hydraulic Company, who during that season erected an expensive dam across the Iowa River nearly four miles west of Tama City, a large reservoir on the bottom a little southwest of town, which they connected with the dam by a large and strong aqueduct, and have thus secured a magnificent water power, and during the Summer of 1875 several large manufactories have been erected and are now being operated by this power. This is an important improvement, and will be a source of great advantage to the town for all time to come, and has already given all kinds of business a new impetus.

TRAER.

This is a thriving young town in the northeast part of the county, at the terminus of the west branch of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Minnesota Railroad. It is surrounded by one of the best improved, fertile and wealthiest farming sections of Iowa; is an important shipping point, and probably has a larger retail trade according to its size, than any other town in the northern part of the state. It now contains some thirty-five business houses, and is rapidly growing.

OXFORD.—This place is on the railroad, seven miles west of Tama City, in the valley of Iowa River. The extensive oolitic limestone quarries are in the vicinity, and large quantities of lime are manufactured and shipped from this point.

CHELSEA.—This is a thriving station on the railroad, twelve miles east of Tama City, and was laid out in 1864, the first building being erected the same year, by W. H. Graham.

MADISON COUNTY.

Madison is in the third tier from the south line of the state, and corners Polk County on the southwest. Its area is about 576 square miles, or 368,640 acres.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The county is within the region of the "three rivers," separately known as North, Middle and South Rivers, which with their numerous small affluents form an admirable system of drainage for nearly the entire county, leaving but a very small area tributary to other streams. Springs are numerous along the valleys, and water may be obtained almost anywhere in wells of moderate depth. The rapid slope and rocky beds of the principal streams render them highly valuable for water power, which is afforded at frequent intervals.

Timber is abundant along the principal streams, and the county has enough for all its local needs, consisting of all the varieties common in Iowa. It is frequently of heavy growth and excellent quality.

The area of the county is divided between the middle and upper coal-measures, the latter predominating. The boundary line between them is several miles northeast of Winterset, running transversely to the course of the streams. Although exposures of the rocks of the middle measure are found in the deep valleys as far up as Winterset, no coal has been found in the strata of the upper measure, and only a very limited amount in those of the middle measure, the productive coal beds lying mostly within the lower measure, which here passes below the others far underneath the surface.

The rocks of the upper coal-measure abound in excellent building stone, and the quarries of the county have become famous. Some good sandstone is procured, but the limestone is by far the most abundant and valuable, some of its beds yielding a very durable material, alike resisting weight and exposure. Other beds yield a very beautiful and valuable material for dressing, taking a good finish and retaining its color admirably, although it is not suitable for polishing. A large proportion of the stone makes excellent quick-lime. Large quantities of Madison County building stone are taken to Des Moines and other places.

The surface of the country is high. The great watershed of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers traverses the southwest corner township. Eastward of this the county presents two distinct divisions in surface, corresponding to its geological divisions. The rocks of the lower coal-measure being soft and easily disintegrated, yielded readily to the erosive action of the glacial epoch, and consequently this portion of the county presents an undulating surface somewhat lower than the remaining portion. The valleys are comparatively broad, and their sides are seldom steep or bluffy. Passing up the streams to the point where the harder rocks of the upper coal-measures appear, and a striking change is observable. The high prairie surface presents comparatively slight undulations, because the underlying rock was but slightly displaced during the glacial epoch. It ends abruptly in steep rocky bluffs, on the borders of the streams which have cut precipitous narrow channels to a great depth through the limestone. These narrow valleys frequently end quite abruptly, as on Clanton's Creek, where at Penn it is nearly two hundred feet deep, while five miles further up it is a mere prairie drain, running upon the drift with gently sloping sides. Thus the streams drop down abruptly from the watershed into deep narrow channels, and again flow out into gently expanding valleys are they leave the county, giving the surface of the country considerable variety in appearance.

The soil is a rich loam, profusely mixed with vegetable mold to an average depth of two feet, and the sub-soil is but little different, except in the absence of vegetable mold for several feet further. The soil is of such texture that it dries rapidly after heavy rains, while at the same time it is deep enough to retain the necessary moisture to enable it to resist drouth admirably. It produces large crops of all the cereals and vegetables grown in Iowa, and a failure in crops is unknown. Fruit growing has proved very successful, and there are few better fruit counties in the state.

PIONEERS.

A solitary adventurous wanderer from the South who reached the county early in May, 1845, was the pioneer settler of Madison County. This was Hiram Hurst from Andrew County, Missouri. He selected and staked out his claim in Crawford Township, built a cabin, "made" a crop of sod corn, and returned for his family in the Fall. The next were Joel Clanton, Isaac Clanton, Charles Clanton, and Caleb Clark, with their wives and children and worldly goods. They came from the east up the divide between Middle and South Rivers to the creek known as Clanton's Creek, and here located on the 3d of May, 1846. Caleb Clark's daughter, afterwards the wife of Andrew Tusha, was the first white child born in the county. On the same day that the Clanton's arrived, Samuel Guye, his wife and his sons, James, George, Francis, and Houston, came up the divide between Middle and North Rivers and located where the family still reside. In two days they had finished a log house and moved into it. One morning before sunrise they were awakened from slumber by the tinkling of a cow-bell. Breakfast was forgotten, the labors of the day never came to mind in the eagerness which the sound excited, for it told of neighbors. After following the direction of the sound for several miles they came upon the camp-fire of John Evans, south of Cedar Creek. The next day after the Clanton's and Guye's arrived, Crosby B. Jones and Seth Adamson settled on Middle River, in the vicinity of the Huglin mill. Another of the early settlers was P. M. Boyles, afterwards one of the first County Commissioners. He came from Andrew County, Missouri, and immediately constructed a dwelling, six by ten feet of poles covered with basswood bark, in which he and his small family resided six months. It is related that for the first three years he was without means to buy a horse, and once walked to Saylorville and worked two weeks at fifty cents a day to procure money to buy seed corn. Nor was his an exceptional case of privation among the pioneers. Among others who came during the Spring of 1846 were Irwin Baum, Martin Baum, Jacob Combs, John Butler, Lemuel Thornburgh, J. B. Bedell, Wm. Combs, and Wm. Butler; and among those who settled during the Summer and Fall were Alfred D. Jones, E. Bilderback, B. McDonald, David, Enos, and Joseph Bishop, C. J. Casebler, David Cracraft, J. T. Carson, Josh Casebler, Robert Deshaser, John Deshaser, J. K. Evans, John Esley, W. J. Esley, Louisa Fiddler, Wm. Gentry, D.D., Henry W. Harman, A. Hart, C. Jones, P. T. Jones, C. Mendenhall, G. Michael, D. McKenzie, G. W. McKenzie, Clayborn Pitzer, A. Q. Rice, C. Randall, J. B. Sturman, T. Stewart, J. Thornburgh, J. Vanhouten, Michael Whilhit, John Wilkinson, B. Wagoner, and E. Ward.

Alfred D. Jones was one of the most conspicuous men in the early affairs of the county. He settled on the "Narrows," four miles east of Winterset, where the old Fort Des Moines road enters the timber, and erected here two log houses; one he used for a dwelling, and the other became the first store in the county. P. M. Boyles hauled the first goods for him from Keokuk with oxen. Here, also, the first post office was established, with Mr. Jones as post master. It was called Mt. Pelier, and the mail was brought by A. Snyder from Raccoon Forks semi-occasionally. Wm. Compton erected the first grist mill on Middle River, where the Town of Buffalo has grown up around it. He purchased the site of Hart & Hinkley, who had in operation a small "corn cracker." Doctor J. H. Gaff was the first physician who located in the county, and his son, Francis M., was the first white male child born in the county. John Evans was the first preacher in the county. The first pair united in matrimony were David S. Smith and Jane Carson, April 19, 1849. The ceremony was performed by Seth Adamson, J. P. Number two was Meshack Casteel and Sarah Evans, August 19, 1849.

The county was surveyed into sections in 1849, by John A. Pitzer and Enoch Eastman, having been previously divided into townships. Mr. Pitzer had charge of the survey in the north half of the county. The land was brought into market the following year, and the first entries were made in November.

Mr. Pitzer thereafter remained in the county, and started the first store in Winterset. He became one of the most prominent men in the county, and was honored with the office of County Judge from 1851 to 1860.

In the Spring of 1849 the settlers organized a great snake hunt to get rid of the venomous reptiles which were very numerous. The hunt resulted in the death of 3,750 rattlesnakes.

Prior to 1849 the utmost privation was undergone by the pioneers. They had no market for their produce, but the season of 1849 brought a market to their doors for all they could spare in the California immigration. Those were truly golden days for the early settlers of the county.

ORGANIZATION.

Madison County was defined by an act of the Territorial Legislature, approved January 13, 1846, but it was not fully organized until April, 1850. William Combs, David Bishop, and Wm. Gentry were the County Commissioners to locate the seat of justice, who selected the site of Winterset in July, 1849, for the seat of justice, then the premises of John Gulberson, who received for it the sum of $194.50 from the county. It is said to have obtained its name in this wise: The day was quite cold and blustry, and the Commissioners had been upon the ground all day and met in Berger's house for the purpose of giving it a name. A score or more of names were suggested, and Summerset was the favorite, whereupon Combs, who had been nodding under the influence of a fluid popularly known as "sod corn," suddenly broke out with, "I think we'd a darned sight call her Winter-(hic)-set;" and his suggestion was unanimously adopted. The town was surveyed and platted July 18, 1849, by Alfred D. Jones, assisted by P. M. Boyles and Enos Berger.

The first county officers were elected probably in April, 1849. The Commissioners were those named above; Clerk, G. W. McClellan; Recorder, P. M. Boyles; Treasurer Joseph K. Evans; Surveyor, Alfred D. Jones; Prosecuting Attorney, Alfred D. Jones

The first court in the county was held May 31, 1849, by Judge William McKay, o Des Moines. A room used for the joint purpose of a store and saloon was given up for the use of the court, and here the judge took his place behind the bar or counter to transact the business of the term.

Soon after the location of the county seat, a large double log cabin was erected for county purposes, on the lot later known as Monumental Square. Besides accommodating the courts and county offices, it was used for a school house, meeting house, and a resting place for weary travelers, to whom its doors were open at all hours. In 1851 the county found it necessary to provide for offenders, and erected a two story log building for a jail. It was torn down in 1866.

In the Spring of 1868 was commenced the erection of the present magnificent court house at Winterset. The building is in the form of a Greek cross, one hundred feet each way, with four fronts exactly alike. The building is constructed of cut stone, taken from the excellent quarries near the place, and is surmounted by a grand octagonal dome. The height of the spire is about one hundred and fifty feet from the ground, the top of the dome more than a hundred feet. The basement extends eight feet above the ground level, and is used chiefly for storing fuel. The first floor is fitted up into offices, and furnished with fire-proof vaults. The second story is about twenty-two feet high, and contains the court room, judge's and attorney's rooms and jury rooms; besides which, one of the arms of the cross is fitted up as a jail.

RAILROADS.

On the 24th day of December, 1853, an election was held in Madison County for the purpose of determining whether the county would subscribe one hundred thousand dollars stock in the Philadelphia, Ft. Wayne & Platte River Railroad. It resulted in favor of the loan by one hundred and eighty-three to ninety-four. The route of this projected road was surveyed from New Boston, on the Mississippi, to Council Bluffs, by Alfred D. Jones, passing through Winterset; but it was never built, and the county never issued the bonds in payment of its subscription.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad was completed to the Missouri River in 1868. It passes through two townships only of Madison County, near the north line. Subsequently the citizens of the county subscribed largely to secure the building of the railroad from Winterset to Des Moines, which was completed, giving the county generally a good railroad outlet.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Madison County Agricultural Society was organized in 1856, and has held fairs annually ever since. The first fair was held on Cedar Creek, just north of P. M. Boyles' residence. It is said that it was attended by the people of the county en masse, who have continued to interest themselves greatly in its success. The society now owns beautiful and commodious grounds, one-half mile west of Winterset, enclosed with a good substantial fence, and furnished with suitable and convenient buildings, stalls, sheds, wells, etc., for the purposes of exhibitions, and provided with a good half-mile track.

WAR RECORD.

Madison County sent seven hundred and ten men to the Union armies during the War of the Rebellion, without counting re-enlistments—nearly one-tenth of its entire population—and was represented in eighteen different regimental organizations. Forty-two of the number held commissions. To honor and perpetuate the memory of those who gave their lives for the defense of their country, a marble monument was erected on the park known as Monumental Square, in Winterset, in 1867. The monument committee was chosen in October, 1865, consisting of Colonel H. B. J. Cummings, 39th

Iowa, President; Flora Winkly, Secretary; J. J. Davies, Treasurer; E. W. Fuller, Mrs. Mary A. Hutchings and Miss Emma McCaughan, Executive Committee. Sub-committees were appointed in each township to solicit contributions. Festivals, lectures, exhibitions, etc., were given in Winterset and elsewhere to procure funds. The county donated the "old court house" lot and "old jail" lot for a site. The jail lot was sold, and another purchased adjoining the court house lot. These grounds are fenced and decorated, and in the center a beautiful shaft of marble rises twenty feet above the level of the park. It was dedicated October 7, and completed in December, 1867.

The Madison County Teachers' Institute was organized at Winterset in October, 1858, and has been the means of accomplishing a great deal for the good of the cause of education. Its meetings are invariably well attended, both by teachers and citizens interested in the progress of education.

WINTERSET.

This prosperous young city, the county seat of Madison County, lies in the geographical center of the county. It is pleasantly located on excellent ground about one mile distant from Middle River. Surrounded, as we have seen, by a superb agricultural district, with wood and stone very convenient, and coal easily accessible, it is a commercial center of more than usual importance among the country towns of Iowa. The number of stone edifices it contains gives it an appearance unlike any other city in that region. The sidewalks are generally paved with the same material.

EARLY HISTORY.

Enos Berger was the first settler in Winterset, and built the first house soon after it was surveyed in 1849. He was also the first post master of the office established there soon after. Berger was for some years treasurer and recorder of the county, and it is related of him that at one time having more public funds in his possession than he could conveniently carry, there being no bank or safe for deposit near, he kept them in his wife's stocking under the bed. A neighbor observed that this was rather a loose way to keep the funds, when Berger replied, "Tut, tut, man; there is no vault in America safer than my wife's stocking." John A. Pitzer built the first stone house in the Summer of 1849, on the west side of the square. Soon afterward Alfred D. Jones erected another log store, and a man by the name of Roberts built a third, on the north side of the square. The "Old Goe House," the first hotel, was erected the same season by Berger. It was a story-and-a-half log building, the largest in the county. A. D. Jones, E. R. Gulberson and others erected log dwelling houses the same season. The residence of John A. Pitzer, erected the following season, was the first frame house in the county. In 1856 Mr. Pitzer built the Pitzer House, afterward the St. Nicholas Hotel, then the largest hotel in southwestern Iowa, at a cost of $12,000. In this year the town began building and improving rapidly, and several substantial stone edifices were erected.

SCHOOL HOUSE.

The Winterset public school building is a superb edifice, located on an eminence overlooking most of the city. The spacious grounds are beautifully ornamented. The edifice was completed in the Fall of 1868, at a cost of $30,000. It is constructed of native stone, and its dimensions are sixty-five and a half by eighty-one and a half feet, two stories and basement, with a front projection of six by nineteen feet, and contains eight rooms thirty by thirty feet each, two rooms sixteen by twenty-five feet each, and two halls sixteen by forty feet each. A well-proportioned cupola adds beauty and symmetry to the building, and contains a bell weighing four hundred and twenty pounds. The rooms are well finished, and furnished with all the modern conveniences.

NEWSPAPERS.

In 1856 Mr. James Ilor brought an old press and type from Sandusky, Ohio, by wagon to Winterset, and commenced the publication of The Iowa Pilot, which he continued nearly a year, when it was purchased by a joint stock company and published in the interests of the Republican party, by the name of The Winterset Madisonian. In the Fall of 1857 J. J. Davis bought and published it until the Fall of 1862, when it passed into the hands of Oliver H. Ayers, who sold to J. M. Holliday. Mr. Holliday sold to C. S. Wilson, and he to H. M. Ewing. Each of these gentlemen published the paper about a year. Mr. E. W. Fuller took it of Mr. Ewing's hands, and published it two years, when he sold to Davis & Ewing, who, about a year afterward, sold to H. J. B. Cummings. It is now published by Mr. Cummings and S. H. Springer. It is a well-conducted paper, Republican in politics, issued Wednesdays, and has a large and increasing circulation. It has been four times enlarged since its foundation.

The Winterset Palladium, a six-column, Democratic sheet, was started in 1859 by I. C. Browne, who, after publishing it nine months, moved the office to Cass County.

The Winterset Sun was a lively semi-weekly Republican paper, started in 1868 by C. S. Wilson and J. M. Holliday.

The Winterset News is a well-conducted Democratic paper, established January 1, 1872, by I. C. Morgan. April 25, 1875, it was purchased by G. D. Palmer, the present owner and editor. It has a good circulation and a prosperous business.

Winterset has no commercial rival within twenty-five miles, and enjoys a flourishing and increasing trade. It has numerous prosperous church societies and fine church edifices, and several flourishing benevolent societies. Massive business blocks and beautiful residences adorn its precincts, and its people are prosperous, moral and intelligent. The professions are well represented. The city was incorporated in 1869.

The Madison Woolen Mills, an extensive manufacturing establishment built in 1865, is situated one and a half miles west of Winterset.

CHAS. A. GOODALE, Auditor.	JOHN W. GRAHAM, Recorder.
ELIHU G. BARKER, Treasurer.	WM. O. LUDLOW, Sheriff.
EDWIN O. BURT, Clerk of Courts.	H. W. HARDY, Superintendent.

W. H. LEWIS, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

CLINTON COUNTY.

This county is situated in the great eastern bend of the Mississippi River, nearly midway on the eastern boundary of the state, and being directly west of Chicago, is nearer to that metropolis than any other county in Iowa; thus it early became the great central gate to the interior, and the starting point of the first railroad which pushed westward with the intention of crossing the state to the Missouri River. Its location places it in a climate the most healthy and desirable, being in that latitude where the heat of Summer is modified by the cool breezes from the north, and yet far enough south to escape the rigor of the extreme northern Winters. The county is about thirty-six miles long east and west by about eighteen in width, and embraces an area of some seven hundred and twenty square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The Mississippi River, which forms the eastern boundary, is of course the principal stream, and has been a source of great advantage to the county, particularly so in the early settlement, before the advent of railroads. The Wapsipinicon River, meaning white potatoes in the aboriginal language, which crosses the southwest corner, and forms most of the southern boundary, is a clear, handsome stream, and receives several tributaries from this county, the most important of which are Big Rock, Silver and Brophy's Creeks, while the north and east part of the county is watered by the Sugar, Deep, Elk and Mill Creeks. A number of small, beautiful lakes or ponds, are found in some locations, which, with the streams enumerated, and their smaller branches and tributaries, which are fed by clear, sparkling perennial springs, excellently water nearly every section of the county, and greatly assist in making it an important stock-raising district. Wells are easily dug, and cold, lasting water obtained at an average depth of twenty or twenty-five feet.

Along the streams there are groves of native timber, which consist mainly of black walnut, oak, maple, hackberry, cottonwood, hickory and willow, which furnish large quantities of lumber for manufactories and other purposes, as well as supplying fuel at reasonable rates in many parts. In addition to this good native supply, many farmers have planted extensive artificial groves of maple and elm, and are thus raising timber which in a few years, the growth of these varieties being so rapid, will be large enough for all the ordinary uses for which native timber is required. The prairies are fast becoming dotted with these groves, which not only form an attractive feature to travelers and immigrants seeking homes, but add very materially to the wealth of the county. Clinton is emphatically a prairie county, with a surface of gently undulating and rolling prairie, which in the main is dry and well drained, with very little land not susceptible of easy and successful cultivation. There is some little bluffy and uneven land in the neighborhood of the Mississippi, and in some places along the Wapsipinicon, in the southern part of the county. The soil is generally a deep, dark, rich mould, that holds in solution the accumulated fertility of centuries, and when turned up to the sunlight sends forth its life-giving properties, and produces vegetation rarely equaled. This soil is a feature of the prairie and prairie groves, and approaches within a few miles of the larger streams, where the character changes, and the soil becomes more sandy and less productive; yet there is no part of the county that does not well repay the careful labors of the husbandman, and produce bountifully, even with the indifferent western cultivation it receives.

Possessing a vast surface of the most fertile prairie, this county must of course raise with great ease all the different articles to which her soil and climate are favorable to an extent far beyond her own consumption. All the grains, fruits, grasses, and roots of the temperate region grow luxuriantly and of fine quality. Wheat is raised with great ease and abundance, and is of a good grade, yet the chief dependence of the farmers for marketable grain is the corn crop, which very seldom fails to send the cart to the granary groaning beneath its weight of bright golden ears, while the excellent facilities for shipping either by rail or river insure the highest market prices. While the two varieties above mentioned are the staples,—corn, averaging from forty to fifty bushels to the acre, and sometimes going as high as seventy-five, and wheat from eighteen to twenty-five,—other grains and vegetables common to the Middle States, such as barley, rye, buckwheat, hemp, flax, Irish and sweet potatoes, turnips, tobacco, etc., etc., are produced with ease and in abundance, though many of them have received but little attention, owing to the fact that the markets are not so good and the people are unacquainted with their cultivation.

In all the wooded parts of the county, grapevines, which are indigenous to the country, are abundant, yielding grapes, which might advantageously be used for wine. Foreign vines are susceptible and of easy cultivation, indeed, the cultivation of grapes has become quite a staple production all along the Mississippi. The indigenous vines are prolific and produce excellent fruit. They are found in every variety of soil, and are interwoven in every thicket in the prairies and barrens, climbing to the tops of the very highest trees in the bottoms. Plums of various sizes and of good flavor, though somewhat tart, grow in great abundance, and in some localities there are acres of them, which in early Spring-time fill the air with perfume. A few cultivated plums of several varieties have been introduced and invariably do well, as is also the case with cherries, currants, gooseberries, and other small fruits, which grow in great profusion in most places. Of the nuts, the black walnut, hickory nut, butternut, and hazel nut are very plentiful, while of the domestic fruits the apple and pear seem to do the best, and are easily cultivated and produce abundantly in a few years after setting. Many of the early settlers planted orchards, and are now reaping the benefits in fine flavored large fruit. Other fruits, with the exception of the peach, do nearly as well as the apple, and are cultivated to a limited extent, though the apple seems to supply so many different wants that it is more cultivated than any other fruit.

EARLY HISTORY.

From the most reliable information that can now be obtained, it seems that the first white settler in Clinton County was James D. Bourne, who located on the Wapsipinicon River, at a trading post of the American Fur Company, in September, 1836, and remained there in the employ of that company for some time, and afterwards became a permanent resident. This was before Iowa had a territorial existence, as the territory now embraced in the State had not been separated from Wisconsin, which included all the land north of Illinois and Missouri. The tract between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers was a vast open country, almost unknown to white men, and the home and hunting ground of the native aborigines. It is said by many who were here that no more peaceful people existed than the nations of this region, until the encroachments of the traders and other adventurers made it necessary for them to defend their homes and the lands on a hostility—which contained all that was dear to them—from the grasp of rapacious and outlawed white men—men who had been driven from the pale of civilization for crimes, and who found their only safety in self-banishment. Coming among the Indians as they did, and do now, representing themselves to be the agents of the government and emigrating colonies, and exchanging whisky, arms, and other articles to them at fabulous sums for their furs and skins at ruinous prices, they are the means of doing very much harm both to the Indian and the pioneer western settler.

In the Fall of the same year, 1836, Elijah Buell located at Lyons, and was the first white man to settle in that part of the county, and afterwards purchased in company with other gentlemen, the land on which the present City of Lyons is situated. During the Winter or early Spring of 1837, Abraham Folks settled at the place now known as Folks' Grove, as also did O. G. Harrison at Round Grove. This seemed to be a starting point or nucleus, around which soon gathered others who were seeking homes in a new country, and each of the above places soon became noted abroad. From the little pebbles dropped into the broad sea of this great country, the waves of immigration radiated slowly in every direction, until the broad rich prairies had become all disturbed by the resistless onward march of civilization.

During the next year those who sought homes in this county were D. C. Bourne William D. Follett, Daniel Smith, Eli Goddard, the Aikmans, Hessel S. Coy, G. W. Hamlin, S. S. Pierce, A. Dewitt, Booth, J. C. Holbrook, Lorenzo Wheeler, C. Harrison, John Biggs, Martin Dunning, Arthur Smith, C. Boward, N. Calnd, Mr. Evans, and many others who came with their families, and may be classed among the early pioneers of Iowa. Some of them still reside in the county, and are respected and revered by the generation which has since come upon the stage of activity. Many of them are now in the care of grandchildren, who kindly support the tottering steps of their aged lives, and who have imbibed the energies and enterprise of their predecessors, and are still rolling forward the ball of progress in this the land of their adoption.

J. D. Bourne was the first postmaster of Clinton County, being appointed in the Winter of 1836-'7, and his office was situated at the old trading post of the American Fur Company, on the Wapsipinicon, and was called Monroe; but was afterwards, for some reason or other, changed to "Wapsepinicon," the name the river originally went by. The mail was carried from Davenport to Dubuque by way of the old Indian trail, connecting these points. The ferry on the Wapsipinicon consisted of two canoes, Newfoundland and Pointer dogs; the dogs passing the mail bags over the streams in times of thin or rotten ice, when the ponies could not be crossed. For instance, the mail going north when the river was impassible, the carrier would be on the south side and the post office on the north. The dogs were sent over, the mail delivered to them and brought over; after examination the dogs took it back to the carriers, who returned to Davenport. This happened frequently.

The following incident, related by a local writer, will be read with interest: "Judge Ingles, of St. Louis, while on his way to Dubuque, wished to cross the Wapsipinicon. The canoes being out of repair and the dogs being unable to ferry him over, he concluded to swim the stream. He divested himself of all his clothes (except his drawers) and tied them on his saddle. The horse swam safely over, but when the judge made the attempt he became entangled in his drawers and went down. It happened that an Indian was one of the three spectators who stood upon the bank, and being asked to jump in and save him, he ran quite confusedly up and down the bank till they supposed the judge had drowned, and then jumping in, brought him to shore, where, after some exertions, he was restored. The Indian, on being asked why he did not go in sooner, replied: 'When white man alive he drown Indian: when dead he bring him out easy.'"

Clinton County was organized by the Territorial Legislature during its session of 1839-'40. James D. Bourne was appointed sheriff by Gov. Dodge, and called an election of county officers to take place in March, 1840. The board of commissioners elected for the purpose, selected the location of DeWitt for the seat of justice, though the district court was held subsequent to that time at Camanche. Martin Dunning, the clerk, resided at the latter place, and exerted his influence to establish the county seat at his town. Honorable W. E. Leffingwell was the first lawyer who permanently settled in the county. He brought with him a letter of introduction to Sheriff Bourne, whom he found at DeWitt, dressed in buckskin and a slouched straw hat.

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES.

In the matter of schools, Clinton affords equal if not superior advantages to any county in the state, which is certainly saying considerable when it is remembered that the public schools of Iowa have justly earned the reputation of being second to no state in the Union. But few counties even in the older states afford superior advantages for the education of children and youth than those found in Clinton. One seldom finds a section where good land is low and within the reach of those with limited means, where the system of public schools is so complete and developed to so high a standard. There being three high schools and a college in the county, none need go away to obtain a finished education.

TRANSPORTATION.

With the great national highway on the east, and a large number of railroads, so distributed as to leave no considerable section destitute, no county in the state enjoys better facilities for transportation than does Clinton. Of these roads the Chicago and Northwestern, which runs east and west through the southern tier of townships, is probably the most important, while the Iowa Midland, and the Sabula and Ackley, pass in the same general direction through the northern tier. Both branches of the Davenport and St. Paul pass north and south through the county, the main line through the western part crossing the Chicago and Northwes.ern at Wheatland, and the Maquoketa branch through the central, crossing the Iowa Midland and Sabula and Ackley, at Delmar, and the Chicago and Northwestern at DeWitt. The Chicago, Clinton and Dubuque, or, as it is generally called, the River Road, runs north from the city of Clinton up the valley of the Mississippi River.

THE PRESS.

The press of Clinton County is among the largest and ablest in a state which has more newspapers in proportion to the number of its inhabitants than any other st in the Union.

First may be mentioned the Daily and Weekly Herald, which was established D cember 18, 1856, by C. E. Leonard, who remained connected with it until Octobe 1863, when it passed into the hands of J. McLeish, whose career was as brief as it w brilliant, and was succeeded in the following December by Leslie & McAllister, w conducted it until January 1, 1867, when Thomas J. Flournoy, Jr., was admitte member of the firm. It has since passed through a number of changes, a daily have been established in 1868, which is still running, the establishment now being owned the Herald Company, with J. Russell as editor. There is a large job office connect which, with the newspaper office, receives a large patronage.

The Clinton Age, formerly the Iowa Age, was first started at an interior town, was moved to Clinton with a view of receiving a better support. Politically it Democratic, and is justly acknowledged as one of the leading papers of the state that politics, and is ably conducted by Hon. E. H. Thayer, who is a strong, forci writer, and by universal consent is acknowledged to be one of the best posted a successful newspaper men in Iowa.

The Iowa Volks Zeitung made its first appearance in 1867, under the conduc John Pingel. In 1868 it passed into the hands of the Pfeiffer Bros., under wh control it still remains, and who are making it a success, receiving a large and incre ing German patronage.

The Clinton County Advertiser, established at Lyons in 1873, is now published Hopkins & Conable, and is under the editorial management of J. C. Hopkins, who, tho a young man, has acquired quite a reputation as a clear, forcible and succinct writ and successful newspaper man. Locally he is deservedly popular, and has, since h connection with the Advertiser, made it one of the best paying establishments in t county, throughout which it has a large and growing influence.

The Lyons Mirror, established in 1854, is the oldest paper now in the county, and a large seven-column quarto sheet, neatly printed and ably edited by Beers & Eat who are experienced journalists and thorough, reliable and enterprising business m The Mirror has a large circulation, a good advertising patronage, and is a first-cl family newspaper.

The DeWitt Observer is in its twelfth volume, is a neatly printed, readable and sp sheet, under the editorial conduct of S. H. Shoemaker, who is one of nature's gent men, an accomplished journalist, and successful newspaper manager.

The Delmar Journal, now owned and published by F. R. Bennett, was established October, 1872, by General Dan McCoy, is a wide-awake paper, possessing much loc interest and popularity.

The Wheatland News, first issued in November, 1873, by the present editor, D. Crothers, is a neat local paper, and is looked upon with commendable pride by the i habitants of that pleasant village.

CLINTON.

This, the most important town, and the county seat of the county of the same nam is beautifully situated near the apex of the great bend of the Mississippi River, and described something as follows by a local writer: "About two miles above the cit the bluffs which are about one hundred and fifty feet above the level of the river, a which above that point run parallel with it, gently recedes, forming a beautiful plate several miles in length, and where Clinton stands about one and a half miles in widt These bluffs are not bold and insurmountable, but form a gentle acclivity from the base, growing steeper and more bold until the summit is gained. From this elevati a magnificent view of the city is obtained, and the beholder is almost enchanted wi the prospect that is spread out before him. Here we may behold the "Father Waters" flowing in its majestic strength toward the sea, and many miles beyond, a as far as the eye can reach, the rich and unrivaled farmlands covered with the home of thrifty farmers of Illinois come within our vision. Almost at our feet in this beauti ful vale bounded on the east by the ceaseless flow of the waters of the Mississipp almost surrounded by the everlasting hills, and stretching away to the south a surmounting the lower one, rests the place that forms the subject of this sketc What a beautiful prospect is before us. Nestling among a young growth of artific shade trees are many beautiful white cottages and stately brick residences, and towe ing above them all are the noble business blocks that are the result of a rapid an healthy growth. Along the bank of the river for more than a mile in length, a row smoke pipes and chimneys plainly indicates the number of Clinton's manufactorie and mills. Stretching off to the north and south of the place we behold beautiful grove through which many little streams find their way to the river. Thus it would see that nature had outdone itself in furnishing a site where to build a city, which improve and beautified by civilization forms an Arcadian vale, where a brief quarter of century ago the Red Man was the only human inhabitant. Even in his savage natur the beauties and utility of these valleys were appreciated. Indeed, these were h fields, his hunting grounds—his home. Taking all these into consideration, we can n wonder that it was with a struggle that he parted from the scenes of his childhood an the land containing the sepulchres of his ancestors."

The town was laid out so as to conform with the course of the river, which at th point runs very nearly in a south direction, which plan has been followed in all th additions which now greatly exceed the original plat. The streets running north an south are numbered, commencing at the river and running back to the wester boundary of the town, and are eighty feet in width, and six hundred feet apar Running back from the river are broad avenues one hundred feet in width, at interva of three hundred feet. The principal portion of the mercantile business of the city conducted upon Second Street, although considerable trade extends to adjoining street Along other streets are many palatial residences and neat cottages, nearly all of whic are surrounded with beautifully laid off grounds, ornamented with trees and shrub which give the place in summer time, a fresh, cozy and homelike appearance, ex tremely pleasant and attractive. The streets are well graded, free from mud, and sup plied with good substantial sidewalks.

On the site now occupied by Clinton, in 1838, Joseph M. Bartlett laid off a town, t which he gave the name of New York, and also established a ferry running to Whitesid Point, on the Illinois side. Two years later, having come to the conclusion that hi town, which looked so plausible on paper, would not become a success, he sold hi venture to C. G. Pearce, Colonels B. Randall and Jennings, the whole finally reverti to Captain Pearce by purchase, who received a patent for it in February, 1848. Afte remaining several years without a settler, it was devoted to agricultural purposes, an so remained until 1855, when it came into the hands of the Iowa Land Company, who laid off the original plat of Clinton, and gave to it its present name, in honor of th county that now claims it as its brightest gem. The gentlemen who composed the Iow Land Company were far seeing and shrewd. They believed that at this point would th great tidal wave of emigration enter the state, and that many of the more enterprisin seeing the advantages here offered for the safe investment of their capital and for th building of comfortable and attractive homes, would stop, and with those comin before, build up a city which should be the pride of Central or Eastern Iowa. The saw, too, the facilities offered by the natural advantages of the site for extensive manu factories as well as the necessity of a railroad, crossing, if not the continent, at least tw great states, and the natural influx of population and foreign capital as a result. They saw, too that the great grain and produce trade of the Upper Mississippi would here be diverte from the channel of the Mississippi, seeking a market at Chicago or the East.

Among the first improvements of the embryo city was a church and a school house and the next was one of the crowning efforts of the land company toward the buildin of the city, namely: the erection of the Iowa Central House. These improvement naturally led others to inquire into the future prospects of the place, and all came to th same conclusion after the second thought. Building lots were sold, and a permanen growth commenced. It is necessary to state that this growth was sustained upon th supposition that a railroad would soon be built from this point westward. A projec was set on foot, and a road (the Mississippi & Iowa Central) was rapidly graded. But railroad commencing in a town of less than two hundred inhabitants, with no easter connection, and running westward somewhere into a wild and unknown region o prairie and forest, proved a poor speculation, and the project failed. Of course all th had a damaging effect upon the fair prospects of the young town, and improvement ceased entirely for a time. Several like projects failed, and it seemed that the hopes o the people, which had so long sustained them, were about to prove unavailing, when on the 26th day of January, 1856, the Chicago, Iowa & Nebraska Company was formed and a road projected from Clinton, on the Mississippi, to Council Bluffs, on the Missouri connecting with the Dixon Air Line, which in the meantime had been completed to Fulton, Illinois. This road was pushed forward and completed the whole distance; but ere the scheme had been consummated, the Chicago & Northwestern had leased th Dixon Air Line, and a consolidation was effected which placed the whole line of road from Chicago to Omaha, Nebraska, under the management of the Chicago & Northwestern Company. And thus for the first time did the shrill greeting of the locomotive, which has had such a powerful agency in carrying civilization to the vast prairies of Iowa and plains of the far West, resound among the hills, valleys and woodland which now form the populous, wealthy and influential county of Clinton.

The inhabitants of Clinton are largely from the East, and have brought with them their high regard for schools and churches, thus making it in these particulars equal to most towns in the Middle and New England States. A line of street cars runs from the depot at the foot of Second Street, north to Lyons, connecting the two cities, and furnishing both with metropolitan accommodations for travel. The principal streets, public buildings, business houses and residences, are lighted by gas, while improved water works were put in during the Summer of 1874. The lumber trade of Clinton is the largest of any town in Iowa, and her manufacturing interests of all kinds are extensive and eminently successful.

LYONS.

This city is located on the Mississippi River, near the middle of the east boundary of the county, and so near Clinton as to be connected with it by a street railway. It is one hundred and thirty-six miles nearly due west from Chicago, being the nearest point in Iowa to that great metropolis of the Northwest. The land which comprises the site of the city was purchased of the United States in 1840, by Dennis Warren, Elijah Buell and Beale Randall. Mr. Buell settled here in the Fall of 1836, and the same year George W. Harlan located near him. The two families remained the only settlers of what is now Lyons until the Spring of 1837. In April of this year Messrs. Buell and Harlan, in connection with Dennis Warren, Chockley A. Hoag and Suel Foster, laid off a plat into town lots, and called the place Lyons, in honor of the city of that name in France. It was the first town laid out in the county. Its principal growth, however, has been since 1855, during which year it was incorporated, C. H. Toll being the first mayor. It has a good retail trade, large manufacturing interests, and withal is a pleasant and growing place.

DE WITT.

This town is twenty miles west of Clinton, located on a high prairie, and is surrounded by a rich farming country. It is on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, at the crossing of the Davenport & St. Paul, and is a large shipping point for grain, stock and farm produce generally. The location was selected for the county seat in 1840, the commissioners making the selection being: William Miller, of Cedar County; Andrew F. Russell, of Scott; and W. A. Warren, of Jackson. The place was at first called Vandenburg, by which name it was known for several years, when the name was changed to De Witt. The first building erected was a log court house, in 1841, while the next was a hotel, known as the De Witt House. In 1842 James D. Bourne, the sheriff at that time, built the first frame house. The log court house was also used as school house and church. J. Wood was the first teacher, and Reverend Oliver Emerson preached the first sermon. T. F. Butterfield was the first merchant. It remained the county seat about thirty years, when Clinton, by reason of her extraordinary growth and influence, succeeded in obtaining it, although De Witt resisted the change by a strong and persistent opposition.

WHEATLAND, CAMANCHE, GRAND MOUND and LOW MOOR are also thriving towns in the county. In addition to the foregoing are the following villages and post offices: Almount Station, Boon Spring, Brookfield Center, Brown's Station, Bryant, Buena Vista, Burgess, Charlotte, Elvira, Elwood, Goose Lake, Last Nation, Malone, Orange, Riggs' Station, Teed's Grove, Ten Mile House, Toronto and Welton.

HARDIN COUNTY.

This county is in the fourth tier from the southern boundary line of Minnesota, and somewhat east of midway between the two great rivers. It is twenty-four miles east and west, by the same north and south, and contains an area of 576 square miles. What is known as the correction line crosses the county on the south line of the northern tier of townships, setting those townships nearly a mile and a half further west than those of the corresponding ranges south of them.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The surface of the county is generally rolling and gently undulating prairie, the largest extent being found in the southwest, which is well adapted to farming and grazing purposes, but in consequence of its remoteness from timber, was the last to be settled. The more broken parts along the Iowa River and its tributaries, which was well supplied with native timber, was the first to be taken up, but since the completion of the railroads, which readily furnish lumber from the pine forests of Minnesota and Wisconsin, these vast prairies have been rapidly improved, and in consequence of the superior quality of their soil, are fast becoming the most productive and valuable portion of the county. The northeast part has an excellent soil, and is well improved. Most of the streams have deep channels, thoroughly draining the surface without the use of any artificial means, except in that portion west of Alden, along the line of the railroad, where there are a few ponds and marshes, which are not so extensive or deep but that they can be readily drained when the growth of the county shall render it necessary. The soil is generally a black vegetable loam of great depth and almost exhaustless fertility, and fully equal to that of any other county in the state for agricultural purposes. No failure of crops from either wet or drought are reported since the settlement of the county, which is certainly a record of which her citizens may well be proud. Along some of the streams gravel of the drift appears on the points of some of the ridges, but a short distance back they are covered with a deep, rich soil.

The county is well watered by the Iowa River and its tributaries, which stream enters on the north side, about five miles east of its northwest corner, and flowing transversely through it, passes out within a mile and a half of its southeast corner. The Iowa, in this part of its course, flows quite rapidly, and at an ordinary stage of water has perhaps an average of 100 feet in width, while the shores are usually high, rocky bluffs, in many places rising in bold, perpendicular palisades some fifty or sixty feet above the level of the stream, and alternately change from one side to the other, with but a limited area of what are usually called bottom land. These bluffs are usually flanked by a series of elevations, rising and extending back for some distance, and embracing the valuable timber belt of the county. Some very fine water powers are afforded by the Iowa River in this county, particularly at Iowa Falls. In a distance of six miles above that city the river has a descent of forty-six feet, with a constant supply of water, which might be used in propelling a large amount of machinery. The value of this magnificent power is greatly enhanced by the fact that in close proximity to it is an inexhaustible supply of good building stone, ready for the hand of the artisan, to construct substantial dams and permanent building for manufactories. Time is the only question in regard to the more full development of these resources, which at no very distant day will be the source of great wealth to the county.

The principal tributaries of the Iowa in this county are: South Fork, Henry and Minerva Creeks on the west, and Bear Creek on the east. The most important is the South Fork of the Iowa, which enters the county very near the northwest corner, and passing in a southeasterly direction to its junction with the main stream in the southeast corner township, thus watering and draining a large portion of the county. It has a number of tributaries, the most important being Tipton and Beaver Creeks. The streams are all bright and clear, and, being well distributed in all parts of the county, afford good drainage, and being largely supplied by springs, afford a constant, never-failing supply of stock water. Springs of clear, cold water are quite numerous, while good wells are readily obtained on the prairies by digging from fifteen to twenty-five feet deep.

It is estimated that about one-tenth of the county is covered with timber, the area of woodland gradually increasing where the fires are kept from destroying it, as in the thickly settled portions. Heavy bodies of timber extend along the Iowa River on both sides nearly all the way, so that the north and east portions of the county have a plentiful supply. There are also fine groves on the South Fork of the Iowa, and on Tipton and Honey Creeks. The timber consists of the different kinds of oak, walnut, butternut, hard and soft maple, hickory, elm, hackberry, linn, ash, cottonwood, birch, cedar, cherry, etc. On Iowa River, below the town of Steamboat Rock, are found some white pine, a few trees having attained a growth of sixty feet or more in height. Some years ago there were many larger trees, but they have been sawed into lumber, and several houses in the county have been partially built of native pine lumber. The western portion of Grundy is chiefly supplied with timber from Iowa River, in this county.

Most kinds of wild fruits found in other parts of the state are common here, including grapes, plums, crab-apples, red and black raspberries, strawberries and gooseberries. There are some blackberries, but they are not considered abundant. Among the different kinds of native shrubs may be mentioned the hazel, sumach, elder and prickly ash. The beautiful and highly ornamental tree known as the white birch is also found along the Iowa River. This, together with the white pine and cedar, are annually sought for and carried away to other counties as ornamental trees. Some two or three different species of willow grow along the borders of the streams.

RESOURCES.

Although Hardin County has not proved to be the wonderful Eldorado that it appeared in the golden dreams of some enthusiasts away back in 1853, yet it turns out to be rich in mineral resources of far more practical importance for the comfort, happiness and present and future prosperity of the county.

The early settlers scarcely appreciated the importance of the occasional coal croppings, as they appeared along the Iowa River on both sides, between the points where the towns of Steamboat Rock and Eldora are now located; or at least it was a number of years before it began to attract any considerable attention. It is true that two or three mines were opened and worked to a limited extent, yet most of the valuable coal lands were entered long after the first settlers had taken up the fine prairie lands adjacent. Doctor White, State Geologist, states that the position of the exposures of this strata, which is the most fully developed in the immediate vicinity of Eldora, so much to the northeastward of a line indicating the general trend of the border of the coal field, suggests that this coal region may possibly be a large outlier from the main field, similar to, but not so far removed, as the coal-measure outlier lying between Muscatine and Davenport. These mines are, however, of great value, not only to Hardin County, but to this entire section of the state. Since the completion of the Central Railroad of Iowa, the Eldora Coal Company, and some others, have opened several mines, which they have worked in an extensive manner, and annually ship large quantities of coal by the above named road and the Illinois Central. There are several mines now being successfully operated at different points, with an average thickness of from four to four and a half feet. The vein worked is doubtless the same in all the mines mentioned, the quality of the product and the thickness of the vein only varying as mining progresses from the river edges of the deposit. The coal is of the kind known as bituminous, and about equal to the average quality of Iowa coal. Extensive examinations have not yet been made, but enough is known to demonstrate the fact that a large area of this portion of the county is underlaid with coal, and that it will yet be found at many other points, as indicated by the exposure of the rock formations known as the coal-measures.

Hardin County enjoys the advantage of an abundant supply of excellent building stone, obtained nearly all along the Iowa River and its tributaries. The finest quality is found at Iowa Falls, where a limestone is easily quarried in unlimited quantities, which admits of a finish almost equal to marble. By some one of her wonderful and mysterious processes, Nature has lifted up for the use of man eighty feet in thickness of her sub-carboniferous limestone strata. It is quarried in blocks of any size, and with the greatest ease. Many substantial and neat stone buildings have been erected here from this material, and it is now being extensively shipped on the railroad to other points. It is well adapted for door and window caps and sills, as well as for ornamental stone work generally. Some three or four miles above Iowa Falls this stone sinks below the bed of the river, but reappears at Alden, six miles above Iowa Falls, where it is extensively quarried and used for building purposes. Where the limestone dips below, so as to become inaccessible, the sandstone of the coal-measures rises, affording to other portions of the county a very good quality of stone for ordinary purposes. This limestone is of the best quality for the manufacture of quick-lime, large quantities of which are supplied at Iowa Falls, Alden and other points.

Valuable beds of potter's and fire clay are found at various points, and there are several extensive potteries in the county, which annually manufacture large quantities of stoneware and considerable fire-brick. A considerable quantity of this clay is shipped to other points, and is pronounced by competent judges to be fully equal to the best New Jersey clay, and will at no distant day undoubtedly prove one of the important and valuable resources of the county. Excellent material for the manufacture of brick is generally found in nearly all sections of the county.

Some very fine specimens of iron ore have been found along the line of the Iowa River, in the vicinity of Iowa Falls.

GOLD EXCITEMENT.

In the Fall of 1852, the few adventurers who had found their way up the Iowa River into Hardin County caught a little of the gold fever which then prevailed pretty generally throughout the country. Shining particles of a substance resembling gold were found mixed with the sands along the river and in the ravines, and immediately it was proclaimed to the world that gold had been discovered. The reports spread far and wide, and for a time the newspapers of the country teemed with reports from the Hardin County gold mines. At one time, from five hundred to one thousand persons were encamped in tents and wagons along the river between Eldora and Steamboat Rock, all engaged in prospecting for gold. The excitement, however, gradually subsided, but was revived again to some extent in 1857. In that year O. M. Holcomb spent considerable time in prospecting and washing for the precious metal, and it is said succeeded in obtaining small quantities.

The question as to the existence of gold here, which is strenuously maintained by some, is still an unsettled one, although there is no disputing the fact that its equivalent is here, in rich beds of coal, potter's clay and building stone, all of which the excited gold seekers of 1853 overlooked.

PRODUCTIONS.

All the cereals yield abundantly, and with as little labor on the part of the farmer as in any other part of our great grain-producing state. Corn, wheat and oats are the staple productions, but all kinds of vegetables and the different tame grasses do well. The abundance and excellent quality of the native grass, however, have rendered it unnecessary up to the present for farmers to devote much attention to raising tame grasses. Hay in sufficient quantities to supply all demands is found on the prairies, free to all, at the expense of cutting and saving. Stock raising, for which the county is peculiarly adapted by the general characteristics of its surface and its numerous perenial springs and streams, is successfully carried on by the farmers, and is probably one of their largest and most reliable means of revenue. Thoroughbred and imported stock have been introduced with satisfactory results, so that the character and grade of the stock is but little, if any, inferior to that of the more noted stock breeding counties in the eastern and southern part of the state. Sheep have been introduced, and do well where properly cared for.

Although this county is too far north to ever become a first class fruit county, yet by the use of reasonable care in the selection of the hardier varieties of apples and pears, and by giving them proper cultivation, there is no difficulty in raising an abundant supply with reasonable certainty. Orchards have been set out in various places, which grow luxuriantly and yield fine annual crops of excellent flavored fruit. Small fruits of all kinds grow with little care, and produce with the rich profusion of their native clime.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first settlement in Hardin County was made on the Iowa River, in the southeast corner, in what is now Union Township, by Greenberry Higgins, who moved with his family from Keokuk County, in this state, in 1849. During the next year the following families located in the same vicinity: James A. Dawdy, William Robinson, Abraham Grimsley, and Samuel Smith, Sr., with his son, Samuel Smith, Jr. At this time Cedar Rapids was the nearest market, but it being a poor one the settlers did most of their trading at Iowa City, one hundred and fifteen miles distant. In the Fall of 1850 Jacob Kidwiler made a claim on the river some ten miles above the present site of Eldora, his nearest neighbor being Samuel Smith, Sr., who had taken a claim about twelve miles below. The next settlement was made in the vicinity of Iowa Falls, in February, 1851, by B. I. Talbott, his nearest neighbor being Kidwiler, eight miles down the river. In the Spring of 1852, Nathan Townsend and John Caldwell settled in the same vicinity. These three families were from Pleasant Plain, Jefferson County, Iowa, and their settlement was the farthest west at that time up on Iowa River. Mr. Talbott's claim embraced the site of the present town of Iowa Falls and the depot grounds. Soon after this a town was laid out a little southeast of the place where Iowa Falls is located, which was known by the name of Rocksylvania. A stone building was erected and occupied as a hotel, and some other improvements made.

In 1851, several families of the Society of Friends from North Carolina, settled in the south part of the county, on Honey Creek, where they subsequently laid out a town, calling it New Providence. This was the nucleus of the large thriving settlement of Friends in that part of the county. During the same year several families settled on the North Fork of Iowa River, in what was subsequently Pleasant Township, among whom were Isaac S. Moore, James Miller, Cavinder Gear and Thomas Bennett. Here a town was laid out called Point Pleasant. The settlers above mentioned did not at the time of their settlement enter the land on which they located, but merely made claims. The first entry of land in the county was made by Jacob Kidwiler, being a tract of timber land. It is believed the first mill was built at Hardin City, in 1853. At this point quite a flourishing village grew up, but it is now almost deserted as a place of business. There is still, however, a good flouring mill there. About the same time, or perhaps a little later, Mr. Talbott built a mill at Iowa Falls, on the site of the present large flouring mill.

On the 1st day of January, 1853, Jonathan and Samuel Edgington settled where Eldora is now located, and in June and July of that year the town was laid out. The town site was entered by the county for county seat purposes, except one forty-acre tract which was entered by James H. Drain, who donated one half of it to the county. During the same year, the Edgington Bros. brought the first stock of goods to the new town, and the first to the county. While the commissioners were pondering the question as to what the name of the new town should be, they were relieved by the suggestion of Mrs. S. R. Edgington, that it be called Eldora—being a contraction of Eldorado—as this was the era of the memorable gold excitement in Hardin County.

W. H. Foote came into the county in 1855, and located on a farm a few miles west of the present site of Iowa Falls, building the first house on the road between Cedar Falls and Fort Dodge. He is now a resident of Iowa Falls.

The county was duly organized in February, 1853, the following being the first county officers: Alexander Smith, County Judge; James Putman, Clerk; Samuel Smith, Treasurer and Recorder; Thomas Bennett, Sheriff; and S. R. Edgington, School Fund Commissioner. Before the organization the county was attached to Marshall for revenue and judicial purposes.

The first county warrant issued was for $20, in favor of John Shepherd, July 29, 1853, in payment for services as surveyor in laying out the Town of Eldora.

The first matrimonial transaction was the marrying of Peter S. Miller and Laura Jane Duke, April 14, 1853, by Alexander Smith, County Judge. During the same year five marriages were solemnized, the next year, twelve, and in 1855, there were forty-one.

The first term of the district court was held by Judge C. J. McFarland, in November, 1854, but of its proceedings no records are extant. The next court was held in April, 1856, and among the attorneys present were M. M. Crocker, E. W. Eastman, and James W. Woods—the latter gentleman being familiarly known by the nick-name of "Old-Timber." At this term, D. F. Ellsworth was admitted to the bar.

The first court house was a two story frame building erected in 1856; in October of the same year it was destroyed by fire, and a new one built the next year. An effort was made at one time to remove the county seat to Point Pleasant, on which a vote was finally taken, the result being for a long time contested between the two points. For some ten years the matter was in litigation, but was finally in June, 1868, decided by the Supreme Court in favor of Eldora.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper published in the county was started at Eldora, by O. M. Holcomb in 1856, and was called the Hardin County Sentinel. Its principal editor was Honorable J. D. Thompson, who was the first judge elected in the Eleventh District. In the Summer of 1857, it passed into the hands of James Speers, who, after running it something less than a year, sold one-half of the office to J. D. Hunter, who in a short time purchased the other half, and became sole editor and publisher, which he continued until 1863, when he turned the establishment over to M. C. Woodruff, now of the Dubuque Times, which, in November, 1865, removed it to Iowa Falls, and changed the name to the Iowa Falls Sentinel. During the time it was owned by Hunter, the entire office, books, papers, and materials, were consumed by fire, which necessitated a suspension for about two months, when it was again started with a new office. Woodruff conducted the Sentinel until April, 1869, when he sold to J. B. Matthews. It is a neat, live local paper, and is now under the editorial management of S. M. Weaver.

After the removal of the Sentinel to Iowa Falls, the Eldora Ledger was established January 6, 1866, by R. H. McBride, who has since conducted it, and by his able management made it one of the most popular local papers in the state. It has a large circulation, and is a good advertising medium.

The Eldora Herald made its first appearance in September, 1873, under the direction of Isaac L. Hunt, who is still its publisher and editor. It is a good local paper and is well supported.

The Ackley Independent, under the editorial management of J. R. Riblet, was established in 1869, and has since done much to advance the interests of Ackley and the northeastern part of the county.

The Alden News made its first appearance, December 2, 1873, with W. M. Robertson as editor and publisher. January 12, 1874, it passed into the control of J. B. & J. A. Matthews, who have made it an interesting local newspaper, and who are still laboring with a good degree of success to build up Alden and vicinity.

The Union Star appeared among the press of Hardin County in March, 1875, with the name of R. L. Rowe at the head of its editorial columns. It is still battling for a position in the well occupied field of Iowa journalism, and is rapidly growing in favor and influence. R. L. Rowe & Co., are the present editors and publishers.

RAILROADS.

For a new county, Hardin is particularly fortunate in possessing superior railroad advantages. The Dubuque & Pacific, and the Iowa Falls & Sioux City, now under control of and operated by the Illinois Central Company, pass east and west through the northern tier of townships, having stations at Ackley, Iowa Falls, and Alden. The Central Railroad of Iowa runs north and south through the eastern portion, passing he valuable and exhaustless coal-fields in the vicinity of Eldora. Other roads have been projected and probably will be built at some not very remote period in the future.

MORRIS FRISBIE, Auditor,	LEEB GILMAN, Clerk of Courts.
SOLON F. BENSON, Treasurer.	JOB STOUT, Recorder.
ALLEN E. WEBB, Sheriff.	FRANK A. MOORE, Supt. Common Schools.

S. R. EDGINGTON, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

ELDORA.

This town, the county seat of Hardin County, is handsomely located on the west side of the Iowa River, about five miles west of the eastern boundary line of the county. The situation is a beautiful and eligible one, the site being on a high rolling and well drained prairie, with plenty of timber and coal in the immediate vicinity. On the south and west is a fine, well improved farming district, while on the north and east lies the valuable timber lands of the Iowa River. The citizens of the town have devoted much attention to the planting of shade trees and ornamental shrubbery, and many neat and tasty residences attract the attention of strangers who visit the place for the first time. A public park has been laid out in a central position, around which most of the mercantile business is transacted in accordance with the arrangements of many western towns. Some portion of the early history of Eldora has already been given, which show that possessing a live, energetic class of business men who are fully awake to their own interests, it is fast becoming one of the important towns of the state. By their own unaided energy and perseverence they obtained railroad and telegraph communication with the outside world, and have laid the foundation for a permanent and certain future success. The town now has a population of some fifteen or eighteen hundred, and contains several fine churches, embracing the leading denominations of Methodists, Congregational, Presbyterian, Christian, and Universalist, while the public schools have good buildings, are well graded and under the charge of an efficient and experienced corps of teachers. The Masonic and Odd Fellows organizations are well represented, and the town contains every thing necessary to make a pleasant and desirable place of residence, while in a business point of view, few towns of its size west of the Mississippi can make a better showing, and offer more flattering inducements for the future.

IOWA FALLS.

This pleasant and wide awake business town was laid out in October, 1855, the original proprietors being J. L. Estis, Hosmer Stevens and —— Wilder, all from Kane County, Illinois, who purchased the land of —— Talbott. The first building erected after the town was laid out was a frame by Judge John F. Brown, now of Washington County, and M. C. Woodruff, now managing editor of the Dubuque Times, which they occupied as a real estate and land office. The first store was built by G. S. Smith, in 1855, while the first merchant was Samuel Parkman. Estes, Stevens & Larkins put up a three-story stone mill in 1856-7, while the first hotel, a handsome stone structure, and called the Western House, was erected by Alfred Woods, during the same seasons. A post office was established and a school house built in 1857, and the first church, a substantial and commodious structure was erected by the Congregationalists in 1860. The Dubuque & Pacific Railroad, now operated by the Illinois Central Company, was completed to this point in March, 1866, some ten years after the first survey of the line was made.

The situation of the town is one of the most beautiful, picturesque and romantic in Iowa, being located on the east bank of the Iowa River, or as some say on the north bank, the river here making a great bend to the east. The principal part of the town site is on a gently rolling, well drained plateau of ground, some seventy feet above the river, which here cuts its way through a deep gorge with perpendicular rocks or palisades rising on either side some fifty or sixty feet above the water. Fine groves of oak and hickory surround the town and originally covered a considerable portion of the site, forming one of the most attractive and naturally beautiful spots to be found on the whole course of the river. The lover of natural scenery can find in the immediate vicinity some of the most enchantingly beautiful valleys and sequestered vales that can be found in the country drained by the Mississippi River. Rock Run, which empties into the Iowa within the limits of the town, is a small sparkling brooklet that ripples down a deep, densely shaded ravine, overhung by boldly projecting rocks, whose moss and fern-covered sides never receive more than a few faint shimmerings of the noon day's sun, and in imagination carries the visitor from the undulating prairies and smoothly rounded hills of Iowa to the dark, solitary and grandly beautiful ravines and canons of the Pacific slope.

The town embraces several hundred acres, is handsomely laid out in wide, well graded streets and alleys. The buildings are generally of the most substantial kind, many of them being constructed of brick and stone, are neat and ornamental in their arrangement, while the taste displayed in the ornamentation of private grounds gives an appearance of homelike comfort and neatness, not usually found in new western towns. One need not see the people, or form their acquaintance, to judge of their character, as the evidences of intelligence and refinement are every where visible in the neatly painted dwellings, and their surroundings of flowers, trees and ornamental shrubbery. No one should visit Iowa Falls without taking a stroll to the cemetery, which is located on the bluffs overlooking the Iowa River a little northwest of town, and is under the special charge of the ladies. The association was formed in 1859 and incorporated in 1861, at which time a tract of about seven acres was purchased, which has been enclosed and ornamented in a style alike creditable to themselves and worthy of the purpose to which its is dedicated. The grounds have been laid out in drives and walks, a beautiful stone vault erected, and several hundred evergreens, maples and other ornamental shade trees planted. The religious societies that have erected houses of worship are the Congregational, Methodist and Baptist, while the Friends and Christians have organizations. The town has been incorporated and a proper system of municipal improvements put under way. It has a large public school building, containing all the modern improvements, one bank, six dry goods, three grocery, two drug and three hardware stores, three hotels, three agricultural implement establishments, two grain elevators, and the usual number of other shops and trades.

ACKLEY.

This flourishing town was first surveyed and laid out in 1857, by J. W. Ackley, of Waterloo, Iowa, in honor of whom it was named. It was not, however, anything more than a paper town until the completion of the Dubuque & Sioux City Railroad in September, 1865, as there was not at that time so much as a single house erected on the present town site. Two years previous to this one Jesse C. Foster, after wandering westward from the land of the Carolinas, of which he was a native, and associating himself for years with backwoodsmen, finally pitched his tent on the suburbs of what is now the town of Ackley. As the surrounding country was settled to a considerable degree, he thought it a good place to commence business, and accordingly set to work to build a store in which he sold goods until 1865, meeting with good success. When the cars arrived, and the shrill whistle of the locomotive blew out loud and long, heralding the march of progress, the town site was nothing but a naked prairie, interspersed with a few clumps of brush. No sooner was the depot established, however, than enterprising men from the east, whose foresight enabled them to discover that it was destined to be a town of considerable importance, began to come in, and the tide of immigration commenced that has continued to flow until the town has now a population of some fifteen hundred, and is the trading and shipping point for a large and well improved farming country.

William Frances erected the first building on Main Street, in which he opened a general variety store. J. C. Foster removed his store into town, and establishing himself on the north side of Main Street, was the second merchant in town. M. Burns, Pardee & Foster, and Carter & Joseph soon after erected warehouses and elevators near the depot, Burns also engaging in the lumber business, as did one Eggert, who started a lumber yard about the same time. A. S. Nye and —— Sechrist built stores a little later. In four months' time five stores, three warehouses, and a number of dwellings were erected, and the place began to assume a business-like appearance.

The town was incorporated in 1869, and now contains a large public school building, several handsome churches, Masonic and Odd Fellows lodges, a large number of business houses, man ufactories, etc., etc.

STEAMBOAT ROCK.—This town is pleasantly situated on the east bank of Iowa River, five miles above Eldora, on the line of the Central Railroad of Iowa, and was laid out in 1855, the original proprietors being Isaac N. Lesh, Charles Boyle and John Royal. S. B. Cunningham sold the first goods here, in October, 1855, opening his stock in a stable covered with prairie hay. The town takes its name from a large projecting rock on the river bluff at this point, which at a distance presents the appearance of a steamboat.

ALDEN.—This place is on the west bank of Iowa River, about six miles above Iowa Falls, and one mile from the line of the Iowa Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, where a station is located. Henry Alden first settled here in June, 1854, and in 1856 laid out the village. He also built a saw mill. Excellent lime is manufactured here from stone obtained in the banks of the river. There is good water power at this point.

The other villages and post offices in the county are Abbott, Berlin, Cottage, Ellis, Hardin City, Midland, New Providence, Point Pleasant, Tipton Grove and Union.

POTTAWATTAMIE COUNTY.

Pottawattamie County borders the Missouri River, in the third tier of counties from the south line of the state. With the exception of Kossuth it is the largest in the State, its superficial area being about 960 square miles, or 614,400 acres. Besides the Missouri River, it is drained by numerous small streams which traverse its surface from north to south with a slight westerly deflection.

The western portion of the county is a broad, level strip of territory, from three to ten miles wide, and known as the Missouri River Bottom. Bordering this, on the east, the range of bluffs rises steep and grand, in many places almost perpendicular, from two to three hundred feet in height. The range is parted by numerous narrow valleys and ravines, which descend from the adjacent uplands, but never loses its distinctive outlines. This remarkable range, rising abruptly from the sweeping plain, without a rock or stone upon its face, presents a view at once varied, grand and beautiful. The adjacent uplands are broken, and in many places too uneven for tillage; but are well adapted to grazing, and are frequently interspersed with thrifty groves of timber. Further east the broken outlines give place to a beautiful, undulating or waved surface, peculiar to the Western Slope, alternating with level valleys, from a half mile to a mile in width, bordering the streams. Everywhere there is a pleasing variety of scenery, enhanced in lovelinness by a pure atmosphere and a constant succession of rich, mellow tints, which never fail to charm the eye with new and delightful forms and colors revealed by the perpetual play of light and shade upon the varied outlines.

The county is not abundantly supplied with timber, but there is enough, with proper economy in the use, to answer for all ordinary purposes. The largest bodies are the cottonwood groves along the Missouri, but there are also some excellent bodies, embracing different varieties, on West Nishnabotany, Honey, Pigeou and Mosquito Creeks.

The soil is that of the well known bluff deposit, descending to a very great depth, and on the surface richly intermingled with vegetable mold. This entire deposit is strongly silicious, but everywhere finely pulverized and intermingled with a slight proportion of lime, sufficient to give it the remarkable consistency for which it is celebrated. It readily absorbs moisture, so that surplus water never remains upon its surface, and its great depth enables it to retain enough to supply vegetation in case of a long absence of rain. It therefore rarely suffers from extremes of drought or rain. This character holds on the uplands and in the valleys. This peculiar soil seems to be equally well adapted to the production of wheat, corn and grass, a combination which is extremely rare. It lies within the great wheat belt which here deflects down the Missouri river, overlapping the belt noted for the highest production of corn. The other cereals do equally well here. Wild grasses grow luxuriantly, and tame grasses thrive, and the soil is well adapted to vegetables and fruit.

There are exposures of limestone in several places in the southeast part of the county. On West Nishnabotany limestone suitable for building purposes is found. North of Council Bluffs, on Mosquito Creek, and along the Missouri River are also exposures of limestone. At various places along the base of the Missouri bluffs are masses of a coarse quality of sandstone and conglomerate, formed by the percolation of lime water through beds of sand and pebbles belonging to the drift deposit, but this deposit is practically worthless. It is not a stratified rock, and the cementing process usually extends only a few feet inward from the surface.

Good brick is manufactured at Council Bluffs, and materials for the purpose exist elsewhere, but not in abundance.

HISTORY.

In the Summer of 1804, the celebrated explorers, Lewis and Clarke, on their way up the Missouri River, held a council with the Indians at the place where Fort Calhoun was subsequently established, on the Nebraska side of the river, about twenty miles above the present city of Council Bluffs. From this circumstance they gave to that place the name of "Council Bluffs." As early as 1824, a French trader named Hart, had established a trading house on the bluffs just above the large spring, now known as "Mynster Spring," within the limits of the present city of Council Bluffs. At this time the American Fur Company had established various trading posts in the great Northwest, and this point was known to their employes who ascended the river as Lacote de Hart, or Hart's Bluff. The spot was doubtless selected for the advantages of the splendid spring of pure water which bursts out high up on the bluff and flows down in a volume almost sufficiently strong for propelling machinery. At that time the Missouri River was navigated by a few traders and persons belonging to the Fur Company, having their headquarters at St. Louis, and only with small keel boats propelled by hand. In 1827, Francis Guittar, a Frenchman in the employ of the American Fur Company, encamped with others in the timber at the foot of the bluffs where now Broadway with its double row of magnificent business blocks is located. He and his companions indulged in the fine sport of shooting deer, elk, and bufalo on the prairie now within the city limits. He subsequently selected this as his home, counting the years from the date above given. Others, however, permanently located here before he did.

In the Summer of 1838, Davis Hardin and family, including his wife and seven children, landed in the county, at the point then known as Council Point, about four miles below the City of Council Bluffs. Mr. Hardin had been appointed to act as government farmer among the Pottawattamie Indians, who were then about to be removed from the Platte Purchase in Missouri to Iowa. Council Point is now known as Hardin's Bend. A few months after, the Indians were brought up, and Mr. Hardin then removed to where he opened a farm on a little stream known as Indian Creek, now in the business portion of the city. His sons were John, Allen, Richard, and Martin D. Hardin, and became permanent settlers, remaining here throughout the time when the region was under Mormon control, but maintaining very little intercourse with them. When the Pottawattamie Indians were brought up, a number of white persons came also, including traders, agents, and other government employes. The Indians scattered in various portions of the adjacent country, but received their government annuities and supplies at Council Point and Trader's Point, a few miles below the city.

In 1839, two companies of troops came up and built a block house, or sort of fort, on the bluff in the east part of what is now the city, and shortly after, a Catholic Mission was established here under the charge of Fathers De Smith and Veright. They built a dwelling house and used the block-house for religious services. They also located a burying ground near the fort, which is now within the city limits. At this time "Billy Caldwell" was the principal chief of the Pottawattamies. No white persons came as settlers, except those among the Indians as traders and agents in various capacities, or those connected with the military or missions, until the Mormons came in 1846. The Indians remained until 1846-7, when by the treaty of June 5, 1846, they relinquished this territory and removed to Kansas.

MORMONS.

Their departure made way for the advent of the followers of Joseph Smith, who, after the death of the prophet, at Nauvoo, in 1844, turned their faces westward. Brigham Young, with the head men of the church, halted for the Winter of 1846-7, at a place called Winter-quarters, now Florence, Nebraska. In the Spring he departed on his journey with a portion of the colony, but the greater part returned to the Iowa side, mainly within the limits of Pottawattamie County, where others had arrived in the Spring of 1846, in season to plant and secure a crop. The center of this community was established on Indian Creek in the vicinity of the old fort, at a place first called Miller's Hollow, and afterwards by them named Kanesville, in honor of Colonel Kane, of Pennsylvania, who visited them at an early day; but their settlement spread rapidly over the county and into some of the adjoining counties wherever groves of timber and water afforded an available location. Over this community Orson Hyde, priest, writer, editor, and lawyer, was installed as the president of the quorum of twelve, and the country remained under their exclusive control for several years. In 1846, they raised a battalion 500 strong for the Mexican War under Colonel Clark, which, after traversing Northern Mexico, and taking part in the battles there, closed its campaign in California. It is claimed that the gold in the Sacramento was first discovered by this battalion. Here many of them remained and engaged in mining. Mr. William Garner was one of these, who, after securing considerable gold, returned to Kanesville and made his permanent home in the county. The Mormon population was probably most numerous in 1848, but in 1849, after many had left for Utah, it numbered 6,552, and in 1850, 7,828, but they were not all within the present limits of the county. Many followed Brigham Young previous to 1852, when finally the word went round that all true believers should gather together at Salt Lake. The Gentiles now swarmed into Kanesville and all the surrounding country. Farms were sold to them, lots, cabins, and stores were bartered off, all at a ruinous sacrifice, and the migration went forward and continued with diminishing volume during several succeeding years until all who were willing to acknowledge Brigham as their leader and the true successor of the prophet had left the country. A remnant, however, remained, some of them abjuring the Mormon faith, and others rallying around the standard of Joseph Smith, Jr., who abjured the practice of Polygamy.

In 1849, the unexampled rush of emigration to the California gold mines commenced. Kanesville lay directly in its route, and soon became a general rendezvous and starting point for all who crossed the State of Iowa as the last settlement ere they set out upon the plains. Traders, liquor venders, gamblers, horse-thieves, and desperate characters of every description now made it their headquarters. Gambling and crime ran riot. Self-constituted vigilance committees flourished. A short rope and the nearest tree ended many a mad career. When the miners began to return the rage seemed rather to increase than diminish, and it was several years ere order was restored.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized Sept. 21, 1848. The first county commissioners were A. H. Perkins, David D. Yearsley, and George D. Coulton, and they held their first session at the house of Hiram Clark in Kanesville—T. Burdick was their clerk; he was also first county judge, elected in 1851; James Sloan was elected district judge, and held his first term in the county, May 5th, 1851. Evan M. Green was Clerk, and Alexander McRea, Sheriff. At this term Orson Hyde was admitted to the bar. Sloan was appointed by the Governor; he was a native of Ireland, and many anecdotes are related of his wit and eccentricity on the bench. He resigned in the course of a year, and was succeeded by Judge Bradford. These officials were all Mormons.

Evan Green was appointed post master at Kanesville, receiving his commission in 1848, but it was some time before regular mail service was established between it and the nearest post office in Missouri, and four or five years before mails arrived regularly from the east.

The first representative of the county in the State Legislature was Henry Miller. In 1852 Archibald Bryant was elected Representative and Hadley D. Johnson Senator.

THE FIRST GENTILES.

In June, 1848, a store was established on the present site of Council Bluffs, a point then known as Miller's Hollow before it was named Kanesville. The business was opened in the name of Stutsman & McDonaid, and was carried on by Mr. Stutsman. Mr. Jonathan B. Stutsman was the first Gentile who settled among the Mormons. He soon after married and remained a prominent resident of the place, becoming one of its leading merchants. His business was carried on for some time in a log building. He subsequently built the first frame store, and also the first frame dwelling house in Council Bluffs. The next Gentile settler was Mr. Cornelius Voorhis, who arrived on the 17th of August, 1848, and opened a small store in partnership with Eddy, Jamison & Co., of St. Louis. The third was Wm. B. Ferguson, of St. Louis, who also engaged in trade.

The various settlements scattered about the county included one a short distance east of Kanesville, on Mosquito Creek, near the seat of Wick's old Indian Mill, where Wm. Garner, Ezra Scofield, Simon Graybill, Alexander Follett and Alexander Marshall remained after the exodus; another on Pigeon Creek, in the northern part of the county; another on the Nishnabotany at a place afterwards called Macedonia, where Peter Haas and Weymeyer built a mill, and another in the northwestern part of the county in and about Lewin's Grove, where the first settlers were Captain Joshua Headlie, Wm. Henderson and John Kritzinger, the latter of whom built a mill.

In the Summer of 1850 Joseph Tootle came up from St. Joseph, Mo., and established the celebrated outfitting house for California emigrants, known as the Elephant Store, and J. A. Jackson became connected with the house in 1851. The trade of the place was also increased in 1850 by the accession of W. D. Turner, S. H. Riddle and J. L. Foreman. Dr. B. Y. Shelly commenced here the practice of medicine the same year, and Dr. S. E. Williams, then a medical student, arrived in the Fall. Dr. P. J. McMahon came in 1851, so also did B. R. Pegram, A. S. Bryant and the Robinson Brothers. The immigration that came in 1852 to take the place of the Mormons was numerous. Early that Spring Mr. Samuel Bayliss purchased of Henry Miller his tract in the valley of Indian Creek. The deed was signed by Orson Hyde, and commenced, "Jesus Christ and the Church of Latter-day Saints sell to Mr. Samuel Bayliss," etc. The title has never been disputed.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The public lands of Pottawattamie County were surveyed during the years 1851-2, and the United States land office was located at Council Bluffs early in the Spring of 1853, with Joseph R. D. Street, Register, and Dr. S. M. Ballard, Receiver. The first entry was made by Joseph D. Lane. The amount of land entered in the month of March, 1853, was 3,810 acres. This was under the preemption law, and actual sales did not take place until the 6th of June. The amount of land taken at this time was small, but sales soon increased. In 1855 speculators came from all parts of the country, and in the Spring of 1856 the demand became almost a mania, caused by the passage of the law making large grants to four proposed lines of railway across the state, and the announcement that in consequence the sales would be closed. The business closed on the last of May, and was not reopened until the Winter of 1858. In 1855 a fever of speculation in city real estate set in, and reached its highest point in 1857. Large additions were made to the plat of Council Bluffs, and lots advanced to enormous prices. The crash of 1857 came on, however, and put an end to this state of affairs. The lands were reopened to public sale in February, 1858, and what remained in this section of Iowa, besides the railroad grants, were nearly all entered before the passage of the homestead law in 1862.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATIONS.

In 1852 the county was divided into three civil townships, Kane, Macedonia and Rockford, Macedonia comprised the eastern portion of the county, Kane the southwestern, and Rockford the northwestern. The latter had been quite extensively settled by Mormons, of whom Hiram Bostwich was the first, in 1846, and remained permanently. Here also the first school in the county was taught in 1848. The first Gentile settlers were Joseph Hill, Joseph Kirby, Robert McGavern, Samuel Kirkland and Sherman Goss, who came in 1850-1.

Center Township was detatched from Macedonia and organized June 23, 1856. The territory assigned to this township had been settled about Big Grove by the Mormons as early as 1847-8. The Gentiles began to arrive about four years later, April 29, 1852, Joshua C. Layton arrived and settled near the eastern limits of the Grove. His brother Joseph came the following year. Jacob Rust was one of the old settlers. The town of Iota was laid out in this township by Thomas Tostevin, Horace Everett, Geo. Reed and Dr. P. J. McMahon, in 1856, and the expectation was for a time entertained that it would become the seat of justice of a new county.

In July, 1856, Walnut Township was formed, also out of Macedonia. Milton P. Black, Wm. E. Van Riper, William and Frederick Merwherter, Joseph and Granville Pierson, and Amos West, were early settlers in this township.

The Township of Crescent was formed on the 2d of March, 1857. When the Mormons left this locality in 1852-3, they were succeeded by a number of families from Indiana, among whom was William A. Reel and sons in 1852. They erected a saw mill. Other settlers were Edmund Latham, Joseph Boulden, David Dunkle, and Elkanah Hall. A prospect of the deflection from Crescent to the Missouri River in the proposed railroad line at one time, attracted unusual attention here, and Crescent City was laid out and grew rapidly in 1856-7. Business sprang up and a post office was established in 1857. Here Joseph E. Johnson, the editor of the Council Bluffs Bugle started the Oracle early in 1856. A failure of the railroad prospects caused a decline in the prospects and business of the town which set in in 1857, as rapid as its previous growth.

Boomer Township was organized January 8, 1858, in the north part of the county. This, also, had been settled by the Mormons as early as 1847. Of this class Robert Kent, Samuel Bateman, Joseph Wild, John Macklin, Joseph Beardsley, and William McKeon, remained after the exodus, and organized a church of the branch which repudiated Brigham Young. Joseph Hall in 1852, and Z. W. Remington and William Goodman in 1854, were the first settlers who were not Mormons.

Silver Creek Township was organized September 7, 1858. The early settlers were a man named Mace, who located upon Silver Creek in 1850, at a place long known as a stage station, a man by the name of Shaw who settled on Keg Creek, William Campbell, James M. Putney, and Thomas Moffatt, who came in 1852.

Grove Township was organized September 25, 1858. The early settlers were James S. Watson, A. J. Field, Jacob Anderson, William Ellswick, John Smith, James Otto, A. F. Wheler, S. M. B. Wheler, Thomas Connor, and John C. Traver. Wheeler's Grove Post Office is near the center of the township.

James Township was organized September 25, 1858. Samuel Flesher, S. A. Slocum, Belknap, and Anderson, were the first settlers, but it was not extensively settled until late years.

York Township was organized July 14, 1859. Joseph Holman, Isaac Atkins, Elam Meehim, Alexander and David G. Clough, were the first settlers. The township settled slowly for many years, and when organized contained only fourteen voters.

The other townships which form a part of the county at present were organized during late years.

COUNCIL BLUFFS.

This city has a pleasant location at the foot of the bluffs in an arm of the Missouri River valley running up between the hills, and extending out over the beautiful valley towards the river some three miles distant. On the slopes and summits are many fine residences, with room for many more, overlooking an enchanting view for many miles up and down the river and across on the hills of the Nebraska side, where the City of Omaha rises on the opposite slope.

The City of Council Bluffs is the most important railroad center on the Missouri River. It is, therefore, a commercial point of much importance. It commands a large trade, both wholesale and retail.

The place had grown almost to the proportions of a city before the land on which it was built was brought into market, consequently none of the property-holders possessed a title. In April, 1854, therefore, Congress passed an act authorizing the County Judge to enter a square mile, embracing the town limits, for the benefit of the occupants. The land was accordingly entered by Judge Street, May 10, 1854, and Thomas Tostevin was employed by him to make a survey of the plat. This was a difficult matter, as the claims frequently conflicted, but the survey was made and generally acquiesced in, and has since been recognized as the original survey of the plat.

On the 19th of January, 1853, the name of Kanesville was relinquished, and Council Bluffs adopted, the name given by Lewis and Clark to the point twenty miles above where they held their council with the Indians, and on the 24th of February following, an act was passed by the Legislature granting Council Bluffs the privileges of a municipal corporation. In April an election for mayor and councilmen was held, resulting in the choice of C. Voorhis as Mayor, and S. S. Bayliss, G. G. Rice, S. T. Carey, L. O. Littlefield, L. M. Klein, J. E. Johnson, J. K. Cook, and J. B. Stutsman, Councilmen. The other officers were, W. H. Robinson, Recorder; M. W. Robinson, Marshal; A. D. Jones, Surveyor; G. P. Stiles, City Attorney; Isaac Beebe, Supervisor; and G. A. Robinson, Captain of Fire Company. During the Summer the mayor resigned, and the city government appears to have been in abeyance until the election of a new council in the Spring of 1855.

In January, 1857, the city charter of Council Bluffs was amended, the city was divided into five wards, the powers of the council were greatly increased, city courts were established, and the boundaries of the corporation were increased so as to embrace an area of about four miles square, extending westward to the Missouri River. At the first election thereafter, J. S. Hooton was chosen Mayor, and Frank Street, Recorder. A more efficient code of ordinances was passed soon after, and considerable progress was made in public improvements.

In 1856, the city borrowed $10,000 and expended it mostly in widening and grading Broadway, then the principal street. At a subsequent period $60,000 more was borrowed on city bonds, and expended in improving the streets, furnishing fire engines, public offices and other conveniences.

INCIDENTS.

In 1853 Samuel S. Bayliss and his brother, J. D. Bayliss, opened a brick yard and burned several kilns, the first ever manufactured in Western Iowa, and several brick buildings were erected in the city the same season.

May 13, 1853, a brutal murder was committed by a California emigrant named Muir, at Glendale, his victim being an emigrant like himself, by the name of Samuels. A jury was impaneled before Judge Lynch, and the murderer was sentenced and hanged to the limb of a tree upon the spot.

On the 14th of November, 1853, Council Bluffs was visited by a destructive fire. Twenty-five buildings were burned down, including nearly all the business houses. The work of rebuilding was commenced and carried on vigorously; but one year from the former date, November 14, 1854, another fire broke out on the same spot, and consumed seventeen buildings. Several conflagrations have since occurred, but none of them so widely disastrous.

A banking house was first opened in the city by Green & Weare, in the Fall of 1854, and managed by them until 1855, when Thomas H. Benton, Jr., was added to the firm, and directed its affairs until its dissolution in 1857. Banking houses were opened in 1856 by Baldwin & Dodge and by Henn, Williams, Horton & Co. A branch of the State Bank of Iowa was established in 1860, with James A. Jackson, President, and John D. Lockwood, Cashier. This was afterwards changed to the First National Bank of Council Bluffs, and was the first bank of issue established in the city.

The Council Bluffs Iron Works were established in 1859, by F. C. Hendrie & Co., and incorporated as a stock company in 1866. The works occupy a frontage of one hundred feet on each of two streets, and their business is very extensive, employing a large number of men.

During the Winter of 1859-60 the business of pork packing was instituted in this city, and has since been quite extensively carried on.

RAILROADS.

During the Fall of 1853 and the following Winter, G. M. Dodge, then a resident of Iowa City, and formerly an engineer in the construction of the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad, surveyed a line across the state from Davenport to Council Bluffs, known as the Mississippi & Missouri River, which was mainly adopted in the final construction of the road. Mr. Dodge continued his survey on and up the Valley of the Platte. This was the inception of the Union Pacific. In the Fall of 1853, Colonel (afterwards General) Samuel R. Curtis also traced out a line across the state, and made arrangements for a depot ground at Council Bluffs, and in January following the county voted to subscribe $100,000 toward building the road. This route was never adopted, and no bonds were issued; but General Curtis afterwards became President of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and continued to take a warm interest in Council Bluffs, where he eventually died.

The Cedar Rapids & Missouri River Railroad was the first, however, to approach the city from the east. The officers of the road visited Council Bluffs in July, 1866, and secured a contribution of thirty thousand dollars and eighty acres of land for depot ground from the citizens. September 14 ground was broken for it in the city, and on the 22d of January following (1871) the first locomotive reached the city, which was the occasion of a grand jubilee. The line was immediately leased by the Chicago & Northwestern Company.

The Summer of 1858 witnessed the inception of the railroad between Council Bluffs and St. Joseph, Missouri, and a survey was made from the former place to the state line by H. C. Nutt, who reported very favorably. Ground was broken for the proposed road in Pottawattamie County, November 7, 1859. On the 8th of December, 1859, the City of Council Bluffs decided to issue its bonds, in the sum of $25,000, in aid of its construction, and the bonds were subsequently issued. The county likewise contributed $40,000 toward the same object from the proceeds of its swamp lands. Work progressed slowly until 1865, when new hands took the contract, to whom both city and county transferred their stock, on condition that the road should be completed by January 1, 1867. The first construction train reached Council Bluffs over this road on the 27th of December, 1866, and on the 17th of December, 1867, the road was completed and ready for business.

December 26, 1867, the first locomotive crossed the Missouri over a temporary bridge, for the use of the Union Pacific road, and late in the Fall of 1868 work commenced on the permanent bridge of the Union Pacific Railroad opposite the city. The completion of this road placed the city on the great trans-continental line of commerce and travel.

Additional railroad communications have since been secured, both to St. Paul and Dakota, by the Sioux City & Pacific and its extensions.

In 1857 the county voted to subscribe three hundred thousand dollars stock to the Mississippi & Missouri River Railroad Company. The company succeeded in getting a hundred thousand dollars of bonds, in payment of stock, issued in January, 1859, but the county judge refused to affix his signature, until public opinion became irresistible. The work was not carried on according to terms, but about $35,000 of the bonds were sold, and resulted in heavy judgments, which the county was compelled to pay; the remainder were finally surrendered to the county. The road was not completed to Council Bluffs until May 12, 1869, when the first train of cars reached the city over it. This is now known as the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, ETC.

A building called Hyde's New Hall was purchased for the sum of $200, in June, 1852, and used for five or six years for a court house, school house, and various other purposes.

In February, 1856, the contract was let for the erection of a court house to John Hammer and C. Johnson for the sum of $42,000. Bonds of the county were issued to defray the expenses, and work commenced during the Summer, and by Winter the walls of the basement and first story were nearly completed. The work went steadily forward the following year, and late in December, 1867, the county officers were enabled to move into it. It is a fine edifice of two stories and a basement. The basement is constructed of stone, and the superstructure of brick. The style of architecture is composite, size 58x86 feet, and the cost of construction was about $50,000.

On the 18th of February, 1859, the grand jury of the county presented an indictment against John H. Sherman, County Judge, in which he was charged with gross mismanagement of fiscal affairs and illegally issuing county warrants. Pending his trial an investigation was held in which it appeared that within a period of nine months he had issued $33,000 in warrants. He was tried, found guilty, and removed from office in August, 1859. At this time county warrants went as low as twenty-five cents on the dollar. Many school fund securities were found to be worthless, and it was many years before the county was enabled to emerge from the mismanagement of its affairs and recover its pecuniary credit.

The Pottawattamie County Agricultural Society was organized in 1858. Caleb Baldwin, President; W. H. Kinman, Secretary, and held its first fair at Council Bluffs, on the 13th and 14th of October, which was very successful. This institution is now in a very prosperous condition.

NEWSPAPERS.

In 1848, Orson Hyde established at Kanesville a paper entitled the Frontier Guardian, which he continued until 1852. It was primarily devoted to the interests of the Mormon Church, and generally favored the Whigs in politics. When Hyde went to Salt Lake in 1852, he took a part of the office material with him, and the remainder went into the Bugle office.

The Bugle was founded in 1850 as a Democratic paper, by A. W. Babbitt. In 1852, he sold to J. E. Johnson, who continued the publication for about four years, when he also followed his church to Salt Lake. The Bugle was a heavy sufferer in the fire of 1853, and also of the year following. The Bugle printed a daily issue for a while in 1857, but the experiment was abandoned and not resumed until the early part of the war. The Bugle was discontinued after the establishment of the Globe.

The Globe was established in 1870 as a weekly, and as a daily in 1873. Published by the Globe Printing Company, and edited by J. H. Williams.

The Inland Advocate is a religious paper published weekly by Knotts & Davison; Reverend P. F. Breese, editor. It was established in 1872, by Joseph Knotts.

The other newspapers are the Council Bluffs Republican, published weekly by D. H. Honn. The Independent, A. M. Underhill, editor, and the Christian Expositor.

The Avoca Delta is a spicy sheet published at Avoca by J. C. Adams.

The first number of the Council Bluffs Nonpariel appeared in May, 1857. It was a handsomely printed sheet of nine columns to the page, issued weekly. Maynard & Long, proprietors; William W. Maynard, editor. The daily was established in 1861. Mr. Maynard was succeeded by Mr. Burke, in 1862. He was succeeded by Maynard & Chapman, and this firm by Chapman & Walker, this by Chapman, Gray & Mill, this by Gray, Schermerhorn & Mill, which became Schermerhorn & Mill, and afterwards Schermerhorn & Smith. November 1, 1870, it was incorporated as a stock company, with John W. Chapman, President, and M. C. Schermerhorn, Thomas Treynor, and Spencer Smith joint stock-holders with him. It is now the oldest paper in Western Iowa, and operates four steam presses. The daily is published every morning except Mondays, and the weekly every Thursday; Republican in politics. The office was destroyed by fire in 1868, while the property of Chapman & Walker.

A paper called the Chronotype was issued a short time in 1857, but it changed hands and became the Democratic Clarion, which was at length drowned by the Bugle, and departed in 1868. The Council Bluffs Press had a brief lease of life in 1859.

The Council Bluffs Democrat, daily and weekly, made its first appearance May 3, 1868. Alfred S. Kieroff & Co., publishers; but discontinued October 31, following.

CHURCHES.

The first orthodox sermon preached in the county was by Reverend Wm. Rector, of Fremont County. In 1850, Reverend William Simpson, a Methodist clergyman, came into the county in pursuit of horse thieves, and was soon afterwards stationed at Kanesville, his circuit extending over Fremont, Mills and Pottawattamie Counties. Simpson, in one of his sermons, drew upon himself the wrath of Hyde by likening the Mormons to the frogs that "come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet." Hyde pronounced a curse upon him and notified him that his life would be in danger if he remained. Simpson waited upon him and informed him that he would hold him responsible for all harm that might follow, and the curse was withdrawn. In 1853, the first church was erected.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1856, and the following year a subscription was raised and the erection of a brick church commenced, which proceeded, however, only as far as the basement walls, when work was suspended until 1865, when the edifice was completed.

St. Paul's Parish of the Episcopal Church was organized in April, 1856, and August 1, 1857, the corner stone of a church edifice was laid, but the work was continued no farther, and soon afterwards a wooden church building was erected on the lot, and has since been occupied by the society.

The Methodist Episcopal Society laid the corner stone of their church edifice, June 14, 1866. It was completed the following year. Standing in a prominent position, a model of architectural beauty and solidity, it became the pride of the city.

The Odd Fellows were the first secret society to organize here, and Council Bluffs Lodge No. 49, began its existence in November, 1853. In July, 1855, a Masonic Lodge was organized and held their first meetings in the Odd Fellows' Hall.

Council Bluffs maintains excellent graded public schools, with costly and substantial school houses. The State Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb occupies fine buildings and grounds a short distance below the city.

AVOCA.

This is a thriving young town and shipping point on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, about thirty-eight miles east of the Missouri River, by the line of the railroad. It was laid out in March, 1869, by B. F. Allen and others. The first house was erected by Captain W. F. Dingman, and occupied by him as a hotel. Captain C. V. Gardner and family were among the first settlers. The first sermon in the place was preached by Reverend C. W. Blodgett, a Methodist minister, in the railroad depot building. The first school was taught by B. L. Bunnell.

The town has a handsome location between two branches of the Nishnabotany River about two miles above their junction. There are groves of timber convenient, and a rich and beautiful farming region extends in every direction. It has about 1,500 inhabitants, with the various advantages of a first class town, including mercantile and other business facilities, and good educational and religious privileges. There are few more promising points in Western Iowa.

The business of the town comprises many good stores, and all the principal branches of mercantile trade are represented. The Avoca Bank is a substantial institution controlled by E. W. Davis. Its shipping business is important, and two or more grain elevators are in active operation. It has also a good flouring mill propelled by steam.

The Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Catholics have good churches. A substantial brick school house, well furnished, is one of the ornaments of the place in which its youth are regularly instructed by excellent teachers.

A move was made a short time since to have a new county created out of the eastern part of Pottawattamie with Avoca as the county seat, but from some cause it failed.

WALNUT.

This is a thriving town on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, about six and a half miles east of Avoca, situated on a beautiful, high rolling prairie. It has a rich, extensive farming region all around it, and for its size does a surprising amount of business. It has several stores, two grain elevators, a steam flouring mill, and a very neat school house, Mr. Hinkley, one of the first settlers, has lately opened a banking office.

NEOLA is a town on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, eighteen miles from Council Bluffs.

MINDEN is a new town recently laid out on the railroad five miles east of Neola.

WESTON is a station on the railroad in section 36, township 76, range 43, but no town is yet laid out.

The other villages and post offices in the county are, Big Grove, Crescent City, Downsville, Honey Creek, Loveland, Macedonia, Parma, Taylor's Station, Waveland, Wheeler's Grove and Living Spring.

CASS COUNTY.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

Cass is one of the southwestern counties, being the second east of the Missouri River, and the third north of the State of Missouri. It is twenty-four miles square, containing an area of 368,640 acres. The entire county is on the "Missouri Slope," or within the area drained by tributaries of the Missouri River. The numerous streams drain the county completely, and diversify the character and appearance of the surface. On almost every section of land in the county there is living water. The East Nishnabotany, Indian Creek, Turkey Creek and Seven Mile Creek afford good water powers.

The northeast corner of the county is about 920 feet above low water in the Mississippi River at Davenport. The surface is generally undulating prairie, but there is considerable timber along some of the streams; the area of timber land in the county being estimated at about 12,000 acres. It is pretty well distributed throughout the county. The soil partakes of the general character peculiar to that of the Missouri slope in Iowa, and is rich and productive. The valleys along the principal streams are wide and afford some of the finest farming lands in Iowa. The valley of the Nishnabotany is noted for its beauty and fertility, and some of the smaller streams into which it is subdivided in this county retain these characteristics. Almost the entire surface of the county is susceptible of the highest cultivation, and is adapted to all the cereals, grasses, and vegetables common to the latitude. It is also a fine stock-growing and grazing county.

The distribution of water is such that hundreds of locations can be found where both water and timber shelter can be had on the same farm for stock purposes. Kentucky blue grass, as well as other grasses, flourish well in Cass County. No county in the state, perhaps, can present greater inducements for this purpose than the favored County of Cass, which is sufficiently shown by the number of stock farmers already settled there, and the fact that they have all become wealthy, among whom may be mentioned John Hoply, Thomas Meredith, James Baxter, Oliver Mills, and many others. Every year there is an increased interest exhibited both in growing timber and hedges, as will be seen from the late statistics which will be found in this atlas. Osage orange hedging some years ago was thought to be a failure, but new systems and more care have proven it to be a complete success, and when brought into more general use will relieve very much the appearance of the prairies. There can be no question but that fruit growing can be successfully carried on in this county, as is demonstrated by some fine young orchards of apples, pears, cherries, and other small fruits to be seen in different parts of the county. Fruit growing requires more care and experience than the new settlers were disposed to devote to it, which is the reason that it has not had more attention, but as the county has increased in wealth and population it has been taken hold of, and now we have several good nurseries in the county. The county has good roads, and is famous for the number of its substantial bridges. As may be seen from the map of this county it is well supplied with school houses, which are neat and substantial, and are kept open at least three-fourths of the year.

The county has considerable stone suitable for building purposes. The dark brown sandstone quarried on the Nishnabotany River, near the town of Lewis, has been used quite extensively in this and in adjoining counties. Stone suitable for the manufacture of lime is also obtained in several localities. Mineral paint is also found in Edna Township; it is from one to three feet thick, and has been used to considerable extent. No coal beds have yet been discovered, and yet it is quite likely that deep mining may develop them, as the geological formations which are exposed overlie the coal formations.

The county has no public debt, nor has she had any for ten years or more. The rule in Cass is "to pay as they go." The population in 1866, was 2,479; in 1875, as will be seen in table of statistics, 10,552. Spring wheat harvested in 1874, 676,209 bushels; corn, 1,901,062 bushels. We merely cite a few figures to show the rapid and permanent growth of the county.

In liberality for the purpose of establishing and maintaining public schools, Cass County is one of the foremost in the state. In 1873, its school houses numbered 81, valued at over $60,000, and during the year previous the county expended in building school houses and maintaining schools upwards of $45,000. This, at a time when its population numbered about 7,000, may be considered a fair sample of its enterprise in this direction. The county has made excellent use of the land set apart for permanent school fund, and thus realized a fund of $47,533.70. With her means for adding to the wealth stored in the mind and all that can be required for the body, who can arrest her progress?

EARLY HISTORY.

During the exodus of the Mormons from Nauvoo in 1845 or 1846, they established a station on the high land west of Nishnabotany River, about two and a half miles west of where the town of Lewis was afterwards located. Not far from this station was the site of an Indian village of the Pottawattamie tribe, which, in all probability, was the reason why the Mormons named it Indiantown. Indiantown continued for several years to be the only place of business in the county, and being on the principal thoroughfare between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, quite a large trade was done. As late as 1853 or 1854, Jeremiah Bradshaw kept a store there. The site is now occupied by well cultivated farms. The first permanent settlers were Jeremiah Bradshaw, from Illinois; V. M. Conrad, from New York; Peter Hedges, from Illinois; David Chapman, from Ohio; Joseph Everly (who was killed in some way unknown); J. M. Watson, known in early times as "King James." He was a great hunter, and was often seen riding over the country followed by a pack of hounds, some thirteen in number. He came from La Fayette, Indiana, and was accidentally killed while hunting. Deer were very plenty in the early history of the county. D. Morrison, one of the early settlers, father of J. C. Morrison, the present well-known Anita merchant, and who settled on Turkey Creek near the present town of Anita in 1853, is said to have killed seventy-five deer in one Winter. There were amongst the early settlers O. C. Turner from Illinois, Jefferson Goodale, and Joseph Doner, the latter two came in 1854.

The first post office in the county was at Indiantown, called "Cold Spring." The first settlement made on Turkey Creek was by R. D. McGeehon, who built the first house in the Summer of 1853, and it still stands on section 14, township 76, range 36. James L. Byrd and his sons came into the county in 1853, and made their claims west of Atlantic, where they now live and have fine farms. Of the earliest settlers who are still living in the county, are V. M. Conrad and Jeremiah Bradshaw, the latter came into the county in 1851.

In 1853, a few not named came into the county, amongst which were George Wakefield, Albert Wakefield, who settled near Turkey Grove. The first preaching occurred at Jessie Ellis' house in the Summer of 1854; the next was at George Wakefield's, same summer.

The first saw mill in the county was built at Iranistan, west of Indiantown, in which water power was used; the second was built on Turkey Creek not far from Grove City by A. Wakefield; the third (and first steam) was built by McGeehon & Barnett.

The first grist mill was erected at Lewis in 1857, by Keyes, Peck & Co., and the same is now operated by John Roush. Previous to the building of the Lewis mill the settlers had to go with their grists to "South Coon," forty or fifty miles distant. R. D. McGeehon got his first "grist" ground after locating in Cass County, at Rockport, Missouri, distant one hundred and twenty-five miles, seventy-five miles of that without a house to cheer the traveler on his way.

Jeremiah Bradshaw was the pioneer merchant, having opened a store at Indiantown in 1853. V. M. Conrad had a store at the same place in 1854 or 1855. Iranistan had a store in 1854, kept by McCartney. Iranistan and Indiantown were rival cities in those days. Lewis became a competitor in 1854, and had a store in 1855; but not till 1856 was there a first-class general store in the county, when Keyes, Peck & Co. opened such a store in Lewis, and their names can yet be discerned on a store room formerly occupied by them, at the present time. George Conrad, who is now of the firm of Conrad & Chapman, merchants in Atlantic, started a store in Grove City in 1860. Lewis captured the post office from both its western rivals, and the name was changed from "Cold Spring" to Lewis. Grove City was the next post office established in 18 7.

The first election was held at Indiantown, in the Fall of 1852; thirteen votes were polled in all; total population at that time, about one hundred. The county was organized in 1853; the organizing sheriff was William S. Townsend; and the first election as a county was in the Spring of the same year.

The first county officers were: County Judge, Jeremiah Bradshaw; Treasurer and Collector, V. M. Conrad; Clerk, C. C. Woodward; Sheriff, Francis E. Ball; Drainage Commissioner, Levi M. Mills; Surveyor, David Chapman; Coroner, James N. Benedict; Assessor, H. L. Bradshaw; Supervisor, T. N. Johnson.

Thomas G. Palmer and Milton Richards were appointed commissioners to locate the county seat, and on March 11, 1853, located the same at Lewis. Neither of the commissioners are now living in the county.

The early business of the county seems to have been transacted at and in the vicinity of Indiantown, where the first settlement was made and the first election was held. The first money voted out of the county treasury was $34 to the locating commissioners of the county seat, for seventeen days' service. The first marriage license granted was to Henry Snyder and Sarah M. Karothe, on the 8th day of September, 1853.

ATLANTIC.

This is an incorporated city, now the county seat; has a population now of about two thousand. It was laid out in the Fall of 1868. The first train on the railroad came in January, 1869. The county seat was moved from Lewis to Atlantic in November, 1869, after a spirited contest. It is beautifully located, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, on land which gradually rises into gently sloping hills, which face to the north, and is skirted with a beautiful grove of timber on the southwest. Its western limit is near the Nishnabotany River. The principal business street is Chestnut, one hundred feet wide, on which are several fine brick blocks, that would do credit to an older place. There is a beautiful public park on Chestnut Street, which has been laid out and trees of different kinds planted. The county has also, adjoining the park, a block of ground for county purposes, on which trees have also been planted. Atlantic possesses a great deal of life and enterprise, and is destined to be a large place. It maintains excellent schools, has finished a very fine brick school building, and there is another in process of construction. For educational advantages it is second to no place in the state of its size.

The Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptists and Catholics have good church buildings. The Episcopalians have an organization and own a lot, and expect to build before long.

The Masons and Odd Fellows have both prosperous lodges here.

There are three newspapers published here, which are the only ones in the county: The Cass County Messenger was established in 1864 at Lewis. It is Republican in politics, published Saturdays, on the co-operative plan, by Johnson & Willey, and is well sustained.

The Atlantic Telegraph was established in 1871, by Lafe Young, the present editor and proprietor. It is an eight column folio, printed entirely at the home office, published Wednesdays, Republican in politics, and has a large and increasing circulation.

The Cap Sheaf is a Democratic newspaper, edited and published by D. M. Harris, on the co-operative plan; issued every Friday. It was established May 1, 1874, by its present proprietor, and has a very good circulation.

Atlantic has two good and substantial banks—the "First National" and the "Cass County"; four grain elevators, and a large steam flouring mill and elevator combined. It has a very large territory tributary to it. Part of Montgomery, Shelby and Audubon Counties do most of their business there.

LEWIS.

This place is located on the east side of the East Nishnabotany River, about seven miles southwest of Atlantic.

It was formerly the county seat, and a place of considerable importance, being on a main line of travel across the state before the construction of railroads. There is a good mill site on the river adjoining the town. The town was laid out in February, 1854. Among the first settlers were R. C. Lambert, S. M. Tucker, S. H. Myers, Charles Woodward, Daniel Stanley, James S. Rand and J. W. Benedict. The first house was built by S. M. Tucker, and the first white child born in the town was George D. Tucker. The Methodists were the first religious denomination that organized a society. The first newspaper published, and the first in the county, was the Cass County Gazette, by J. C. Brown, who was killed during the war at Milliken's Bend.

ANITA.—This is a thriving station on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, in the northeast part of the county. It is an important shipping point for large portions of Cass and Audubon Counties, and is growing rapidly. It has churches, schools, elevators and stores, and promises well.

WIOTA.—This is also a station on the railroad, between Atlantic and Anita. Being accessible to a fine district of farming country, it bids fair to become an important shipping point.

MARNE.—This is a new station on the railroad, about six miles west of Atlantic; has a post office. It has grown quite rapidly in the last two months, and being in the center of a good county, there is no reason why it should not become quite a place.

The other post offices are Newlan's Grove, Whitneyville and Wilson's.

HENRY COUNTY.

Henry County is in the second tier from the south line of the state, and is the second west of the Mississippi River, and contains an area of 432 square miles, or 276,480 acres.

SURFACE—SOIL—RESOURCES.

The surface of the county is high and undulating. Numerous streams traverse its territory, affording good natural drainage and abundance of water to every township, as well as enhancing the richness and variety of the scenery. Good well-water is obtained at a depth of from twenty to thirty feet.

The soil is a rich black loam, with a sufficient proportion of sand to impart warmth and promote easy tillage. It is well adapted to the production of grain, grass, fruit and vegetables, and the county is known as one of the best agricultural and fruit-growing counties in the state.

The county is abundantly supplied with timber, usually consisting of the several varieties of oak, hickory, maple, walnut, etc.

Excellent water-power is afforded by Skunk River, which traverses the county from corner to corner, with an average fall of three feet to the mile, and by Cedar and Big Creeks.

Coal is found near the western border of the county, upon Cedar Creek, but although it is here found in considerable quantity, Henry is not usually classed among the coal counties, for the reason that only a very narrow strip of its territory along the west side of the county, from the point where Skunk River enters it to the southwest corner, lies within the coal field. Skunk River, after following very near the northeastern boundary of the coal field for a long distance, here leaves it entirely and passes into the sub-carboniferous region, very near the point where it deflects to the east again in this county, after running nearly southward for some miles.

Good building stone is obtained in the sandstone quarries of the county, out of which were constructed the piers for the railroad bridge over the Mississippi at Burlington, and an abundance of limestone is found, which produces good quick lime. Some good building stone is also obtained from the limestone beds.

Potters' clay, of excellent quality, is plenty, and is extensively manufactured into pottery and tiles. Good brick clay is also plenty.

The surface of the county is generally high, without any swamps or stagnant water to produce miasma. The climate is excellent and healthful.

EARLY HISTORY.

James Dawson was the first white man who settled on territory embraced within the limits of Henry County. He made a claim one mile and a half west of where Mt. Pleasant is located, in the Spring of 1834. In the Fall of the same year Presley Saunders came over from Spring field, Illinois, and took a claim where Mt. Pleasant is now located, and after laying the foundation of a cabin, returned to Illinois. In February, 1835, he came again to Iowa, completed his cabin, and settled permanently. During the same year he temporarily staked off a number of lots.

The following may also be named as among the early settlers of the county: Joseph Moore, A. C. Dover, John Williford, Aaron Street, Peter Boyer, Jesse Hancock, Rev. William M. Morrow, and Rev. Samuel Hutton. The ministers were of the Baptist denomination.

The first post office was established at Mt. Pleasant in 1836, and Alvin Saunders was appointed post master. He subsequently filled the office of State Senator, and still later was appointed Governor of Nebraska Territory.

Mary Saunders, daughter of Presley Saunders, born in 1835, was the first white child born in the county. The first death was that of a man named Pullman, who came from Indiana in 1835. After being in the county but two or three months, he was found dead on the small branch which passes through the site of the present city of Mt. Pleasant, with his rifle by his side. He had taken his own life by accident or intentionally.

ORGANIZATION.

In the Winter of 1836-'7, the Territorial Legislature of Wisconsin, then in session at Belmont, passed an act organizing the county of Henry, and locating the county seat at Mt. Pleasant. Several efforts were made to establish the seat of justice at Augusta, but all failed.

The first election for county officers took place January 13, 1837, at which Robert Caulk, Samuel Brazelton, and George J. Sharp were elected County Commissioners; Dayton C. Roberts, Treasurer, and John Riddle, Coroner. N. M. Scott, H. M. Snyder, Richard Childers, Levi Smith, and William Stout were elected Constables. Sheriffs and justices of the peace were appointed by the Governor. William D. Brown was the first Sheriff; and Samuel Nelson, George Moffatt, and Abraham C. Dover were among the first justices of the peace.

The first District Court was held in a log cabin, on the west side of the Public Square in Mt. Pleasant, April 14, 1837, Hon. David Irwin, of Wisconsin, presiding. It was a territorial court, with both federal and local jurisdiction. Hon. W. W. Chapman acted as United States District Attorney, and Dr. Jesse D. Payne as Clerk. The following persons composed the first grand jury impaneled: Claybourne Jones, Sr., Samuel Hutton, Marshall Saunders, C. W. Hughes, D. C. Roberts, William M. Morrow, James McCoy, K. T. Manding, Benjamin F. Hutton, Jacob Burge, Moses Shirley, W. J. Lowell, Thomas Clarke, William King, David Minter, James Williford, Sr., G. W. Lewis, Henry Snyder, Sr., Berry Jones, Little Hughes, John H. Randolph, Presley Saunders, and Warren L. Jenkins—John H. Randolph acting as foreman.

Hon. John P. Grantham, it is believed, had the honor of inaugurating the first educational institution in the county, and in the town which subsequently became a city of schools and colleges, in the Spring of 1837, in a log cabin.

There was very little law in those days, and very little respect paid to that which was attempted to be enforced. As an illustration of that fact, the following well authenticated fact is given:

The man Dover, who had been appointed a justice of the peace, went to town with two men as sureties on his bond. The sureties got drunk and had a fight, when the newly appointed J. P. had them arrested and brought before him on a charge of breach of the peace. A jury was empaneled and the case called for the State. Immediately thereafter one of said defendants (and surety) sailed into the court room and said: "Gentlemen of the jury, I have been robbed; my pocket-book has been feloniously taken from me. Gentleman of the jury, I do not mean you, nor do I mean you, gentleman by-standers, but the man who robbed and feloniously stole from me my pocket-book is in this room, and I am going to whip him before I leave the room;" then, commencing to draw off his coat, "Esquire Dover, pull off your coat."

MT. PLEASANT.

This city is situated near the geographical center of the county, on what was originally a beautiful high prairie. Big Creek sweeps around the north, west and south sides of the city in the shape of a horseshoe, abundantly skirted with timber, while the open prairie extends many miles eastward. Joseph Moore erected the first house within the town limits in the Fall of 1835. It stood at the northwest corner of the Public Square. Here Mr. Moore started the first store, a small stock of goods being on the ground before the building was completed. The town was regularly surveyed in the Sun mer of 1836, and on the 12th of May of this year, Col. John H. Randolph opened a store. The town was granted a city charter by the Iowa Territorial Legislature, January 25, 1842, but after maintaining a municipal organization for about two years it was discontinued. A second charter was obtained from the Legislature in 1851, and since that time the city government has been regularly maintained. The first election under the new charter was held in April, 1851, and Col. Wm. Thompson was chosen Mayor, H. H. McMillan, Recorder, and H. Riggs, T. V. Taft, J. S. Green, and Alvin Saunders, Trustees. The corporate powers of the city were increased by the Legislature in 1857. It now ranks as a city of the second class under the general incorporation law.

EDUCATIONAL.

This city is an Independent School District, and has two Graded School Buildings, costing $23,000 and $10,000 respectively. The schools are at all times presided over by first-class talent.

Howe's High School and Female Seminary is one of the oldest and best known throughout Southern Iowa. Many of the prominent men of the state graduated here.

Iowa Wesleyan University.—This is the oldest chartered educational institution in the state. It is ably presided over by John Wheeler, D.D.

Female Seminary.—This is a Presbyterian institution. It is under the management of Rev. Luther Belden. The building is commodious and the grounds ample and pleasant.

Iowa State Hospital for the Insane.—This fine and commodious hospital is located on a tract of land containing about 310 acres. The site is beautiful, and the building is nearly centrally located upon the tract. It cost about $400,000. The Board of Trustees are Luke Palmer, President, Burlington; A. W. McClure, Secretary, Mount Pleasant; W. G. Evans, West Liberty, L. E. Fellows, Lansing, and Mrs. E. M. Elliott, Mount Pleasant. Resident Officers—H. M. Bassett, M.D., Superintendent; Miss M. A. Cleaves, M. D., Second Assistant Physician; M. Riordan, M.D., Third Assistant Physician; A. S. Wickersham, Steward; Mrs. Ella M. Wickersham, Matron, and Rev. Milton Sutton, Chaplain.

Churches.—There are 12 churches here, and some are very fine. The denominations are, Methodist Episcopal, 3; Old School Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Baptist, Colored Baptist, Universalist, Christian, Episcopalian, German Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic, each one.

The Masons maintain a Lodge and Chapter here, and the Odd Fellows a Lodge and an Encampment.

Newspapers.—There are two published here. The Mount Pleasant Journal, Republican in Politics, published by the Journal Publishing Company, J. Teesdale, Editor; and the Free Press, Independent in Politics, VanClise & Throup, Editors and Proprietors. Each has a large circulation. Both are conducted with ability and are a credit to the county. The first newspaper published was the Iowa Freeman, commenced in 1849, by D. M. Kelsey.

Banks. There are two here. The National State Bank was first incorporated as a State Bank in 1858, with a capital of $50,000. It reorganized in 1865 as the National State Bank, with a capital of $100,000. President, T. Whiting; Cashier, J. H. Whiting.

The First National Bank was chartered in 1865, with a capital of $75,000. P. Saunders, President; H. S. Clark, Cashier.

The general business of the city is good in nearly all branches. It is a prominent shipping point on the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, and has many excellent commercial advantages.

Mt. Pleasant has long enjoyed a reputation abroad for its liberal support of educational institutions and churches, and the high standard of morality maintained by its citizens generally.

OTHER TOWNS.—There are many other thriving towns and villages in the county, among which are Hillsborough, Lowell, Marshall, New London, Rome, Salem, and Trenton; also the following additional post offices: Boylestown, Cottongrove, Oakland Mills, Swedesburgh, Wayne, Winfield, and Winona.

GREENE COUNTY.

This county, which is in the middle tier, and the fourth east from the Missouri River, is on the forty-second parallel of north latitute, the same as ancient Rome, is twenty-four miles square, and contains five hundred and seventy-six square miles.

SURFACE FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

The North Raccoon River, which flows diagonally across the county from the northwest to the southeast, with its affluents, water and drain the greater portion of the surface, except in the extreme southwest, which is drained by the Mosquito and Willow Creeks, tributaries of the Middle Raccoon. The principal tributaries of the North Raccoon enter that stream from the North, and are Buttrick, Hardin and Cedar Creeks, while the Greenbrier Creek rises in the southern tier of townships and joins the main river just below the southern boundary in Dallas County. Good springs of pure cold water are of frequent occurrence, and are found issuing from the gravel deposits which overlie the drift clays in the steep slopes bordering the streams. There is no difficulty in obtaining wells at all points, particularly upon the uplands, where the impervious glacial clays lie at a much less depth from the surface than is the case on the margins of the uplands and in the benches, or second bottoms. The streams enumerated, with numerous smaller spring branches and brooks, most of which are supported by living springs, afford an abundant supply of water for stock and other purposes. The North Raccoon is the only stream that furnishes sufficient water to run machinery at all season of the year, and has some excellent mill powers, only a few of which have as yet been improved.

The surface configuration of this county is more level and plain-like than that of most portions of Central Iowa, the undulations being so slight as to scarcely relieve the monotonous sameness of the almost boundless prairie landscape. The waters of the North Raccoon have cut a channel into the detrital material of the drift to a depth of from fifty to one hundred feet, so that it is bordered by abrupt acclivities, which give to the valley the peculiar canal-like appearance common to all the larger streams in the central portion of Northern Iowa. The valleys of the smaller water courses are, however, generally shallow, their beds being but little below the general level of the prairie.

The soil is a dark gravelly loam, is uniformly distributed over the uplands, and is composed of vegetable deposit, from two to eight feet in depth, with clay sub-soil. Perhaps no county in the Union gives the farmer greater rewards for his labor than this. For ages the annual crops of grass, untouched by scythe, and but partially kept down by herbivorous animals, have accumulated organic matter on the surface of the soil to such an extent that a long succession even of exhausting crops will not materially impoverish the land. It produces wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, buckwheat, sorghum, potatoes, flax, and in fact all the grains and vegetables common to the Northern States in great abundance. There is some low, wet land, that intersects the uplands in the form of swales or sloughs, which can easily be drained and converted into the finest meadow and prairie lands. The forests are wholly confined to the valleys and their immediate vicinity, being largely along the line of the North Raccoon and its branches. Although the supply of fuel from this source has been ample in the past yet with a rapid settlement of the county these native forests will scarcely prove adequate for the increased consumption of timber for fuel and building purposes, and the inhabitants will be compelled to rely upon coal, or make early provision for future demands by planting groves which thrive well. Numerous farmers, realizing the necessity, have already planted groves of fast growing woods, which now greatly beautify the landscape, and will ultimately be a source of great wealth to the county.

Fruit trees have not as yet been cultivated to any considerable extent, yet enough have been planted to show that with reasonable care and judgment a supply more than sufficient for home consumption may be grown with certainty. Nearly all kinds of small fruits are indigenous, grow luxuriantly, and produce bountifully, fruit which for quality and flavor can not be excelled in the West.

Coal has been mined to some extent, yet so far as it has been investigated it is not widely distributed over the county. The beds that have been discovered at the surface are thin, and not of as good a quality as most Iowa coal. Doctor White, State Geologist, thinks that it is quite probable that better beds may be found by shafting, and that a greater portion of the county may be underlaid by the coal-producing formation; but as yet sufficient investigations have not been made to enable him to form an opinion. Peat is known to exist in some of the swales in the uplands, but the deposits are so shallow, and it is interlaced with so much sand, washed from the adjacent drift deposits, that it is valueless for fuel.

Building stone is scarce, there being comparatively little good quarry rock in the county, the sandstone usually being too friable to answer even for the ordinary purposes of masonry. Clay for the manufacture of good common brick is abundant, and from this source the main supply of local building material must be drawn.

In the bottom, upon the west side of the North Raccoon, about seven miles above Jefferson, there are several symmetrical mounds which have every appearance of being of artificial construction. The largest one is some twelve feet high and seventy-five feet in diameter, and is composed of the gravelly soil found in the bottoms upon which it rests. Several of the smaller ones have been leveled by the plow, while on the bluff opposite other mounds are found, which are said to have contained human remains.

This county has very good railroad facilities, the Chicago & Northwestern passing east and west through the center of the county, while the Des Moines & Fort Dodge runs north and south through the eastern tier of townships, crossing the Chicago & Northwestern at Grand Junction.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first white settler in Greene County was Truman Davis, who in 1849 located near where the village of Rippey now stands. Enos Butrick settled at the mouth of what is now known as Butrick's Creek, while Richard Hardin located near the mouth of the stream which has since borne his name. Messrs. Wood, Valentine, Wm. R. Babb and William Crumley came in 1850 and located along the Raccoon River, while Josiah Blunkett, Thomas Greenup, and John Barr settled further up the river in 1850-1. These hardy pioneers were subject to many inconveniences, their nearest post office being at Ft. Des Moines, fifty miles distant, their mills being from fifty to one hundred miles away, and they were compelled to go to Warren, Marion and Mahaska Counties to obtain their supply of provisions and other necessities, with no roads to mark their course or bridges to cross the streams. Many are the hardships related of the early settlers. It is stated that one of the settlers left his family with a scanty supply of food, and went down, in the spring of the year, below Des Moines for a fresh supply of provisions. While he was gone the streams all raised so it was impossible for him to return for several days. The scanty provisions of the family gave out, and they were reduced to the extreme necessity of living on soap grease for a number of days. Another instance is related, by one of the citizens of the county, of a settler who left his family to go in quest of provisions. The high waters detained him, the provisions of his family gave out and they were on the verge of starvation. An Indian came to the house one day and asked for food. The lady of the house took him to the cupboard and the meal chest, and showed him that they were without a morsel of food. The Indian asked for the gun—it was given him—he left with it, and in a few hours returned with a couple of deer and gave them to the starving family. In a few days he returned again, and found to the joy of the family that the settler had returned with a bountiful supply of provisions, over which he seemed to rejoice greatly.

Game, such as deer and elk, was in great abundance until the Winter of 1855-6. The snows of that Winter were so deep that it was impossible for them to escape the pursuit of men and dogs, and the number destroyed seems almost incredible. It is said that they were overtaken by men, boys, and even women, in the deep snows, and beat to death with clubs. Since then there has scarcely been an elk or deer seen within the county. Their rapid and sudden disappearance astonished every one.

The county was organized in 1854, having previously been attached to Dallas for judicial, revenue and election purposes. The first election held in the county after its organization was on September 14th, 1854, for township officers. G. S. Walton and Elijah Norman were the first justices of the peace elected in the county, and S. G. Crumley and Leonard Chance first constables. The first democratic convention was held on the banks of Hardin's Creek, in the woods back of Phillips' house, three miles below New Jefferson, to nominate candidates for county offices, to be filled at the August election in 1855. Every person present was nominated for some one of the county offices. The following is the ticket put in nomination: For County Judge, William Phillips; Clerk, S. G. Crumley; Treasurer and Recorder, James H. Phillips; Sheriff, Isaac D. Crumley; Prosecuting Attorney, Norman S. Daniels; County Surveyor, Allen J. Currence; Coroner, John Barr. The ticket was successful, and the above named gentlemen had the honor of being the first county officers elected after the organization of the county. Politicians appear to have been as eager for the county offices when the salary was only $50 a year, as they are now.

The first county court was held August 25, 1854, and an order made for an election to be held the 12th day of September, 1854, for township officers.

The following is a copy of the record of the first marriage license granted by William Phillips, County Judge:

"This court has this 4th day of September, A. D. 1854, granted license for the marriage of Moses Bowers and Mahala Young, and not being acquainted with the parties, Charles Hathway was sworn, who declared them both of age and of sound mind; whereupon this court issued license for the marriage of the above parties."

The second license was to David Rodgers and Margaret Young, October 19th, 1854. Judge Phillips solemnized the marriage.

The first tax levied was as follows: For state purposes, three mills on the dollar, for county purposes, six mills on the dollar; school purposes, one and a half mills on the dollar; road tax, three mills on the dollar; poll tax, 50 cents.

Moses Bates appears to have been the first person that died in the county, whose estate was administered upon. Charlie W. Johnson and B. F. Robinson were the first administrators appointed. Jacob Young made the first will, and Rezin McDaniels the second. The first money paid out on order from the county treasury was September 27th, 1854, to C. J. Niles, $20; Henry Owen, $15; Cornelius Beal, $36, for services in locating the county seat.

The first district court held in Greene County was by Hon. C. J. McFarland, Monday, May 19, 1856. There were three state cases and eight civil cases on docket. The court was held in a new building that had neither doors or windows. The grand jury held their session out on the prairie. The state cases were against three young women for assault and battery. It seems that the girls got to disputing about something, perhaps, some nice young man. At last one gave the other a saucy word or two, and she returned the insult by throwing an egg. The affair then commenced in earnest; a basket of eggs was soon used up, when they went at each other with fist and muscle. The combatants were parted, and it is agreed on all sides that it was one of the most fierce and terrific battles that has ever been fought on the North Raccoon River in the shape of a fist fight.

In 1858 a report came to New Jefferson that gold had been discovered in a run on Uncle Johnny Barr's farm, twelve miles west of town. The merchant threw down his yard stick, and locked his store, the physician his pill bags, the lawyer his Blackstone, the farmer left his plow, and all seized picks, shovels and tin pans, rushed to the new Eldorado, expecting soon to dig out fortunes, and return millionaires. After digging and washing a few days—some say they got the color, others say they found small particles of gold—they all concluded to return to their former occupations, thinking that they were more profitable than digging for nuggets in Greene County.

THE PRESS.

The Jefferson Bee, the only newspaper at the county seat, was established in 1866 by M. L. & H. Money, who sold to Swaim & Irwin, and they to Swaim & Rhoads, and is now owned and conducted by Rhoads & Alexander. It is a neat, well printed seven column quarto sheet, politically black republican, and has a large and growing circulation.

The Grand Junction Head Light was established January 1, 1870, by Mills & Co., of Des Moines, who January 1, 1872, sold to the present editor and proprietor, S. C. Maynard, who is making it a wide-awake, popular local paper, that deserves and is receiving a good patronage.

JEFFERSON.

This town, the county seat of Jefferson County, is beautifully located on high table land between the North Raccoon River and Hardin Creek, being about half a mile east of the former and two miles west of the latter, and near the geographical center of the county. The town site has an elevation of some seventy-five feet above the level of the river. It was laid out in 1854, at a time when the financial condition of the county was such that it was necessary to effect a loan of two hundred dollars for the purpose of purchasing the site. That amount was borrowed of Hoyt Sherman, of Des Moines. At the first sale of lots those around the square brought $10 apiece, while those not so advantageously located were sold from $3 to $5 a lot. The first building erected on the town plot was by G. S. Walton, the second by Captain R. M. Rippey in 1855. It is said that after the survey of the lots that Judge Phillips and B. F. Robinson wrestled to see who should have the first choice, and that Phillips throwed Robinson, and had the honor of purchasing the first lot in Jefferson. Building commenced in June, 1855, but in consequence of there being no improved road, and the travel all going south through Adel to Council Bluffs, Sioux City, etc., it improved but very little for several years. The first mail route through the county was established in 1857, from Adel to New Jefferson, once a week. The town was named in honor of Thomas Jefferson; but in consequence of there being an old town of that name in Dubuque County, Iowa, the department refused to grant another office of the same name in the state, and suggested that the name had better be changed. Captain Rippey then gave it the name of New Jefferson, and the Post Office Department granted the office. The prefix "New" has since been dropped, and it is now known as Jefferson, as was at first intended.

It is a place of considerable importance, having one of the largest and best court houses in Western Iowa, an elegant public school building, and numerous substantial and commodious business houses and residences. Being the center of a fine and valuable farming country, having good railroad facilities, and a class of honorable, energetic business men, Jefferson is certain to become at no distant day one of the most important towns in the western part of the state.

GRAND JUNCTION.—This place is located at the crossing of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Des Moines & Fort Dodge Railroads, about seven miles from Jefferson, in the eastern part of the county. The place has grown up since the completion of the last named road, and has considerable business.

SCRANTON.—This is a station on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, in the western part of the county, and is a shipping point for stock and produce. It is about nine miles from Jefferson, in the middle of a well settled portion of the county.

RIPPEY.—This is a station on the Des Moines and Fort Dodge Railroad, in the southeastern portion of the county. The original town of Rippey was laid out in 1855, by Judge Daniels and Mr. Crumley, and named in honor of Captain R. M. Rippey, of the 39th Iowa Infantry. The present station of this name on the railroad is some distance from the site of the original town.

PATON.—This is a station on the Des Moines & Fort Dodge Railroad, in the northeast part of the county.

CARROLL COUNTY.

This county, which is twenty-four miles square, and contains sixteen congressional or land survey townships, is the third east of the Missouri River, and in the fifth tier of counties, both from the northern and southern boundary of the State.

SURFACE FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

Carroll is emphatically a prairie county, the eastern portion being composed of a gently undulating surface sufficiently rolling to break the monotonous sameness of the level plain, while to the westward of the Middle Raccoon River, the surface is more broken and uneven, in many places rising into hills of considerable prominence. The great watershed dividing the waters which flow into the Mississippi from those which flow into the Missouri passes through this county, and at the highest point is 858 feet above Lake Michigan and 800 feet above the Mississippi River at Clinton. From this summit can be obtained a fine view of the surrounding country, extending in every direction as far as the eye can reach. On the east and the southeast is seen in the distance the rich, fertile valley of the Raccoon Rivers, on the south the unsurpassingly lovely country surrounding the Nishnabotany, and on the west the magnificent vale through which flows the Boyer. All of which in a clear summer's day afford scenery at once grand, beautiful and picturesque.

Being situated upon the great dividing ridge or watershed, this county is watered and drained mostly by small streams which flow both into the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers. The largest stream is the North Raccoon, which cuts across the northeast corner of the county, while the next two in importance are the Middle Raccoon and Brushy Fork, which take their rise in the watershed divide in the northwest, and flowing nearly parallel from four to six miles apart in a southeast direction, make their exit near the southeast corner of the county. Storm Creek, a tributary of the Middle Raccoon drains a large tract in the northern-central as does the Willow Creek in the eastern border. The North Raccoon is deeply excavated into the drift deposit, and its valley is bordered by rather steep acclivities from seventy to one hundred feet in height, while the Middle Raccoon is bordered on the west by high bluff capped slopes, and on the east by drift hills, which gain the interior heights by more gradual ascents. Brushy Fork possesses a beautiful valley with gentle acclivities on either side, as does the East Nishnabotany and Boyer Rivers and Whitted's Creek, which are on the west side of the watershed divide. The upper course of all of these streams are little more than diminutive prairie brooks, with gravelly beds, and clear, rapid currents, many of those having their headwaters in the great divide interlocking, as it were, being separated by a narrow crest as sharply defined as a gable ridge. Springs issue from the gravel deposits along these water courses, furnishing them with an abundant supply of limpid, pure water at all seasons of the year. East of the Middle Raccoon River wells are easily obtained, while in the uplands west of that stream, those seeking water must go to a much greater depth, though the certainty of finding a never-failing supply is just as good.

In a shallow depression or plain below Carrollton, on the east side of the Middle Raccoon, several interesting spring mounds occur, which have excited much attention and are described as follows by Dr. White, in the Iowa State Geology: "The plain is thirty or forty feet above the present level of the river, from which it is separated by a well-defined drift ridge which, in places, rises into considerable knob-like eminences from one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet above the stream. The plain, however, communicates with the valley both above and below, and was probably once the channel of the river. The spring mounds are situated along an irregular line more or less in the middle of the depression; they are from four to six feet in height and as many yards in diameter, and are apparently entirely composed of vegetable matter, forming a peaty deposit which is largely mixed with the exuvie of shells and other animal remains. The crests of the mounds are covered with a tall, rank flag or marsh grass, but upon the sides there are usually two well marked bands of short herbage and moss encircling the mounds and separated by a narrow belt of tall grass. The deposit of the vegetation upon these places is exceedingly interesting, though the mounds themselves, doubtless, owe their origin to the existence of pools of water, indicating more or less accurately, the course of a former water channel, and which, being fed from higher sources, the tendency is what we observe—a gradual building up of a peaty formation. The surface of the plain beyond the limits of the mounds is perfectly level, and the deposit consists of decayed vegetable matter mixed with sand forming a sandy muck."

Like that of Guthrie County, which lies on the great divide just southeast of Carroll, the soil of this county presents two well marked varieties; that on the east side of the Middle Raccoon being of the drift formation, is a gravelly loam of great strength and productiveness, while to west of that stream the uplands are deeply enveloped in the bluff formation, which has imparted to the soil of this portion of the county its own peculiar characteristics. Small groves of native timber are found on the principal streams; and in favorable locations, even upon the uplands, forests of young oak are springing up. Some two or three small patches are met with in the valley of Brushy Fork, and between Raccoon Rapids and Carrollton; on the Middle Raccoon more extensive tracts are covered with a fine growth of young timber.

No beds of coal have as yet been discovered; though it is not deemed improbable, says Dr. White, that the coal-measure formation underlies at least a portion of the county. The only specimens yet found have been discovered in digging wells and making other excavations, and are only small fragments associated with the loose material of the drift deposit. Peat is known to exist in several places in the county, some of which are of considerable extent, and should they be found to be free from sand and gravel, they will eventually become of some value as a resource for fuel. Good building stone is not found within the limits of Carroll County, the cretaceous sandstone being too friable to answer for ordinary building purposes, except some of the harder layers, which are employed in laying up rough under-pinnings, in walling wells, etc. Material for the manufacture of brick is found in abundance, yet care is necessary in selecting clay in the western portion of the county, in consequence of the prevalence of calcareous matter derived from the disintegration of the bluff deposits on the surface of the lower slopes. The lime thus mixed with the earth is converted into quicklime in the process of burning the brick, and on exposure to moisture the lime slakes and bursts the brick.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first settlement in the county was made on section 2, township 84, range 33, by Enos Buttrick, from Greene County, in 1854. The first election was held at the house of Henry Coplin, on section 12, township 82, range 34, on the first Monday of August, 1855, when the following county officers were elected: A. J. Cain, County Judge; Levi Thompson, Clerk; James White, Treasurer and Recorder; Robert Lloyd, Surveyor; L. M. Curdy, Prosecuting Attorney; and J. Y. Anderson, Sheriff. The county was organized by S. L. Loomis, July 16, 1855, under a commission from James Henderson, County Judge of Guthrie County. At this time the entire population was about 100. The first school was taught by Jane L. Hill, at Carrollton, in the Spring of 1856, and the first newspaper was published at the same place, by Mr. Manning, and called the Carroll Enterprise. The Methodists organized the first religious society at Carrollton. The first District Court was held November 23, 1858, by Hon. M. F. Moore, District Judge. The first grand jury were Cornelius Higgins, Benjamin Teiler, Matthew Borders, Lafayette McCurdy, Crocket Ribble, Robert Morris, William Short, Robert Dickinson, Elijah Puckett, Cyrus Rhoads, James Colcio, David Scott, David Frazier, Samuel Lyon and Amos Bason. James Colcio was appointed foreman. First case on docket was Nehemiah Powers and John Watson vs. Cornelius Higgins. Noah Titus was the first person licensed to practice law in the county.

The first marriage license was granted September 16, 1855, to Joseph Ford and Sarah Ochempaugh. They were married September 23, 1856, by A. J. Cain, County Judge. First estate administered upon was Wesley H. Blizard, May 3, 1858. First administrator appointed was James H. Colcio. The first deed was made by Thomas Ford to Nancy Ford, for the east half of section 17, township 85, range 33, September 3, 1855, and acknowledged by A. J. Cain, County Judge.

The old Indian trail known as the War Path, or the dividing line between the Sioux and Pottawattamie Indians' hunting grounds, runs through townships 82, 83, 84 and 85, range 36, in this county. It is plainly visible, and is as straight as an arrow. It was a death penalty for an Indian of one tribe to cross the path and be found hunting on the lands of the other.

An early settler relates that an old Indian chief told him there was once a terrible Indian battle fought near Crescent Lake, about one mile south of Carroll Center, between the Sioux and Pottawattamie Indians. There had been a feud for a long time existing between the two tribes in regard to the infringement of the law in relation to the hunting grounds by disloyal Indians. The Sioux determined to exterminate the Pottawattamies. A large party of the latter were encamped near Crescent Lake, in the grove of timber. One morning a a powerful party of the Sioux attacked them, and a terrible and bloody battle ensued, resulting in the death of all the Sioux warriors, and all but three of the Pottawattamies. The remains of the dead warriors were left to be eaten by the wolves, or rot, and their bones to bleach on the prairie, until the annual prairie fires consumed them.

In 1859, two men coming across from Denison, in the Winter, got lost, and one froze to death, and the other so badly that his feet came off. The latter had wandered down near Carrollton, and when discovered by a settler, was delirious or unconscious of where he was.

Some year or two ago, in Winter, a boy was found between Guthrie Center and Denison on his knees and face, dead, supposed to have been lost and froze, or else perished in attempting to cross the prairies. When found he had been dead some time.

Thirty-three men out of sixty voters went into the army, the county paying each soldier $100 bounty, besides supporting their families while in the service.

The main line of the Chicago & Northwestern passes east and west through this county, having stations at Glidden, Carroll and Arcadia.

CARROLL.

This town which is the county seat and the most important town in the county, is very pleasantly situated on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, a little north of the center of the county, and is surrounded by a fertile, though as yet but partially improved, farming country. It was laid out in August, 1867, and has since had a steady and substantial growth; does a good retail business, and is the largest shipping point in the county. Good schools have been established; the leading religious denominations have organizations, and some of them commodious houses of worship. Being surrounded by a country having large agricultural resources, having good railroad facilities, and possessing a class of energetic, wideawake and experienced business men, who know how to make the best possible use of the advantages within their reach, Carroll is destined at no distant day to become one of the important towns in the western part of the state.

Two English and one German newspapers are now published there, which are well patronized and sustained. The Carroll Herald, a handsome, readable seven column quarto sheet, was established in 1868. It is Republican in politics, and is now under the able editorial management of Hastings & Gray.

The Carroll Democrat, a neatly printed and spicy Democratic sheet, made its first appearance in 1874, and is editorially conducted by an experienced journalist, H. L. McMann.

The Carroll Demokrat—German—was founded in 1874; has taken its place among the German press of the state, and is controlled editorially by J. G. Burkhardt.

GLIDDEN.—Situated on the line of the Northwestern Railroad, in the east part of the county. It was laid out in 1866, and is a shipping point for a large district of country.

CARROLLTON.—This was formerly the county seat, and is the oldest town in the county, being laid out in 1856. It is located in the south-east part of the county, and is surrounded by a fine farming and grazing country.

The other villages and post-offices in the county are Arcadia, Browning, Coon Rapids, and Elba.

MAHASKA COUNTY.

Mahaska County is the fourth from the Mississippi River in the third tier of counties from the south line of the state, and contains an area of 576 square miles, or 368,640 acres. It is traversed by the Des Moines, and by North and South Skunk Rivers at nearly equal intervals, affording excellent natural drainage and abundant water power. Every township is well supplied with living water, and drained of all surplus or stagnant water by these streams, or by some of their numerous affluents, so that swamp or marsh land is unknown in Mahaska. All the principal streams are skirted by heavy bodies of excellent timber, furnishing an abundant supply for the entire county of all the valuable varieties indigenous to Iowa soil.

Lime and sandstone of excellent quality for building purposes is found in different parts of the county, especially in the river banks, excellent stone for the manufacture of quick-lime is abundant. Near Oskaloosa there is an inexhaustible bed of sandstone suitable either for building or flagging.

COAL.

The extensive coal beds of the county constitute one of its most valuable sources of wealth. Mahaska lies almost wholly within the area of the lower or most productive coal measure, and here the beds reach their maximum thickness. These beds are easily reached and have been opened at numerous points, affording coal of an excellent quality which is extensively mined and exported in large quantities by the intersecting lines of railway which furnish ready facilities for transportation north, south, east, and west. The mines at Oskaloosa Station, two and a half miles from the state line, are styled the most important yet opened in the state by Professor C. A. White in the "Geology of Iowa."

Good materials for the manufacture of brick are found in sufficient abundance.

The surface of the county is generally rolling in the region of the uplands. The streams, however, are bordered with level valleys of considerable extent. An agreeable alternation of timber and prairie lends the face of the country that highly pleasing variety in appearance generally wanting in exclusively prairie or timbered sections, and doubtless constituted one of the principal attractions which led to its rapid early settlement.

The soil is very productive and yields abundant crops of grain and vegetables. It is well adapted to the production of apples, pears, cherries, and all the small fruits, and extensive orchards are frequently met with. Grasses, both wild and tame, grow profusely. The tame grasses are cultivated extensively; hence the county is admirably adapted to stock raising, in which respect it stands in the front rank of Iowa Counties; the farmers turning their attention largely to this branch of business.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Mahaska County was embraced within the territory known as the New Purchase made in 1842, and opened for settlement by the whites, May 1, 1843. Although not surveyed, this territory was prospectively laid off into counties by the Territorial Legislature, during the Winter of 1842-3 the boundaries being designated by townships and ranges. Previous to this time a house was built within the limits of the county by a Mr. Macbeth, about one mile above the Indian village of Hardiahes (since Eddyville), in the northwest corner of Wapello County where J. B. Eddy had a trading post with which Macbeth was in some way connected. This house was erected in October, 1842, probably for the purpose of holding and improving a choice claim before the expiration of the Indian title—a maneuver then not uncommon. Macbeth having no family employed John B. Gray to occupy the house and trade for him, and Mr. Gray moved in with his family in November and occupied the house until the following Spring, when he removed to Marion County, and his was undoubtedly the first white family that resided in the county.

During the month of April, 1843, many people collected and camped on lands within the limits of the county waiting for the Indian claim to expire. Few of them attempted to sleep on the night of the last of April, and as soon as their watches indicated the hour of twelve they commenced marking their claims. It so happened that many made their locations and commenced making improvements simultaneously, and it was, therefore, impossible to tell who was the first. Among those who took claims in the south part of the county near the Des Moines River, were Dr. E. A. Boyer. W. A. Delashmutt, John B. Gray, Covey, Nowels, Davis, and Crane, and in the southeast part of the county, A. S. Nichols and Mr. Brin. The principal settlements first made were on Six Mile Prairie, between Oskaloosa and the Des Moines River, a beautiful section of country well calculated to attract the eye of the pioneer.

It is said that A. S. Nichols, Esq., erected the first blacksmith shop at a place then called Brin's Point, in the southeast part of the county.

These settlers did not know what county they were in until the following September, when the land was surveyed into townships, and by reference to the act of the Legislature above mentioned, the limits of Mahaska County were readily determined.

ORGANIZATION.

So rapid had been the settlement of the county that the Legislature provided for its organization by an act dated Feb. 5, 1844, only about nine months from the time when the first claims were staked. M. T. Williams was appointed Clerk, and Wm. Edmundson, Sheriff, for the purpose of perfecting the organization. Under this act an election was held April 1st, 1844, for the purpose of choosing county officers, at which A. S. Nichols, Wilson Stanley, and Robert Curry were elected County Commissioners; John W. Cunningham, Commissioners' Clerk; Wm. D. Canfield, Treasurer; Wm. Pilgrim, Recorder; John Whited, Probate Judge; Wm. Edmundson, Sheriff; David Stump, Surveyor; W. A. Delashmut, Assessor, and Britain Edwards, Coroner. At the general election in Aug., 1844, a second election of officers took place. At this time A. S. Nichols, S. Drouard, and Harmon Davis were chosen Commissioners. The new board held its first meeting on the 8th of October. Previous to this time the county had been attached to Washington, and an election had been held under the direction of that county in October, 1843, at the house of Mr. Poultney Loughridge. Wm. Edmundson held the office of Justice of the Peace, by appointment of Gov. Chambers, under an act prescribing regulations for unorganized counties, and was the first public officer in the county.

COUNTY SEAT.

The Commissioners appointed to locate the County Seat, Jesse Williams, of Johnson County, Ebenezer Perkins, of Washington County, and Thomas Henderson, of Keokuk County, met at the house of Mathew D. Springer, and after qualifying according to law, proceeded to examine the situation. There were three points competing for the location, to-wit: Six Mile Prairie, the "Narrows," the present site of Oskaloosa, and the center of the county, about three miles north of the latter. After deliberation the commissioners decided in favor of the "Narrows," and agreeably to a vote of those present, gave it the name of Mahaska, and on the 11th of May so reported. The commissioners received two dollars a day for their services.

The law of Congress gave each county the right of preemption to 160 acres of land, selected as a county seat, if unentered. The tract selected as the seat of justice for Mahaska County was at this time held as a claim by Wm. D. Canfield, who built upon it the first cabin within the limits of Oskaloosa, in October, 1843. It stood in what is now Perry Street, between Harrison and South, near the south-west corner of the old town. In what way the county arranged the matter with Mr. Canfield has not been recorded; but it immediately assumed possession of the tract.

The County Commissioners met on the 13th day of May, two days after the location was made, to lay out and plat the tract into town lots. The survey was made by David Stump, the County Surveyor. At this time Mr. Canfield, the County Treasurer, not liking the name of Mahaska, proposed a change. M. T. Williams, one of the company present, proposed Oskaloosa, which meeting with general approbation, was adopted by the board. This was the name originally chosen by the locating commissioners, but they allowed themselves to be overruled.

At the first public sale of lots in June, 1844, very few purchasers were present, and after eight lots had been sold at very low prices the commissioners stopped the sale. This was owing to the violent opposition manifested toward Oskaloosa by the friends of Six Mile Prairie and the center of the county, who, at the following August election, united their strength against the former in a contest for county officers. Oskaloosa triumphed after a sharp contest, and no county seat contest was ever afterwards inaugurated.

On the 11th of May, 1844, the County Commissioners made the following record: "Ordered by the board, that sealed proposals will be received by the Commissioners' Clerk, at any time from this date until the 1st of July next, for the erection of a Court House in Oskaloosa, the seat of justice of Mahaska County." At the time appointed the contract was let to James Edgar, and the building finished in 1845. During this meeting of the commissioners, May, 1843, M. T. Williams was appointed agent to act in the absence of the commissioners, in superintending the survey of the town, the sale of lots, and "such other business as may by him be deemed necessary."

In 1845 the Commissioners authorized the Clerk to negotiate a loan of two hundred dollars, with which to enter the site of the County Seat. The money was obtained of Wm. Wilson, for which the commissioners gave their note payable twelve months from date, at twelve per cent. interest, to be paid from the proceeds of sales of lots.

The county was apportioned into election precincts previous to the April election of 1843, but was not regularly divided into townships until January 7, 1845, when the county commissioners defined the following: White Oak, Harrison, Spring Creek, Monroe, Union, Des Moines, Oskaloosa, Madison, Jefferson, Jackson, Cedar, English River, Lake, and White Breast. Jackson, English River, Lake, and White Breast were no part of Mahaska County, but were within the limits of other counties attached to it, and ceased to be under the jurisdiction of Mahaska as soon as those counties were organized. Spring Creek was attached to Oskaloosa, March 11, 1845, and the name of Jackson was changed to Scott soon afterwards.

The first term of court in the county was begun on the 17th of May, 1844, by Judge Joseph Williams. This was a court having both federal and local jurisdiction, and William Thompson, Esq., was appointed United States Attorney pro tem., and Christian Slagle District Attorney pro tem. William Edmundson was Sheriff, and M. T. Williams was appointed Clerk.

This court was held in an unfinished building on the corner of Washington and Main streets. One account says the court room was on the west side of Washington, in a building erected by Mr. Canfield. Another locates it on the opposite side in a building afterwards known as the Great Western Hotel, kept by Mr. Canfield. The latter is probably correct. Here a platform was improvised of boards laid across the logs out from the door, and upon this judge was seated upon a rocking chair behind a table or desk prepared by laying a broad walnut plank on the heads of two barrels. The lawyers occupied one end of this plank and the clerk the other. The grand jurors at this term were James Vance, George Argabright, John Rose, A. D. Bowers, Richard Parker, Adam Cline, M. S. Morris, Osee Mathews, George W. Jones, Jefferson Chitwood, William Bean, James Hockenbothum, Wellington Nasman, James Comstock, Adam Storts, William Welch, John Shelladay, Harmon Davis, John H. Stewart, Brantley Stafford, Jacob Crane, Alexander May, and John Vance, the majority of whom long since died or removed from the county. By order of the court the grand jury held their deliberations in a hollow toward the north end of Washington street, and continued in session the remainder of the week without presenting any indictments. The petit jurors were John Newel, Samuel Peters, John D. Baldwin, Thomas Brooks, Alfred Seevers, William Bovel, Robert Hammond, Thomas Faucher, Jacob Nordike, James Seevers, William D. Brown, Joseph Ross, Alfred Hood, Solomon Barber, Pleasant Parker, Green T. Clark, John P. Majors, Joseph H. Benedict, Thomas Williams, Isaac Barker, W. H. Freel, Thomas Wilson, Robert Curry, Jr., and Benjamin Thomas. Some of these afterwards became prominent men in the county. A panel of twelve was selected from this number in the trial of the case of James Hall, Appellee vs. Joseph Koons, forcible entry and detainer, in relation to a claim on public lands, which occupied all the time of the court until its adjournment Saturday evening.

INCIDENTS.

In June, 1843, William James laid out the first town in Mahaska County, on Six Mile Prairie, which he called Harrisburg. It was never recorded, and some time afterwards George W. Jones laid out a town on the same site, and named it Auburn. A warehouse built by him was all the improvement ever made. Mr. George W. Jones is the now well-known proprietor of the Jones House at Des Moines.

Early in 1843 Dr. E. A. Boyer came and selected a location adjoining the site of Rochester, where he secured a "squatter's right" by marking out such land as he desired to enter. He at once commenced the practice of medicine, and for a number of years had a ride of many miles.

A branch of the Fourier Association commenced operations, and made some slight improvements near Dr. Boyer's place during the winter of 1843-'4, but being destitute of capital soon broke up and abandoned the undertaking.

Mr. John W. Jones, subsequently a prominent citizen of Oskaloosa, and brother of George W. Jones, located at an early day upon the farm where Harrisburg and Auburn were platted.

M. T. Williams came to the county in May, 1843, at the instance of his brother, Jesse Williams, one of the commissioners who located the county seat. Henry Temple, the first lawyer in the county, came the same season. William Brown, known as "Center Bill Brown," erected a log house in December, 1843, near the center of the county. He subsequently became one of the proprietors of Omaha. During the Summer of 1844, Mr. James Seevers came to the county, erected a house and became a permanent resident, afterwards removing to Oskaloosa. He was father-in-law of M. T. Williams, elsewhere mentioned, and father of Hon. W. H. Seevers, of Oskaloosa.

July 5, 1844, the commissioners levied the first tax in the county upon an assessment of $46,661, personal property, no land being liable to assessment. The levy was five mills county tax, and one-half of a territorial tax, also fifty cents for county revenue upon each poll; total tax, $505.54. The record shows that there were 498 polls assessed, hence there must have been that many adult male citizens here when the assessment was made, between the months of April and July, 1844. They were not all in Mahaska County, however, as Monroe and possibly Poweshiek were included in the assessment. The first levy of taxes for school purposes was made in 1846, and amounted to $429.35.

In January, 1846, the commissioners of Mahaska County granted John Scott permission to establish a ferry across Des Moines River, at the mouth of Raccoon River, for a license fee of ten dollars. So far did the jurisdiction of this county extend at that time.

The first mill in the county was built in 1843, by Joseph H. and John K. Benedict, on Muchekinock Creek, about three miles above Eddyville. It was a saw mill, with a small pair of burrs for grinding corn.

The first sermon was preached by a Methodist circuit rider named Lewis, in October, 1844, at the house of Isaac Harrell, on Six Mile Prairie. Soon after a Methodist class was organized in this neighborhood, and a Mr. Chestnut chosen class-leader. This was the first religious organization. The first school in the county was taught by Miss Semira A. Hobbs, in September, 1844, on section 16, township 75, range 15.

The mode of access to this county during its early history was by water to Keokuk, the "Gate City" (so called because it was the gateway to the territory northwest as far as Des Moines), thence up the Des Moines River by such rude water craft as could be procured to points whence the immigrants could make their way to their allotted location by team and wagon. The way was roundabout and the journey long and slow, yet such means of communication with the outer world were then regarded as exceedingly valuable and convenient. Hence the settlement which extended up the Des Moines River valley was the first of any great importance that penetrated far into the interior of the state. This was before the era of direct and rapid communication by rail. Then Mahaska County was away in the far west, a long distance beyond civilization. Now it is the home of civilization, with all its best institutions. The river has been abandoned for the ready communication of the rail, and the county is traversed by numerous

RAILROADS.

The Keokuk & Des Moines Railroad passes from the Gate City to the Capital City through the county. The Central of Iowa passes centrally through the county, and is a direct through line between St. Louis and St. Paul. Both these lines connect with all the east and west lines across the state. The southwestern branch of the C., R. I. & P. road is now building from Sigourney to Oskaloosa, and when completed will bring the county on an important east and west line, connecting at Albia with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. These lines afford ready communication in all directions.

EDUCATION.

One of the leading educational institutions in Mahaska County is Penn College. This is under the exclusive patronage of the Society of Friends, and was named in honor of that most distinguished exemplar of their profession, William Penn. This was originated and designed by the members of the society throughout the West as their chief seminary of learning. Their excellent and spacious stone edifice, about one mile north of the City of Oskaloosa, was commenced in 1870. The college is now provided with an efficient corps of instructors, has a large number of students, and is progressing prosperously.

Oskaloosa College is another prominent institution, which will be more particularly mentioned elsewhere.

The public schools of the county number upwards of 130, and are most liberally provided with school houses valued at very nearly $160,000. The amount annually expended in maintaining the public schools, including compensation of teachers and cost of other facilities, averages somewhere between $70,000 and $75,000. The permanent school fund of the county is $34,909.08; that of the several counties of the state bring upon an average about $30,000. It will thus be seen that Mahaska County provides unusually liberal support for public schools.

OSKALOOSA.

This enterprising young city is located on a beautiful tract of high, level prairie, on the divide between the Des Moines and Skunk Rivers. There was not a tree upon the town site when it was laid out, but the citizens began early planting native forest trees, and continued it to such an extent that it has been denominated the "City of Trees." William Canfield built the first cabin (as elsewhere stated) upon this territory, in 1843. Dr. T. D. Porter was the first practicing physician in the place. The first school taught here was by Samuel W. Caldwell, in the Winter of 1844-5.

The town has had a steady and continuous growth and improvement since 1844, never outrunning the development of the country in speculative improvements, but fully keeping pace with it in substantial business enterprise and prosperity. Since the completion of the Central Railroad, its progress has been materially quickened and its business much increased. Around the Court House Square, in the center of the town, are ranged handsome and costly business blocks, excellent and well filled store rooms, fine hotels, and all the evidences of a large and thriving business. Almost every department of mercantile and professional business is well represented. The manufacturing interests are represented by extensive flouring mills, woolen mills and foundry and machine shops, besides numerous minor establishments.

The city is duly incorporated under the general incorporation law of the state.

EDUCATIONAL.

Oskaloosa College is located on a beautiful ten-acre plat near the west end of the city. The college edifice is a stately brick building, three stories high, presenting a front of 130 feet. The openings for doors and windows, the groins, copings, base and string courses are of dressed limestone. This institution was incorporated in 1857, and the preparatory department was opened in 1861. Its success has been highly gratifying. It has an excellent faculty of five professors, including the President, Rev. F. M. Bruner, A.M., and is annually attended by a large number of students.

The city also maintains, under an independent district organization, an excellent system of graded schools, furnished with suitable school houses, and all other appropriate facilities. These employ nearly twenty teachers; and the course of instruction includes, besides the common branches, several of the higher branches, among which are Latin and German.

CHURCHES.

Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized November 10, 1844, by Rev. B. B. Bonham, with twenty-two members. This society erected the first house of worship in the county, in 1846.

The First Presbyterian Church was organized February 21, 1845, by Rev. Samuel Cowles, with seven members. A Sabbath school was organized in 1848.

The Church of Christ was organized March 25, 1846, by H. H. Hendrix, acting evangelist, with eleven members. The chapel was founded in 1853, and a Sabbath school was organized soon afterwards.

The First United Presbyterian Church was organized in June, 1849, as the First Associate Reformed Church, and adopted its present name in 1858.

The Methodist Church was first organized as a class in the Fall of 1844, by Rev. A. W. Johnson, the first preacher of the Gospel who settled in the county.

The Baptist, Universalist, and Roman Catholic Churches and the Society of Friends have been organized since. Nearly all of them have good houses of worship.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Weekly Oskaloosa Herald is a large, nine-column to the page, folio sheet, published Thursdays, by H. C. Leighton and W. H. Needham. It is Republican in politics, and enjoys an extensive circulation. It has an excellent news and job office in its own building, the Herald Block, and its presses are propelled by steam. The Herald was established July 2, 1850, by John R. Needham and Hugh McNeeley. Mr. McNeeley sold his interest to John W. Murphy, he to J. H. Knox, he to James Brown, and he to Charles Beardsley. Then the entire office was sold by Needham & Beardsley to C. W. Fisher and John W. Murphy. In November, 1865, Mr. Murphy sold his interest to the present proprietors of the paper, and in January, 1868, Mr. Fisher sold his interest to W. A. Hunter, and he to the present proprietors, in March, 1870. It was started as a five-column folio, and was enlarged successively to six, seven, eight and nine columns, and finally was made a sheet 30x46 inches, by lengthening the columns, in 1870.

The Oskaloosa Standard is a Liberal Democratic newspaper, published Thursdays, by Carleton & Hare, and is a lively newspaper, enjoying a prosperous business. It was established in 1865, by the present proprietors.

The Evangelist, a religious newspaper representing the Christian Church, is published weekly, at Oskaloosa, by the Central Book Concern, G. T. Carpenter, editor in chief, and has a wide circulation throughout the state. It was established at Fort Madison, in 1849, and removed to Oskaloosa in 1858. It was issued monthly, or semi-monthly, until 1870, when it was enlarged and made a weekly. The founder was D. Bates, and after him A. Chatterton, G. T. Carpenter, A. Hickey and B.W. Johnson were proprietors, successively. From Mr. Johnson it passed into the hands of the Central Book concern.

The Reform Leader is an enterprising sheet, published Thursdays, by F. C. Welch, by whom it was established, in 1871. It is independent of political parties.

NEW SHARON. This is a thriving town on the line of the Central Railroad of Iowa, in the northern part of the county. It is surrounded by a rich farming region in a high state of cultivation, and enjoys quite an important local trade in merchandise and produce. It is building and improving with considerable rapidity and enterprise.

The New Sharon Star is an enterprising Republican newspaper, published every Friday by H. J. Vail, by whom it was established in 1873. It is an eight-column to the page folio sheet, of creditable appearance.

OSKALOOSA STATION is a shipping point on the Keokuk & Des Moines Railroad, two and a half miles from the city. Quite a village has grown up here, and considerable manufacturing is carried on.

The other villages and post offices are: Agricola, Auburn, Belle Fountain, Buck Horn, Cedar, Eveland Grove, Ferry, Flint, Fremont, Givin, Granville, Hopewell, Indianapolis, Leighton, Mauch Chunk, Peoria, Union Mills and White Oak.

COUNTY OFFICERS, 1875.

GEO. A. ROSS, Auditor. HENRY R. KENDIG, Treasurer.
DAVID R. MOORE, Clerk of Courts. WM. R. COWAN, Recorder.
JAMES E. HETHERINGTON, Sheriff. JASPER HULL, Superintendent.
L. P. SHRIVER, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

CRAWFORD COUNTY.

This county lies on the western slope, is the second east from the Missouri River, and is in the fifth tier from the northern and southern boundary line of the state. It is twenty-four miles north and south by thirty east and west, and contains twenty congressional townships, or a superficial area of seven hundred and twenty square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

Like most of the counties of Western Iowa, Crawford is well watered by running streams, the largest being the Boyer River, which meanders diagonally through the county from northeast to southwest, entering five miles west of the northeast corner, and passing out three miles east of the southwest corner. East Boyer River is a fine tributary which enters Crawford from Carroll County, and flowing in a southwest direction forms a junction with the main stream at Denison, a little southeast of the center of the county. The other important tributaries of the Boyer watering a large portion of the county, are Dunham's, Walnut, Ernst, Buss, Welsh, Paradise, Buffalo, Otter, Boone, Coon, and Buck Creeks. The southeast part is watered by the Nishnabotany River and Williams Creek, with the several branches of both. Soldier River crosses the northwest corner where it receives a large number of tributaries, including a stream called Beaver Creek. A branch called East Soldier, also waters the northwest part of the county, with a considerable sized tributary called Spillman Creek. Willow River rises in the southwest part of the county, watering a considerable portion of one township. Except Boyer River, the above streams are small, but all of them afford abundance of water for stock the year round. Fine springs are found in a number of places, and good well water is obtained at moderate depth, say from twenty to thirty feet. Indeed it is a rare thing to find any locality on the prairies of Iowa where good wells are not easily obtained. The water of these running streams in this part of the state is excellent for drinking and domestic uses, being usually clear and cold, owing to the fact that they are supported by springs. One of the finest springs in Crawford County is at what is called Spring Grove, a mile and a half south of Denison.

The finest groves of timber are found on Boyer and East Boyer Rivers, but there are some good groves scattered along some of the smaller streams. The largest body of timber in the county is what is called Mason's Grove, commencing about five miles northeast of Denison, and embracing about 2,000 acres along the east side of Boyer River. Dunham's Grove, on the East Boyer six miles east of Denison, contains about 300 acres, including some fine black walnut. There are good groves of timber situated in other parts of the county, principally on or near the Boyer River. The aggregate of timber land of the county embraces about sixteen sections or 10,240 acres, being about one acre of timber to each forty-five of prairie. The timber embraces the following varieties: Black oak, bur oak, black walnut, black and white hickory, linn, hackberry, soft maple, ash, elm, cottonwood, cherry, etc. Among shrubs are principally ash, sumach, hazel, pithalder etc. These generally grow in the valleys, or about the edges of the timber. Walnuts, hickorynuts and hazelnuts are plenty.

The wild fruits most abundant, are plums, grapes, strawberries, raspberries, gooseberries, crab apples and cherries. There are also wild currants, and in a few places blackberries are found. Wild plums, grapes and strawberries rarely fail to mature in great profusion.

Owing to the scarcity of native timber a large number of the more thoughtful farmers of the county have planted groves of silverleaf, maple, cottonwood, black walnut, and box elder, which have grown with such rapidity that the boundless expanse of treeless prairie, which a few years ago stretched in every direction as far as the eye could reach, are now dotted with beautiful groves, which not only add much to the natural beauty of the landscape, but greatly increase the resources and wealth of the county.

The surface configuration of the county is rolling, the divides separating the streams being bulky masses of earth which sweep down into the valleys over beautiful declivities from the undulating plains above. Near the headwaters of the streams the surface is more rolling and broken than on the main divides, in a few places being too uneven and precipitous for successful cultivation. The soil is almost uniformly composed of the light-colored, fine silicious material of the bluff deposit peculiar to the Missouri slope, is of great fertility, and in places is largely mixed with sand, and sometimes, though rarely, gravel plots are met with. The Boyer valley is one of the finest in Iowa, and when brought into thorough cultivation will present one of the most attractive farming portions of the state. Compared with the size of the stream its valley is wide, and has a deep, rich soil well adapted to the production of the finest crops of corn, wheat, oats and other kinds of grain. Extending as it does some thirty miles through the county, it embraces a large area of land of unsurpassed fertility. It must not, however, be understood that the upland prairies are sterile, as the greater portion of them are but little inferior to the bottoms. The best upland prairies are in the east, north and northwest portions. In the smaller valleys and ravines extensive accumulations of black soil or vegetable mold is often found, which probably comes from the washing of the rains from the adjacent slopes which bear evident signs of having been thus denuded of their coating of dark humus. The vivid imagination of the enthusiastic lover of nature can scarcely picture a more pleasing rural landscape than that afforded by the valleys of the Boyer Rivers, viewed from the upland ridges at almost any point along their courses, overlooking miles of their park-like valleys, embellished with clumps of trees, well improved farms, orchards, rural homes and tasty villages, which are rapidly springing into existence throughout this truly beautiful region.

Stone suitable for building purposes is not abundant, the only quarry worked in the county being situated about four miles southwest of Denison on a branch of Buck Creek. It is a species of limestone that answers for ordinary purposes. There are indications of the existence of the same formation in Spring Grove, Burnt Woods and at other points in the county. Clay and sand suitable for the manufacture of brick are sufficiently plenty, and a number of buildings in Denison and in some other places have been constructed from brick manufactured in the vicinity.

No veins of coal have as yet been discovered in this county, and it is probable that if the productive or lower formation of the coal measure underlie the area embraced in Crawford County it is at so great a depth beneath the surface as to render its development for the present impracticable.

The soil and climate are well adapted to the production of wheat, oats, rye, barley, corn, beans, peas, potatoes and other vegetables, and grains indigenous to the temperate zone. The yield of spring wheat, which is the variety principally raised, has been from fifteen to forty-five bushels to the acre, with a probable average of about twenty-five bushels. Many a few farmers have engaged in the cultivation of tame grasses, but it has been fully demonstrated that timothy and blue-grass will succeed well, while clover does well so far as it has been tried.

There are a number of orchards in the county which have been fruiting for a number of years, and give promise of assured success in the future. Considerable attention is being paid to fruit culture, and there is no doubt but what it will soon become one of the important resources of that section. Cherries, vines, and all the small fruits do well, growing luxuriantly, and produce an abundance of excellent flavored fruit.

The Chicago & Northwestern Railroad enters the county a little north of the center of the eastern boundary line and running southwest down the valley of the Boyer River, a distance of over thirty-one miles, makes it exist near the southwest corner, affording good communication with the eastern or western markets.

EARLY HISTORY.

In May, 1849, Cornelius Dunham, of Jackson County, Iowa, brought Franklin Prentice and his wife to the county, and left them at the place known as Dunham's Grove, on East Boyer River, about six miles east of the present town of Denison. Mr. Prentice built a cabin for Dunham, who came with his family in the autumn of the same year, accompanied also by a man named Reuben Blake. This was the first settlement in the county. The same year Prentice took a claim at the mouth of Otter Creek, on Boyer River, near Mason's Grove. The next settlers were Jesse Mason and family, and George J. and Noah V. Johnson, all of whom came in June, 1850, and settled at Mason's Grove. In the Fall of this year Levi Skinner and Calvin Horr settled at the same place. The next settler was Thomas Dobson, in the Spring of 1851, who also settled in the vicinity of Mason's Grove. In the Fall of 1853, Edward Howorth, with his sons, Edward and Daniel, located at a place called Three Bee Grove, in the south-west part of the county, not far from the present thriving town of Dunlap. In 1854, the settlement at Mason's Grove received the following additional members: Benjamin Dobson, A. R. Hunt, D. J. Fowler, Clark Winans, B. F. Wicks, and E. W. Fowler. During the same year Benjamin Dobson erected the first saw mill at this place, and the following located in other parts of the county, to-wit: John Gilbreath, John R. Bassett, and Moses and Daniel Riddle, at Coon Grove, four miles south of the present town of Denison; Mathias Didra, at Buck Grove, in the south part of the county; Charles Kennedy and Robert D. Butterworth, at Three Bee Tree Grove; and William H. Jordan, at Lost Grove, near the present town of Crawford, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad. John A. Dunham and Rufus Richardson came the same year. Those mentioned were all the settlers in the county up to 1855, during the Spring of which year the following came: Reuben and John Vore, S. C. Dow, S. J. Comfort, Cyrus B. Whitmore, John Poordy, Isaac B. Goodrich, S. B. Greek, S. S. Bailey, John Sisley, Edward Van Vleet, James Slater and H. C. Lash. The last named settled at Mason's Grove, and the others at various places in the county. In 1856, there were but few additions to the settlers, the following, with their families, it is believed, comprising all: Geo. C. King, Wm. J. Todd, John B. Huckstep, Edwin Cadwell, Tracy Chapman, Morris McHenry, Esau McKim, and Joseph Brogden, all of whom located at Mason's Grove; and R. B. Alexander, S. Bell, B. B. Bishop, and Wm. Wilkie, who settled in the south and south-west parts of the county. Hon. J. W. Denison came to the county in the Fall of 1855, and during that year and the next, selected a quantity of land for the Providence Western Land Company, and in September, 1856, commenced the settlement of the town of Denison. He brought with him Francis Reynolds and John B. Swain, who erected a steam saw and grist mill in the new town.

The first births in the county were David and George Jesse Mason, twin sons of Jesse and Eliza Ann Mason, born in 1852. The first matrimonial transaction took place at Mason's Grove, Oct. 12, 1853, at which time and place Rev. Thomas Dobson tied three silken knots, binding six willing hearts, as follows: George J. Johnson and Elizabeth Ann Mason; Noah V. Johnson and Jane Mason, and Calvin Horr and Elizabeth Mowery. The first death was that of John A. Dunham, in the Winter of 1854-5. The first entry of government land was made August 21, 1854, by John Gilbreath. The first school house erected was at Mason's Grove, in the Fall of 1855, in which Morris McHenry taught the first school, a term of three and one-half months, commencing Nov. 4, 1856. The first sermon was preached Sunday, Oct. 19, 1855, by Rev. William Black, of the M. E. Church, and the same day, after the sermon, the first religious society was organized, with seven members, as follows: George C. King, Mrs. E. R. King, O. S. Wright, Tabitha Wright, John B. Huckstep, Martha A. Huckstep, and Rufus Richardson. The first Sunday School was organized at Mason's Grove, Jan. 7, 1857, George C. King, Superintendent. It was organized under the auspices of the M. E. Church, and had twenty pupils. The first lawyer was S. J. Comfort, who was also the first acting Prosecuting Attorney. Dr. David McWilliams was the first physician.

Up to April, 1855, Crawford County was attached to Shelby for civil purposes. At the April election of that year the following county officers were elected: E. W. Fowler, County Judge; Thomas Dobson, Clerk; A. R. Hunt, Treasurer and Recorder; D. J. Fowler, Sheriff; Isaac B. Goodrich, School Fund Commissioner; Cyrus Whitmore, Prosecuting Attorney; Samuel Kennedy, Surveyor; L. Skinner, Coroner; and John R. Bassett, Drainage Commissioner. There was at this time only one election precinct in the county, all the votes being cast at Coon Grove, in what is now Denison Township. New county officers were chosen at the following August election, at which time John R. Bassett was elected County Judge, who transacted his first business September 3, 1855, which was to act upon a petition for a county road, which he refused for the following reasons, which appear of record:

"I set the road petition aside on these grounds: In the first place, I can not find out that there were notices as the law prescribes in three public places in the county. Secondly, the notices not agreeing with the petition. Thirdly, and the greatest objection, is that there was no one offered to enter bonds for the security of the payment of the Commissioner, providing the road was not finally located. For these objections I thereby set the road aside and pronounce not in accordance with law."

On the third of December of this year the Judge, Clerk and Recorder met and reported their account of moneys received from August 1st to December 1st, the Judge having received $5.75; Clerk, $3.00; and Recorder $8.70. Total, $17.45. They made an equal division of the amount and appropriated it toward the payment of their salaries. William L. Henderson, having been appointed Surveyor and agent to select the swamp lands, made his report Dec. 5, 1855, and was allowed $150 for his services.

The first estate administered upon was that of Cyrus B. Whitmore, John Vore being appointed administrator. The location of county roads constituted a large proportion of the business to the County Judge. Judge Bassett continued to serve in this capacity up to the organization under the supervisor system.

The following persons constituted the first Board of Supervisors: Thomas Dobson, Millford Township; Henry C. Laub, Denison Township, and Daniel Howorth, Union Township. At their organization in January, 1861, Daniel Howorth was chosen President. S. J. Comfort was their Clerk. Their first session continued six days, during which time various county matters received attention.

The court house in Denison was finished in the Fall of 1858. It is built of brick, is 80x40 feet, and two stories high. The various county officers are in the lower story, and the upper story is used as a court room, and for various public meetings. The cost of the building was about $6,000. It stands in the middle of the public square, a beautiful rolling tract of ground, now set with handsome shade trees and enclosed in a neat and substantial fence.

Good bridges have been erected on all the principal roads over the streams.

About five miles below Denison, in the Boyer Valley, there is a semi-circular group of ancient artificial mounds. There are about nine of them, situated on a plateau or table rising above the lower bottom. They are about five feet high above the general level of the ground. Another group of similar mounds is located on a second bottom at the mouth of Paradise Creek. Human remains have been found in some of them, showing that they were burial places.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper was established October 1, 1860, by J. W. Denison. It was a twenty-eight column sheet, Republican in politics, and continued about a year and a half.

The next paper was the Denison Review, the first number of which made its appearance May 3, 1867, under the management of Money & Stephens. In the Fall of 1868 Money disposed of his interest to R. W. McNeal. The Review is a neatly printed, readable, and thoroughly local paper, Republican in politics, and now under the able editorial conduct of J. Fred Meyrs, late of Washington, D. C.

The Crawford County Bulletin is a reliable and well conducted local paper, receiving a good degree of well deserved patronage. It was established in 1873, is independent in politics, and editorially is controlled by Stephens & Keith.

COUNTY OFFICIALS FOR 1875.

ANDREW D. MOLONY, Auditor. WALTER S. WILSON, Clerk of the Courts.
LEWIS CORNWELL, Treasurer. JOHN B. POITEVIN, Recorder.
ALL C. SMITH, Sheriff. NEWTON F. SMITH, Supt. of Com. Schools.
ROBERT HOPE, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

DENISON.

This place is the county seat, and is situated a little south of the center of the county, at the junction of the Boyer and East Boyer Rivers. A portion of the town, rising upon the slopes adjacent to these streams, commands magnificent views of the valley of the Boyer, with its rapidly improving farms, the railroads, line of telegraph, groves of timber, and other objects, adding variety and beauty to the scene. The railroad passes along the south edge of the town, where it makes a bend directly southwest, leaving Denison well situated as a trading point for a large district of country unsurpassed in fertility. Its agricultural resources, when developed, can not fail to make Denison a point of great importance. It is one hundred and fifteen miles from Des Moines, eighty from Fort Dodge, seventy-five from Council Bluffs, seventy-five from Sioux City, and forty-five from the Missouri River.

As has been before stated, the town was laid out in 1856, by J. W. Denison, from whom it derived its name, and at that time became the county seat. The town plat embraces about seven hundred acres, the general size of lots being 50x150 feet, the principal streets being one hundred feet wide and the others eighty. Handsome and eligible blocks have been reserved for public parks and other purposes. A number of elegant residences and business blocks have been erected, which would be a credit to any city in Iowa. Among the first settlers were Francis Reynolds and John B. Swain, who put up the first steam saw and grist mill in the place. R. W. Calkins, O. S. Gates, F. W. Buescher, Jacob Whitinger, Morris McHenry, J. F. Seagrave and Eli Baer. Mary Louise Seagrave, born November 13, 1856, was the first birth in the town, while the first death was that of a child of Francis Reynolds.

DELOIT.—This is a village and post office near Mason's Grove, six miles north of Denison. It was laid out by Benjamin Dobson, in 1857.

The other villages and post offices are: Boyer River, Dowville, Kiron, Vail and West Side.

MILLS COUNTY.

Mills is the western border county of the second tier from the south line of the state, and is one of the smaller counties, embracing an area of about four hundred and fifty square miles, or 296,000 acres. The west side townships are fractional, following the irregular course of the Missouri River. The surface of the county is considerably diversified. The western portion is the level flood plain of the Missouri River, commonly called bottom land, from three to seven miles wide, comprising nearly one-fourth of the territory. This broad belt of bottom land ends abruptly on the east in a range of bold bluffs, conforming irregularly to the general course of the river, and the contrast presents a grand appearance to the eye of the beholder. Deep narrow valleys and ravines, often studded with trees, break the bluff line into numerous spurs and segments, but without destroying its general outline, for the elevation of the bluffs is very nearly uniform, and the face presented toward the river is very steep and different in appearance from any other. After passing the narrow strip of broken land adjoining the bluff line, the uplands are high and rolling, but present very little surface so rough as to be undesirable for cultivation. They are lined by numerous water courses, fringed with gently undulating valleys of singular beauty, within a setting of gracefully ascending slopes which are frequently studded or crowned with groves of timber, and the darker hues of the forest lend additional charms to the picturesque scenery.

The county is well watered by unfailing streams. Along the Missouri bluffs numerous springs are found, and also many along the streams in other parts of the county. Indeed, the large number of springs and small streams of living water are the subject of comment by strangers visiting this county. Several of the streams afford good water power for machinery—among them West Nishnabotany, Silver Creek, Wahaboucey and Keg Creek—and the county is well supplied with flouring mills. There is likewise a good woolen factory on Wahaboncey Creek, in the south part of the county.

Mills County is tolerably well supplied with timber. The principal varieties are burr oak, pin oak, black walnut, hickory, white ash, red elm, white elm, hackberry, mulberry, maple, linn and cottonwood. The groves of stately cottonwood along the Missouri bottom furnish a large portion of the fencing material to the county, and many steam saw mills are engaged here sawing lumber. The bluffs contiguous to the river bottom afford hard wood, while on Keg Creek, above and below Glenwood, are many fine groves. The extensive and beautiful valley of the Nishnabotany is not so well supplied with timber.

Limestone, suitable for quick-lime and for building purposes, is found at the base of the bluffs, near the southwest part of the county. There are also several good quarries on Silver Creek and the Nishnabotany River. Sandstone is found in the northeast part of the county, which is used for building purposes.

Excellent brick are manufactured at Glenwood, Pacific City, and at several other places in the county.

The basis and principal portion of the soil, both of bottom lands and uplands, throughout the county, is the famous bluff deposit, which possesses some remarkable characteristics, which will be found fully described in the chapter of this work devoted to the geology of Iowa. When brought up from a depth of many feet, it is almost as productive as the surface soil. A limited admixture of vegetable mold is all that seems to be required to give it a very high degree of fertility. Of this the surface soil has an abundance, especially upon the bottom lands. The valuable qualities of this soil are attested by the bountiful crops which it produces. For corn growing it is unexcelled, and the noted wheat region of Northern Iowa and Minnesota is little, if any, more reliable for wheat. The other small grains yield equally good crops. Apples and pears are successfully grown, and all the small fruits thrive abundantly. The native grasses flourish extremely well. The tame grasses are easily propagated. The county possesses great advantages for stock raising, and stock and hogs have long been exported extensively. Within the last ten years considerable attention has been given to the introduction and raising of fine stock.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

As early as 1838, Col. Peter A. Sarpy, who was long a citizen of Mills County, traded with the Indians both on the Iowa and Nebraska sides of the river. At an early day he laid out the town of St. Mary, on the Missouri bottom below the mouth of Mosquito Creek. He was a Frenchman, and the name of his town is due to the fact that he and his followers were devoted Catholics. At one time it was a promising village, but most of it long since passed down the current of the turbulent Missouri. Col. Sarpy died at Plattsmouth, Nebraska, in January, 1865. He was the first who remained any great length of time in the county prior to 1846, although other Indian traders in the employ of the American Fur Company, and itinerant missionaries to the Indians, traversed this region.

About thirty disciples of Joseph Smith, in August, 1846, pitched their tents in the Missouri River bottom, on the east side of Keg Creek, about four miles north of the present south line of the county. Like others of their faith, after the death of their prophet they had set out for their journey to the "promised land." As the season advanced, preparation for Winter became necessary, and they located at that place quite a number of cabins, making the settlement have something of a village-like appearance. They gave it the name of Rushville. One of the original settlers of Rushville, who remained in the county, was William Brittain, who, with his family, afterwards located near Glenwood. Libeus T. Coon, Silas Hillman, Ira Hillman, G. N. Clark, J. Everett and others of this company settled at the place where Glenwood now stands, and in the vicinity, in 1847 and 1848. Another party of Mormon sojourners halted at Silver Creek Grove, in the Fall of 1847, and made their temporary abode at a place known as Cutler's Camp, named after their leader. His cabin was on the farm afterwards owned by Daniel Lewis, one of the earliest Gentile settlers of this county.

Henry Alice, who came as an assistant missionary to the Pawnee Indians, in 1854, under the auspices of the American Board of Foreign Missions, became a resident of the county, near St. Mary's, in 1853, having passed the interval of nineteen years on the Nebraska side. The Mormons, however, chiefly occupied the country for four or five years after their first appearance. Gradually others came and took their places, but their numbers were few until the exodus of 1852 began, when they increased rapidly.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was named in honor of Frederick Mills, a gallant young officer from Burlington, Iowa, who was killed in one of the battles of the Mexican war. It was originally attached to Pottawattamie County, but a separate organization was perfected by the election of county officers at the general election of 1851. At that election William Smith was elected County Judge; W. W. Noyes, Clerk of the District Court; and James Hardy, Sheriff.

The seat of justice was located at a place then called Coonville, but the name has since been changed to Glenwood. The first term of the District Court was held at Coonville, October, 1851. The somewhat noted James Sloan, of Pottawattamie County, was the judge who presided. He was a native of Ireland, and was of the Mormon persuasion.

INCIDENTS.

The first white child born in the county was Andrew J. Stewart, in the Fall of 1846. His parents were Mormon sojourners at Rushville, and removed to Salt Lake soon after. Caroline L. Brittain was born, January 12, 1847, and was the first born in the county of parents who became permanent residents.

The first death was also a Mormon. A rude slab, fashioned from native limestone, with a smooth surface, about one foot square, containing the inscription, "J. Eastman, died April 10, 1847, aged 80 years," left standing near the ruins of Rushville, tells all that is known about him.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The Court House stands in the center of the Public Square in Glenwood, and is a brick building of rather imposing appearance. In size it is 45×65 feet, and two stories high—the lower story 12 feet, and the upper 20 feet. The lower story is divided into four offices, each containing a large fire-proof vault. The upper story is a spacious court room, and is much used for large assemblages on public occasions. The building is covered with tin. The whole cost was about $25,000.

The county has a substantial jail. It is a two story brick, 25½×44½ feet. It has two cell rooms with three cells each, and a cell of sufficient capacity for two prisoners. The cells are constructed with the latest improvements, with steel encased bars, saw and file proof. The building also includes rooms for the jailor. The cost was about $8,000. It stands on the east side of the Public Square, within convenient distance of the Court House.

The county has constructed good, substantial bridges over all the principal streams.

Ample railroad facilities are afforded by the Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs Road, running north and south, and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, running east and west.

GLENWOOD.

This little city is romantically embowered in one of the finest groves in the valley of Keg Creek. The business portion of the place is amply rolling for drainage, but is not broken, while the surrounding wooded slopes and eminences afford beautiful sites for residences. Many of them are already crowned with neat cottages and elegant mansions. The business portion of the town fronts on the Public Square, a fine enclosure planted with shade trees of various kinds, but chiefly maple. This portion of the town plat was originally what the name suggests—a glen, but is dry, gently rolling, and surrounded on all sides with groves. He who loves a quiet retreat where a beehive's hum may soothe his ear, will find it amid the sylvan surroundings of Glenwood.

The town was first known by the name of Coonville, as before stated, the first proprietor being Libeus T. Coon, who settled here in 1848, but afterwards removed to Harrison County.

The first house was built at the northeast corner of the present town site; the next, built nearly at the same time, was a slab-roofed log cabin, 10x12 feet, and stood in the rear of the Betts House. In this cabin the first school was taught, in Glenwood, it is said, by D. H. Solomon, Esq., subsequently a leading attorney of the "slope." William Coolidge is said to have been the first child born in Glenwood, in December, 1849. The first death was the wife of Silas Hillman, in the Summer of 1849.

The first flouring mill was built in the county by J. W. Coolidge, in the Summer of 1849, on the present site of Gordon's mill, adjoining Glenwood.

INSTITUTIONS OF GLENWOOD.

The citizens of Glenwood have provided liberally for public schools which are thoroughly organized and graded. The school building is sixty-five by thirty feet, with a wing or projection, fifteen by fifty feet. The edifice stands on a solid stone foundation, and is three stories high, surmounted by a tower, the entire height being sixty-five feet from the ground. The exterior of the building displays architectural taste and beauty. It is divided into six school rooms, with a like number of recitation rooms, and is of sufficient capacity to accommodate five hundred pupils. It is furnished with the most approved style of seats and desks, and provided with good heating apparatus. The total cost was about $20,000. It is picturesquely located in a beautiful natural grove on an eminence at the west side of the city, and commands a handsome view of the city and surrounding country. Six acres of ground are appropriated to its use.

Western Iowa College is an institution of learning conducted under the auspices of the M. E. Church. The building stands near the northeast part of the city. The institution employs four professors and instructors.

One of the three Soldiers' Orphans' Homes, under the patronage of the state and managed by a board of trustees elected by the Legislature, is located here. The home is situated adjoining the southeast part of the city within the corporate limits, and embraces about seventeen acres of ground. Sixteen acres were donated to the state for this use by the citizens of Mills County. The Legislature has made large appropriations for the erection of buildings and support of the home. The building is of brick, the main part fifty by forty feet, and three stories high; with a wing thirty-eight by twenty feet, and two stories high. The window and door sills and caps are cut stone. It is finished throughout in good style. The location affords a fine view of the surrounding country, including the eastern shore of Nebraska. Trains running on the Council Bluffs & St. Joseph R. R., may be distinctly seen, with a varied landscape of hill, valley, forest and prairie.

Glenwood is flourishing churches, with good edifices, among which may be mentioned the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational and Christian.

The city is advantageously located on the line of the C. B. & Q. Railroad. It is an extensive shipping point, and enjoys a prosperous and increasing mercantile trade which is well supplied by its substantial and enterprising business men.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Glenwood Opinion is a weekly republican newspaper, published by Robinson & Ballard, W. P. Robinson, editor, T. P. Ballard, business manager. It is one of the leading influential journals in Western Iowa. It has an excellent office outfit, and enjoys a prosperous business. It was established in 1863 by T. P. Ballard, with whom Mr. Robinson became associated as editor and part owner in 1874.

The Journal is a very creditable newspaper, published weekly, by Sherman & Harmon.

PACIFIC CITY.—This is a station on the Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs Railroad, about three west of Glenwood, and is nearly opposite the mouth of Platte River in Nebraska. It is situated at the foot of the bluffs, and about three miles from the Missouri River. It was laid out about 1857 in anticipation of being at the terminus of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad. Several good buildings were at that time erected, but owing to the delay in building the railroad, and other circumstances, the place did not prosper. Since the completion of the K. C., St. J. & C. B. Railroad however, it has become a point of considerable importance. The railroad company have good buildings, and it is a place of considerable trade. Large quantities of lumber are shipped to this point for the adjacent country. It is one of the best shipping points on the line of the road. A large steam flouring mill is located here.

MALVERN.—This is a prosperous town near the center of the county on the line of the C. B. & Q. R. R., in the beautiful valley of Silver Creek. It is surrounded by a fertile, well settled country, and enjoys considerable local trade. The other railroad stations and villages are Emmerson, Hastings, Hillsdale, Pacific Junction and White Cloud.

MONONA COUNTY.

This county lies on the Missouri River, and is in the fifth tier from the northern and southern boundary of the state. In extent it is twenty-four miles north and south, by an average of nearly thirty east and west, containing sixteen full congressional townships, and some four or five that are fractional, and embraces an area of about six hundred and eighty square miles. The Missouri River, which forms the western boundary, here runs in a southeasterly direction, making the southern boundary line of the county some twelve miles shorter than the northern.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

A large proportion of the area of this county is bottom or valley land, there being upwards of one hundred and sixty-five thousand acres embraced in the vast Missouri River bottoms which pass through the western portion of this county. The ascent of these bottoms northward is somewhat more rapid than that of the Missouri River, which leaves a comparatively small portion of these valuable lands subject to overflow in times of high water, and renders them sufficiently dry and well drained to be susceptible of easy and successful cultivation. The eastern portion of the county is a high rolling prairie, well watered and drained by Willow Creek, Soldier and Maple Rivers, and their numerous affluents, which are all surrounded by wide, beautiful and exceedingly fertile valleys. The uplands abruptly abut on the bottoms along the east side of Little Sioux, and present the varied and peculiar features, characteristic of the bluffs along the Missouri bottoms throughout their extent in the state. These bluffs are quite uniform in elevation, the highest point reached being not less than three hundred feet above the level of the river, or about thirteen hundred feet above the ocean level. The uplands in the immediate vicinity of the bluffs, are too broken and uneven, to be of any practical use for agricultural purposes, and are cut up with narrow wooded ravines, while the valleys of the smaller streams a few miles inland are bordered by gentle acclivities which ascend from the sloping bottoms to the well rounded and undulating divides which intervene between the water courses. Most of the streams in the eastern part of the county are bordered by beautiful bottom lands, varying from one-half to two miles in width, while the streams themselves are margined by grassy banks, with beds composed of mire or quicksand. The Little Sioux River, with several of the other streams in the county affords some good waterpowers for machinery, on which several mills have been established, while there are numerous good locations yet remaining which will doubtlessly be utilized as soon as the needs of the county may require. Wells of excellent water are easily obtained in the valleys at depths varying from ten to twenty feet, while in the upland it is often found necessary to sink through the bluff deposit to a depth of over one hundred feet before a permanent supply of water can be obtained. Springs at frequent intervals are found issuing from the bluffs, and with the small brooklets which are fed by them, and the larger streams afford plenty of water for stock, which find excellent grazing on the uplands, while the bottoms furnish several varieties of native grasses which are easily cut and cured, and make a good quality of hay. Several lakes of considerable size are found in the Missouri valley, all of which are clear and afford excellent fish. Some of them have the appearance of having once formed a portion of the channel of the Missouri River, which is now, however, several miles distant with heavy cottonwood groves intervening.

The soil in the valleys is usually a deep, black mold or fine loam, is from six to fifteen feet in depth, and produces the most luxuriant crops of corn, and other grains and vegetables indigenous to the western slope. In the Missouri bottoms low sand ridges are frequently met with, which are the remains of bars formed by the currents when the river occupied the whole width of the valley from bluff to bluff on either side. The bottom deposits are quite variable in the character of their component parts, though the fine dark loam constitutes by far the greater proportion of the surface soil. This is generally underlaid by sand and gravel, and sometimes by a deposit of clay containing large quantities of partially decayed wood and other vegetable matter, which are frequently met with in sinking wells. Most of the uplands is covered by a heavy coating of dark humus-charged loam, with a subsoil of the light mulatto-colored bluff deposit. No sterile land is found in the county, for even that which is broken in the vicinity of the bluffs is very fertile and produces excellent crops of wheat, oats and other cereals, and in its native state affords fine pasturage for stock.

The largest bodies of timber are the extensive groves of cottonwood, which border the banks of the Missouri, while more or less extensive groves of this and other kinds of timber are found on the Little Sioux, while many of the deep ravines running further back into the county are densely shaded with luxuriant forest growths. Like most of the counties on the Missouri slope in Iowa, Monona County has no stone or coal, while the bluff deposit furnishes an abundance of material for the manufacture of brick, which must be depended upon for the future supply of building material. The local supply of fuel, which all comes from the forests, though ample for the present wants must become scarce in time, unless the future demand is anticipated by the planting and cultivating of artificial groves.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first permanent settler in the county was Isaac Ashton, who, in 1852, located about two miles north of the present town of Onawa, where, in 1855, he laid out the town of Ashton. Other settlers came in the Summer of 1852, among whom were Josiah Sumner and Aaron Cook, the former locating in the vicinity of Onawa and the latter at Cook's Landing, on the Missouri River seven miles southwest of Onawa. Among others who came prior to 1855, were C. E. Whiting, Robert Lindley, Timothy Elliott, J. E. Morrison, J. B. P. Day, and B. D. Holbrook. Several of the early settlers came from the eastern part of Iowa, while others were from Illinois and the Eastern States.

Among the early settlers of the county, was one Charles B. Thompson, a Mormon leader, who, with a number of followers, located on Soldier River, in what is now called Spring Valley Township, about fifteen miles southeast of the present town of Onawa. They commenced their settlement in 1854. Thompson called the place Preparation, as he designed here to prepare his disciples for the "good time coming." As Charles B. Thompson was an important man in the early history of Monona County, some account of him, and of the enterprise in which he was the leader, will be interesting to the reader. He had been a follower and disciple of Joe Smith at Nauvoo, but went to St. Louis in 1852, and organized a church. In the Summer of 1853, he sent some of his followers as commissioners to look for and select a location for his people in Iowa. They finally made selection of the valley of the Soldier, in the south part of Monona County, all the land at that time being vacant. In 1854 he brought some fifty or sixty families, and pre-empted several thousand acres of the best land to be found in that region. Some of the land he subsequently entered. Thompson regulated and controled all the affairs of the colony, both temporal and spiritual, pretending that he had authority to do so under the direction of a spirit which he called Baneemy. Among other assumptions, he pretended that he was the veritable Ephraim of the Scriptures, and taught his people to call him Father Ephraim. A strict compliance with his teachings divested his followers of all worldly care, and prepared them for the further essential doctrine of his religion—that, in order to obtain the Kingdom, they must sacrifice all their worldly possessions. They accordingly conveyed to him all their lands and other property, including even their wearing apparel and the right to their services.

Under this arrangement "Father Ephraim" and Baneemyism progressed swimmingly until the Fall of 1855, when a little rebellion appeared under the leadership of an Elder named Hugh Lytle. This man, and some twenty others of the disaffected, commenced a suit in the courts for the recovery of their property, but they failed, and the matter was subsequently adjusted by a compromise, whereby the Lytle party received a portion of their property and withdrew from the society. The remainder adhered to Thompson without further serious difficulty until the Fall of 1858. During the Summer of that year, most of the male adults of the society were absent in other states preaching the doctrines of Baneemyism to the Gentiles. Thompson, who arrogated to himself the title of "Chief Steward of the Lord," took advantage of the absence of his friends, and conveyed all the realty to his wife, Catharine Thompson, and to one Guy C. Barnum, reserving only forty acres as a homestead for himself. His disciples, hearing of this transaction, returned and immediately called on "Father Ephraim," the "Chief Steward of the Lord" to render an account of his stewardship. Being unable to obtain a satisfactory adjustment of the matter, they notified him that on a stated day he would be expected to meet them in Preparation to make a settlement. In the meantime they sent word to the Lytleites, and all others who had from time to time withdrawn, to appear on the day of settlement and present their claims. But the "Chief Steward of the Lord," and Barnum whom he styled his "Assistant Chief Steward of the Lord," had not the courage to meet the gathering of the tribes on that occasion, and so they found it convenient to be absent at Onawa. On the next day, however, they started for Preparation, hoping that the people had dispersed. About a mile from the village they were met by a young woman, whose faith in "Father Ephraim" seems to have remained unshaken, who told them that they must not come in, as the people were all there and would surely hang them if they made their appearance. At that moment they saw the men coming from Preparation at full speed on horseback over the hill toward them. They sprang from the wagon in which they were riding, unhitched the horses, and mounting them bare-back, wheeled about for Onawa. After a lively race of fifteen miles, not excelled in thrilling interest by that of John Gilpin, across prairies and over creeks and ravines, the "Prophet" and his "Assistant" arrived about a half mile ahead of their followers.

Thompson remained at Onawa two or three days under the protection of the citizens, and then went to St. Louis. Barnum remained at Onawa until the next Spring, when he removed to Nebraska, where he became a prominent citizen. Thompson while at St. Louis again made conveyances of all the lands to his brother and other parties. He then attempted to found another religious society, but failed to obtain followers. He wrote and published a book on the Origin of the Black and Mixed Races, pretending to translate largely from the Hebrew and Greek, of which languages it is said he was utterly ignorant. This seems to have been the last heard of him by his old friends in Monona County until in 1867, when they learned that he was in Philadelphia, in destitute circumstances. After his flight from Preparation, his former followers sent his family with a feather bed and a few household effects after him to Onawa and then divided all the balance of the personal property among themselves, each taking what he could identify as his own. The same Fall they commenced an action in chancery to set aside the conveyances of the real estate. The suit was contested in all its stages by Thompson's grantees, and not finally settled until December, 1866, being eight years in litigation. At that time the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa declared all the conveyances fraudulent, and set them aside, the court holding that Thompson only held the property as trustee. The property was sold under the order of the court, and the proceeds divided among the original contributors in proportion to the amount contributed by each. Of the sixty families that Thompson brought to the settlement at Preparation in 1854, only three or four remain. Thus ended Baneemyism in Monona County.

The county was organized in 1854, by the County Judge of Harrison County, who appointed Charles B. Thompson the first County Judge. This was before the location of the county seat, so that the first county business was transacted at Preparation. In the Fall of 1854, the county seat was located by commissioners appointed by the Legislature. They gave the place selected the name of Bloomfield, but there being another town of that name in the state, it was changed to Ashton. The county seat remained there until the Spring of 1858, when it was removed to Onawa by a vote of the people. The following were the first county officers: Charles B. Thompson, County Judge; Guy C. Barnum, Treasurer; Hugh Lytle, Clerk; and Homer C. Hoyt, Sheriff. Monona County then embraced what is now the west range of townships of Crawford County, but the change was made in accordance with the vote of both counties in the Fall of 1865. In 1860, a vote was taken on the question of the removal of the county seat from Onawa to Belvidere, and another vote in 1862, on the removal to Arcola. Both attempts failed, and the question is doubtless finally settled by the location of the Sioux City & Pacific Railroad.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper was published at Preparation by Charles B. Thompson, and was called Zion's Harbinger and Weekly Messenger. He also published a monthly periodical. During the continuance of this paper, it flourished under several different names, being at one time called the Weekly News and Messenger, and then the Democratic Messenger. This paper was started in 1854. In 1858, Thompson published a paper called the Onawa Adventure. In November, 1860, a paper was commenced at Onawa by A. Dimmick & D. W. Butts, called the Monona Cordon. It was a six column, independent sheet, devoted to the interest of Northwestern Iowa and the Missouri Slope.

The next paper was called The West Iowa Gazette, and was started about the beginning of 1863, by D. W. Butts. It was discontinued in 1865, and was succeeded by the present Monona County Gazette, the first number of which was issued December 2, 1865, F. M. Howendobler and C. H. Aldridge. The senior member of the firm died at the residence of his father in Clarinda, Page County, on Christmas day, 1867. W. A. Green, formerly local editor of the Council Bluffs Nonpareil, succeeded him, and in May, 1868, Aldridge & Green became the publishers of the Gazette. It is now Republican in politics, neatly printed, and under the editorial management of McCaskey & Aldridge.

The Peoples Press made its first appearance in Onawa as a small advertising sheet in 1870, and has by numerous enlargements become a good sized, well printed paper, having a good circulation, advertising and job patronage, and is ably conducted by S. R. & C. A. Bassett, two wideawake, enterprising and experienced young journalists.

This county enjoys very good railroad facilities, as the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad runs up the Missouri valley, nearly parallel with the river, having stations at convenient distances. This road connects with the Chicago & Northwestern at Missouri Valley Junction, and with the Illinois Central and the Sioux City and St. Paul at Sioux City, with which road it forms a connecting line from St. Paul to St. Louis.

ONAWA.

This is the County Seat, and is situated near the middle line of the county, north and south, and about eight miles east of the Missouri River, but only about four miles from the nearest point on the river south-west. It was laid out by the Monona Land Company in 1857, and embraces an area of about 600 acres, with about 600 acres additional of out-lots, each containing two acres or less. The principal streets run east and west, and are one hundred and fifty feet wide, while the others are eighty feet, and alleys sixteen feet wide cross the blocks north and south. Two blocks 396x284 feet have been reserved in the north part of town for public parks.

The first house was raised on the 2d day of July, 1857, by S. S. Pearse. The next was the Onawa House, raised on the 4th of the same month by J. E. Morrison. Among the first settlers were Judge C. E. Whiting, J. E. Morrison, Timothy Elliott, E. G. Fairchild, and S. S. Pearse.

The leading Religious Organizations, Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist and Universalists have good churches, while good graded schools under charge of a competent and experienced corps of teachers, provide ample accommodation for educational wants of the children and youth. The Masonic and Odd Fellow orders have organizations, and large memberships. The Sioux City and Pacific Railroad have a good depot building, with telegraph office, and all the facilities for the convenient transaction of business.

Surrounded by an excellent farming country, with plenty of timber within two or three miles, Onawa can not fail to become a point of considerable importance. It has been duly incorporated, and since the completion of the railroad has steadily improved. Several good substantial buildings have lately been erected, and many more are in contemplation. It is 37 miles from Sioux City, about 65 from Council Bluffs, and 38 from Missouri Valley Junction.

The other villages and post offices are: Arcola, Belvidere, Blencoe, Castana, Grant Centre, Hall Creek, Maple Landing, Mapleton, Moorhead, Saint Clair, Soldier, Ticonic, and Whiting.

HARRISON COUNTY.

Lying on the Missouri River, in the fourth tier from the southern boundary, Harrison is one of the western border counties of the state, is twenty-four miles north and south by an average of about twenty-seven east and west, and contains a superficial area of nearly six hundred and sixty square miles.

SURFACE CONFIGURATION AND RESOURCES.

Like most of the counties in Iowa bordering the Missouri River, Harrison presents a greater variety of surface configuration than is found in the inland counties to the eastward. A number of streams, that are more or less fully described in the histories of adjoining counties, gain the Missouri bottoms within the limits of this county, issuing from the uplands through the bluffs, causing them to assume those strikingly picturesque and peculiar shapes characteristic of the scenery of the valley of the middle Missouri. Nearly every portion of the county is well watered and drained by clear, sparkling streams and brooklets, which flow diagonally across its territory in a general southwest direction. The principal of these water-courses are the Boyer, Soldier and Little Sioux Rivers, and Wilson, Pigeon and Mosquito Creeks, several of which are of considerable size, and afford along their course in this county a number of excellent mill sites, only a portion of which have been improved. The valley of the Boyer is a beautiful tract of alluvial land, from one-half to two miles in width, bounded upon either hand by gently ascending slopes until it nears the Missouri bottoms, where the surroundings become more abrupt and bold. The course of the Little Sioux in this county is mostly through the bottoms, though where it merges from the uplands it is marked by bluffs of peculiar interest, whose tops are conical peaks flanked by sharp-crested, spur-like ridges. One of the most beautiful valleys of this slope is that of the Soldier River, which is bordered by bluffs which are unrivaled in the variety and picturesque beauty of their scenery. The bottoms slope gently from the foot of the bluffs toward the river, and form well defined terraces, which afford beautiful rural situations. The valleys of Pigeon and Mosquito Creeks, in the southeast, are margined by high sloping upland, and their beds occupied by tracts of rich alluvial lands, which are unsurpassed for beauty and fertility. The current of the Missouri River, which bounds this county on the west, is very rapid, with a deep, constantly changing channel, often cutting off whole sections of land in one season. These bottoms are vast level plains, varying in width from four to ten miles, and are bordered on the east by beautiful rounded bluffs, rising from one to three hundred feet above the river level. They are traversed by low benches or undulations, which, running more or less parallel to the river, are intervened by low grounds that afford natural drainage channels, that receive and confine within bounds much of the surplus waters of the Missouri in seasons of freshets, which would otherwise flood extensive tracts of the best land for agricultural purposes in the West. A belt of cottonwood timber extends through the county up and down the river, from one-half to six miles in width, interspersed with elm, mulberry, walnut, willow, ash, etc. The cottonwood grows very large and tall. In passing over the bottoms through the timber, a person will observe a streak of very heavy cottonwood timber, and then of tall willow trees from a foot to three and four feet each in circumference. The willow follows the old bed of the river, and as soon as the channel changes and leaves the bed dry it springs up rapidly, and when the bed of the river is raised to a certain height, then cottonwood crowds in, and a dense forest is soon made. The soil in the bottom is very rich and deep, producing every kind of grain and vegetables in the greatest abundance. Corn grows very large. The grass is said to be so rich and luxuriant, that cattle will keep fat on it even in Winter without cutting or curing. Many farmers in mild Winters have let their cattle range in the bottoms without any feed, pasturing them on the grass and keeping them in good order. Water underlies the soil of the bottoms at the depth of fourteen feet, and wherever you find water there you find quicksand. It is supposed that the whole bottom, from the bluffs on the Nebraska side to the bluffs in Iowa, have been one vast lake, and the Missouri River running through it has filled it up and formed the bottom lands. There is every indication of it. Every few rods along the bottoms you will see evidence of where once has flowed the channel of the river. The settlers on the bottoms say that they are getting drier every year, and less subject to inundation. The agent who located swamp lands in 1857 relates that he rode for miles through water where there is now fine, high and dry farming lands. The low places along the bottoms are fast filling up, and where once were ponds and marshes are now dry land with good farms upon them. The Missouri bottoms will be at no distant day covered with the finest farms in the Union.

There are quite a chain of lakelets commencing near the mouth of Little Sioux River and continuing along the bottoms. Some of them are near the bluffs, others out in the bottoms and near the river, while all have at one day been in the channel of the river or are the old bed of the Missouri. Many of these little lakes have fish in them, and are beautiful and nice little sheets of water. The channels of the streams in the bottoms are, or have been, changing. The mouth of the Soldier River is one mile from where it was twelve years ago, and the Missouri also, at this point, is over a mile from where it was in 1855. The land in the old channel is as high as that of the surrounding country; no more subject to inundations, and is covered with a heavy growth of cottonwood. The lakelets, it is said, are fast filling up, and perhaps when the country becomes settled and cultivated will entirely disappear. Persons digging wells frequently find logs, driftwood, bark, etc., several feet below the surface. A farmer digging a well recently, near what is known as Soldier's Lake, found a large pocket knife fourteen feet below the surface.

The soil in the uplands consists of the light colored deposits of the bluff formation, which does not differ materially from that in the bottoms, except that the silicious material of which it is largely composed is more finely comminuted, and has a less amount of vegetable matter or humus. As the soil of the uplands and bottoms was derived from the same source, it only differs in degree, that in the former reaching a depth of sixty or one hundred feet below the surface. It is said that dirt taken out of wells sixty feet deep seems to produce as well as that on the surface. The soil is easily cultivated, and produces all the grains and vegetables common to this latitude in great abundance. It does not cave; wells do not have to be walled, except for a few feet down from the top and at the water's edge. The soil never bakes, but can be plowed without injury in wet weather. It stands both wet and dry weather remarkably. A failure of crops has never been known. The soil in the bottoms is more of a clay nature, and in wet weather is very sticky.

Harrison contains more timber than any other county on the Missouri slope, yet it is limited in extent, its distribution being governed by circumstances favorable to its preservation, and is consequently found in the deep shaded ravines that crowd up into the bluffs, and along the small streams which are confined to narrow valleys hemmed in by steep bluff ascents. But, as observation has repeatedly shown in all parts of the state, forests are not necessarily confined to the valleys and moister localities, and thrive as well in one location as another, when the devastation of the prairie fires are checked for a period of sufficient duration to allow the young trees a few years of uncetarded growth. Hundreds of acres of prairie have been overgrown with thrifty groves of vigorous young timber within the memory of early settlers, which period extends back scarce a score of years. These tracts of young forests add a pleasing feature to the landscape in these beautiful undulating divides, as that near Magnolia, and Harris' grove south of Logan, attests. Fine groves are met with in the valleys of the Soldier and Little Sioux Rivers, while the banks of the Missouri throughout its course in this county are lined with a belt of fine forest growth.

Numerous orchards have been set out in the county, and apples, pears, quinces and grapes grow in abundance, and of excellent quality. Some peaches have been raised, while in the bottom lands the finest quality of wild grapes are found in great profusion. In 1867 over five hundred barrels of wine were made from these grapes and shipped to Chicago, besides large quantities which was used at home.

Limestone is found, the best and most extensive quarries being found near Logan, from which a considerable amount is annually shipped to Council Bluffs and other points. There are also two or three other quarries which have been worked to some extent in other parts of the county.

As a stock-raising and producing county, Harrison has had quite a reputation, the native grasses being very nutritious and affording excellent pasturage at nearly all seasons of the year. Fat cattle from this county have for years been famous in Chicago markets and command the highest prices. It is said that an old fellow on the Missouri bottom had quite a large drove of very fat cattle one season, and he concluded to take them to Chicago. He drove them slowly to the railroad, and then shipped them, and when they arrived every body admired, and wanted to know where they were raised, and how in the world they were made so fat. The owner replied, "In the Missouri bottom, and that he fed them on green grass." "How in the world do you feed them green grass in the winter?" asked some one. "Why," says the owner, "I put green spectacles on them, and they imagine when eating hay, that they are eating green grass."

EARLY HISTORY.

Daniel Brown was the first white man who settled in the county, locating where the village of Calhoun now is, April 3, 1848. His nearest neighbor was twelve miles distant, his nearest mill twenty-two miles, and nearest post office Council Bluffs, twenty-five miles. He had to go to St. Joseph, Missouri, one hundred and fifty miles for provisions that season, and while he was gone the Indians came and robbed his family of provisions and all the necessary articles of comfort. When he returned he found his family destitute of food and clothing. Soon after his return the Indians stole all his horses, and all those of the other settlers in the county. He and his son followed them for several miles, trying to recapture them, but were unsuccessful. They fired a number of shots at the Indians. The Indians frequently killed his cattle and annoyed him a great deal during the first few years of his residence in the county. The following were also among the first settlers, Silas Condit, two brothers by the name of Chase, Charles Lepenta, James Hardy, Dr. Robert McGovern, Andrew Allen and Jacob Pates.

The county was organized in 1853, when Stephen King was elected County Judge; P. G. Cooper, District Court Clerk; Chester Hamilton, Sheriff; William Cooper, Treasurer and Recorder; George White, Surveyor; and Jacob Huffman, Coroner. The first county court was held August 5, 1853, by Stephen King, Judge. First road petition presented was for the establishment of a road, commencing at the south line of the county, running thence to the residence of Daniel Brown, and thence to Magnolia. The first mortgage on record was made by Samuel Jack to James Jack, acknowledged by Frank Street, County Judge of Pottawattamie County. First deed on record was made by Ezra and Catharine Vincent, to Walter Barrenger, conveying the northeast of the southeast of section 8, township 79, range 48. The first wedding was celebrated June 9, 1853, Stephen King, County Judge, uniting in the holy bonds of wedlock, John Jones and Miss Elizabeth Outhouse. The second occurred on the 16th of the following August, when the same Judge united Samuel McGaven and Miss Mary M. Harden. The total number of marriages since the organization up to January 1, 1868, was four hundred and ninety.

The first district court was held by Honorable S. H. Riddle in May, 1855, at which time the first cause on the docket was William Kennedy vs. D. Pate, while the total number were four civil and one criminal. The first grand jury were: Creed Saunders, James Garnett, John Conger, Chester Staley, H. Locktin, T. Meadus, P. R. Sharp, Thomas Sellers, S. A. Seaman, Solomon Barnett, John Deal, I. H. Holton, D. E. Brainard, Silas Rue and Solomon Garnett. D. E. Brainard was appointed foreman. John Jeffary was the first person naturalized, and Thomas Thompson the second. The number of cases since the organization of the county up to November 25, 1867, were: civil, 749, and 91 criminal.

At this first term a young man who was better posted in the habits and customs of frontier life than in legal lore, made application for a license to practice law. Judge Riddle appointed R. L. Douglas, A. C. Ford, and N. G. Wright a committee on examination, who retiring with the candidate to a shade tree not far from the court room, commenced the examination by inquiring how many kinds of property there were? The candidate promptly replied in a stentorian tone, "three."

Examiner—"What are they?"

Candidate—"Personal, Real and Mixed."

Examiner—"Define personal property?"

Candidate—"Horses, cattle and rails."

Examiner—"Define real property?"

Candidate—"Lands and town lots."

Examiner—"What do you understand by mixed property?"

The candidate scratched his head, pulled nervously at his mustache, changed a large chew of tobacco from one side of his mouth to the other, at the same time squirting the juice on the ground, and at length said in tones not so loud as those he first used: "That question is too hard for me."

Examiner—"You need not give the precise language of the books, but use your own."

The candidate again scratched his head, took a fresh chew of tobacco, looked serious, and after studying a few minutes exclaimed:

"Mules by G——."

It is unnecessary to say that the candidate was informed that he must read a little more Blackstone before he could be admitted to the bar.

In the Fall of 1853 a party of Indians camped on Willow Creek. The settlers were afraid that they would commit some depredations, organized a company and went to drive them off. Among the number was a gentleman from Virginia, who had been a captain in the Virginia militia, and had brought his brond sword and regimentals with him, and was "decked out" in full dress and took command. He boasted of his bravery and would "show the bloody red skins a trick or two." The company set out on horseback in gallant style, led by their brave and daring officer—in his own imagination. The bloody savages were to be exterminated, a brilliant victory to be obtained, and the troopers were to return home covered all over with glory. While marching along to the scene of conflict, they discovered the Indian encampment about a mile ahead across Willow Creek. They halted, commenced firing, and continued it for some time. The Indians hearing it, some half a dozen warriors got on their ponies and rode towards the troopers to see what was the matter. The latter seeing the warriors approaching, suddenly imagined that they would be surrounded, overpowered, slaughtered, and scalped, broke for their homes as fast as their horses could carry them. Many of the troopers were so badly scared that they did not know their own horses, but went on foot. The warriors seeing the fleeing troopers raised a big laugh and rode back to their encampment in safety.

For several years the Indians annoyed the settlers a great deal, by stealing or begging. Companies were frequently organized to drive them off, and some times there would be some shooting, but no one was ever hurt. Mr. Brown states that in 1853 there was a large party of Indians encamped on the Boyer; he with twenty-six others went out to drive them off. They came near the encampment and formed in battle line. The chief and a half-breed got on their ponies and rode out to them. The chief proposed to make a treaty with the whites, and it was made with the condition that the Indians should leave the county. There were 120 warriors with their women and children. The Indians left the county.

In the Fall of 1853 quite a large party of Ottoe Indians were encamped within eight miles of Magnolia. One evening the settlers informed them that they had better leave or the Sioux would attack them before morning. In the night a firing was heard by the settlers. They went upon a high bluff to see what was the matter, and sure enough the Siouxs were pouring a heavy fire into the encampment of the Ottoes. The latter were screaming and yelling with all vengeance, and fled into the Missouri bottoms. The next day the settlers attacked them and drove them across the Missouri River. They swam the river on their ponies. Harrison County seemed to have been a hunting ground for the Indians, as no tribe resided in the county.

On Willow Creek, about six miles from Magnolia, there are old ruins of some kind of a house that has the appearance of having been built out of burnt brick.

RAILROADS.

The facilities enjoyed by Harrison County for getting produce and stock to market are unexcelled by any county on the Missouri Slope. The main line of the Chicago & Northwestern enters the county near the northeast corner, and passes through it in a south west direction, affording stations at convenient distances, while the Sioux City & Pacific, one of the connecting links on a through line between St. Paul and St. Louis, runs up the Missouri bottom in the western portion.

COUNTY OFFICIALS, 1875.

WILLIAM H. EATON, Auditor. HENRY W. GLEASON, Clerk of the Courts.
JOHN W. WOOD, Treasurer. JAMES C. MILLIMAN, Recorder.
JESSE J. PECK, Sheriff. LEMUEL GALE, Supt. Common Schools.
H. B. LYMAN, Chairman of the Board of County Supervisors.

MAGNOLIA.

This place is the county seat, and is situated a little west of the center of the county, about ten miles from the Missouri River, on a high rolling prairie, with timber convenient. It was located by A. D. Jones and A. Fletcher, locating commissioners, March 14, 1853, and before the completion of the railroads was the most important town in the county. The first court-house erected was a log one, and was consumed by fire in 1853 or '4. The town has a number of churches, good schools, and a newspaper called the Harrison County Courier, established January 14, 1875, by Alpheus Davison, which is an enterprising local paper, strenuously opposing the removal of the county seat from Magnolia, which is being agitated by some of the neighboring towns.

MISSOURI VALLEY,

Which is probably the most important town in the county, is situated at the junction of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, at the foot of the bluffs, some six miles from the Missouri River, and three and a half north of the southern boundary line of the county. It was laid out January 1, 1867, and the first building was erected soon afterwards by Smith Cogswell, and used for a store. It is surrounded by a farming country of unequaled fertility, and is a flourishing place containing a number of good residences and business houses, a large brick school house, a number of good churches and a printing office, where is published the Missouri Valley Times, a neatly printed Democratic sheet, which was established by D. M. Harris, August 1, 1868, who continued its publication until the Spring of 1872, when he sold to M. H. Goltry. In January, 1875, the present publishers, Gore & Cutler, succeeded to the proprietorship of the Times, and have since conducted it.

DUNLAP

Is situated near the northeast corner of the county, on a high terrace overlooking the beautiful valley lands of the Boyer River, and is surrounded on all sides by a tract of land rich in agricultural resources, and quite well improved. There is a large tract of native timber, containing nearly forty sections, within five miles of the town, and a good unimproved water power on the Boyer River. It was laid out in the Fall of 1867, Rufus Harrington erecting the first dwelling house, Hillas Cassady & Co. establishing the first store, and J. W. Lawson erecting the first hotel. It is a division station on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, the company having erected a large passenger depot and eating house, have also a round house, machine and repair shops, freight house, etc., etc. Several religious societies have organizations here, and have erected good houses of worship. The town also contains good school houses, some fine residences and large business blocks.

The Dunlap Reporter, a neat, wideawake local newspaper, is published by F. F. Cook, who deserves and is receiving a good support from Dunlap and the surrounding country.

LOGAN is a pleasant and growing town, situated on the second bottom of the Boyer River, a little southeast of the center of the county, and some six miles south of Magnolia, was laid out in June, 1867, and is an enterprising town containing a number of good business houses, residences, etc. It has a good retail trade, and does a large shipping business.

LITTLE SIOUX, CALHOUN, and WOODBINE are enterprising villages, which are all struggling to increase their business, and will make towns of more or less importance.

RINGGOLD COUNTY.

Ringgold is in the southern tier of counties, and is the fourth east of the Missouri River. It embraces an area of sixteen congressional townships, but the southern tier of townships is fractional along the state line, wanting the southern tier of sections entirely and nearly half of the second tier, which leaves the county about five hundred and forty square miles of territory.

The county is well supplied with living water in every part, and admirably drained by the Platte and the several forks of Grand River and their numerous affluents. The general trend of the streams is southward and they flow to the Missouri River. Water is also readily obtained on the uplands by digging. The principal streams acquire considerable volume before they leave the county, and afford good mill sites and sufficient water power for the uses of the county. The valleys are interesting from the fact that they are the deepest and largest purely drift valleys in Iowa. They are eroded by the action of the water from a depth of one hundred and fifty feet to more than two hundred feet, and yet, except at one or two points, no rock is to be seen in their valley sides which are drift material from top to bottom. From these and other indications the drift is estimated to reach a depth of about two hundred feet. This is the deepest portion of the drift deposit in the state. The highest ridge of land in Southern Iowa, a branch of the great watershed that separates from it in Adair County, passes down into Missouri through this county. Although this county is upon the Missouri slope, the bluff deposit of Western Iowa does not extend so far eastward.

RESOURCES.

There is considerable timber in the valleys of the streams; elsewhere the surface of the county is almost all prairie, and its general aspect is peculiar and interesting. A stranger passing through the county by the ordinary routes of travel is quite unconscious of the presence within the range of his vision of the deep valleys with their wooded banks, for the general surface upon which his eye rests is apparently all an undulating prairie. Upon approaching the streams he sees them winding through rather narrow valleys, their banks lined with a border of trees, but after crossing them they are soon lost to view again among the general undulations of the surface, and not even the tops of the tallest trees appear in sight.

No ponds of stagnant water or wet marshy land are found in this county, and it is particularly well adapted to agricultural purposes. The soil is the common deep rich drift soil characteristic of southern Iowa, capable of producing abundant crops of all products adapted to the climate of that latitude, of corn especially. The native grasses formerly yielded large crops, but as population increased have been gradually superseded to a large extent by the tame grasses which are propagated easily and thrive abundantly. Timothy, clover, and blue grass are extensively cultivated. This has become a prosperous and prominent stock raising county, including cattle, horses, mules, sheep, and hogs. Of late years considerable attention has been given to fruit growing with excellent success. Apples, pears, cherries, and all the small fruits thrive with proper cultivation. Grapes may be produced in great abundance.

A good deal of attention has been given to hedging, and hedge fences are becoming numerous in the county. The osage orange is found to answer the purpose admirably, and is chiefly used, although willow is employed to some extent. The hedge is found to afford a good wind-break as well as a good fence.

Only two exposures of rock are found in the county. One of them is in a deep valley in the extreme northeast corner of the county, and the other is near its southern boundary, consisting in each case of a few layers of limestone belonging to the upper coal measures. It makes a good quality of quick-lime, and some of it is suitable for building purposes. From the geological character of these exposures it is inferred that coal may be found by deep mining. Good materials for the manufacture of brick are found in various places.

EARLY HISTORY.

Charles H. Schooler and family, the first residents of this county, settled in the southeastern part in the year 1844. For two years his was the only white family in the vicinity. In 1847, Manoah B. Schooler was born, being the first white child born in the county. In 1846, James M. Thrasher settled near Mr. Schooler, but for several years thereafter there appears to have been no further immigration. In the Spring of 1854, they suddenly found the population of the county increased to nine families, and in the Fall of 1854 and Spring of 1855, there was quite a brisk immigration and four or five settlements or neighborhoods were formed in as many different portions of the county.

ORGANIZATION.

Until its organization in 1855, Ringgold was attached to Taylor County. In the Spring of 1851, an attempt was made to organize the county. By an act of the Legislature, approved February 4, 1851, John M. Ellis and Reason Wilkinson were appointed commissioners to locate the seat of justice. On the 26th of June of the same year they reported to the Board of Commissioners of Decatur County, as they were required to do by law, that they had selected a place for the county seat of Ringgold County, and had designated the location by setting a stake about four miles south of the center of said county, and that they had named said county seat Urbana. They further reported that they could not give a more particular description of the place for the reason that the land had not yet been surveyed into sections. Probably at this day nobody knows the exact location of Urbana. This first attempt to organize the county was not a success, doubtless for the reason that it did not contain a sufficient population.

On the 16th of October, 1852, the County Judge of Taylor County ordered that Ringgold County be a separate election precinct, to be called Schooler Township, and that the place of voting at the presidential election be at the house of Lot Hobbs. This was in the southern part of the county, where there is now a creek that bears the name of Lot's creek, which probably derived its name from this early settler. Charles H. Schooler, Abner Smith, and Jesse Harper were appointed to act as judges of this election. Charles H. Schooler was appointed Justice of the Peace, and Lot Hobbs Constable of Schooler Township. The latter was also appointed Supervisor of Roads, and one Littleton Allen, a Commissioner to locate a road from the state line, in a northeast direction across the county.

On the 5th of January, 1855, another legislative act was approved, appointing Commissioners to locate the county seat of Ringgold County. They were George W. Jones, Robert W. Stafford, and George A. Hawley. On the 18th of April of the same year, they reported to the County Judge of Decatur County, as authorized by the act of the Legislature in case there was no County Judge in Ringgold County, that they had selected the south west quarter of section 6, township 68, range 29, for the county seat, giving it the name of Mt. Ayr. Edward A. Temple and wife deeded the land to the county, June 9, 1855.

Soon after the location of the county seat, an election of county officers was held, at which James C. Hagans was elected County Judge; Mathew R. Brown, Clerk; Joseph W. Cofer, Treasurer and Recorder; Hiram Imus, Sheriff and Charles H. Schooler, School Fund Commissioner. June 29th, 1855, Judge Hagans made a settlement of financial matters with Judge Lowe, of Taylor County, when it appeared that there was $1.45 due Ringgold County, and with this small capital she set up for herself.

By direction of the County Judge, William McCormic surveyed the land deeded to the county as the seat of justice, into village lots, and filed his report July 3d, 1855. The lots are 66x132 feet, except those fronting the public square, which are 41x132 feet. The streets are 66 feet wide.

The first formal meeting of the county officers was held at the house of Ephraim Cofer, about six miles south of Mt. Ayr, July 2, 1855. At this time the County Judge divided the county into four civil townships, or election precincts, named respectively: Sand Creek, Platte, West Fork, and Lot's Creek. Each of these election precincts contained four congressional townships. An election was ordered to be held on the first Monday in August, at the house of Stanberry Wright, for the northeast precinct; at the house of Garret Bird for the northwest; at the house of John McGaughey for the southwest, and at the house of Joseph Strickland for the southeast precinct; returns to be made at the house of Ephraim Cofer. The County Judge, Clerk and Recorder at this time made a dividend of fees received up to date, the share of each being $3.20. The public business was transacted at this place until September, 1855, after which it was transacted at Mt. Ayr.

In the Spring of 1856 the County Judge caused the erection of a hewed log house, at Mt. Ayr, for the use of the county officers. It was fourteen feet square, and furnished with two tables, two desks or book-cases, and a small rough-board box or safe for the public revenue. It was occupied by the County Judge, Clerk, Treasurer and Recorder, Surveyor, and one Physician, as regular occupants. This first court house was superseded in 1859 by a frame one erected on the east side of and fronting the public square, two stories high, with four office rooms in the first, and court and jury rooms in the second story. It cost $3,500, which was paid from the proceeds of the sales of town lots.

The first District Court for Ringgold County convened at Mt. Ayr, May 25, 1857. Judge John S. Townsend presided; Randolph Sry being the Clerk. John W. Warren was appointed Prosecuting Attorney. The following were the petit jurors: Sanford Harrow, David M. Lesan, John C. Stuart, William Skinner, William Francis, Henry Roland, John L. Rush, C. G. Rowell, Thomas Marshall, Henry Crabbs, William M. Water, A. W. Tice, Samuel Allison, A. J. McClerg, and L. S. Terwilliger. Luke Shey was naturalized at this term, this being the first business transacted after organizing the Court. The first Grand Jury empanneled was at the October term of the same year, and was composed of the following persons: John Shields, Wm. C. Harvey, Wm. Turner, Michael Stahl, Isaac Oliver, Thomas M. Hall, Henry Arnett, John Morgan, John Carman, Gabriel Huffman, Henry J. Dewitt, Wm. Arnett, Reuben B. Moulton, E. W. Rice, Anderson W. Tice.

INDIAN WAR.

A number of Pottawattamie Indians remained in the county until the Summer of 1855, when a report was circulated that a white man had been murdered by them. The report created no little excitement, and some of the settlers were panic stricken. Finally fifty or sixty of the more courageous banded together and proceeded to the Indian camp in the northwest part of the county, where they demanded the surrender of the murderer. A careful investigation failed to discover the guilty party, whereupon the entire band was directed to leave the county, and were escorted to St. Joseph, Mo., and across the river to the reservation of their nation in Kansas. Thus ended a bloodless Indian war, and soon after the return of the escort, information was received of the safe arrival of the supposed murdered man in an eastern state. Some property of the Indians, consisting of three guns and sixteen steel traps, was sold at auction by the Sheriff of Ringgold County, on the 5th of November, 1855, toward defraying the expenses of the removal. The Indians, however, afterwards frequently made excursions to their old hunting grounds in the county.

PROMINENT MEN.

One of the most prominent men in the early history of the county was Judge Hagans, who wielded great influence from the time of his first election as County Judge until his death. He came to the county from McDonough County, Ill., in June, 1854, and was a native of Kentucky. He served the people three terms in the office of County Judge, and was elected State Senator at the general election of 1857, from the district composed of the Counties of Ringgold, Taylor, Adams, Union, and Clarke. He served with ability in the Eighth and Ninth General Assemblies. He discharged his last senatorial and official duties at the extra session of September, 1862. Soon after this time his health began to fail. He died Sept. 7, 1863, at his home in Mt. Ayr.

Another of the prominent men of the county, was Captain A. Z. Huggins, of Co. G., 29th Iowa Infantry. He died in the Spring of 1866, shortly after his return from serving as a member of the Eleventh General Assembly. A neat marble monument, erected at a cost of $600, marks his final resting place in the beautiful cemetery near Mt. Ayr.

FIRST NEWSPAPER.

The first newspaper published in the county was called the Mt. Ayr Republican, and was commenced in the Spring of 1861, by P. O. James as publisher, and George Burton as editor. It was continued only about six months, when both publisher and editor entered the military service, the former as a private, and the latter as a captain.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

As early as 1859, Ringgold county organized an agricultural society. On the 18th of June of that year a formal organization was completed, with the following board of officers: I. W. Keller, President; E. Sheldon, Vice President; A. Z. Huggins, Secretary; and J. C. Hagans, Treasurer. Eight directors were also elected. The first annual fair was held October 14, 1855. The society purchased a beautiful forty-acre tract of land about one mile northeast of Mt. Ayr, on which they located their fair grounds, and have made good improvements. The affairs of the society are in a prosperous condition.

COUNTY OFFICERS, 1875.

JOHN MCFARLAND, Auditor. ALLEN HIGGINS, Treasurer.
GEO. S. ALLYN, Clerk of Courts. BENJ. F. DAY, Recorder.
JOHN R. HENDERSON, Sheriff. ROBERT F. ASKREN, Superintendent of Schools.
AARON NASH, Chairman Board of Supervisors.

MOUNT AYR.

This place is pleasantly situated on a high, rolling prairie near the head of the Middle Grand River, three-quarters of a mile south of the geographical center of the county, and within a mile and a quarter of Walnut Creek. The nearest timber is about one mile distant. The site of the town commands an extensive view of the surrounding country in different directions.

The first settlement was made in 1855 by David Edwards, Oran Gore, Chester Standcliff, B. B. Dunning and A. G. Beal. In the Spring of 1856 the county judge, clerk and treasurer made their homes in Mount Ayr, and about the same time Henry Crabb, a merchant, and Dr. E. Keith, settled in the place, being respectively the first merchant and physician.

It is a town of considerable business, notwithstanding the absence of railroad communications. The various mercantile branches are well and prosperously represented by enterprising business men. The professions are also well represented. The public schools are liberally provided with good school rooms, furnished with all the modern improvements. The schools are maintained at a high standard of excellence by the aid of competent teachers. Churches and Sabbath schools provide equally well for the spiritual welfare of both old and young.

The citizens of Mount Ayr have displayed great taste, as well as a proper regard for the dead, in selecting and ornamenting their cemetery, situated on a conspicuous piece of ground near town. It contains three and a half acres, enclosed with a willow hedge planted in the Spring of 1867.

NEWSPAPERS.

In April, 1865, the Ringgold Record, was established, with W. R. Turk as publisher, and I. S. Beall as editor. They were succeeded about the 1st of June, 1866, by Geo. H. Roby as publisher and editor, by whom it was sold to the present editor and proprietor, D. D. Pratt, who enlarged the paper to its present size in June, 1874. The Record is a newsy, enterprising Republican sheet of four pages, eight columns to the page, published weekly, and enjoys a prosperous business and a liberal patronage.

The other villages and post offices are Bozzarls, Caledonia, Clipper, Cross, Eugene, Goshen, Ingart Grove, Marena, Redding, Ringgold City, Union Hill, Bloomington, Tingley and Marshall.

WAYNE COUNTY.

Wayne is the fifth county west of the Mississippi River in the southern tier of counties. It comprises twelve full and four fractional congressional townships. The fractional townships border the state line, which cuts off two tier of sections and a little more from the south side, leaving the area of the county about 525 square miles, or 336,000 acres.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

The natural drainage of the county is complete. It is divided into two systems by a well-defined watershed, whose general course is nearly due east, a little south of the center, through the entire county, although it turns southward very soon after passing into Appanoose County. Between this watershed and the north line of the county the South Fork of Chariton River, a tributary of the Missouri, wends its way eastward, drawing numerous affluents from either side. The south part of the county is drained by numerous affluents of Grand River, which find their sources in the watershed and flow southward. Along this watershed is the most important tract of prairie in the county. Coming down through the northwest corner of Decatur County, it passes entirely across the county and into Appanoose, on the east, occupying a belt of territory from six to ten miles wide. The route of a portion of the Mormon emigrants in their exodus from Illinois in 1846 lay along this divide, which was consequently known for many years as the Mormon Trail. Other prairies extend from this tract southward, separated from each other by the timber tracts generally found in the valleys of the streams. North of the South Fork of the Chariton the surface is principally composed of irregular prairie tracts interspersed with groves of timber.

The general surface of the county is rolling. The beds of the streams are, many of them, a hundred feet and some of them much more below the ordinary surface level, for they have cut their channels down in the very deep deposit of drift that characterizes this region. The valleys are narrow, but their sides being composed of drift are not abrupt or steep, and nearly all the surface is susceptible of easy cultivation.

The soil is a deep rich loam derived from the drift, with a liberal mixture of vegetable mold, very productive, and adapted to the growth of corn, wheat, oats, rye, etc., in abundance. The native grasses grew luxuriantly when the country was first settled. Tame grasses, such as timothy, clover, and blue grass were found to thrive equally well, and are now very extensively cultivated. With such abundance of grasses farmers early turned their attention to stock raising, which they found very profitable, and which is now carried on very extensively. Abundance of excellent pasturage, hay and water make it one of the foremost counties in the state for this purpose.

Coal has not been found in abundance in this county, although it is mined to a limited extent in the extreme northeast part of the county, where there are some exposures of the middle coal measure, chiefly in Walker's Branch, in Wight Township, and in the northeast part of South Fork Township. Nearly all the county, however, is ascribed to the region of the upper or non-productive coal measure, the few slight exposures of rock found in the deep valleys belonging to that formation. Deep mining may, perhaps, develop profitable beds of coal at some future time.

Good building stone is not abundant, although there are some exposures of good limestone, chiefly in Wright and South Fork Townships. Materials suitable for making good brick are abundant.

The timber of the county is of sufficient quantity for ordinary purposes. It is found in groves or belts along the valleys, but since fires have been kept out the young groves are encroaching upon the prairies. The area of timber land is apt to be under estimated by the stranger who passes through the county, for the reason that the valleys where it is usually found are generally so deep that it is mostly hidden from the range of vision upon the general surface level.

Much attention has been given to hedging within the last decade, and its success is fully demonstrated by the miles of vigorous hedge now to be seen within the county. The experience of many in fruit growing within the same period has caused them to look forward to the time when there will be a good bearing orchard of all the fruits adapted to this latitude upon every farm in Wayne County.

EARLY HISTORY.

The first settler in what is now Wayne County was H. B. Duncan, who, after a tedious journey of two months from Kentucky, on the 13th of November, 1841, located near the present village of Lineville, in Grand River Township. At this point he erected a cabin, twelve by fourteen feet, himself and family sleeping in the wagons until his cabin was made ready for occupancy. Mr. Duncan supposed that he had settled in the State of Missouri, and had the honor of being one of the county commissioners of Putnam County, and also probate judge and representative in the Missouri Legislature for that county. Before his death, which took place several years ago, he filed several important positions in Wayne County.

Among other early settlers were Henderson Walker, Benjamin Barker, Hiram Mason, K. M. Hart, Isaac W. McCarty, Joseph Sullivan, George Garman, John Bay and the Nidays, Moses Bules, Joseph Bules, and Seth Anderson.

George Garman settled near the present village of Peoria in the timber on Chariton River, and Benjamin Barker in the northeast part of the county, at the place now called Barker's Mills. Joseph Raines and Seth Anderson pitched their tents on Locust Creek near the present village of Genoa, and Isaac W. McCarty on McCarty's Creek, near the present town of Corydon.

Among the first settlers in the different townships were the following: In Monroe Township, James T. Raines, Jesse Barr, and Ira B. Ryan; in Howard Township, Isaac Wilson, Joseph and Nathan Brown, and Thomas, Joel, and Kendall Rogers; in Clinton Township, A. A. Brown, Sr., Z. Alephin, William Ginn, S. L. Veat and D. J. Shaven, who all settled prior to 1856; in Grand River Township, H. B. Duncan, as already described; in Walnut Township, David Sharp, Solomon Sharp, and Jacob Chilcote; in Jackson Township, John W. Syferd, Thomas H. Richardson, and James Campbell; in Warren Township, George Wright, Hartley Bracewell, John K. Rankin, Nathan Wyat, and G. W. Wilkie; in Jefferson Township, William E. Swanson, and Mrs. Edgerman and family, who settled prior to 1851; in South Fork Township, A. Sager, I. R. Esteb, John Hannaman, and Josiah Fisher; in Corydon Township, Dr. Isaac W. McCarty and George Garman; in Benton Township, James Peck, J. Zimmerman, John Niday, and J. H. Crawford; in Clay Township, James Guinn, J. H. Surbaugh, Levi and Nicholas Caldwell, and Jacob, Henry, and Benjamin McVey; in Wright Township, T. S. Hancock, Hiram Mason, Ellis Wright and Greenwood Wright; in Union Township, the first settler was Henry McDaniel, in the Spring of 1849, and among the early settlers were Morgan Parr, Isaac Venosdal, Daniel May, and Jacob Morritt; in Washington Township, A. Nelson, J. M. Ryan, James B. Hogue, K. M. Hart, and James and Daniel Hammack; in Richman Township, Samuel Guinn, M. H. Richman, and James Fox.

ORGANIZATION, ETC.

Prior to its organization the county was attached to Appanoose for judicial, revenue and election purposes. On the 8th of November, 1850, Dr. Isaac W. McCarty was appointed organizing sheriff by Judge William McKay, and on the 13th of February, 1851, Wayne County was duly organized. At the August election of this year county officers were elected as follows: Seth Anderson, County Judge; Thomas McPherson, Clerk; D. Payton, Treasurer and Recorder; Isaac W. McCarty, Sheriff. At this election thirty votes were cast. The amount of revenue of all kinds the first year footed up $64.30.

The commissioners appointed by the Legislature to locate the county seat were George W. Perkins, William Davis, and Lancaster M. Boggs. They discharged their duty in the Spring of 1851, selecting the site of the present town of Corydon. During the Summer of this year the town was partly surveyed by Benjamin Barker, the county surveyor, and was finished by J. F. Stratton, of Appanoose County. The lots were owned by the county, and were sold at public sale, after being appraised. The first lot was sold to George Garman, November 8, 1851, for $38.

The name sected by the commissioners for the county seat was Springfield, but Hon. George W. McCleary, Secretary of State, wrote the clerk that there was another town in the state of that name, and suggested the name of Anthony. This name met the approbation of Mr. McPherson, the clerk, but Judge Anderson, being from Corydon, Indiana, preferred the name of Corydon. Being unable to agree, it is said they finally determined to decide the matter by a contest at poker. In this the judge proved the victor, and so the county seat of Wayne County received the name of Corydon.

The first District Court was held in the Spring of 1852, in a cabin hastily constructed and still unfinished. The floor was laid down loosely, and only half the roof was on. The walls were neither chinked nor pointed, and the judge's desk was a keg. Judge McKay, however, expressed himself as satisfied, and was completely at home in the "cabin court house." A grand jury was duly empanelled and committed to the charge of the sheriff. Having no jury rooms here in those days, they were conducted down to the slough, or ravine, in the south part of the town of Corydon, where they seated themselves on the grass to make inquisition of such matters as might be brought before them. No person appearing to give evidence that any offense had been committed in the county, they returned in the evening and reported to the court accordingly. They were duly discharged, feeling none the worse for their labors. There were but three cases to be disposed of at this term. On the second day it rained, and a violent gust of wind carried away a portion of the papers, just as the first witness had been sworn, and as they could not be found the trials had to be postponed. Among the attorneys present at this term were A. Harris and H. Tannehill, both of Centerville.

A court house was built in 1856 by William F. Lancaster and John Davis, which cost the county $600.

ORIGIN OF NAMES.

Chariton River derives its name from a French trader, who at an early day had a trading post near its mouth, in Chariton County, Missouri. Medicine Creek, three branches of which head in this county, received its name from an incident that once occurred at Gregory's Ford, in Grundy County, Missouri. A doctor in crossing the stream at that point on horseback, when its waters were somewhat swollen, became submerged, pill-bags and all. His medicines were dissolved and commingled with the waters of the stream, and thereafter the people called it Medicine Creek. Caleb Creek took its name from Caleb Lyten, who settled on it in 1843. Steele's creek was named in honor of Samuel G. Steele, who commenced his settlement on the creek in 1842. Dick Creek was so named by a party of hunters who encamped on its banks, in memory of one of their oxen that died here.

CORYDON.

Corydon, the county seat of Wayne County, has a pleasant location near the center of the county on a dry and beautiful rolling prairie. Fine bodies of timber, within four miles on South Chariton, afford an ample supply of fuel. There are also some groves of timber within a mile and a half on McCarty's Branch, south and southeast of the town. The town plat embraces over two hundred acres. The two principal streets are each eighty feet wide, and the others sixty feet. It is surrounded by a rich farming region. The town was partly laid out, as elsewhere stated, in the Summer of 1851. The first house was brought upon the town plat by George Garman on an ox wagon, and he became the first resident of the place, and also kept in this house the first store. The first child born in Corydon was a son of Seth Anderson, and the first death a child of J. J. Phillips. The first marriage was C. C. Jackson and Rachel Greenman, September 30, 1853, Seth Anderson, the county judge, being the person officiating. John Hayes, Esq., was the first attorney in the place. The first sermon was preached by Rev. Morgan Parr of the Christian denomination. He was one of the early settlers at Bethlehem in the northeast part of the county. A Masonic lodge was organized June 3, 1857.

The town enjoys considerable mercantile trade, and contains several good stores hotels, an excellent flouring mill and other business advantages. Good schools are maintained under the supervision of competent teachers, and are liberally provided for. Good churches and Sabbath schools are among the institutions of the place.

The first newspaper in the county was the South Tier Democrat, commenced in 1859 and continued until 1861, by Cutter & Binkley. In the Winter of 1862-3 the Corydon Democrat was established by M. Mann, but continued only about a year. In the Winter of 1868-4 the Corydon Monitor made its appearance under the control of Wm. Hartshorn, who continued it until his death in December, 1867. It was then continued by his widow, Mrs. Mary Hartshorn, for a year, when Lewes Miles became editor. It was afterwards purchased by C. F. Lecompt, and removed to Allerton. October 3, 1872, the first number of the Wayne County News made its appearance, H. M. Belvel, proprietor. It was removed to Allerton in July, 1875.

ALLERTON.

This is a thriving town about four miles southwest of Corydon, on the line of the Chicago and Southwestern Railroad, or southwestern line of the C. R. I. & P. Railroad. It is very pleasantly located on high, gently rolling ground. Although one of the younger towns of the county, it is building and improving rapidly, owing to its numerous advantages. It is not far from the center of the county, and owing to this situation and the peculiar course of the railroad, it has a wide extent of rich farming country tributary to it both as a shipping and trading point. It is the most important shipping point in the county, and there are a number of good grain elevators and warehouses. Its retail trade extends to considerable distance each way, and maintains quite a large number of good stores and shops of various kinds. Excellent schools are maintained and well provided for. Churches are springing up, and the place is rapidly acquiring all the features of a first class town, with every prospect of continued growth and prosperity.

The Wayne County Republican is a weekly newspaper published here by C. F. Lecompt. It is an enterprising local paper, and receives a liberal patronage. This paper was formerly published at Corydon, and its early history has been given in connection with the sketch of that town. It has always been republican in politics.

In July, 1875, the Wayne County News was removed from Corydon to Allerton by its founder and present proprietor, Mr. H. M. Belvel, who at the time of the transfer sold the old office material and purchased new type and presses. It is an enterprising journal, published weekly, anti-monopoly in politics, and enjoys a good patronage.

LINEVILLE.—This is a village adjoining the state line near the southwest corner of the county. It was laid out in 1848, and is the oldest town in the county. The Chicago & Southwestern Railroad passes through the town and gives it considerable advantages as a shipping point. It also has considerable mercantile trade, churches, schools, etc.

The nucleus of this settlement was originally composed of several families from Kentucky, and here the first school in the county was taught in 1850 by James M. Sullivan.

The Lineville Tribune is published every Thursday by Chas. H. Austin. It is a folio sheet, eight columns to the page, independent in politics, and has a good job office and a good patronage. It was established in July, 1873, and came into the hands of its present owner in March, 1874, by whom it was enlarged to its present size in June, 1875.

HUMESTON.—This is a station on the Leon Branch of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, in the center of the northwestern township of the county. It is surrounded by a fine farming region, and is a growing village with considerable advantages as a trading and shipping point.

SEYMOUR.—This is is a station on the line of the Chicago & Southwestern Railroad near the east line of the county. It is a thriving village and a shipping point of considerable importance with considerable local trade.

The Seymour Head-Light is the name of an independent weekly newspaper, established here April 8, 1875, by H. M. Belvel.

CLIO is the name of a village and post office on the line of the Chicago & Southwestern Railroad between Allerton and Lineville, in a well settled portion of the county.

KNIPPIN is a station and post office on the same railroad line, between Allerton and Seymour.

CONFIDENCE is a village and post office situated on the prairie in the northeast part of the county.

BETHLEHEM is a village and post office in the north part of the county.

The other villages and post offices are Cambria, Genoa, Lewisburg, New York, Promise City, Peora and Warsaw.

VAN BUREN COUNTY.

This county, which is one of the oldest, and, in many respects, among the most important in the state; is situated in the extreme southeast, being the second west from the Mississippi River, and bounded on the south by Missouri. It is twenty-four miles east and west by an average of about twenty north and south, and contains a superficial area of near four hundred and eighty square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

The grandest of Iowa rivers—the Des Moines—runs diagonally from northwest to southeast, having a length of some forty-five miles in this county, with an average width of eight hundred feet, and a uniform depth. The current is rapid, and the bottom composed of rock throughout its whole course in this county, and as it winds through the low wooded hills and wide bottoms it forms a most beautiful and attractive appearance. The other streams are the Holcomb, Chequest, Bear, and Indian Creeks, which empty into the Des Moines from the north, while from the south it receives the waters of Stump, Lick, Rock, Copperas, Honey, and Reed's Creeks. Big and Little Fox Rivers, in the southern part, run into Missouri and finally empty into the Mississippi River; and Big Cedar, crossing the northeast corner of the county, finds its way to the Skunk River. These streams admirably drain all portions of the county, and afford, the smaller ones being largely fed by springs, an abundant supply of stock water at all seasons of the year. Some of them also furnish good water power, especially the Des Moines River at the several points where dams were constructed in the early history of the state, when the work of improving the navigation of the river was commenced. All the streams are skirted by valuable bodies of timber, which is so distributed as to be convenient of access to all parts, the area of timber and prairie being about equal. The varieties embrace nearly all those found in the state, including all the more valuable growths such as white, black, red and burr oak, black and white walnut, hard and soft maple, hickory, linn, ash, elm, etc., with some cottonwood along the streams. The red cedar is also found at several points on the rocky bluffs of the Des Moines. There are some fine groves of the hard maple, or sugar tree, and at the proper season, it is not uncommon to witness the social joys of an old-fashioned "waxpulling," reminding one of "days lang syne" away back east. It is to be hoped that no thoughtless axeman will ever unnecessarily destroy one of those grand old trees, around which, in the years to come, may cluster so many sweet associations of the past. When a ruthless hand is about to perpetrate a deed so cruel may the earnest remonstrance of the poet ring in his ear,

"Woodman, spare that tree!"

In consequence of its numerous streams, this county is more rolling than most others in this part of the state. Very little of it, however, is so broken or hilly as to prevent easy cultivation, and scarcely any portion is swampy or marshy. Along the Des Moines River on either side, alternately, are narrow belts of alluvial bottom lands. These bottoms were originally covered with heavy timber, but large portions of them are now in cultivation. The soil is somewhat sandy, warm, light, and exceedingly productive. The prairies of this county are generally small, with rolling surface, but equal in fertility to the average prairie soils. Good well water is every where easily obtained on the prairies, but along the river bluffs, and in the timber in many places it is necessary to provide cisterns, while good springs are found in many places.

The county is rich in coal deposits. In almost every portion of the county coal has been mined to a limited extent, but now little more is taken out than enough to supply the local demand, and wood being so abundant, the demand for coal is very limited. The veins are from three to four feet in thickness. A considerable quantity has been taken from a three and a half foot vein near Business Corners in the northwest part of the county. This coal is well adapted to mechanical purposes, as it contains but little sulphuret of iron. Some three different seams or beds of coal are now to be exposed, but that of the second or middle vein seems to be most highly prized. The lower seam contains a greater proportion of sulphuret of iron.

Building stone is abundant, and easily accessible at all points in the county. The concretionary limestone is found outcropping along nearly every creek. There is also a species of sandstone which is easily worked, when first taken from the quarry, but on exposure, becomes harder. The limestone, however, has been chiefly used for building purposes. Stone taken from some of the quarries is susceptible of a very fine finish. The block of Iowa marble contributed to the Washington Monument was taken from a quarry on Chequest Creek. A quarry in the vicinity of Doud's Station has been recently opened, the quality of which is fully equal to that found at Chequest. The upper layers of the concretionary limestone make excellent flagging stone, being easily quarried in strata of about three inches in thickness. There is no difficulty in manufacturing quick-lime on nearly every stream in the county, for Rock River being the only stream on which suitable stone for lime does not exist in the greatest abundance.

Clay and sand suitable for brick and building purposes are also abundant. A bed of fire-clay about five feet in thickness within two and a half miles of Keosauqua has been worked for a number of years, and the excellent reputation of the ware which is manufactured from it attests the good quality of the material. A variety of iron-ore is found at several places, but probably in quantities that would not justify the erection of furnaces.

This county presents a fine field for the investigation of the geologist. In addition to the coal measures and concretionary limestone formations, the geode bed outcrops along the Des Moines River from Farmington to within two or three miles of Keosauqua, where its passes below the bed of the river and disappears. What our geologists term the Keokuk limestone, also first appears on the Des Moines River in this county two miles below Bonaparte, rising to an elevation of seventy feet above the bed of the river at Bentonsport, and gradually depressing, finally disappears four miles above Bentonsport. Many fossils interesting to the geologist are obtained from this formation.

About three-quarters of a mile southeast of Farmington, is the somewhat noted artesian well, on which a company here, several years ago, expended some $5,000. They bored to the depth of some 740 feet, passing through, at 100 feet from the surface, what is said to be a vein of pure white marble, equal to any found in the United States, and 40 feet in thickness. At a depth of 700 feet the water rushed in with such force as to throw the drill to one side and stop much further prosecution of the work. A pipe or tube has been inserted, which throws the water some feet above the surface. The water is warm, very clear, and has a slight taste of epsom salts, or something similar. It is used by invalids in the vicinity, and it is said with beneficial results.

For manufacturing facilities this county is scarcely excelled by any other in the state. Though there are some good establishments, a large proportion of the immense hydraulic power is unused for the want of capital, or rather for the want of men disposed to invest their means in enterprises which could hardly fail to remunerate them. Three of the four dams completed under the old Des Moines River Improvement project, are in this county, one at Bonaparte, one at Bentonsport, and one at Keosauqua. There are several other eligible points for dams in the county, each affording immense water power. The large amount of wood and coal would supply the fuel for steam machinery, in addition to the water power of the Des Moines. With her immense hydraulic power, wood, coal, and building material, Van Buren stands unrivaled as a field for investment in manufacturing enterprises.

This is a great fruit-growing county. Being one of the oldest in the state, there are many grown orchards, and they rarely fail to yield a bountiful supply, especially of appies, and the various kinds of small fruits are abundant. Peaches more frequently succeed in this portion of the state than any other. A timber region is better for fruit than any other, and for this and other reasons, fruit-growing in this county has proved peculiarly successful.

The soil of this county is for the most part composed of vegetable loam mixed with clay, which rests on a clay sub-soil. It is deep and friable, and produces abundantly and in perfection, all grains, vegetables, grasses, and fruits, which are indigenous to the latitude in which it is situated. All kinds of farm stock are remarkably healthy and thrive well, while considerable attention has been paid to the introduction of imported and thoroughbred classes, which have aided much in making this branch of industry one of the most important in the county. The climate, soil, and dry rolling surface render it peculiarly adapted to sheep raising, which has been made quite profitable. The general appearance of the county, with its good improvements, well cultivated and valuable farms, and fine stock, fully demonstrate that the agricultural wealth of Van Buren County is surpassed by very few counties in a state which has a world wide reputation for the beauty and fertility of its soil, and the vast and exhaustless extent of its agricultural resources.

EARLY HISTORY.

At an extra session of the sixth Legislative Council of the Territory of Michigan, on the 6th day of September, 1834, an act was passed organizing the country west of the Mississippi River, and creating the counties of Dubuque and Des Moines. The third act passed by the first Legislature of the Territory of Wisconsin, which met in November, 1836, at Belmont, was an act dividing Des Moines County into Lee, Van Buren, Des Moines, Henry, Louisa, and Muscatine; the limits of Van Buren at that time extending westward indefinitely.

The county was organized December 7, 1836, and the first court convening in the county was held at Farmington, April 10, 1837, by Hon. David Irwin, Judge of the Second Judicial District of the Territory of Wisconsin—W. W. Chapman, United States District Attorney, and H. G. Stewart, Clerk. James M. Wood was the only practicing attorney of record at this court. A grand jury was empanelled, composed of the following persons, to wit: Isham Keith, Alexander Keith, Samuel Clayton, Elijah Pusdon, Sr., John Whittaker, James Hill, Charles H. Price, James Smart, Abington Johnson, Jonas F. Denny, James Jordan, Obadiah Cook, William Judd, Thomas Summerlin, John Moffatt, A. V. Syhawk, J. G. McCutcheon, William Brattain, Sr., Abel Galland, Jacob Crow, Lewis Crow, Joseph A. Swazey, and John Patchett. Isham Keith was appointed foreman. No petit jury was empanelled at this term; indeed at that time there was not more than enough inhabitants in the county, whose boundaries extended to the Missouri River, to form grand and petit juries. Several persons were indicted by the grand jury, among whom was N. Doose, for exercising the office of constable in the county by authority of the State of Missouri. The next court was also held at the same place in April, 1838, the same judge presiding. At this court Charles Mason, afterwards Judge of the District of Iowa, was appointed prosecuting attorney pro tem., for the county. The first petit jury in the county was empanelled at this term to try an indictment for house-breaking. The party was found guilty and fined fifteen dollars. At the time the Indians were more numerous in the county than the whites, but the latter soon took possession of and improved the beautiful and productive valley of the Des Moines, and the red man was obliged to retire to the west. About this time, or shortly after, commenced a controversy about the location of the permanent county seat, which is doubtless seriously felt in its effects to the present day. Van Buren is emphatically a county of many towns, and nearly all of them have been competitors for the county seat. We may mention Keosauqua, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Rochester, Columbus, Rockport, Bentonsport, Lexington, Farmington, and Utica. All these towns were once in Van Buren County, but some of them it would be difficult to find at the present time, especially those with the more pretentious and high-sounding metropolitan names. By an act of the First Territorial Legislature, approved January 25, 1839, Benjamin F. Chastain of Jefferson County, Michael H. Walker of Lee County, and Stephen Gearheart of Des Moines County, were appointed commissioners to locate the county seat. The same legislature had previously passed an act locating it at Rochester, but the Governor vetoed the bill. The bill appointing commissioners also provided for holding the first term of District Court, after its passage, at Keosauqua, but forever after to be held at the place selected by the commissioners. The location was made at Keosauqua.

Several enactments of the first Territorial Legislature pertain to the early history of this county. By an act approved January 15, 1839, the Des Moines Mill Company was incorporated, in which William Duncan and his associates were authorized to construct a dam across the river at a certain point named. The bill stipulated that they should build a lock not less than 130 feet long and 35 feet wide, for the passage of steam, keel, flat-boats, rafts, and other water crafts. This was the beginning of Iowa legislation concerning a river which has certainly proved a prolific subject of legislation from that day to this. An act approved January 19, 1839, also incorporated The Plymouth Mill and Manufacturing Company, and authorized E. B. Kimball, H. King, Lewis R. Bissell, Martin A. Britton, and E. A. M. Swasey, and their associates, to construct a dam across the Des Moines River in the southwest quarter of section 26, township 68, range 8, with the same restrictions as those embraced in the other bill.

An act of the same legislature was approved January 23, 1839, establishing at different points some twelve seminaries of learning, three of which were in Van Buren County. One, styled The Farmington Academy, was to be at the town of Farmington. Henry Bateman, Martin A. Britton, John Crane, Stephen Miles, and their associates, were the corporators. Another institution, to be styled The Bentonsport Academy, was to be established in the town of North or South Bentonsport, as a majority of the citizens of the town might decide. The incorporators were S. Richards, G. W. Howe, H. P. Grayes, H. Buckland, Bertrand Jones, Henry Smith, and their associates. South Bentonsport is now known as Vernon. Still another institution was located at Keosauqua, called The Keosauqua Academy. The incorporators were J. N. Lewis, C. H. Ober, John Carnes, John Fairman, S. W. Summers, James Hall, Wilson Stanley, and their associates. All these institutions were for the instruction of young persons of both sexes in science and literature.

The same legislature also authorized William Meek & Sons to construct a dam at Bonaparte; and Henry Eno, George W. Howe, and Seth Richards, one at Bentonsport, with the usual clause guarding the navigation of the river, by the construction of locks, etc.

The first town in Iowa bearing the name of Iowa City was not that which is located in Johnson county, for on the 25th of January, 1839, certain commissioners were appointed to review, lay out, and establish a territorial road from Mt. Pleasant to Rome, in Henry County, from thence to Lockridge, thence to Smith's Crossing on Big Cedar, in Jefferson County, from thence to Iowa City, in Van Buren County.

In 1839 a conflict arose between the State of Missouri and the Territory of Iowa, relative to a strip of land lying along the border between Keosauqua and the present state line. Missouri claimed that the Des Moines Rapids, mentioned in her State Constitution as a point in her northern boundary, referred to the rapids in the Des Moines River at Keosauqua. Iowa claimed that the Des Moines Rapids in the Mississippi were the rapids meant. Both parties claimed jurisdiction over the disputed territory, and so intense was the feeling that a martial spirit began to develop itself; troops were organized, and history records no war more bloodless than the one which ensued, in which Van Buren County took a conspicuous part, some of her citizens acquiring great distinction as officers. After a manifestation of the most undoubted pluck and heroism on the part of Iowa troops, and the exhaustion of the supply of liquors on both sides, peace was declared, the enemy having concluded to yield her claim until the courts could decide the question. The tract was finally adjudged as belonging to Iowa, and thus ended the first war in which Iowa, and especially Van Buren County, acquired military laurels.

As showing the steady growth and progress of the county from the first settlement up to the present time, the following statistics will be read with interest: Its population in 1838 was 3,174; in 1840—6,166; in 1844—9,019; in 1846—9,870; in 1847—10,208; in 1849—11,577; in 1850—12,269; in 1851—13,000; in 1852—12,753; in 1854—13,843; in 1856—15,921; in 1859—15,879; in 1860—17,081; in 1863—15,862; in 1865—15,599; in 1867—16,298; in 1870—17,672.

In the Fall of 1839, the first steamboat ascended the river as far up as Keosauqua—the adventurous pioneer craft being the S. B. Science, Captain Clarke, Master. She brought goods for the Indian trading posts at Portland and other points above, with flour, meal, pork, and other necessary articles for the settlers. This was an occasion of much rejoicing. It is said the good boat brought a liberal supply of scorthappo (whisky) for both whites and Indians.

About this time, an affair of honor transpired between two of the settlers, A. W. Harlan and one Bushnell. Russo King and M. Sigler were the seconds. Pistols were the weapons chosen, and it may be whisky was substituted for coffee. Fortunately no shooting occurred, their friends induced them to settle the difficulty by the less dangerous method now practiced by the ring. Harlan came off victor, and thus ended the first, and, so far as the historian can learn, the last appeal to the code of honor in Van Buren County.

The northwest corner of the county, near the old town of Iowaville, may be called historic ground, as it was here that the Sacs and Foxes fought a memorable battle with the Iowas, and there for a time Keokuk and his warriors had their home, while just over the line in Davis County the renowned and warlike Black Hawk, after his glory had departed, passed in retirement, being surrounded only by his family, the closing days of his life, and was there buried in the Fall of 1838.

RAILROADS.

This county has very good shipping facilities, one road making direct connection with Chicago and the east by the way of Burlington, and the other with the Mississippi River and the southern and eastern markets through Keokuk, the Gate City of the state. The first railroad completed was the Des Moines Valley, now called the Keokuk & Des Moines, which enters the county at the southeast corner, and running up the valley of the Des Moines a distance of over thirty miles, passes out about half a mile south of the northwest corner, having seven stations in the county. The Burlington & Southwestern Railroad passes east and west through the southern tier of townships, crossing the Keokuk & Des Moines Railroad and the Des Moines River at Farmington in the extreme southeast, and accommodates the inhabitants of the southern portion with six stations.

SCHOOLS.

Being one of the oldest counties in the state, the educational advantages enjoyed by the citizens of Van Buren are surpassed by very few counties in Iowa. Institutes and normal schools are held, which have awakened a laudable aspiration among the teachers to bring the standard of the common schools of this county up to that of the best counties in the west, and a steady progress is being made from year to year. There are at the present time 102 ungraded and 12 graded schools in the county, which are open on an average over six months during the year, employing 100 male and 121 female teachers, with a total enrollment of over 500 pupils. The total valuation of school property is over $121,000, while the annual amount expended is about $38,500, and the permanent school fund is about $24,000.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The court house is not a building of any particular architectural beauty, and does not present a very imposing appearance, yet is substantial and serviceable, and with another building used for county offices, affords ample accommodation for the transaction of the public business of the county. They are both built of brick, and stand near the business center of Keosauqua, commanding a fine view of the valley of the Des Moines and the picturesque hills beyond. The jail is a substantial stone building, having iron cells, with a brick residence for the sheriff added, forming together one of the best and most secure county prisons in the state.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AND BRIDGE.

Near the Court House, on a lot purchased for the purpose, an elegant soldiers' monument, costing upward of $2,000, was erected, and dedicated July 4, 1868. The names of all the soldiers who died in the cause of freedom from this county in the war of the Rebellion have been engraved on this monument, thus perpetuating their memory to all time.

In 1873 a substantial and handsome iron bridge, 616 feet in length, was erected across the Des Moines River at Keosauqua, costing $45,000, of which sum the county paid $25,000, and the citizens of Keosauqua the balance.

THE PRESS.

The historian has been unable to obtain the data for an authentic history of the press of Van Buren County, and so can do little more than give the names of the newspapers at present published in the county. The Keosauqua Republican is probably the oldest newspaper now published, it having been established in 1854. It is a good sized, neatly printed Republican sheet, having a large circulation, and is under the editorial management of Geo. A. Henry an experienced and successful journalist.

The Bonapart Democrat made its first appearance in 1870, is a lively, enterprising local paper, democratic in politics, and is owned and edited by Geo. F. Smith, a gentleman of experience and ability as a newspaper man.

The Farmington Gazette took its place among the press of Iowa in February, 1874, with the name of L. M. Moore at the head of its editorial columns. Energetically it has pushed its way into a field already well occupied, and has held its place and become one of the most readable and lively papers in the county.

In 1869 the Birmingham Enterprise was first given to the world by W. S. Moore, and after passing through several hands is now conducted by Sheward & Parker, who are making it an intensely local paper, advocating the interests of the northern portion of the county.

ALEXANDER BROWN, Auditor.	RUSSELL JOHNSON, Clerk of Courts.
ROBERT L. CLARKE, Treasurer.	DANIEL K. KITTLE, Recorder.
JOHN W. SHANE, Sheriff.	ARCHIE MCDONALD, Supt. Common Schools.

ERASTUS PITKIN, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

KEOSAUQUA.

This is the county seat of Van Buren County, and is situated on the north bank of the Des Moines River, at the lower extremity of a peninsula, on what is known as the Great Bend, which, in the Indian language, the term Keosauqua (or Keoshuuqua) is said to mean. It is the opinion of some, however, that this was the Indian name of the river before it received its French christening of Des Moines. The town is four miles south of Summit Station, on the Keokuk & Des Moines Railroad, and within about seven miles of the Missouri line. The first white man who settled on the spot where this place now stands was one John Silvers, who, in 1835, made a claim and built a small cabin on the bank of the river about where the old Keosauqua Hotel now stands. About the same time several other persons settled in the vicinity—among them E. Pardom, Isaac W. McCarty, John Patchett, and John Tolman, with his Indian wife. Silvers sold his claim in the Fall of 1836 to Meschack Sigler for $300. Mrs. Sigler was the first white woman who made her home at this place. In 1837, a company styled the Van Buren Company purchased Sigler's claim. This company was composed of James Hall, James Manning, Edwin Manning, John J. Fairman, John Carnes, and Robert Taylor. Sigler subsequently became one of the company, and Taylor soon sold his interest to William Billups and Simon Druillard. In 1837 they laid out a portion of the town, and in the Spring of 1839 the whole town was surveyed and the plat recorded. The first house in the new town was built by the Van Buren Company in 1837, and was occupied by Carnes & Fairman with the first stock of goods opened in the town. Fairman was the first post master, the name of the office being Portoro. At the land sales in 1838 James Hall was authorized by the company to purchase in his own name the tract of land on which the town was located. In 1839 the first brick house was erected by Edward R. Tylee, and in 1838 T. Laue opened the first tailor shop. The first physician was Cyrus H. Ober, and the first lawyer Isaac N. Lewis. The first hotel was kept in a one-story log house by Elisha Puett, who was a hard case, and as civilization encroached upon him, went to Texas. The first blacksmith was David Smith. In April, 1839, R. King laid out what is known upon the record as Des Moines City, immediately below and adjoining Keosauqua, where a flouring mill was erected and a dam built across the river, and where now stands a stone flouring mill with two run of stones.

The first white child born in Keosauqua was a daughter to William Billups, and the first marriage solemnized was that of Lewis Lapplant and Nancy Hill, on the 27th of January, 1838, by Benjamin F. Green, a justice of the peace. The first newspaper was commenced in the Summer of 1843 by Jesse M. Shepherd and John T. Mitchell. It was called the Iowa Democrat and Des Moines River Intelligencer.

Keosauqua is pleasantly located, partly in the bottom, and partly on a handsomely rounded bluff, which overlooks the valley of the Des Moines, and is well laid out. It contains a number of good residences, several fine business houses which do a good retail trade, a commodious brick school house costing upwards of $15,000, several good churches, the leading religious denominations all having organizations, as have the secret societies of Masons and Odd Fellows.

Such are some of the facts in regard to the early history and present condition of a town that once bid fair to become one of the most important places in the Des Moines Valley. The sanguine expectations of the founders of this once promising town have not been realized, which is partly due to the fact of its peculiar situation in the bend of the river, which places it some four miles from railroad connection, and partly to the class of property holders, who, at an early day, secured the most valuable lands in the town and vicinity, and who, being comfortably situated, have had no desire to enter into the enthusiastic whirl of business speculation which is characteristic of the leading men of the Northwestern States. Yet possessing natural advantages for manufacturing unsurpassed in Iowa—the water power being the best on the Des Moines River, with coal and wood in abundance, an exhaustless supply of excellent building stone and potter's clay in the immediate vicinity—the day is not far distant when this, one of the oldest, will take its place among the most important and wealthy manufacturing towns west of the Mississippi.

FARMINGTON.

This town is very pleasantly situated at the crossing of the Keokuk & Des Moines and Burlington & Southwestern Railroads, on the left bank of the Des Moines River, some two miles north of the north boundary line of the State of Missouri. It is surrounded by a rich farming country, and has a good retail trade. The Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, Christian, German Lutheran, German Methodist, and Catholic religious denominations have organizations and houses of worship. The public schools are also in a flourishing condition and well supported.

BIRMINGHAM.

This place is situated in the north part of the county, eleven miles from Keosauqua and eight from Fairfield, and is surrounded by a wealthy and finely improved farming district, fruiting orchards, well cultivated fields, and happy homes, indicative of wealth and comfort, being visible in all directions. The town is situated on a rolling prairie, with plenty of coal and timber convenient, and is supplied with pure water from wells usually twenty or thirty feet deep. The buildings are mostly wood and neatly painted, while an attractive feature is a delightful park, neatly enclosed and ornamented with forest trees, and provided with a stand and other conveniences for holding public meetings. There are three churches, viz.: Methodist, Presbyterian, and United Presbyterian, all of which have commodious frame houses of worship. The town also has an enviable reputation for educational advantages, having two good public schools and a college in successful operation for the accommodation of both sexes. Birmingham may be set down as a lively village, and with a class of enterprising business men as her leading spirits, she will continue to prosper.

BENTONSPORT.

Is a station on the Keokuk & Des Moines Railroad, on the left bank of the Des Moines River, and is surrounded by a wealthy agricultural section, which is, however, hid from view by the hills in the immediate vicinity. The dam across the river affords a vast amount of water power, which is partially employed in running a large flouring mill and some other machinery. It has considerable trade, and is quite an important shipping point.

There are four churches, viz.: Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational, and Universalist, all brick except the last, which is frame. Masonic and Odd Fellows Lodges exist, both in flourishing condition. The town forms an independent school district, has a good two-story brick school house and well graded schools, which are in charge of a corps of competent and experienced teachers.

The other villages and railroad stations in the county are Independent, Doud, Kilbourne, Summit, Bonaparte, Willets, Mt. Sterling, Cantril, Milton, Iowaville, Portland, Pittsburg, Pleasant Hill, Vernon, Lebanon, Pierceville, and Winchester.

LUCAS COUNTY.

Lucas is the center county in the second tier from the south line of the state. It embraces twelve congressional townships, or an area of about 276,480 acres.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The great watershed between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers traverses the county east and west in a somewhat irregular course, near the north line of the southern tier of townships, constituting a high, narrow tract of comparatively level land. The steeper face of the watershed is upon the south side, at the foot of which flows Charlton River. This stream rises a few miles west, in Clark County, and its course soon after leaving Lucas County turns southward. The affluents which it derives from the watershed are few and small; those which it receives from the opposite side are more numerous and important. On its northern face the descent of the watershed is less abrupt, and here among the undulating slopes are many sources of streams which flow northward to the Des Moines River. For three-fourths of the length of the county these small streams are gathered up by the two forks of Whitebreast Creek, which in turn unite in one channel near the north line of the county. The northeast and northwest corners of the county are drained by other affluents of the Des Moines. Between the forks of Whitebreast the great watershed breaks its general east and west course, and makes a sharp curve or angle of several miles toward the north, and the course of Charlton River conforming to the watershed displays a similar peculiarity, which gives the topography of the county an interesting outline in the form of a pyramid with its base upon the south line. No county in the state has a more thorough and complete system of natural drainage, every township being supplied with one or more of the principal water courses, with numerous small affluents traversing nearly every section. The general elevation of the county is high, being about one thousand feet above tide-water, although the highest point upon this east and west line across the state is in Union County.

The surface of the tract known as the great watershed has been already described as comparatively level; that of the subordinate divides leading from it and forming the uplands between the streams to the north is of similar character. As they approach the water courses they are broken and furrowed by deep ravines, in which frequently young forests are rapidly growing. The valleys are rather narrow, flat surfaces distinctly defined by these more or less abrupt declivities upon either side. The valleys of the larger streams are fully two hundred feet below the average level of the uplands. The surface, therefore, presents all varieties of configuration, from the level surface of the valleys and principal divides to the more rolling formation of the uplands between them which become broken upon some of the valley sides. Something of the terrace formation, rarely seen in this part of the state, is observed in the valley of Whitebreast Creek, in Liberty Township, where a wide level plain or bench stretches across the valley at an average height of about thirty feet above the level of the stream.

The drift deposits are distributed to considerable depth over the surface of the county generally, but the gravel beds, which are a conspicuous feature in this deposit in other parts of the state, are but slightly developed here. The principal streams have excavated their channels entirely through the drift, and to considerable depth into the shales of the coal measures, and their valleys are composed of an alluvial deposit derived from the drift and the disintegrated shales and other soft friable materials of the coal formations. Some of the valleys are rather low and liable to overflow, especially that of the Chariton. They possess everywhere, however, a deep, finely grained soil, richly charged with humous or vegetable mold, and produce most valuable crops of both native and tame grasses. A large portion of these tracts is occupied by excellent forests of timber, and for this reason they have not been cultivated in an equal proportion to the uplands, although they are all suitable and valuable for that purpose, and are considerably cultivated when not occupied by timber. The soil of the uplands is deep and contains a large portion of vegetable mold, and is generally found very reliable and productive. The subsoil is also of the drift formation, except where it has been carried away from the slopes to enrich the valleys. In such places it is of a decided argillacious character, a sort of yellow clay probably derived from from the shales of the coal measures

The uplands are almost all prairie surfaces. The broken lands upon their borders and the valleys are often densely wooded, and the county is supplied with timber sufficient for the ordinary uses of the inhabitants, so distributed as to be easy of access in all portions of the county.

The lower, middle, and upper coal measures are all found in this county. The lower formation occupies a tract in the east or northeast part, with an irregular western boundary; the upper formation occupies the west part of the county. The only point where exposures of the rocks of this formation have been observed, however, is upon Long Branch, in the north part of English Township. Between these two the middle coal measure occupies an area not yet fully ascertained. It is evident that the county possesses an abundance of mineral fuel, although mining of considerable depth may be required to reach the productive coal beds in the west part of the county. Several mines are worked in the northeast part of the county, the beds being from two to three feet thick, and the coal of good quality. Veins of coal from one foot to twenty inches in thickness, belonging to the middle measure, are also worked to a limited extent in several places.

Stone of suitable quality for durable building stone or good quick lime is found in several places. Good limestone is found two or three miles northeast of Chariton on Whitebreast Creek, and a very good sandstone is procured in the northeast corner of the county. Materials suitable for the manufacture of good brick are abundant in all parts of the county.

PRODUCTIONS.

The soil and climate of Lucas County are well adapted to the production of most kinds of grain, but corn is the grain chiefly cultivated, oats being next in importance, and after that wheat. The county formerly produced considerable wheat for exportation, but its great adaptability for grass and stock raising has led its farmers to bestow their attention largely to this very profitable branch of industry in connection with the cultivation of corn and oats. For further particulars in relation to the extent of stock raising in this county see Census Tables for 1875 in another part of this work.

Many miles of excellent hedge are to be seen in the county. The farmers early turned their attention to raising hedge, owing to the facility with which the Osage Orange thrives here and the valuable and permanent fence which it makes in a very few years after planting. It is also found to be desirable in point of economy. Fruit growing also receives considerable attention, and the county is found to be well adapted to the production of the principal varieties common to this latitude.

RAILROADS.

The Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, operated by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, affords the county excellent means of communication and transportation, and brings it upon one of the direct lines of trans-continental travel. A branch of this road extends southwest from Chariton in this county to Leon in Decatur County, and is quite an important feeder to the main line.

EARLY HISTORY.

Lucas County was upon the route of the Mormon exodus of 1846-7, and a party of these emigrants located a few miles southeast of the site of the present city of Chariton at a place formerly called Chariton Point, where they erected some rude log huts and sojourned for about a year when they again proceeded westward. They were the first white settlers in the county.

In September, 1847, Wm. McDermott and wife with four small children settled in Cedar Township, nearly ten miles east of Chariton, and named the place Ireland. In March, 1848, Elijah Baldwin and family settled a little west of McDermott, and in June James Roland and family settled about a mile south. During the same year John Ballard, Thomas Wilson, James Barker and some others settled in the county. James Barker officiated as preacher for the new settlement, and it is said could preach a very good sermon when he happened to be sober. Buck Townsend made a claim at or near the site of the abandoned Mormon settlement. He wanted the county seat located on his claim, and was charged with sending a spurious petition to the Legislature in order to influence the location. He afterwards mysteriously disappeared from the county. McDermott was a Irishman and claimed to have done much toward shaping the destiny of the county. He was once elected prosecuting attorney, but did not qualify; although if he had, it is said that his knowledge of Blackstone and Kent would not have saved him from the necessity of signing his pleadings with an "x." At the close of 1848 there were eight families clustered around Ireland.

In 1849 Union Township was permanently settled by Jacob Fudge, S. B. Chapman, and Hiram and Joseph Holmes. Otter Creek the same year, by Nelson Case. Jackson Township was settled by Joseph Mandlil. English Township by John Ballard, Joseph Stuart and Isham Hodgen. (1849.) Among the new comers this year were William and John McKinley in Washington Township. James B. Custer in Liberty Township. Beverly Searcy, Nelson and Jonas Wescoat in Chariton Township. First settler in Chariton Township was Wm. S. Townsend, better known as "Buck" Townsend, in 1848, at what was then known as Chariton Point. The same year Washington Township was settled by Xury E. West and Samuel McKinley, and Liberty Township by James M. Brown, Peter M. Barker, Wm. R. Meyers, John Meyers and T. Robbins. Union Township was also settled by a man from Missouri, named McAllister, about the same time. But he remained only a short time. Whitebreast (1848) by Daniel Phillips and family who settled one and a half miles west of Chariton, and Ellis Meyers and family about six miles west of Chariton. Others probably settled same year, but names not to be obtained. None of the townships had yet been named. In Spring of 1849 Dr. W. W. Waynick and Iverson Waynick settled three miles east of Chariton. They were accompanied by Samuel Francis who located near them.

Lucas was attached to Monroe County prior to its organization, and during its early days the nearest post office was at Albia.

In 1849 the number of settlers increased rapidly, and the county was organized under an act of the Second General Assembly, approved January 15, 1849. It was previously formed by an act of the Legislature, approved January 13, 1846, and named in honor of Robert Lucas, the first territorial governor. In August following an election was held for the purpose of choosing county officers. The county commissioners chosen were William T. May, Jacob Phillips and James G. Robinson. Their first meeting was held at the house of William S. Townsend, August 10, 1849. Their first business was to appoint William H. Moore, Clerk pro tem, and their next act was to direct an order to be drawn for $18 in favor of H. B. Notson in payment for services rendered in organizing the county, to be paid out of the first money accruing from the prospective sale of lots at the county seat. The commissioners appointed to locate the county seat were W. G. Clark, Richard Fisher and P. M. Dodge. On the 11th of September, 1849, they made a report of the present location, and gave to the place the name of "Polk." The citizens of the county at a meeting held November 5, of the same year, changed the name to Chariton Point. This was subsequently reduced to the present name of Chariton. It should not be confounded, however, with the place once designated Chariton Point, already referred to, where the first settlement was made.

At a meeting of the county commissioners, September 12, 1849, they provided for the survey of town lots at the county seat, and directed that a public sale of lots should be held on the first Monday in December of the same year. Wm. S. Townsend was appointed agent for their sale. On the 5th of November, the order appointing Townsend to act as lot agent was revoked, and W. W. Waynick was appointed in his place. Waynick was also at the same time appointed clerk of the board of commissioners, and James G. Robinson was appointed by the board to go to Fairfield to enter for the county the quarter section embraced in the town plat.

At the meeting of the board held in April, 1850, steps were taken for the erection of the first court house on lot six in block nine, to be paid for out of the proceeds of the sale of lots. The contract for building was let to Beverly Searcy at $374. Searcy completed the job, and the commissioners received it, but for some reason obtained a reduction of $15 on the contract price. This first temple of justice erected in Lucas county, according to the specifications on record, was of hewed logs, eighteen by twenty-two feet, and a story and a half high. It was "pointed" with lime and sand, had a door in the front end and a window in each side, and one in the back end. In July, 1851, a contract was let for furnishing the court house with "sixteen benches six and a half feet long, made from hewed lian, with good oak legs." The contract also provided for the "construction of a good and substantial pulpit in the court house, of a convenient dimension." Lucas County may well remember the injunction, "Despise not the day of small things."

The above described court house subsequently gave place to the present commodious edifice constructed of brick, sixty feet square, and two stories high. The lower story is occupied by the several county officers, and the upper story embraces the court room, and two other rooms. The court house stands at the center of the public park in Chariton. The ground on which it is situated is 524 feet above the Mississippi river at Burlington, and so near the Summit that, it is said, the water falling from the roof on the east side flows into the Mississippi, and on the west side, into the Missouri.

The first district court convened in this county May 22, 1851. William McKay presided as judge. There were but two cases, and one of them was for divorce.

The first saw and grist mill in the county was built by Isaac C. Cain and Pleasant Williams on Whitebreast Creek in Liberty Township. It was rude in construction, small, and run by water. In the Winter of 1852-3 Mr. Crawford Sellers taught the first school in the county in the log court house in Chariton. First school house in the county, built in Union Township, built of round logs, put up by the citizens of the neighborhood. The first birth of a white child in the county was that of a daughter of James Roland, in 1848

The first marriage that was solemnized in the county was that of Samuel A. Francis and Louisa J. Waynick, November 15, 1849.

In the Spring of 1853 the land office was located at Chariton, Mr. Gillam being the Register, and Colonel Isaac Leffler, Receiver. They were soon displaced by the appointees of President Pierce, Rev. R. Coles and Dr. N. G. Sales, who continued in their positions until the office was discontinued. Colonel Leffler died here in the Winter of 1866, at the age of 78 years.

The county had her first representative in the Third General Assembly. Monroe and Lucas was the representative district, and N. B. Preston was representative.

The era of speculation in western lands was at its height during the early settlement of Lucas County. A class of men whom the settlers gave the disrespectful appellation of "land sharks" concentrated about the land office at Chariton and beset every man who came to purchase lands. If the purchaser desired to view the premises before buying they stood ready to show him a desirable tract, sometimes several miles away from the one which his description called for. A beautiful tract some three miles west of Chariton, called Hickory Point, is said to have been thus disposed of to at least fifty persons. The "land sharks," however, did not have matters all their own way, for nearly all the early settlers engaged in speculation by practices peculiar to themselves. Each man had an indefinite number of "claims," which he was ready to dispose of to new comers, and as early as 1850 it is said to have been difficult to find a desirable location not already claimed, and if an immigrant purposed remaining in the county he soon found he must conform to the rules and regulations of the "settlers' club" or "Home Protection Society," which seems to have become in this county to a great extent a vehicle for speculation. This society and the land sharks were constantly at enmity until both classes disappeared before the incoming tide of honest and industrious settlers who came to locate and improve permanent homes, and compelled honester practices. To this latter class the county is mainly indebted for the steady progress and development which has been maintained for many years.

CHARITON.

This enterprising young city is delightfully situated upon the high plain of the great watershed and it is the only city or town of importance in the state so situated. The gentle undulations of the town site are only sufficient to afford its streets adequate drainage. The location affords a good view of the surrounding country, especially toward the southwest, where the valley of Chariton River approaches the city. The place is regularly laid out with wide, handsome streets, which are kept in good condition and extensively lined with ornamental and shade trees. Many handsome residences are also embowered among trees and shrubbery which lend their scenery the charm of Sylvan beauty. The place has many fine business blocks as well as elegant residences. The business blocks are chiefly built upon the streets surrounding the beautiful square upon which the court house stands. They are chiefly constructed of brick, and many of them are three stories high. Chariton's extensive and varied mercantile trade is represented by numerous substantial firms, who carry large and well assorted stocks of goods. Nearly every department of trade is represented to an extent sufficient to supply the demands of the unusually wide scope of prosperous and well settled territory tributary to it. It is necessarily an important shipping point, and its shipping facilities include a large elevator furnished with steam power, and several warehouse and banking institutions. A half dozen good hotels, lumber depots, establishments for the sale of agricultural implements and flouring mills are among the business facilities of the place. The railroad depot is an extensive building of two stories constructed for the double purpose of a depot and hotel or eating house.

INSTITUTIONS.

The public schools of Chariton are an honor to the place. They are graded upon the most approved plan, and employ a principal and six assistants as instructors at very liberal wages. The course of instruction embraces several of the higher or academical branches, among which are the Latin and Greek languages. The school building is one of the finest in this portion of the state. It was erected in 1853. It is situated in the west part of town on a fine, dry, rolling site, containing three and a half acres. Its size is 38 by 73½ feet, with a front projection or vestibule of 8 by 19½ feet. Its height is three stories, with a tower. The first two stories are each 12 feet, and the third 11 feet high. The entire building is constructed and furnished with all the modern improvements. Its cost was about $20,000.

There are numerous church societies and Sabbath schools which are well maintained by the good people of Chariton. The Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptist, United Presbyterian, Christian, Episcopalian and Catholic denominations al, have good houses of worship.

Chariton has three newspapers, the Patriot, Republican, established in 1857, and the Leader, Democratic, established in 1872. The Patriot is published Wednesdays, by W. H. Maple, who is editor and proprietor. It is a folio sheet, size 28×40 inches, with eight columns to the page. It has a large patronage and a prosperous business. Terms, $1.50 per annum. The Leader is published Saturdays, by Best & Baker. It is a handsome eight-column folio sheet, and enjoys a good circulation and a prosperous business. It was established April 27, 1872, by E. T. Best and W. D. Axline, with D. M. Baker as editor, Mr. Axline subsequently retiring. The paper has been once enlarged since its inception.

The Lucas County Republican was started in August, 1873, by a joint stock company, and under the management of T. W. Fawcett.

The Chariton cemetery contains thirty acres situated about half a mile southwest of the town on a high rolling prairie. The entire grounds are enclosed with a fine Osage Orange hedge, and planted with maples set in regular order along the streets and avenues. The grounds are well taken care of, and this cemetery is a model that many other towns might well imitate.

RUSSELL is a station and village on the C. B. & Q. R. R., seven or eight miles east of Chariton.

LUCAS is a village and railway station upon the same line about an equal distance west of Chariton.

DERBY is a village and station upon the Iron Branch in the southwest part of the county.

Lagrange, Freedom, Belinda, Whitebreast and Norwood are villages or post offices.

MONROE COUNTY.

Monroe is the fifth county west from the Mississippi River in the second tier of counties from the south line of the state. This tier comprises only three townships in breadth, west of Henry County, hence its counties are, nearly all of them, of smaller size as compared with other Iowa counties. Monroe is one of these, comprising twelve congressional townships equivalent to 432 square miles or 276,480 acres.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The southwest corner of Monroe County rests upon the great watershed, while the northeast corner rests upon the Des Moines River. It, therefore, spans the basin of the principal river of the interior of the state from its center to its southwestern rim or boundary; and its surface features are considerably diversified by the transition from the valley region to the high plain.

From a small portion of the southwestern township the water flows off toward the Missouri, but all other portions of the county are drained by the Des Moines river and its affluents, chief of which is Cedar Creek. Creeks and spring brooks are very numerous, traversing nearly every section of land. Many of them run upon beds of gravel or fragmentary rock. Their waters are clear and their currents rapid. The valleys are narrow, and the valley sides are often abrupt and sometimes steep and rocky. These narrow valleys and ravines branch and extend in every direction, but usually only for short distances before they are headed by the uplands. The county is thus thoroughly drained and has abundance of water for all farming purposes. The larger streams also afford good water power for mills and manufactories. This system of drainage is divided into two principal parts by a divide or branch of the great watershed that enters the county on the south side a little east of the center, passes through Albia and then deflects westward, passing out of the county on the north side a little west of the center. West of this line the county is drained by Cedar Creek and its affluents, and the general direction of the watercourses is nearly north, although the creek mentioned takes its course eastward for eight or nine miles after entering the county and then changes to a northwest course. In the east half of the county the watercourses flow mainly in an easterly direction, and find their way to the Des Moines by six or seven independent channels.

The uplands are usually beautiful rolling tracts of prairie, scarcely any of it so rough as to be unsuitable for easy cultivation. These prairies are usually small, for Iowa, being separated by the numerous valleys. These upland tracts are bordered by the somewhat broken surfaces of the valley sides. The county is amply compensated, however, for this small proportion of broken lands by the abundant quantity and favorable distribution of timber which generally occupies the valleys and broken lands upon their sides, and in many places encroaches upon the adjacent uplands, and also by the valuable coal beds which are rendered easy of access by the same conformation that protected the growth of timber during the period of prairie fires.

RESOURCES.

The larger part of Monroe County is embraced within the region which is now considered the most valuable portion of the Iowa coal field. It is all embraced within the area of the lower and middle coal measures, and it lies far enough within the limits of the coal field to develop the formation fully. In the eastern and northern portions of the county, beds of coal belonging to the lower measure, and from four to five feet in thickness, have been developed. These beds are not so thick as those opened in some other counties, but they are rendered highly valuable by the excellent quality of the coal which they yield. In the central portion of the county beds of coal belonging to the middle measure have been opened. The coal is somewhat thinner than the beds previously mentioned, but is of good quality, and from the fact that it lies in close proximity to the lower formation it is inferred with good reason that profitable coal mines may be developed easily in nearly all parts of the county.

The soil throughout the county generally has all the elements of the highest fertility, being derived from the drift which deeply overlies the entire upland surface, richly intermingled with the vegetable mold accumulated for ages from the annual decay of herbage upon the surface. This is underlaid by a very deep subsoil derived from the same deposit of drift and the disintegrated shales of the contiguous coal measures. It yields abundant crops of most grains, corn taking the lead; oats and wheat being next in importance. From the ample production of native grasses, this has long been a prominent grazing county, and stock raising has formed a most remunerative and extensive branch of industry. The successful introduction of tame grasses, which thrive admirably, and with the convenience of stock water have not in the least tended to diminish or discourage the business of stock raising.

The county enjoys the general advantages possessed by this section of Iowa for fruit growing, and good orchards are met with quite frequently.

Stone, suitable for ordinary masonry, is obtained in many places, and also suitable stone for the manufacture of quicklime. Clay and sand for making brick are convenient to all parts.

RAILROADS.

The county has good railroad communications. The B. & M., or as it is commonly called the Chicago Burlington & Quincy, traverses its territory, and the southern terminus of the Central Railroad of Iowa is at present at Albia. The Albia, Knoxville & Des Moines road, now in process of construction, starts from the C. B. & Q. depot at Albia, and proceeds thence up the Des Moines valley.

HISTORICAL.

Monroe County was included within the territory purchased of the Sac & Fox Indians in 1842, and opened for settlement on the first of May, 1843. It was originally named Kishkekosh, in honor of an Indian chief among the Sacs and Foxes, but the name was subsequently changed.

The first settlement was made in the northeast part of the county, about two miles west of Eddyville on the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 3, township 73, range 16, by John B. Gray, in May, 1843. His son, John S. Gray, born September 15th of that year, was the first white child born in the county. Mr. Gray was from Burlington, Iowa. Among other settlers of that and the succeeding year, were James and Josiah Boggs, James Myers, W. G. and John Clark, James Hilton, William N. Beadle, William Miller, T. and A. Templeton, J. McMullen, G. Gunter, R. Ingham, J. Wells, J. McIntire, Israel Green, W. Buchanan, N. B. Preston, Riley Wescoat, D. and O. Rowles, J. Lower, J. N. Massey, J. Mock, J. Webb, W. H. Clark, P. Barber, S. H. Warden, E. P. Coree and H. Smith.

The county was organized in the Summer of 1845, by Joseph Hayne, Sheriff of Wapello County. The first election ever held in the county was at Clark's Point, two miles north of the present town of Albia, in 1844, when W. G. Clark was elected justice of the peace. The first county officers were elected in August, 1845, and were as follows: W. G. Clark, Probate Judge; James Hilton, Clerk of the District Court; J. Miller, Commissioners' Clerk; T. Templeton, Treasurer; J. Clark, Sheriff; and J. McMullen, M. H. Clark, and J. S. Bradley, County Commissioners. The first entry in the county commissioners' record is headed as follows: "Kishkekosh Co., Territory of Iowa."

In 1845, a town was laid out at Clark's Point, to which the name of Clarksville was given, and at that time aspired to the honors of the county seat. The first district court was held at this place in 1845, Charles Mason, of Burlington, presiding as judge.

In 1846, James A. Gallaher, of Jefferson County, and Israel Kister, of Davis County, two of the commissioners appointed to locate the permanent county seat, made selection of the place where the town of Albia is now situated, and a town was laid out there called Princeton. The name was subsequently changed to Albia.

One of the earliest (perhaps the first) deaths which occurred in the county was that of the wife of Riley Wescoat, in 1844. At that time there were neither saw mills nor undertakers in the county. In preparing for the burial of the deceased the question of providing a coffin became an important one. There was no saw mill in the country, and consequently no lumber to make a coffin of. The trees in the forest were all they had, and to them they resorted. Out of them they hewed puncheons, such as are used for cabin floors, and with the aid of S. H. Warden, a cabinetmaker, they succeeded in making a very respectable coffin for her who had so soon left their small circle. The first religious meeting held in the county was at the house of Israel Green, by Rev. Mr. Post, a Baptist preacher from Davis County, in 1844.

ALBIA.

This town is laid out like many other county towns in this section of Iowa where the ground was selected before any improvements were made, and the site surveyed into lots under the supervision of the county commissioners. As they could shape the new town according to their own pleasure in any form which they should deem best adapted to the purpose for which it was intended, they usually laid out and reserved the best ground near the center in the form of a square for public uses. In due time a court house reared its stately walls exactly in the center of these public grounds. It was usually the most expensive and important building in the town, and the business rows ranged themselves as near as they could get on the adjacent streets all looking toward the central structure apparently in admiration, but really because the situation afforded the best business locations. Albia is thus laid out, and a substantial brick court house stands upon the central square. The streets are regularly laid out, wide and handsome. Many good business blocks and buildings of two and three stories surround the court house square and extend along some of the principal streets. Handsome residences and tastily ornamented grounds are an attractive feature of the place. Upon one side is the depot of the Central Railroad of Iowa, and just beyond handsome fair grounds and trotting park. Along the side of the town nearly opposite runs the track of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad and the Albia, Knoxville & Des Moines Railroad, now in process of construction, extends from its depot. There are good flouring mills, warehouses, etc. There are unmistakable indications of business activity and progress observable in its numerous stores, shops, hotels, banks, and other business establishments conducted by enterprising men of experience and capital. The professions are equally well represented. The education of the youth of the city is well provided for by excellent graded schools maintained at a very liberal outlay of public funds. Several fine church buildings adorn its precincts, and show that its citizens are not unmindful of their spiritual welfare.

The site of this young city is beautifully situated upon a high, gently undulating tract of prairie about two and a half miles east of the geographical center of the county, and affords a fine view of the handsome surrounding country. It has many advantages of location, a large fertile and well improved tract of country contributes to its mercantile trade, and the surplus products of the county are likewise drawn to its market by the excellent shipping facilities and means of transportation afforded by its railroads. The town is situated within convenient distance of excellent tracts of timber. An abundance of coal is furnished by the adjacent mines. Excellent brick is manufactured here, and good stone for building purposes and quicklime is obtained near by. The town may be said to have just entered upon its era of growth and progress, and with these numerous advantages it evidently has a bright and promising future before it. It is now incorporated as a city under the general incorporation laws of Iowa, its council consisting of a mayor, recorder and five trustees.

NEWSPAPERS.

A. C. Barnes started the first paper in the county at Albia in 1854. It was a free soil paper, called the Albia Independent Press. W. W. Barnes took charge of it in 1856, and changed the name to Albia Weekly Republican. Shortly afterwards his brother, A. R. Barnes, took charge of it and ran it till 1859, when the paper was suspended. January 1, 1860, Young & Gray bought the press and started a paper called the Monroe County Sentinel, in the interest of Douglass. In the Fall of 1861 the paper was suspended for a short time, after which Young & Melick commenced the Albia Weekly Gazette, which had little to do with politics. The paper stopped in April, 1862. Young went to the war in the Summer of that year, and Melick went to Eddyville to publish the Star. The press was sold to M. A. Rogg, who started the Albia Union. He afterwards went into the army as lieutenant and was killed in front of Vicksburg. G. W. & B. F. Yocum took charge of the paper, and when Rogg was killed, purchased it and ran it till October 24, 1864, when the present proprietor, V. Mendel, bought it. He has made it an excellent paper fully deserving the gratifying success which it has attained. It is Republican in politics, and is published every Wednesday.

The Reporter is an attractive and newsy sheet, published weekly.

FREDERIC.—This is an important railroad station in the east part of the county. Considerable produce and stock are shipped at this point.

TYRONE.—This is a station southeast of Albia on the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, and an important shipping point.

MELROSE.—This place is in the west part of the county, and is also a shipping station on the railroad. The post office is called East Melrose.

The other villages and post offices are Avery, Cedar Mines, Coalfield, Coalton, Georgetown, Half Way Prairie, Hummaconna, Lovilia, Urbana City, and Weller.

CHICKASAW COUNTY.

Chickasaw is the third county west of the Mississippi River in the second tier from the north line of the state. It contains an area of 504 square miles, or 322,560 acres.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

The surface of the county is generally gently undulating, and in some places very nearly level. Very little rolling land is found within its limits, and this is confined principally to a narrow strip of the southwestern township in the vicinity of Cedar River. The natural drainage of this surface is remarkably good, as the county is traversed by no less than seven streams of considerable size all flowing in a southeasterly direction and almost parallel to each other, which, with their numerous small affluents, drain nearly every section in the county. The current of these streams is uniformly quite rapid, but the nature of the rock underlying the entire county has prevented them from eroding deep channels.

The numerous streams supply the county with an abundance of water-power, which is being improved as the agricultural resources of the county are developed and require its use. It has so far been employed chiefly for milling purposes, as other manufacturing enterprises have not been inaugurated to any great extent.

The streams are also generally skirted with timber, of which, however, the county has not an abundant supply. There is enough to supply the ordinary needs of the couhty since the railroads have brought pine lumber within reach, as it is more economical both for building and fencing than native timber. The timber is tolerably well distributed, and since the settlement of the county has diminished the ravages of fire it is growing rapidly in groves upon the prairies. The largest body of timber lies along the Cedar River in the southwest part of the county.

The county is almost entirely underlaid with strata of rock, which geologists ascribe to the Hamilton group of the Devonian Age. It is an argillacious limestone, or highly calcareous shales alternating with bands of limestone. The following measurements of the different strata at a quarry near Bradford, on Cedar River, will indicate the general character of the rock formation:

Dark-gray, thick shaly limestone	7 feet.
Buff-gray crystalline limestone	5 inches.
Light-gray, fine-grained limestone	9 inches.
Hard, dark-gray shaly limestone	8 inches.
Hard, dark-gray limestone	7 inches.
Unexposed	2 feet.
Light, buff-grey limestone	1 ft. 8 in.

The limestone exposed at this quarry is of medium purity, and quite hard. So far as observed, it is almost destitute of fossils. It is well exposed only along the banks of Cedar River. Elsewhere over the county the comparatively level surface of deep drift, and the shallow channels of the streams are causes which prevent its frequent exposure.

Materials suitable for the manufacture of brick may be found in nearly every township.

SOIL AND DRAINAGE.

In an early day a large portion of the land in this county was considered rather too wet to be of the highest value for cultivation. The wet land was not found in the form of low marshes, difficult of drainage, for there were none of these, but was as frequent upon the highest prairies as elsewhere. This peculiarity has very rapidly disappeared within the last ten years, as indeed it could scarcely fail to do with the excellent natural drainage already described. It was doubtless caused in part by the comparatively slight depressions made by the water courses, but the principal cause is probably to be found in the nature of the soil and subsoil. The soil is a deep rich black loam, abundantly supplied with vegetable mold from the decay of the wild grasses which grew profusely on its surface. The subsoil is a deep bed of the drift deposit consisting of earth near the surface, and beneath this mingled clay, sand and gravel. Its texture was not so suitable for admitting the percolation of water through it from the surface as the light porous subsoils of other sections, and the limestone rock does not come near enough the surface to supply the under drainage afforded to still other sections. The luxuriant growth of grass and tough sward which it formed tended to retard the drying of the soil by evaporation. An undue proportion of water was retained near the surface by these causes. Cultivation in frequent places and the pasturage of the intervening prairies, have tended to equalize the conditions, and the wet character of the soil began to disappear without artificial drainage. Indeed, it is now satisfactorily demonstrated that cultivation alone is capable of effecting a complete cure; that the soil, although in an early day appearing to be of rather a sluggish quality, not so easily or readily subdued as that of some other sections, becomes in the course of a few years, as lively and as well adapted to the plow as any other, and that it is rich and productive, possessing qualities of strength and durability found wanting in soils that were more easily subdued from a state of nature, and which also "wear out" more easily. The statistics published in another part of this work, show that in relative productiveness for the amount of land in cultivation, Chickasaw County takes rank among the foremost counties of the State.

RESOURCES.

The principal grain products of the county are wheat, corn, oats and barley. Wheat takes the lead slightly, followed very closely by corn, and to a somewhat less degree by oats. The soil seems to be nearly equally well adapted to all these grains, the relative profit to be derived from them, chiefly governs the extent of cultivation. Stock raising is an important branch of its industry, as both native and tame grasses thrive luxuriantly, and, indeed, cattle raising is by many deemed more remunerative than extensive grain growing. The county is therefore admirably suited for mixed or diversified farming, and is not devoted to one class of crops, or to either grain growing or stock raising to the exclusion or detriment of the other branch, but most of its farmers cultivate the several kinds of grain and grass and raise small herds of cattle, thereby securing the rotation in crops and other conditions most highly advantageous and favorable to reliable productiveness, and have every year some surplus that will bring a good price in the market, whether any particular product be up or down.

The mineral resources of the county are comparatively slight, being limited to a few quarries of building stone. Her agricultural resources are remarkably good, as we have already described, and must constitute the foundation of her future prosperity. There are excellent resources for manufacturing purposes, in her abundant water powers. These have been already improved to considerable extent for flouring mills, but with her rich agricultural resources and demand for machinery, ought to be made to propel a large amount of machinery employed in the manufacture of agricultural implements and woolen goods, which will doubtless be done in time.

The railroad facilities of the county are good. It is traversed from east to west by the Iowa & Dakota division of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, with stations at New Hampton, Lawler and Chickasaw, affording ready access to the best wheat market of the Northwest, Milwaukee. The Cedar Falls & Minnesota branch of the Illinois Central Railroad traverses the southwest corner, with an important station at Nashua. Both of these roads furnish ready communication with the principal pine lumber districts. In addition to these, two roads crossing this section of the state diagonally from Dubuque, are already completed to Fayette, and ere many years, one or both will undoubtedly be constructed to or through the central part of Chickasaw County.

The county is very liberally supplied with public schools, and her citizens annually tax themselves liberally for their maintenance.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The early settlement of Chickasaw County was commenced in 1852, at or near the point where Bradford was subsequently platted, on the east side of Little Cedar River, just above its junction with Cedar River, by J. A. J. and John Bird, and the few immigrants who arrived during that and the following year, seem to have located in that vicinity altogether. In 1854, the nuclei of several settlements were formed by pioneers, who located in different parts of the county almost simultaneously. James Jared settled where the city of New Hampton stands. Almon Harries, John Spur, Myrie Spur and Edwin Hale located in Deerfield, May 5th of the same year. Among the first settlers in Obispo, now Utica Township, were William Everingham and J. J. Rutherford. Among the first at a place called Yourvee, were O. H. P. Searles and William Linderman. James Millican settled in Dayton Township, on Section 23, in September, 1854.

The first sermon preached in the county, was by a traveling Methodist minister, at the house of John Bird, the second by Rev. Mr. Coleman, a Congregational minister, at the same place, a few weeks later.

ORGANIZATION.

An attempt was made to organize the county as early as the Spring of 1853. An election was held at which J. K. Rowley was elected County Judge. Such steps as had been taken were however held to be informal, and by an order of the County Judge of Fayette County, to which Chickasaw was attached prior to its organization, under date of June 30, 1853, John Bird was directed to organize the county, and on the 15th day of August, 1853, the organization was duly completed by the election of the following county officers: James Lyon, County Judge; S. C. Goddard, Clerk; N. D. Babcock, Prosecuting Attorney; E. A. Haskell, Treasurer, and Andy Sample, Sheriff.

COUNTY SEAT.

The seat of justice for the new County of Chickasaw, was located at Bradford, on the 14th day of August, 1854, by William McClintock and John B. Onstine, two of the commissioners appointed for that purpose.

In April, 1856, a vote of the people was taken between Bradford and New Hampton, at which New Hampton received a majority of the votes. The canvassers, however, threw out the vote of Washington Township in counting the returns, which left the majority in favor of retaining the County Seat at Bradford. This action aroused considerable indignation among the friends of New Hampton.

In the Spring of 1857, a second commission appointed by the Legislature, located the seat of justice at New Hampton.

On the 5th day of April, 1858, another vote was taken, this time between New Hampton and Forest City. The result was in favor of New Hampton, but the canvassers again threw out the vote of Washington Township for informality, and changed that of Deerfield from 53 to 43, which gave Forest City a majority. The citizens and friends of Forest City had teams in waiting, and as soon as this result was announced, the books, papers and furniture were hastily loaded upon wagons, and conveyed to Forest City. New Hampton contested the matter in court, and at the end of a long litigation, New Hampton was decided to be legally the county seat, and the records were ordered returned, since which time there has been no further county seat contest.

The present court house is a building erected at New Hamptou in 1865, at a moderate expense, the authorities of the county wisely deciding not to burden the people with the expense of costly buildings, until such time as the increase of population and wealth will enable them to erect a suitable edifice which will be an honor to the county, without incurring heavy indebtedness.

The first term of district court in the county, was held at Bradford, in June, 1854, by Judge Thomas S. Wilson; the second term was held by Judge Samuel Murdock, in October, 1855.

NEWSPAPERS.

The first newspaper in the county was established at Jacksonville, in 1857, by Isaac Watson, and lived about three years. About the same time, A. J. Felt commenced at Bradford the publication of a paper entitled the Cedar Valley News. In 1867, A. J. Felt commenced at Nashua, the publication of the Post, of which he continued editor and proprietor until February, 1864, when it was purchased by Graves Bros. The present owner and editor is Joseph F. Graves. It is a large, wide awake, lively paper of eight pages, six columnsto the page, ably edited, Republican in politics, and published weekly. Ighas good job printing facilities.

The New Hampton Courier was established in 1860, by W. E. Beach. It is now published as a weekly, by G. M. Reynolds, by whom it has been owned and edited for many years. It is an able exponent of Republican principles and a good newspaper, size, four pages of eight columns to the page.

In 1872, a paper called the Times was started at Lawler, but lived less than a year. The Chickasaw County Times was started at the same place, in 1865, by Mr. Hazlett, and is now published there.

MILITARY RECORD.

Chickasaw County sent a very large proportion of her able-bodied men into the military service of the United States during the War of the Rebellion, in all about four hundred. The following is a list of those who received commissions:

NEW HAMPTON.

New Hampton was incorporated in the Spring of 1873. Jas. F. Babcock was the first Mayor. He was succeeded by Captain G. Gardner, and he by the present Mayor, Dr. H. M. Mixle. The present council consists of Dr. H. M. Mixle, Mayor; James Young, Recorder; L. M. Smith, F. Monsch, J. J. Arouckie, Jno. McLaren and G. M. Reynolds, Trustees. The town is in the exact geographical center of the county. It contains about 1,000 inhabitants, and is well situated with regard to health and beauty, the ground sloping to the east and south sufficiently to afford good drainage. It has a well built, commodious school house, with graded school of four departments. There are seven church organizations here. Three of which have large churches, to wit: the Methodist, Congregational, and Catholic societies. Three of the societies have parsonages. The city has one bank, which is now erecting a $7,000 building. Two good hotels, two full drug stores, eight general retail stores, two of them carrying from $15,000 to $20,000 stock, several groceries, restaurants, etc., one large hardware store, one jeweler, dressmaker, milliner, etc., one tailor, three agricultural implement depots, from one of which has been sold the present season (1875) $35,000 worth of machinery, while the others have enjoyed a good trade. No line of business is overdone, the contributing territory always keeping in advance of the town. There are physicians, and ten lawyers. This is the home of the first lady notary p sioned in the state. The Iowa Div. of the C. M. & St. P. Ry. was com town in September, 1869. Two other railways have been surveyed thr the C. F. & W., and the D. N. H. & M. and the demands of the country the completion of the latter at some date in the near future.

The fair grounds of the Chickasaw County Agricultural Society are lo distance east of the town on a beautiful tract of land, and include a course.

NASHUA.

This is a prosperous and important town near the southwest corner It is situated in a bend of Cedar River, directly opposite the confluence Cedar, and at the foot or south end of the heaviest body of timber County. The town plat lies in the river valley on dry ground sufficien above the reach of floods with a gentle inclination eastward. It is a beau which is thoroughly protected from high winds in every direction by covered with timber.

The Cedar River affords very valuable and excellent water power on t just above the railroad bridge, which is occupied by one of the largest ans mills in northern Iowa.

The Cedar Falls and Minnesota Division of the Illinois Central Ra along the east side of the town, and then crosses the river northward. commodious depot building, and there are several good elevators and adjacent.

The principal business street runs parallel with the railroad track, fro distant only the width of one tier of blocks. This street is broad and wel is lined with substantial business houses, many of which are handsom brick or stone. Westward of the business street are many handsome resi few of which are beautifully embowered in natural groves of thrifty native The prevalence of trees throughout this portion of the town gives it appearance of pleasant rural avenues.

A large section of surrounding country in Chickasaw, Floyd and Brem contributes to the commercial importance of the place. This portion Valley is justly celebrated for its productiveness and the advanced state ment which it displays. Here in the midst of such a country with no imp nearer than Waverly in one direction and Charles City in the other, Na advantageously situated to draw the mercantile trade and the grain of th its market for shipment or manufacture from a wide distance.

The business of the town is extensive and continually increasing. It large number of good mercantile houses in all branches, shops of nearly tions, good hotels, foundry, bank, printing office, dealers in grain, farm ments, lumber, etc., etc. It is represented by a liberal array of talent in t medical professions. A live agricultural society is maintained with h here, and also a trotting park association. They jointly hold fair grounds trotting course a short distance above the town plat near the railroad track.

The town has several church organizations, and good houses of worship schools are well maintained and graded upon a most efficient system. principal and three or more assistants as instructors. They are provided wi dious and well furnished public school building which affords ample facil purpose.

ADAMS COUNTY.

This county is the third east from the Missouri river, and in the second the southern boundary of the state, and contains twelve congressional tow four hundred and thirty-two square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

The county lies wholly upon the Missouri river drainage slope, and is pr drained by the East and Middle Nodaway Rivers, and their branches, which ru ally through it from the northeast to the southwest. Several branches of One and Two head in the south part of the county, while the Platte flows for some along the east line. Numerous small streams and branches are so distrib drain nearly every portion of the county. The East and Middle Nodaway number of good water-powers for machinery during the greater portion of There is a good flouring mill on the former, with a saw mill connected, and t latter, each having saw mills also connected with them. The supply of wate sufficient for mill purposes on Middle Nodaway, will average about nine m each year. There are also in the county some three or four steam saw mill woolen factory on Middle Nodaway, about three and a half miles from Quin latter is provided both with steam and water power, and in its operations c carding, spinning, and weaving. These streams and their tributaries furnis lent water for stock. Good wells are also obtained at reasonable depths in all the county. The valleys are narrow, but beautiful and fertile. The larger t timber are along the Middle Nodaway, but there are also fine groves on East N The west half of the county is much better supplied with timber than the ea timber is rapidly encroaching upon the prairies from the borders of the strea the people have kept the fires out for the protection of their farms. The p kinds of timber are oak, hickory, walnut, elm, cottonwood, soft maple, linn, ha cherry, and buckeye. The principal wild fruits are crab-apples, plums, grap berries, strawberries, and gooseberries. It is estimated that about one-tent county is timber. Much of it, however, is a young growth, but in a few years come quite valuable.

This is the last county west that has yielded coal in sufficient quantity to working. A vein of about twenty inches in thickness seems to extend ac county from the southeast to the northwest corner, and nearly at right ang the streams. It makes its appearance in several places in that general direct it lies about the surface of low water mark, with a slate formation, as usual, ju it, and limestone above and below. One or two banks on Middle Nodaway ha worked for some fifteen years, not only to supply the local demand, but pri completion of railroads to Council Bluffs, considerable quantities of coal were from Adams County to Council Bluffs, Omaha, Nebraska City, and other poin It is now mined to supply the demand of this and adjoining counties. It is not adapted to mechanical as heating purposes, but is used by blacksmiths in the v It is considerably impregnated with sulphur, but burns freely, and makes excelle So far as known, the workable beds are mainly limited to Middle Nodaway and t utaries, the principal exposures being at some four or five different points within tance of twelve miles. Only one seam has been discovered which belongs to th coal measure deposits. Extending in the same general course from southeast to west, the same geological strata, including this coal formation, make their app on West Nodaway near the northeast corner of Montgomery County. Alth has only been worked at points where it is easily accessible along the strea quite likely to be obtained by sinking a shaft at any point within the range of the exposures. The depth to which it may be necessary to go may be pretty ac ascertained by finding the elevation of the surface at any required point, ab vein where it is exposed to view along the streams. An effort has been made to ing a shaft to find a still lower bed, but as yet without success. So far the bed now being worked is the only one discovered upon the Missouri Slope, and geologically lies higher in the coal series than the beds worked along the Des Moines River.

Good stone, suitable for building purposes, is obtained at several places in the county, but the best quarries are found along the East Nodaway, especially in the southwest part of the county. One of the best is that belonging to the "Icarian Community," southwest of Queen City. But little of it has been quarried, except for their own purposes. It works easily, and makes a good and substantial wall, as may be seen where they have used it at their village on the Nodaway. Good lime is manufactured at various places. Brick of a good quality have also been manufactured in a number of places.

The general surface of the county is rolling or undulating, and in some places, particularly in the northwest, is somewhat broken or hilly. The deepest and most characteristic valleys are those of the two Nodaways, that possess interesting scenery which is frequently quite picturesque and beautiful. If the county were divided directly through the middle from north to south, it will be found that the eastern half is almost wholly prairie, belts of woodland being found only along the banks of the East Nodaway, with a few clumps of trees upon the borders of the other small streams, while the surface is nearly undulating, with scarcely an acre of waste land. The west half is not so favorable for agricultural purposes, but contains a very small proportion of absolutely untillable on account of its greater unevenness. This is however more than compensated for by the presence of stone and coal in its valleys, neither of which are found to any considerable extent in the eastern half.

EARLY HISTORY.

This county was separately organized in 1853, and the first county judge was Samuel Baker, who was elected in that year. The first settler in the county was Elijah Walters, who in 1849, settled at a place about two miles south of the former county seat. As deer, and other game disappeared from the country, he also moved westward. Among the early settlers were Samuel Baker, Samuel Hardesty, and Morgan Warren, prior to 1858 the county settled up rapidly, but after that time, and up to 1866, it remained in population nearly stationary, as many other counties did during this same period. Since the latter date there has been a steady increase of population, which has been greatly accelerated within the past few years.

The first deed which appears on record in the county, is one from Jacob M. B. Miller and wife to the County of Adams, conveying all the even numbered lots in the Town of Quincy, and also the public square, to the county. This conveyance is dated August 24, 1853, and was filed for record September 21st, of the same year. John H. Colvin was the recorder. The town was laid out by Jacob M. B. Miller, and embraces the northwest quarter of section 17, township 72 north, range 34 west. W. Trippet had been appointed to the office of county surveyor by the county judge, and was employed by Mr. Miller to survey the town. The first order of Judge Baker that appears on record, was one allowing to William Davis $26 for thirteen days' services as one of the commissioners to locate the county seat. Mr. Miller entered the land on which the county seat was located, and built the second house on the town site in October, 1853. The first store was kept by J. R. Holbrook, and was opened in September of the same year. The next Spring he sold the establishment to R. B. Lockwood. Mr. Holbrook built the first house in August 1853, and in September he opened in it the first store. The first child born in Quincy was Ellen Miller, daughter of J. M. B. Miller, February, 1854. Mr. Miller himself was the first who died in the town, his death taking place in November, 1854.

The Congregational Church was organized in Quincy, October 21st, 1865, with a membership of eight. Rev. A. V. House was the first pastor, since which Rev. J. M. Sabin and Rev. S. Burrows have succeeded to the charge. A Sabbath school was organized in connection with the church, December 31, 1865, with 35 pupils. The Methodist Episcopal Church was first organized in Quincy in 1856, by Rev. John W. Anderson, who was the first pastor.

ICARIAN COMMUNITY.

This county is the home of what is known as the "Icarian Community," who commenced their settlement as a colony on East Nodaway in 1853. Their organization upon the basis of a community of interest was the result of a social movement promulgated in France by Mons. Cabet and others, about forty years ago. In 1842, E. Cabet, one of the leaders of the proposed social revolution, published in Paris a book, the title of which may be translated as the "Voyage and Adventures of Lord Carisdal in Icaria." It was a fiction illustrating the organization of a great nation upon the principle of a community of interest. From "Icaria," Mons. Cabet's ideal Utopia, comes the name of the community he subsequently founded in America. In February, 1848, his colony sailed from Havre for Texas, where he had secured a large tract of land on the banks of Red River. Cabet himself followed in 1849, but found his colony broken up by sickness and other causes, and most of its members had returned to New Orleans. He collected as many as he could, and embarked for Nauvoo, the scene of the then recent Mormon disaster. The colony, consisting of 280 persons, settled at Nauvoo, and in 1851, Cabet returned to France, when for some political offence he was arrested and thrown into prison, but was subsequently sent to England, and again returned to America in 1853. The community wishing to secure more land than they had at Nauvoo, sent out agents who entered 3,000 acres in Adams County, and commenced the new settlement. They have since prospered, though in 1856, owing to some difficulty in the election of their officers, Cabet and a party of his adherents withdrew to form a separate community at St. Louis, where he died the same year. Cabet, the founder of Icaria, was twice exiled and once imprisoned for propagating his plan of socialism which he declared to be equally adapted to the formation of a city, state or nation.

The business of the community is transacted by the General Assembly, composed of all the male members over 20 years of age. The women attend the meetings of the General Assembly, and give their views of the various matters under consideration, and especially upon all matters relating to themselves. Five directors are annually elected, one of whom is chosen president. New members are received by a three-fourths vote of all the male members over 20 years of age, and the applicant is required to remain on probation six months. He gives to the community all money, or other property, that he may have suitable for public use, but in case of his withdrawal, all such amounts or articles are to be returned. He is required to give his time and labor to the community, in accordance with its regulations and the directions of its officers, receiving equally with all the members the benefits of the community therefor, but no money or other consideration.

Fraternity is declared to be the fundamental principle which has given birth to the Icarian Community, and the natives of all countries can become members, provided they fully adopt the Icarian doctrine, and comply with the conditions necessary for admission. They have no forms of public worship, or meetings therefor. Music and dancing are favorite amusements, especially with the young. Sunday is regarded as other days of the week, except, perhaps, that it is more devoted to recreation than any of the other six.

RAILROADS, SCHOOLS, ETC.

The railroad advantages of Adams County, though not equal to some of the more favored portions of Iowa, are certainly good, as the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, now operated by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Company, one of the four great lines crossing the state, connecting the undeveloped resources of the West with the civilization of the East, in short, one of the main connecting links between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, passes east and west through this county. There are four stations at convenient distances, affording all portions of the county ready access for shipment or receipt of freight to or from the great markets of the country.

For a newly settled and but partially developed county, the educational advantages of Adams County are excellent. Being settled quite largely by people from the Eastern states, who have enjoyed and fully appreciate the value of education, this important auxiliary of a free government, the common school, has not been neglected, and neat commodious school houses every where dot the prairies, and nestle among the beautiful groves and valleys of the county. Teachers of ability and experience are employed who are emulous of attaining the high standard for which the State of Iowa has become justly renowned. By the report of 1873 there were in the county sixty-one ungraded and two graded schools, employing forty male and sixty female teachers, with an enrollment of seventeen hundred and eighty-seven pupils. The value of school property is about $40,000; the annual expenditure upwards of $17,000, while $31,577.89 is the amount of the permanent school fund.

The war record of this county during the recent rebellion, is creditable to the patriotism and bravery of its soldiers. Out of less than 400 voters, the county furnished over 150 troops for the Union service. Among its commissioned officers who distinguished themselves more or less, may be mentioned the following: Capts. E. Y. Morgan, M. Davis, and Lieuts. James Munns, Jr., Thomas Alexander and Lyman Patcher. During the struggle the county lost about 40 men.

THE PRESS.

Being unable to secure the data for a history of the press of Adams County, the historian can only present some meager facts in regard to the newspapers that are now published in the county. The Adams County Union, a neat eight column paper, printed entirely at home and Republican in politics, was first established by Ed. C. Russell, as the True Union, at Creston, in 1872. It was then a six column sheet and Democratic in politics, but passing into the hands of O. E. Paul in March, 1876, it became Republican. It is now owned and edited by G. E. King and E. S. Cook, two young, practical and enterprising newspaper men.

The Corning Gazette, is a neat, well printed and ably conducted newspaper, under the editorial management of W. H. Hoxie, who is making it popular and receiving a large and paying local support.

CORNING.

Among the enterprising, wide awake railroad towns of Iowa which are now attracting attention, few are more worthy of a passing notice than Corning, the present county seat of Adams County. The town was surveyed and laid out about 1855 or 6, by D. N. Smith, and was named in honor of Erastus Corning, of Albany, New York. The enthusiast, with an eye for the picturesque and the beautiful, could hardly ask a more charming landscape than that presented from the slopes and elevations in and around this embryo city. The greater portion of the town rises with a gradual ascent from the banks of the East Nodaway river toward the north, thus presenting a fine dry southern slope, overlooking one of the grandest little valleys in Iowa. The river winds through the south part of the town, fringed on either side with timber, adjoining which there is a plateau of high bottom land on which the railroad depot grounds are located. The railroad, owing to a southern bend in the river here, crosses the Nodaway twice within, or very near the limits of the town, and two fine railroad bridges, as seen from the higher portions of the town, add variety to the scene; while Nature has embellished this part of her domain with many of the graces of her handiwork. Belts, or groves of timber, with fertile intervening prairie lands, clothed in her native verdure, or transformed to harvest fields, form a part of the enchanting picture. On the north and west, adjoining and within the town, are beautiful groves of oak, elm, walnut, hickory, and other kinds of trees. Here are many pleasant sites for residences, and a number of neat cottages are already embowered amid these sylvan retreats. A block of ground nearly three hundred feet square, called by the appropriate name of Grove Park, is set apart for public use in the northwest part of the town, is studded with a fine thrifty growth of young trees of various kinds, and enclosed and otherwise improved. This forms a delightful resort for pleasure parties and meetings of various kinds during the summer season. Central Park is located between the two principal business avenues, and is one hundred feet wide by nearly three hundred feet long.

At the time of its location, it was expected that the B. & M. R. R. would be speedily built across the state, and Corning was then confidently believed to be upon the line of that road. Its enterprising founder, D. N. Smith, at that time gave evidence of his faith in the new town by his works, for he then erected, or caused to be erected, a number of good buildings, including the commodious hotel known as the "Corning House," and the two story building then occupied in part as a printing office. The two story brick building owned and occupied by D. Ritchey, was also built at the same time. A good school house was erected and a number of dwellings. A newspaper was started in the Winter of 1858-9, and for some time the Corning Sentinel, as it was called, continued to proclaim to the world the advantages and future prospects of the coming city. Of this pioneer newspaper of Corning, D. N. Smith was proprietor, and L. Raguet, editor. But the war came on, and owing to this and other causes, the construction of railroads in Iowa was suspended. The terminus of the B. & M. R. R. was then at Ottumwa, 135 miles eastward. In the general uncertainty of things during those dark years, it is not strange that the Corning Sentinel ceased to be issued, and that the town for a time, not only ceased to improve, but was even abandoned by some of its first settlers. A few however, patiently awaited the march of events, and such are now realizing the fact that their faith was not misplaced. The town is handsomely laid off in uniform blocks of eight lots each, with streets and alleys crossing each other at right angles, running east and west and north and south. The streets are each 66 feet wide, except three of them, running north and south, which are called Avenues, and are each 100 feet wide. The alleys are 16½ feet wide. Some of the business lots are 30×100 feet, and others 44 x132 feet. The lots designed for residences are 66×132 feet, two of them forming a quarter block eight rods square, with streets and alleys on all sides. The streets running east and west are numbered, progressively, from First to Eleventh, and the others have appropriate names.

The character of the business houses, residences, and public buildings is much above the general average of new western towns, showing that enterprising far-seeing capitalists have liberally invested their money here, having implicit confidence in the future development and growth of the places. A large and costly public school building and several handsome churches adorn the town, and show that the intellectual and moral wants of the community have not been neglected. Lodges of Masons, Odd Fellows, and Knights of Pythias, have been established; have pleasant halls, and are in a flourishing condition. Surrounded by a rich and rapidly improving farming country, with water, wood, stone, and coal convenient, possessing a healthy and salubrious climate, good society and fine natural scenery, the future of Corning is an assured success, and the time is not far distant when it will become one of the most important inland cities on the Missouri Slope in Iowa.

QUINCY, the former county seat is located about five miles west, and a little north of the center of the county on elevated land, with fine bodies of timber coavenient, and commands a fine view of the surrounding country. When originally laid out, a great portion of the town plat was covered with timber and brush. It was then on the line of a principal stage route running across the state. It contains a number of business houses, churches, etc., etc.

BROOKS is about six miles south of Quincy, on the north side of East Nodaway. Among its first settlers were William Young, Perry Mack, John Hixler, James Walker, and David Burton.

QUEEN CITY is a little over a mile south of the center of the county, with the East Nodaway passing through a portion of the town plat. It has timber and good building stone convenient, and is surrounded by an excellent farming country. There is a good bridge over East Nodaway at this place. Samuel Larimer was the original proprietor of the land on which the town is located. A. Smas was among the early settlers.

NEVINSVILLE is in the northeast corner township, twenty miles from Quincy, and ten miles from Fontanelle, the former county seat of Adair County. It is laid out in lots containing two and a half, five and ten acres, and was settled mostly by families from New England.

MT. ETNA is a village in the northwest part of the county. There is in the vicinity a settlement of Dunkards, who have a church in which they hold monthly meetings.

The remaining villages and post offices are Nodaway, Icaria, Prescot, Cave, Carbon.

DECATUR COUNTY.

Decatur is one of the southern tier of counties, and contains an area of about 540 square miles.

TIMBER.

This is one of the best timbered counties in the state, there being a good supply in nearly every township. The prevailing varieties are white, red, black, and burr oak, hickory, black walnut, hard maple or sugar, soft maple, cottonwood, linn, white and red elm, ash, sycamore, hackberry, birch, box elder, quaking asp, and buckeye. Considerable quantities of maple sugar are made in the groves of stately hard maple found in places along Grand River.

The wild fruits which grow abundantly are plums, grapes, crab apples, blackberries, raspberries, and strawberries. The wild cherry, mulberry, and red and black haw are also found. Among shrubs are the sumach, black elder, and hazel in great profusion, and all indicative of a rich, deep soil. The prickly ash and swamp dogwood are also found in places.

STREAMS.

Like all the other counties in Southern Iowa, Decatur is favored with numerous water courses, passing through it at regular and convenient distances, to afford good mill sites and a supply of living water at all seasons. Grand River enters near the northwest corner and bearing in a southeast direction, passes out near the middle of the south line, affording many good mill-sites, some of which have been improved. Elk creek is one of its main tributaries coming in from the northwest, and affords water enough for mills a greater portion of the year. Long Creek, rising in Clarke County, flows from the north, and empties into Grand River on the east side in Decatur Township, and is also a good mill stream the greater portion of the year. Little Grand River is the next principal stream to the east, and also flows entirely across the county, nearly from North to South, passing into the State of Missouri six miles west of the southeast corner of the county. It has several tributaries affording constant stock water, and all skirted with fine bodies of timber. Weldon Fork of Grand River is second in size of the streams of the county. It rises in Clarke County, and enters Decatur about eight miles west of the northwest corner, and crossing the northeast corner of Franklin Township, flows down through the townships of Garden Grove, High Point, Woodland, and Morgan, entering the State of Missouri two miles west of the southeast corner of Decatur County. This is a good mill stream and several sites have been improved. Its principal tributary is Steel's Creek rising in Wayne County, and flowing into Weldon Fork on the east side in Morgan Township. All the above named streams, with numerous tributaries not mentioned, are abundantly supplied with timber, and should coal never be found in the county, there will never be a scarcity of fuel. Along most of the streams fine springs flow out from the banks and along the ravines. Wells are usually from fifteen to thirty-five feet deep, and in most localities good well water is easily obtained.

STONE AND COAL.

On the west and south sides of the county good building stone is abundant. A little coal has been found in several localities, but no banks have as yet been opened. If workable veins exist, they are at considerable depth below the surface, and were it not for the abundant supply of wood for fuel, and the consequent ease of dispensing with coal, there would doubtless be more effort made to test the matter. The limestone, which is used for building purposes, and which is found in great abundance along Grand River and its tributaries, belongs to the upper coal measures, which are not productive in coal. Where exposed, these strata lie at least on a level with Grand River. So that if coal is found, the most ready way to reach it is by sinking shafts in the deeper valleys, and thus avoid the expense of penetrating the upper strata.

PRODUCTIONS.

This is one of the fine grain producing counties, and is especially adapted to winter wheat. Its success has been such as to induce farmers to raise it more extensively than they formerly did. The well timbered counties are best adapted to winter wheat, it being less exposed in winter. All other crops, such as spring wheat, oats, rye, corn, potatoes, and vegetables generally, do well. No county in the state has produced better crops of grass, and the farmers have engaged largely in its production. There are many fine meadows in the timbered portions, while in the prairie townships the people depend much more upon the wild grass. In 1866 the tame grass harvested was 5,647 tons, and of wild grass 6,558 tons, but at present hay from tame grasses greatly predominates.

Decatur County is well adapted for raising fruits, and there are many bearing orchards. Apples produced here are sold in this and adjoining counties. Grapes, cherries, and all the small fruits do well. Some peaches have been raised, but they can not be considered a success, as they are liable to the same causes of failure as in other portions of the state. In 1866 there were 7,972 fruit trees in bearing, and 35,319 not in bearing. During the last few years the interest in fruit-raising has greatly increased, and in a few years the county will produce fruits in ample abundance to supply the wants of her people, and to spare.

In this county the streams are larger and the valleys deeper than in either of the counties adjoining. The timber also extends more on the slopes and higher lands than in other counties in this part of the state, while the soil is generally deep and fertile, both in the timber and on the prairie. In the southern part of the county, and along Grand River, many large farms have been made in the timber—the logs being rolled together and burned, as in the early days of Ohio and Indiana. While many fine groves have been thus destroyed, thousands of acres of the richest prairie have remained uncultivated. A tree in Iowa should never be destroyed, only when it is needed for use, or when there is an imperative necessity to use for some other purpose the ground which it occupies.

BEAUTY OF SCENERY.

In variety and beauty of natural scenery this county is unsurpassed. Many of the views along Grand River are indeed grand, as the name suggests. From the prairie highlands the wooded slopes and valleys, present to the eye the loveliest landscapes. Amid these scenes many happy homes are appearing, and around them will cluster the fondest affections of the future.

EARLY HISTORY.

There were several settlers in the south part of Decatur County as early as 1840. Among them were William Hamilton, Reuben Hatfield, James Hatfield, Alfred Stanley, John McDaniel, John E. Logan and Allen Scott. Some of the above came even as early as 1838, and then supposed they had settled in Missouri. Before the settlement of the boundary question, several slaves were held in the south part of the county. I find the following among the early records:

"I, John McDaniel, of the county of Decatur, and state of Iowa, do hereby release give up, and set at liberty as a free man, George, a black, a colored man, who has resided in my family from boyhood. Said man is about 45 years old at this time, about 5 feet 11 inches high. Witness my hand and seal this 25th day of February, A. D. 1852.

JOHN MCDANIEL." [L. S.]

George is still living in the south part of the county, or in the edge of Missouri, and McDaniel removed years ago to Oregon.

ORGANIZATION.

The county was organized April 1, 1850. The first meeting of the board of county commissioners was held May 6, 1850. The commissioners were Josiah Morgan, William Hamilton, and Asa Burrel. Henry B. Noston was the first clerk of the board. Their first order was one allowing Andrew Still $30 for services as organizing sheriff. They also at this meeting made an order that the district court, probate court, and commissioner's court be held at the house of Daniel Moad until "such time as the county seat shall be located."

At a meeting of the commissioners in July of the same year, they divided the county into four civil townships, to wit: Garden Grove, Morgan, Burrel, and Hamilton—the last three names being their own. Who will say they were unwise in thus providing for the perpetuation of their own names, fame and memory? In the several townships thus organized, they appointed the following judges and clerks of elections:

GARDEN GROVE.—Judges, William Davis, Victor Doze, and Hiram Chase; Clerks, Joshua R. Monroe, and Enos Davis.

MORGAN.—Judges, Reuben Hatfield, William Oney, and Christopher Walnscott; Clerks, Thomas Kilgore and Samuel McDowell.

BURREL.—Judges, Asa Howard, John McDaniel, and John Still; Clerks, James Woodmansee, and Andrew Still.

HAMILTON.—Judges, William Eaton, Jefferson Dimick, and William Hamilton; Clerks, Wyllis Dickinson, and Gideon J. Walker.

FIRST COURTS.

The first district court convened at the house of Daniel Moad, May 19, 1851. This was about six miles southeast of the place where Leon is now located. Hon. William McKay presided as judge, and Daniel Moad served as clerk. John J. Stanley was the Sheriff. The following were the grand jurors:

Mordical Smith, Anthony Vandurpool, Elijah B. Hole, Oliver Hoskins, Alfred Stanley, Hiram J. Stanley, John Price, William Oney, John Jordan, Charles Jordan, Simon H. Harmon, John Vanderpool, Stanley Hatfield, Isaac Craig, Andrew Hatfield, Andrew J. Randolph. Mordical Smith was appointed foreman, and Thomas Kilgore, bailiff. William H. Bramfield was appointed prosecuting attorney for the term.

The first case was a suit for divorce, John Blades vs. Maria Blades. The case was continued until the next term, and the plaintiff finally succeeded. About the next case was also an application for divorce—one Ann Knapp vs. Zelatus W. Knapp. The prayer of Ann's petition was granted.

The first marriage license was issued May 18, 1850, to Henry Hall and Eliza Ann Ewing. On the same day a license was also issued to Thomas Ewing and Mary Ann Carson. No return of marriage certificate seems to have been made in either case. The first marriage certificate on record is that of John Zimmerman and Harriet L. Lamb, married by William Cutchlow, a justice of the peace, September 22, 1850.

COUNTY SEAT.

On the 18th day of January, 1851, an act of the Legislature was approved appointing commissioners and providing for the location of the county seat. The commissioners who officiated were Henry Allen and F. N. Sales. On the 21st day of July, 1851, they reported to the Board of County Commissioners that they had selected the east half of the southeast quarter, and the west half of the southeast quarter of section 27, township 69, range 28, "being high, gently rolling prairie, through which runs the main road from Fort Des Moines to Independence, Mo., and in the immediate vicinity of good timber and stone, with good mill privileges." They also reported that they had named the town "Decatur." N. Westcoat was employed to survey the new town. A sale of lots was ordered to take place in Decatur, August 25, 1851, notice being given in the Des Moines Republic at Ottumwa, and Sentinel at Fairfield.

COURT HOUSE.

At a meeting on the 27th of October of the same year, the Board of Commissioners determined upon the erection of a new court house, to be 20x22 feet, and fourteen feet high, and to be built of hewed logs. This first "temple of justice" still stands in Decatur, and although it did not long serve the purpose for which it was erected, yet it has kindly sheltered many a weary traveler since "Uncle James Ownby" first catered to the public beneath its roof. The lot on which it stands is No. 5, in block 18, and belonged to Allen Scott, who conveyed it to the county. The house was built by John J. Stanley, on contract, for the sum of $375.

At the August election of 1852, the following county officers were elected, viz: Samuel C. Thompson, County Judge; Wilson L. Warford, Clerk; Andrew J. Evans, Prosecuting Attorney, and Thomas Miller, Supervisor of Roads. Among the early orders of Judge Thompson, was one providing for a vote to be taken at the Presidential election of that year on the question of the removal of the county seat. The project of course met with earnest opposition from the citizens of Decatur and the west side of the county. It was urged that the point to which it was proposed to change the county seat was but little, if any, more central than Decatur, and that the county had incurred expense in building a court house. To the people of Decatur county this proposition elicited more interest than the pending Presidential contest of that day. The vote, however, was taken, and resulted in favor of removal to "Independence," subsequently called "South Independence," situated on the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 28, and northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 33, township 69, range 25. The county surveyor was employed to survey the new town. At the next April term of the County Court a sale of lots was directed to take place on the second Tuesday of May, 1853, notice to be given by publication in the "Des Moines Valley Whig, Fairfield Sentinel, Iowa City Reporter, and 'The Pioneer' at Trenton, Missouri.

Forty acres of the land on which the town was located had been donated to the county as an inducement for the removal of the county seat, and the survey of the town was made in May, 1853. On the 12th of the same month a court house was ordered to be built, and Peter C. Stewart became the contractor, the price being $1,650. For some reason he failed to discharge the contract, and at the June term of 1854, another order was made for a court house to be built of brick, 24x40 feet, and two stories high, with three rooms below for offices, and one above for a court room. A contract for the brick work and plastering was let to Arnold Childers for the sum of $600, and for the wood work to F. Parsons for the sum of $800. This is the building now occupied in the discharge of the public business of the county.

The Legislature in the Winter of 1854-5, changed the name of the county seat to Leon, in compliance with a petition of the citizens. The petition to the Legislature was drawn up by a committee of the citizens of South Independence, consisting of S. C. Thompson, J. P. Findley and G. L. Moore. Different names were suggested, and among others that of Leon was proposed by Mr. Moore, who had been to California and became familiar with it there. The committee manifested good taste, as well as sense, in adopting a name both short and musical, if not original.

REPRESENTATION.

Since its organization the following persons have represented Decatur County in the State Senate:

Amos Harris, in the 4th General Assembly, elected at the general election of 1852, for four years.

Nathan Udell, in the 5th General Assembly, elected at the general election of 1854, to fill vacancy.

John W. Warner, in the 6th General Assembly, elected at the general election of 1856, for four years. Also served in the 7th General Assembly.

William E. Taylor, in the 8th General Assembly, elected for four years.

E. F. Esteb, in the 9th General Assembly, elected to fill vacancy.

C. G. Bridges in the 10th General Assembly, elected in 1863, for four years. Served in the 11th General Assembly.

Isaac W. Keller, in the 12th General Assembly, elected at the general election of 1867, for four years.

In the House of Representatives, Decatur County has been represented by the following persons:

Abraham Putman, S. P. Yeomans, Thomas N. Bowen, W. J. Laney, Racine D. Kellogg, John R. Andrews, Thomas H. Brown, H. W. Peck, Henry W. Peck, Fred Teal and Stanfield P. McNeill. Mr. Kellogg was twice elected and served two terms.

Amos Harris was the member of the Third Constitutional Convention in 1857, from the district embracing Decatur County.

CHURCHES, ETC.

Nearly all the evangelical religious denominations are represented in the county. The religious organizations of Leon are Methodist Episcopal, Christian, Baptist and Presbyterian. The Methodists have a neat, new and commodious frame church, with bell and well finished. They have a good membership, and a large attending congregation.

The Christian denomination have a brick church, 40x60 feet in size, also provided with a good bell. Flourishing Sabbath schools are connected with the above churches.

In Decatur City, the M. E. Church have an organization with about forty members. The town is embraced in what is known as Decatur City Circuit. The circuit has ten preaching places and embraces about 250 members. The largest society on the circuit is at Prairieville, eleven miles north of Decatur City. At this point there is a good frame church. There is also a good frame church at Decatur City. On this circuit and connected with the church, are seven Sabbath schools, that at Decatur City having an attendance of about eighty pupils. The Union Sabbath school in Decatur City has about the same number.

The Methodist Church—formerly known as the Protestant Methodists—have two organizations, one at Decatur City and the other at Funk's Mills on Grand River, northwest of Decatur City. These societies were organized by Rev. F. A. Kirkpatrick in 1867. Mr. Kirkpatrick has been very active in promoting the organization and prosperity of Union Sabbath schools.

The Decatur County Bible Society was organized in 1855. The society has generally flourished and accomplished a good work.

LEON.

This is the present county seat, and is situated about two miles northeast of the geographical center of the county. Something of the early history of the place has already been given. Thomas H. East had built a house on the town site before the town was laid out. Judge S. C. Thompson built the first after the location of the town. Clark, Winn & Co. built the first business house, and I. N. Clark sold the first goods in September, 1853.

A writer of the history of the place in 1868, thus sums up the business houses: Five general stores, five family groceries, two drug stores, two stove and tin ware stores, one boot and shoe store, two printing offices, two harness shops, one jeweler, two millinners, three hotels, one livery stable, two blacksmith shops, one wagon shop two cabinetmakers two land agencies, six law firms, five physicians, two churches, one school house, one flouring mill and one woolen factory, with the usual proportion of mechanics of different kinds.

Among the substantial business men are Richards & Close, N. Perdew, and A. Miles & Son, general dealers; J. D. Baldwin, dealer in family groceries; Hildreth & Sales, and T. W. Hammer, druggists; S. Farquhar, in stoves and tin ware; M. H. Wood, in boots and shoes; A. S. Updegraff, harness dealer; J. R. Basnaw, jeweler; Mills & Cross, blacksmiths, and John Kinnear, wagon maker. Judge L. H. Sales is the proprietor of the Sales House, and also of the only livery stand in the place, as well as one of the firm of Hildreth & Sales.

Among the prominent and well-known attorneys of Southern Iowa, are Warner & Davis, A. J. Evans, and Young & Harvey. Mr. Harvey is a promising young lawyer, who recently graduated and associated himself in the practice with Mr. Young. Mr. Evans is a lawyer of long standing, as well as one of the pioneers of the county.

Among the leading physicians may be mentioned Drs. H. Clay Sanford, B. F. Ralff and J. R. McClelland. Dr. Sanford is engaged in the manufacture of several patent medicines which are coming into notice.

The newspapers of Leon are the Decatur County Journal, published and edited by P. O. James; and the Leon Pioneer, by G. N. Udell. The former is Republican, and the latter Democratic. The Pioneer has been published several years, and the Journal only a few months. Our friend James is printing a paper worthy of the liberal support of the people of Decatur County.

A Masonic Lodge, known as Grand River Lodge, No. 78, and Leon Chapter, No. 33, are located at Leon, and both said to be in a flourishing condition. Leon Lodge, I. O. O. F., has also just been reorganized.

Some attention has been given by the citizens to the planting of shade and ornamental trees and shrubbery. The public square, a block of ground 216 feet square, has been enclosed and planted in forest trees, mostly maple.

Such was the status in 1868. Since then considerable changes have been made. Leon is now a railroad terminus, that of the Leon branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, bringing into the place the business, shipping and trade of quite a large area of the surrounding country. Since the completion of this road, a new impulse has been given to the various branches of business, and the town has become one of the lively inland centers of a healthy and prosperous trade. (See birds-eye view of the town in this work.)

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The independent district of Leon has a commodious and showy school edifice, built of brick several years ago. It is 45 by 64 feet, and two stories high, with two rooms below and two above. The building is well finished, and surmounted by a cupola, with a good bell. It occupies a fine, dry, rolling block of 288 feet square, and neatly fenced.

In this building is conducted a very excellent graded school. The number of pupils enrolled is between three and four hundred. One male and three female teachers are employed, the former at a salary of $40, and the latter at a salary of $30 per month. Aaron Frazier, Principal.

CHURCHES AND LODGES.

M. E. CHURCH—Rev. A. Wilson, Pastor. Preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M. Sunday school at 9 o'clock A. M. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening at 8 o'clock.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH—Rev. C. M. DesIslets, Pastor. Preaching two Sundays out of three at 10½ A. M. and 7½ P. M. Sunday school at 3 o'clock P. M. Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH—No regular preaching. Prayer meeting every Sunday at 11 A. M. and Wednesday evening at 7½ P. M. Sunday school every Sunday at 3 P. M.

R. A. M.—Leon Chapter, No. 33, R. A. M., meets at their hall every Wednesday evening after the full of the Moon. All transient company invited to attend.

A. S. UPDEGRAFF, H. P. I. N. JONES, Secretary.

A. F. & A. M.—Grand River Lodge, No. 78, A. F. & A. M. meets at their hall every Tuesday evening on or before the full of the Moon. Transient brethren invited to attend.

J. S. WARNER, W. M. ED. K. PITMAN, Secretary.

I. O. O. F.—Leon Lodge, No. 84, I. O. O. F., meet at their hall—north upstairs room in Castor Block—every Saturday night. Visiting brothers are cordially invited to attend.

A. FRAZIER, N. G. W. H. ROBB, Secretary.

Decatur Encampment, No. 38, I. O. O. F, meets in the Odd Fellows Hall in Leon, Iowa, on the first and third Monday evenings of each month. Transient Patriarchs are invited to meet with them.

C. B. JORDAN, Scribe. W. H. FORTUNE, C. P.

The daughters of Rebekah meet in their hall in Leon every second and fourth Tuesday evening in each month. Transient members are invited to attend.

MRS. M. E. JAMES, V. G. MRS. J. P. FINLEY, JR., Sec.

NEWSPAPERS.

The papers now published at Leon are the Decatur County Journal, edited and published by Mrs. M. E. James, and the Decatur County Advocate, edited and published by B. F. Knapp. The former is Republican, the latter Independent in politics. Both papers are well patronized.

DECATUR CITY.

Decatur City is situated in the midst of a splendid farming country, nearly in the center of the county. As a trading point it is an important one, and will always command a good trade. It has a large territory tributary to it, in which are wealthy, intelligent, progressive farmers, and will grow up to a good, substantial town. The business men are active, enterprising, and intelligent, appreciating the importance of having good stocks at fair prices for their customers to select from. In the center of the square is a large school house. The square is naturally a fine one, and by putting up a neat fence, and planting shade trees, ere many years can be made the best in the state. These improvements our Decatur City friends will doubtless make ere many years roll around. We clip the following from the Decatur County Journal:

There are evidences of improvement and progress in the town. We noticed several new buildings erected and in course of erection. Among others a fine two-story building at northeast corner of the square. The upper story is completed for an Odd Fellows and Masonic Hall, and has been occupied for several weeks—both orders being in a flourishing condition. The first story is being completed for a store-room, and will be occupied by Mr. W. D. Moore, whose store is now at the northwest corner of the square. Mr. Moore has quite an extensive stock of general merchandise, and does a large business. We are indebted to Mr. Moore for courtesies, and found him a very pleasant gentleman.

We called on that genial, sociable gentleman, Mr. C. Rogers, and had a pleasant chat. He keeps a large stock of hardware, tinware, etc., and does general repairing. He is doing a good business, and intends soon to stock up for the fall trade.

Mr. John Lake is one of the substantial business men of Decatur. He has a fine stock of groceries and a good trade.

Mr. Chauncey Stanley is the druggist and medicine man of Decatur City. He has a large stock of goods in his line, and we should judge is selling lots of them.

The dry goods firm of Gill & Tulis occupy a good building on the northeast corner of the square. They have quite a large stock of general merchandise.

Mr. D. W. Robinson is the popular post master at Decatur City. In connection with the office he runs a harness and saddle shop, and has a large assortment of articles of his manufacture on hand.

There are many other business establishments in Decatur City, which our short stay prevented our visiting.

The following are prominent and leading citizens and business men of the place: Dicken & Mechem, A. Johns & Bros., and P. S. Dicken, general merchants; A. Gill, dealer in drugs and groceries, and also proprietor of the "Decatur House;" Joseph Pucket, dealer in family groceries; Hogue & Caldwell, dealers in stoves and tin-ware; J. H. Ownby, proprietor of the "Ownby House;" Samuel Schenck, wagon maker; Charles Kohlman and A. Brockway, cabinet makers and dealers in furniture; J. H. Horner, harness maker; Thomas Waller, military and general claim agent; and C. Schenck, physician.

Decatur City, being on the main road east and west, enjoys the advantages of a daily mail, with a semi-weekly mail south via Eagleville, Bethany, and Gallatin, to Cameron on the Hannibal and St. Joe R. R.

There are flourishing Lodges of Masons and Odd Fellows.

EDUCATIONAL.

The Independent District of Decatur, erected on the public square a good two-story frame school house—cost $3,000. A good school is kept most of the year, the number of pupils in the district being about 200. The Principal is paid $90 per month, out of which he pays the expense of an assistant.

GARDEN GROVE—This is a handsome village, located in the township of the same name, in the northeast part of the county, and on the branch road of the C. B. & Q. R. R. from Chariton to Leon. It is on a fine, rolling prairie, adjacent to a splendid grove of timber, on the Weldon Fork of Grand River. It was first settled by the Mormons in the spring of 1848, but the town plat was not recorded until 1867. The land was sold off in parcels by metes and bounds. Many of the early Mormon settlers remained until 1851. The place is a considerable village, with stores, hotels, shops, and the various industries, which make up a busy and thriving inland town.

GRADED SCHOOL.

The Independent District of Garden Grove has a fine brick school-house and a flourishing graded school in charge of Prof. R. A. Harkness, as principal, with competent assistants. The number of pupils reported last year was 111. The aggregate amount paid its teachers during last year was $1,385.

PLEASANT PLAIN.—This village is situated on the divide between Grand River and Little River, on the south line of the county, in Hamilton Township. An addition to the village is situated in Missouri. The surrounding country is a rolling prairie, fertile, and in a good state of cultivation, with timber about a mile distant, both east and west. Some years ago, a building was erected here for a college. An institution of learning was duly organized with flattering prospects, but in June, 1865, the building was blown down, and has not yet been rebuilt.

This town was laid out in the Spring of 1854, by Daniel Bartholow. Its population is about 250. There is a good brick school-house, a Masonic lodge, and a lodge of Odd Fellows, known as Emblems Lodge, No. 189. There is an organization of the M. E. Church, with a Sabbath School in connection. The place is twelve miles south of Leon, and twenty miles northwest of Princeton, the county seat of Mercer County, Mo. It has a daily mail north and south, and a semi-weekly east and west. The post office here is called "Nine Eagles," for the reason that mail matter directed to Pleasant Plain often miscarried, there being a place of the same name in Jefferson County.

NEW BUDA.—This place is located on the west side of Grand River, on a beautiful second bottom, about a half mile from the river. It was laid out in November, 1855, by Ernest Drahos. It was the center of a settlement made by a colony of Hungarian exiles, who landed in this country in the year 1852, under the leadership of Gen. Ujhazzy, one of the companions of Kossuth. Seeking a refuge and asylum in this new land of the West, they could not forget the associations of the land of the Magyar, and so called their adopted prairie home "New Buda," and gave to the public park in their village the name of "Kossuth Square," while one of the principal streets they christened "Magyar Street." The village contains sixteen blocks of eight lots each.

DAVIS CITY.—This is a small village on the west side of Grand River, in Burrel Township. It has a mill, carding factory, blacksmith shop, and school house.

TERRE HAUTE.—This is a primitive looking village, on the west bank of Grand River, some five miles southwest of Decatur City, and on the road leading to Eagleville and Bethany, Mo. It has two stores, one blacksmith shop, one hotel, one shoe shop, one cooper shop, school house and post office.

Post Offices.—The following is a list of the post-offices of the county: Westerville, Fipk's Mill, Decatur, Elk, Sedgwick, Terre Haute, New Buda, Nine Eagles, High Point, Garden Grove, Franklin, Leon.

UNION COUNTY.

This county is the eighth west of the Mississippi, the fourth east of the Missouri River, and is in the second tier north from the southern boundary line of the state. It embraces twelve congressional townships of thirty-six square miles each, being an aggregate area of 432 square miles, or 276,480 acres.

SURFACE CONFIGURATION AND RESOURCES.

The general surface of the county is high, gently rolling, and well-drained prairie, pleasantly varied by numerous groves of native timber, which render the landscape one of great natural beauty and attractiveness. The great watershed dividing the drainage between the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, passes across the extreme northeast corner of the county, although the most elevated point of land is, however, near the center on the divide between Grand and Platte Rivers, which according to the surveys of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad is 794 feet above low water in the Mississippi at Burlington, and 1,280 feet above the level of the sea, being the highest point on the line of that road between the two great rivers, while the lowest point within Union County on said road is the bed of Grand River, which is about 300 feet lower than the surface at Highland. The valley proper of the Grand River, however, is only from 100 to 150 feet below the general level of the uplands in their neighborhood, and the great height attained at Highland is by a gradual rise of the general surface from the vicinity of Grand River Valley. The county is, throughout, well watered and drained, the largest stream being the Grand River, which rises in Adair County, and enters Union east of the middle of the north line, running in a southeasterly course, and passing out of the county a few rods west of the southeast corner. The principal tributaries of Grand River in this county are, Four Mile and Seven Mile Creeks on the east, and Three Mile and Twelve Mile Creeks on the west side. These creeks were so named by the Mormons, the names designating their respective distances from the old Mormon settlement at Mount Pisgah. The last two named have their sources in Adair County, and run in a southeasterly course to their junction with Grand River, near the southeast corner of the county. The northeast half of the county is well watered by the streams mentioned. The south and southwest parts are watered by West Grand River, which rises near the center of the county, and by Middle and West Platte. These streams all have numerous smaller tributaries, affording water for stock at nearly all seasons of the year, but are not reliable for mill purposes, although several have been erected on Grand River, most of which have since been discontinued. Excellent well-water, pure and cold, is obtained all over Union County at convenient depths, say from fifteen to thirty feet. Highland, three miles west of Afton, is said to be the highest point between the Mississippi and Missouri, and here there is no difficulty in procuring good wells. Springs abound along the streams, and afford water at all seasons.

The principal bodies of timber are on Grand River, Twelve Mile, and Platte; but there are some fine groves on the other streams mentioned. The southeast portion of the county may be considered as well timbered, while the southwest corner township of Platte has also a fine body of good timber. The Congressional township in the northwest corner has no timber, and the one south of it but very little. These townships, however, embrace the finest lands in the county, and were the last to be settled, in consequence of their scarcity of timber. The timber of this county consists chiefly of burr and red oak, white oak, black walnut, hickory, linn, hackberry, red and white elm, soft maple, ash, cottonwood and buckeye. The larger bodies of timber are confined to the bottoms along the streams, the oak, only, extending out on the higher ridges. Within a few years, and since the annual prairie fires have been kept out of the timber, it is rapidly extending, and many fine, thrifty young oak and hickory groves have encroached upon, and now cover, what was formerly prairie. Within the last twelve years, hundreds of acres have attained sufficient growth to afford good firewood.

As to wild fruits, the plum, crab-apple, black haw and gooseberry are found in profusion along the skirts of the timber. Blackberries are also plenty in some localities. Hazel thickets prevail in many places, while an occasional mulberry is found along the streams, and also a few wild cherry trees. Among shrubs, the sumach is quite common in places.

Game of all kinds is becoming somewhat more rare than formerly, although prairie chickens are abundant, and wild turkeys and quails are also frequently found at certain seasons of the year. Nearly all the streams mentioned above abound in fish of a small size, and some of the citizens find it a pleasant as well as a profitable pastime to angle in the waters of Grand River, Platte, and the other streams that flow through the county.

Nearly all the county west of Twelve Mile, embracing about one half of it, is beautiful rolling prairie, capable of producing abundant crops, with scarcely an acre that might not be easily cultivated. The soil is a deep loam, formed by the decayed accumulations of grasses and other vegetation which have grown and returned to fertilize the soil, year after year, for ages. That portion of the county east of Twelve Mile is more inclined to be broken, and although in this respect there is none of it that would not be regarded as arable land in the Eastern States, yet some portions would be passed over by Iowa farmers as unfit for the plow. The soil is generally deep and rich, except on some points of the ridges, where it is inclined to be gravelly. The valleys along the water-courses are narrow, but extremely fertile. The eastern portion of the county, owing to its abundance of timber, was settled earlier than the west, although the soil is not so fertile.

Good building stone is found in sufficient abundance at from six to eight miles from Afton, on Grand River. There are quarries at various points along that stream, from directly east of Afton to where it crosses the south line of the county. A good quality of quicklime is also made from this rock. Thin beds of coal have been found at various places, but none of sufficient thickness to be worked profitably. Brick have been manufactured at several places around Afton and Creston, and several brick houses have been erected. The brick are of a rather inferior quality, but when well burned answer admirably for walling wells and cellars, but do not make smooth and handsome walls for buildings.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first white settlement in Union County was made by the Mormons in July, 1846. At that time the entire country was a vast wilderness of prairie, with the annual fires sweeping over it down the edge of the timber along the valleys. These adventurous wanderers had forsaken Nauvoo and were on their way to the "Promised Land," only stopping here for a temporary stay. Finding it too late in the season for venturing across the great plains that intervened between them and their destination, about two thousand of the "Saints" pitched their tents at a place which they called Mt. Pisgah, situated some five miles north of the present county seat. They were under the leadership of Bishop Huntington, who died, and was buried at Mt. Pisgah. He was the first white person who is known to have died in the county. Another prominent man among them was Elder Morley, formerly of Hancock County, Illinois. Being compelled during the Winter to live in tents and wagons, their records show one hundred and sixty deaths within the first six months. Their settlement, or improvement, embraced about 1,500 acres, which they broke up and cultivated in patches. Being unable to break up the prairie sod with their light teams, composed mostly of cows, they went into the timber on Grand River and girdled, or deadened, hundreds of acres of the best timber to be found there, and ploughed up the light bottom soil for their crops. In this way they raised a plentiful crop of corn during the season of 1847. They were obliged to remain until the Spring of 18 0, and some of them until the Spring of 1851, in order to raise cattle to enable them to resume their journey. They were very poor. Their prophet, Joe Smith, had once told them at Nauvoo that there were three kinds of poor—God's poor, the devil's poor, and poor devils, and that most of them surely belonged to the last named class. They are represented, however, as being industrious and frugal while they sojourned on Grand River. During their stay here, their only communication with the outside world was at Fort Des Moines. The Mormons built, in 1847, on Grand River, what was afterward known as Peters' Mill. It had one run of burrs, and for several years answered, during the supply of water, the convenience of the early settlers. It was the only mill in the county up to 1853, in which year Amos C. Cooper built another mill on Grand River, in Pleasant Township, near the southeast corner of the county. At the time the Mormons lived at Mt. Pisgah, many Indians of the Pottawattamie and Musquawka tribes occupied and had their hunting grounds along Grand River, and in the timber on the neighboring streams. They were under the leadership of the somewhat noted chief, John Green. Game at that time was abundant here. The relations of the Mormons and Indians were always amicable.

Aside from the Mormons, the first white settlement was made in the county in the Spring of 1850. Among those who came first were Norman Nun, Joseph Nun, James H. Starks, William M. Lock, Benjamin Lamb. The above named persons, with their families, settled at Mt. Pisgah, buying out the Mormons when they renewed their journey westward. Mr. Lock is the only one who remains a permanent settler in the county, but a portion of the family of Norman Nun remain here. Stark went with his family to California in 1858. Henry Peters settled at the old Mormon Mill on Grand River about the same time, or shortly after, and laid out a town which was called Petersville. At one time it contained a store and several small dwelling houses, and was really the business place of the county. Like Mt. Pisgah, but few traces of its ancient greatness are now visible. Except among the Mormons, Henry Peters was the first white person who died in the county, his death occurring in December, 1853. The first birth was a son to William M. Lock, August 6, 1850. A post office was established at Mt. Pisgah in the Winter of 1850, the mail being supplied from Chariton, contract one mile an hour, being transported on a cow.

The first election was held in the Fall of 1852, by an order of the county judge of of Clarke County, Union being attached to that county for election, revenue and judicial purposes. This election was held at Mt. Pisgah, and nine votes were cast. The voters were Norman Nun, Ambrose Nun, James H. Starke, Joseph Ray, Henry Peters, John Edgcombe, A. J. Starke, William M. Lock, and —— Canfield. At this election William M. Lock was elected justice of the peace, and Ambrose Nun, constable. The entire county was a township or election precinct, and was called Pisgah.

The first road laid out through the county was in 1848, Colonel Stratton being the commissioner to locate the same. Report says that the instrument used was constructed of a tin cup and a darning needle. All the roads were originally run following the divides, and were consequently very crooked. This first road passed across the county in a northwesterly direction. The next located was the one from Glenwood to Chariton.

In the Winter of 1852-3, the Legislature passed an act organizing the County of Union, with John Edgcomb as the organizing sheriff. He was an Englishman, and had not yet been naturalized. He officiated as sheriff, but was too conscientious to vote. At this election eleven votes were cast—five Whig and six Democratic. The Democrats elected Edgcomb sheriff. Of the six Democrats, but one could read and write—Henry Peters. They elected for county judge Norman Nun, who signed his name to his official records, as now to be seen, by making his "X."

The first official act of the sheriff was to take possession of a colt for debt. Owing to the belligerent character of the defendant, the sheriff deemed it prudent to call a posse to assist him in making the seizure. It consisted of all the men in the county. When the sheriff and his posse visited the premises they found the poor colt dead. Its owner (Samuel Storr), with something of the same spirit that caused the burning of Moscow, had let the dogs on the poor animal and killed it, rather than permit it to fall into the hands of the enemy.

The first hotel in the county was kept at Mt. Pisgah, by William M. Lock. Being something of a wag, when travelers called and desired to know if they could be accommodated, he would tell them, "O, yes, if you can put up with wolf meat and poor whisky," and such was the serious manner of Mr. Lock in making a statement of his bill of fare, that travelers were generally inclined to believe him really in earnest. They were compelled, however, to stop with him, making a virtue of necessity, from the fact that the first house east was at Glenn's post office, in Clarke County, forty-two miles distant; and the nearest northwest, at Thomas M. Johnson's, in Adair County, forty-five miles distant. When the real bill of fare was placed before them, his guests were generally very agreeably undeceived.

The first district court convened at Petersville, in the Fall of 1853—Judge Allen A. Bradford presiding, and Joseph M. Ray acting as clerk. So few were the voters, that it was necessary to call all the men in the county to serve as grand jurors. The next court also convened at Petersville, in the Spring of 1854—Judge E. H. Sears presiding, and J. F. Ickis acting as clerk. No cases of importance were tried.

The first move toward the location of a county seat for Union County, was made through Colonel Henry Allen, who was in the Legislature from Lucas County, in 1852-3. Commissioners were appointed, and the Legislature fixed upon the name of Douglas. The commissioners, however, failed to meet from some cause, and the matter went by default.

At the session of the Legislature of 1854-5, by an act approved January 20, 1855, George A. Hawley, Samuel S. Walker, and Adrian Miller were appointed to locate the county seat of Union County. They made selection of the present site February 16, 1855. The beautiful little stream, known by the unpoetical name of Twelve Mile, flows peacefully along on the west and south, within half a mile of the town, its placid waters embowered in picturesque groves as far as the eye can behold. Mrs. James Baker, of Chariton, the wife of one of the proprietors, being an enthusiastic admirer of the Scotch bard, suggested the classical name of Afton—that of the beautiful and romantic little river in Scotland, immortalized in the lines:

"Flow gently, sweet Afton, along the green braes; Flow gently, I'll sing the a song in thy praise."

There was, however, another aspirant for county seat honors. About three miles west of Afton, very near the geographical center of the county, Justus Clark, of Des Moines County, and his brother, Philo Clark, had in the Summer of 1854, located a town, calling it Highland. This point claimed the county seat, and upon a vote of the people of the county being taken, the result was a decision in favor of Afton.

The first sale of town lots in Afton was to take place on the 20th of March, 1855, but in consequence of a question being raised as to the regularity of the title to a portion of the land on which the town was located, the sale was postponed until Fall, when the question of title was settled. The original proprietors of Afton were Henn, Williams & Co. And so Union County finally succeeded in getting a permanent seat of justice. In the meantime considerable improvement had been made in the rival town of Highland. Most of the buildings were subsequently removed to Afton, or to other places, to be occupied as farm houses.

The first settlers in Pleasant Township, in the southeast part of the county, were Benjamin Lamb, Isaac P. Lamb and Amos C. Cooper. They settled there in 1851. I. P. Lamb was the first School-Fund Commissioner.

The first settlers in the northeast portion of the county were William Groesbeck, Lewis Bragg, and a numerous family named Comer. They settled there in 1852-3.

The first settlers in the northwest part of the county were Henry Rose, Richard Thompson and Joseph and William Peck, in about 1854.

The pioneer settlers in the southwest were Reuben Madden, Reuben Riggs, Frank Berning and Asa Lowe, in 1853.

The first application for marriage license was for Thomas Nun and Sarah Starr, August 13, 1853. The marriage was duly solemnized, but the records do not show a return of certificate. The next marriage, as shown by the record, was John Armitage and America Lamb, June 5, 1854.

The first entry of land in this county was made by Henry Peters, July 21, 1851. There is but a single tract of eighty acres that is called swamp land in the county.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was first organized in Union County in 1855. Rev. W. E. Williams, still a resident of the county, was the pastor. His circuit then embraced the counties of Union, Ringgold and part of Decatur. There were four preaching places in the county, as follows: Afton, Pisgah, Ord's, and Platte Grove. The total membership in 1856 was 76, and the amount paid the pastor the first year was $91.84. The Baptist Church was organized in Afton, January 1, 1854, by Rev. T. Miller, with a membership of fourteen. Another Baptist Church was organized in Platte Township, in September, 1866, with a membership of eight. The first Sabbath School in the county was a Union Sabbath School, and was organized in Afton in 1856. The first M. E. Sabbath School was organized in 1857.

SCHOOLS, RAILROADS, ETC.

The people of Union County have taken great interest in education, to which the present healthy and prosperous condition of her public schools is largely due. Every neighborhood has its neat and comfortable school house, in which schools are maintained on an average from six to nine months each year. Institutes have been held in which most of the teachers seem much interested, and from which they have received considerable benefit. Progress is plainly manifest in all things pertaining to the common schools of the county, so that it can now be truly said that few new counties in the West afford superior advantages to those found in Union. According to the census of 1873 there were in the county seventy ungraded and eight graded schools, employing fifty-seven male and seventy-four female teachers, with an enrollment of 2,033 pupils. The annual amount expended is upwards of $20,000, while the permanent county school fund is $35,044.46.

The railroad facilities of this county for the shipments and receipts of freights east, west or south are excellent. The Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, now operated by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Company, runs from east to west through the center tier of townships, affording stations at Thayer, Afton, Creston and Cromwell, while the Creston branch of the same road leaves the main line at Creston and runs in a southwest direction, crossing two townships, and having a station at Kent, near the southwest corner.

A County Agricultural Society was organized at West Union, January 30, 1858, at which time the officers elected were: John D. Wright, President; J. F. Bishop, Secretary; Cyrus Stutts, Treasurer; with seventeen members. The first fair was held the next Fall, when there were sixty-five members. The receipts were $61, and the amount paid in premiums $44. Thomas M. Robinson was the next president, and the same secretary and treasurer were re-elected. At the second fair $67 were awarded in premiums. During the war the society failed to hold its annual fairs. The first fair after the war was held in 1866, at which over $300 were awarded in premiums. Last year about $250 were awarded, but the exhibition was better than ever before. Over 400 entries were made, and great interest was taken. Successful fairs have since been held, which have done much to awaken among the farmers a laudable ambition to excel in agricultural pursuits and stock raising.

THE PRESS.

The first newspaper published in the county was called the Afton Eagle, and was commenced in the Summer of 1859, by Morris & Ryan. In politics the paper was Democratic, and supported Douglas for the Presidency. It was sold to L. Raguet, and after the election of Lincoln was changed to a neutral paper, and assumed the name of Afton Reveille. About 1862, Raguet sold to Henry Erman, who made it a Republican paper. In a short time the office was purchased by a company, and Raguet employed to conduct it in the publication of a Republican paper, although it is said that it did not accord with his political sentiments. In 1864, it was again sold to Robbins & Cornelius, who continued its publication until the Fall election of 1865 as a Republican paper. Raguet then again assumed charge of it as a neutral paper, and as such, continued its publication until the Spring of 1868, when he sold to W. R. Roberts, who changed the name to the Afton Tribune, and made it again a Republican sheet, who is still continuing its publication, and is making it a readable, wide-awake local paper. It has a good circulation.

The Afton News, a neatly printed liberal Democratic sheet, was established in 1871, by S. W. Morehead, who in 1872 sold to Baxter Bros., who conducted it until 1875, when it passed into the hands of the present editor and publisher, J. F. Bishop, an experienced newspaper man, who is making its influence felt in the county. It is all printed at home, is the only opposition paper in the county, and has a large and increasing circulation.

The Creston Gazette is a spritely, ably conducted Republican newspaper, which made its first appearance under the management of C. M. Shultz, who is still one of its editors and publishers. For a time it was published by Harsh & Shultz, and is now owned and edited by Shultz & Oungst, who are making it a popular paper, and have secured a large circulation in Union and the adjoining counties.

In 1872 the Union County Independent made its first appearance at Creston, with the name of W. H. Hoxie—who is its present publisher—at the head of its editorial columns. It has since been continuously published, wielding an important influence in the politics and general welfare of the county. Its editorial columns are now under the management of S. M. Hamilton.

COUNTY OFFICIALS, 1875.

H. A. BOTLEMAN, Auditor. E. J. EMMONS, Clerk of Courts.
L. A. HELT, Treasurer. BENJAMIN F. MARTZ, Recorder.
F. M. RICHEY, Sheriff. J. M. MILLIGAN, Supt. of Common Schools.
GEORGE A. IDE, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

AFTON,

The county seat of Union County, is located some two miles east of the geographical center of the county, on a high gently undulating prairie, overlooking a wide extent of country, and commanding a fine view of the beautifully varied of Twelve Mile Creek and the highly improved farms that border it on either side. The location is represented as being very healthy, one having an exhaustless supply of pure air and water. The town was surveyed and platted in the Fall of 1854, by John D. Wright, formerly county surveyor and member of the Legislature from Des Moines County. The original plat embraced two hundred and forty acres—being the southwest of sixteen, and the north half of the northwest of twenty-one, township seventy-two, range twenty-nine. The even numbered lots were donated by the proprietors to the county.

The first house was built of logs in April, 1855, by David Rife, and was used as a store and dwelling. It is still standing in the west part of the town. The next was a frame built by Mr. Collins for a hotel, in the Summer of the same year, and during the same season Joseph Norris built a frame hotel, in which D. J. Guthridge, Esq., also kept a store.

During the twenty years since its first settlement Afton has become a town of considerable importance, securing and still doing a good retail trade. Numerous handsome business houses and some really elegant residences have been erected. Good churches and school houses ornament the town, showing that the intellectual and moral wants of the community are well provided for. Altogether the town is blessed with a pleasant and healthful climate, good schools, churches and society, in fact everything desirable to make it a pleasant and attractive place of residence.

CROMWELL.—This town is near the west line of the county, about fifteen miles from Afton, and 195 miles from Burlington. It was laid out in October, 1868, and the first business house erected by W. A. Ballard. The cars commenced running to the place about the first of June, 1869.

THAYER.—This is on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, nine miles east of Afton. It is on a gentle slope rising from the valley of Four Mile Creek. It was selected as a railroad station by D. N. Smith, in June, 1867, but the village was not laid out until in October, 1868. The first house was built by J. H. Reed during the same year.

KENT.—This is a station in the southwest part of the county, on the Creston Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. It is in a rich farming portion of the county.

CRESTON.

Among the enterprising, attractive and promising business centers of Southwestern Iowa, none have had a more healthy, rapid and substantial growth than Creston, which is situated a little west of the center of Marion County, on the line of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, on a tract of table-land which is about the highest point on that road between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers. It is surrounded on all sides by a beautiful undulating prairie, which handsomely slopes in all directions just enough to give an excellent natural drainage, and is being rapidly settled up and put in a high state of cultivation by an enterprising and intelligent class of farmers. The town was laid out in the Summer of 1869 by the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company, the first house being erected by them during the Fall of that year, since which time the per cent of its increase has been more rapid than its most enthusiastic friends had dared to hope. It now contains a population of upwards of 2,000, and is steadily increasing, and constantly acquiring new and increased advantages for making it a pleasant and desirable place of residence. The principal division and machine shops of the Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad are located here, as well as a large round house and stock yards, while the Creston and Kansas City branch of the above named road intersects the main line at this place, making it permanently a railroad town. A gap of only thirty-six miles intervenes between this place and Winterset, which, when completed, will give direct communication, over the line of the Winterset branch of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, with the State Capital. Aid has been voted to the St. Paul and Southwestern Railroad, and it is confidently expected that it will be completed to this point at no very distant day.

The improvements throughout are of a much better character than those of most new Western towns, showing that men of means have invested their capital, feeling assured that the future growth of the town would be such as to yield them a good return. Great energy has been displayed by the citizens in building up churches, schools, and other public institutions, without which no place can permanently prosper or be in any considerable degree successful. There are three handsome churches, viz: the Methodist, Congregational, and Catholic, while the Baptists, Evangelists and Christian denominations have organizations. A public library, containing upwards of one thousand volumes, has been established, the association owning a substantial two-story building with hall above, and reading-room, which is open during all business hours and a portion of each Sunday, below. The public schools, of which the citizens are justly proud, are in a flourishing condition under the charge of a corps of six experienced and thoroughly competent teachers, there being two buildings, one on each side of town. Besides the usual number of business houses, there are three large grain elevators and one flouring mill, while the town has made ample arrangements for security against fire by the purchase of a good fire engine and other apparatus. The streets are wide, well graded, and provided with substantial sidewalks, while public wells are conveniently situated, and shade trees planted on nearly all the streets.

While few if any towns in the state can show so rapid a growth, none can boast of a more liberal, public-spirited, wide-awake and go-ahead class of business men than those who have been instrumental in securing the rapid and substantial growth of this town. With such men as have thus far been the leading spirits, and with the start it has already attained and the natural resources within its command, Creston will, without doubt, at a period not far in the future, assume a position among the most important inland towns of the state.

APPANOOSE COUNTY.

Appanoose is the fourth county west of the Mississippi River in the south tier of Iowa counties. It extends twenty-four miles, or the breadth of four Congressional townships east and west, and about twenty-one and a half miles north and south, or the breadth of three full townships and a tier of fractional townships along the state line. Its area is about 516 square miles.

PHYSICAL FEATURES AND RESOURCES.

The principal stream of this county is Chariton River, the two forks of which enter the northwest corner township, in which they unite and form the principal channel. Its general course is southeast, but it gradually turns toward the south and enters the State of Missouri about four miles from the southeast corner of the county. This river, after the two forks unite, possesses considerable volume, and affords several good millsites. It has many affluents, which afford excellent natural drainage and supply the territory southwest of the watershed with abundance of stock water. Shoal Creek, with its several branches, drains the southwest part of the county, and unites with Chariton River in Missouri. These waters are all tributary to Missouri. The great watershed traverses the county, and the waters of the east and northeast part flow to the Des Moines and the Mississippi, affording excellent drainage to this section of the eastern slope. This county has an abundant supply of good timber, well distributed to all parts. Along Chariton River and Shoal Creek, as well as along some of the smaller streams, are some very large and fine bodies of white oak. Many of these white oak groves are not excelled in Iowa. The varieties of timber common throughout the county are, white, black and burr oak, white and black hickory, white and black walnut, hard and soft maple, cotton wood, white and red elm, linn, buckeye, ash, birch, hackberry, box-elder, etc. It is estimated that at least one-fourth of the surface of this county is covered with timber. From the cupola on the top of the court house in Centerville, at an elevation of nearly one hundred feet from the ground, the eye of an observer may, on a clear day, look over nearly the entire county. The grand and beautiful alternations of prairie and forest, as seen from this elevated position, can not but challenge the admiration of the beholder, and impress him with the peculiar advantages of Appanoose as a great agricultural county. It has all the timber that is desirable or necessary for its own use.

The county lies wholly within the great Iowa coal field, and all three divisions of the coal measure group occupy the surface beneath the drift in their usual order, the lower coal measure occupying the Northwestern portion, the middle traversing the center, and the upper appearing in limestone ledges a little west of Centerville, and occupying the southwestern portion of the county. The place of all the heavy beds of coal found elsewhere may be looked for not far from the surface, and it is believed by geologists that a shaft sunk in the valley of Chariton River near Centerville would pass through all the coal-bearing strata within three or four hundred feet. Although coal has not been worked to so great an extent in this as in some other counties, yet all that has been needed has been easily obtained, and there are good reasons for believing that it exists in large quantities.

Good stone for building purposes is obtained in various places. It is found within two or three miles of Centerville on Chariton River and on its tributaries. Both lime and sandstone are quarried, but the former is chiefly used. The stone used in the court house in Centerville was obtained from quarries in the vicinity of the town. A good quality of quicklime is manufactured, and clay and sand suitable for brick, are plenty in nearly all parts of the county.

Although this county contains a large number of streams, with more than an ordinary proportion of timber land, yet the prairies are fine and generally only sufficiently rolling to make the best quality of farming lands. There are some fine bottoms along the streams, and especially along Chariton River. They are not wide, however, but in connection with the higher prairie slopes adjoining, make splendid farms. Some of the bottom lands along Chariton River were formerly considered too wet to be desirable for cultivation, but they are found to be easily drained, after which they become the most productive lands in the county. The soil is deep and rich, yielding the most luxuriant crops of all kinds of grain. It is also well adapted to the production of the tame grasses. The higher prairies are rolling, and in the west and southwest portions of the county are unsurpassed in beauty and fertility by any in the state. The east side of the county contains a larger proportion of timber along the numerous streams in that section, and as a consequence the prairies are smaller but not less productive. Many good farms are made in the timber in some portions of the county, and in situations affording a timber protection, splendid crops of winter wheat are raised. The soil in or adjoining the timber seems also to be better adapted to this crop.

The principal grain productions are corn and oats. Wheat is not extensively cultivated, owing to the greater profits realized from corn and grass, although some portions of the county are well adapted to the production of winter wheat. Spring wheat, buckwheat and flax are also cultivated. Most kinds of tame grasses, especially timothy, clover and blue grass, thrive remarkably well, and tame meadows and pastures are abundant. Vegetables common to this latitude yield luxuriant crops. The soil and climate is found to be well adapted to the culture of fruit. This did not appear to be the case while the country was new and raw, but of late years many good orchards have come into bearing. The small fruits thrive abundantly.

Stock raising is extensively engaged in by the farmers of Appanoose, who find this a most agreeable and remunerative branch of industry, owing to the great adaptability of the county in every respect for this purpose.
